31 Edmund Stafford vpon the twentith daie of June, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred ninetie and fiue, was consecrated at Lambeth by William Courtnaie archbishop of Canturburie. He was borne and descended of noble parentage, being brother to Ralfe lord Stafford created earle of Stafford by king Edward the third; he was both wise and learned, and for his wisedome grew into great credit with the king, and was both of his priuie councell, as also lord chancellor of England. At the parlement holden at Westminster, the one and twentith yeare of the reigne of king Richard the second, he being then speaker of the higher house, made a verie learned and pithie oration, to proue the absolute authoritie of a king: his theme was, Rex vnus erit omnibus. And hauing discoursed at large of the authoritie of a king, he did conclude; Quòd potestas regis esset sibi sola, vnita, annexa, solida; and whosoeuer did by anie meanes impeach the same, Pœna legis meritò esset plectendus. And for the furtherance of good letters, he did increase two fellowships in the college of Stapledons inne in Oxford, reformed the statutes of the house, and altered the name of it, and called it Excester college. After that he had continued bishop in much honor about three and twentie yeares, he died the fourth of September, being the seuenth yeare of king Henrie the fift, and lieth buried in his owne church in a verie faire tome of alabaster.

James Carie.

32 James Carie bishop of Chester, then being at Florence when newes was brought to pope Martin the fift of the said late bishop Staffords death, was there made bishop of this church, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred and nineteene, and also consecrated; but long he inioied not his office, for there he died, and was buried.

Edmund Lacie.

33 Edmund Lacie bishop of Hereford was translated from thense vnto this church in the feast of Easter, and in the eight yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the fift, in the yeare of our Lord God one thousand foure hundred and twentie. He was a man verie deuout and religious, but subiect to flatterers, who carried him to their pleasure; he was a liberall benefactor vnto the vicar of Calenderhaie. Great contentions were betweene him and the citie for liberties, which by arbitrement were compounded. He founded the chapter house in his owne church. He was a professor of diuinitie, and verie well learned. For in the second yeare of his bishoprike, being the ninth yeare of the kings reigne, there was a parlement holden at Westminster, in which great complaints were made against the lose and dissolute life of the religious men, and especiallie the blacke monks. And this matter being brought to the conuocation house, this bishop as chéefe proloquutor of that assemblie, did make a verie learned and a pithie oration before the king, then of purpose present, and the whole cleargie, much lamenting that the religious men were so far straied from the rules of their professions, and the holinesse of their predecessors. And when he had at large discoursed the same, he deliuered vp certeine articles in writing, praieng for reformation. Which his spéeches were so effectuallie vttered, and his articles so pithilie penned, that both the king and the clergie did not onelie with great liking and allowance praise and commend the same; but also toke order that there should be a prouinciall councell called out of hand for a reformation. Which was then promised, but not performed, by reason of the kings death, which not long after followed. But yet in the waie of good spéed, it was then concluded and agréed, that euerie third benefice, being of the gift of anie of the prelats, or of anie monasterie, should from thenseforth for seauen yeares be giuen to some scholar of Oxford or Cambridge. This bishop, after he had liued fiue and thirtie yeares in this bishoprike, died and was buried in the north wall of the quære in his owne church. After whose death manie miracles were said and deuised to be done at his tombe, whereupon great pilgrimages were made by the common people to the same.

be

George Neuill. 34 George Neuill succéded Edmund Lacie, and was consecrated in the feast of saint Katharine, in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred fiftie and fiue, he was of a noble parentage, being the second son of Richard Neuill earle of Sarisburie, he finished and ended the chapter house which his predecessor had begun. And after that he had bæne bishop about ten yeares, he was remoued to Yorke, and made archbishop there, in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred three score and fiue.

John Booth. 35 John Booth, after the translation of George Neuill to Yorke, was consecrated bishop vnder Thomas Bursher archbishop of Canturburie, vpon the two and twentith daie of Februarie, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred three score and six. He was by profession a ciuillian, and a batchelor of the same, he gouerned his church verie well, and builded (as some suppose) the bishops sée in the quære. But being werie of the great troubles which were in this countrie betwæne king Edward the fourth and the earle of Warwike, he remoued from hense to his house of Horsleigh in Hamshire, where in the twelfe yere of his bishoprike he died, vpon the fift of Aprill, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred seuentie and eight, and lieth buried at saint Clements in London.

Peter Courtneis. 36 Peter Courtneie, immediatlie after the death of John Booth, was presented to this bishoprike, and consecrated by Thomas archbishop of Canturburie in November, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred seuentie and seuen at saint Stephans in Westminster; he was the son of sir Philip Courtnie of Powderham, his mother was named Elisabeth, daughter to Walter lord Hungerford. He for his wisedome and good behauiour was in great fauor & credit with king Henrie the seauenth, by whose means he was translated from this church to Winchester, in the ninth yeare of his being bishop here, and in the fift yeare of his being there he died, vpon the twentith daie of December, in the yere one thousand foure hundred ninetie and one, and lieth buried in his owne church. He finished the north tower of saint Peters, and gaue the clocke bell which is in the same, and which beareth the name Peter.

Richard For. 37 Richard For, vpon the remouing of Peter Courtneie, was consecrated bishop of this church, vnder Thomas archbishop of Canturburie, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred three score and six. He was a verie wise man, and in great credit and estimation with king Henrie the seuenth, vnto whome he was a faithfull councellor, and of his councell; with whom he acquainted himselfe at Paris, when he was there a student. For king Henrie then erle of Richmond, being at Venice, and aduertised how the nobilitie of England was bent to haue him for their king, came from thense to Paris, and sought vnto Charles then king of France for aid and helpe: in which the earle his sutes this For was a spectall traueller and councellor; and in the end, God giuing the succes, the erle obteined the crowne, and hauing had due triall of the fidelitie, wisedome, & trust of this bishop, he made him lord priuie seale; and kept and vsed him & his aduise in all his weightie matters as well at home as abrode. He being ambassador sundrie times to the kings of France and Scotland, and of a verie hartie good will and loue, the king made him godfather to his second son king Henrie the eight. There was a kind of emulation, betwæne this bishop and the earle of Surreie, both of them being verie wise and of great seruice to the king and commonwealth: howbeit, in some diuersitie of respects, the one hauing no issue to care for, did deale without anie priuat affection or singular gaine; and the other hauing issue, was desirous to aduance his house and honor. These affections did breed some dislike betwæne them two, yet the king finding a faith vnto himselfe, and a commoditie to the commonwealth, misliked it not, if the same exceeded his measure: and they more warme than commendable for their callings and estates. The king then or the councell would deale betwene them for the appeasing and pacifieng of them, and to them he was both friendlie, louing, and liberall. The one he deliuered out of the tower, pardoned him of his offenses, restored him to his lands, receiued him into spectall fauor, made him of his priuie councell, as also lord treasuror of England, and his generall into Scotland, & augmented his liuelihoods. The other he first made bishop to this church, then remoued him to Bath, and from thense vnto Durham, and lastlie vnto Winchester. Erasmus, in his booke intituled The preacher or Ecclesiastes, declareth how that the king vpon a time, wanting some pæce of monie, was to borow the same of the commons, and of the clergie. And for the dealings with the clergie, the matter was by commission committed to this bishop. Who when they came before him, vsed all the excuses that they could, to shift themselues from lending of anie monie. Some came verie sæmelie and well apparelled, and awaited vpon by their men, according to their liuelihoods; and these alledged, that they were greatlie charged in hospitalitie and house kæping, with other charges incident to the same, so that they had no monie, & therefore could paie none. Some came porelie and barelie apparelled, and they alledged that their liuelihoods were but small, and yet their charges were great, and by that meanes the world was so hard with them that they had it not to spare. This bishop, hauing heard all these excuses, vsed this dilemme. To the richer sort he said; Forsomuch as you are so well and sæmelie apparelled, and do kæpe so great houses, and haue all things necessarie about you; it is a manifest argument, that you haue some store about you, or else you would not do as ye do: and therefore yæ must nèds lend. To the other, who pretended excuse of their pouertie, he thus replied vnto them; that forsomuch as they were so bare in their apparell, and so sparing of their expenses, it must nèds be that they saued their purses and had monie, and therefore they must nèds paie, and so adiudged them to lend vnto the prince. Now as he arose by learning, so he was a great fauorer and furtherer of learning: and for the good increase of the same he builded and founded Corpus Christi college in Oxenford. In his latter daies he ware and was blind, and dieng in Winchester, he was there buried in his owne church, after that he had bæne bishop of Excester six yæres, he was remoued to Bath, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred ninetie and two.

Oliuer King. 38 Oliuer King, immediatlie vpon the transferring of bishop For, was consecrated bishop of this church, in Februarie, one thousand foure hundred ninetie and two, John Morton then archbishop of Canturburie. This Oliuer was chapleine to king Henrie the seuenth, and deane of Windesor, and register of the order of the garter. In his time were the rebellions of Joseph the blacke smith in Cornewall, and of Perken Warbecke. This bishop after that he had occupied this sée about fiue yeares, he died in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred dred ninetie and seuen, and (as some suppose) he was buried at Windesor.

Richard Redman.

39 Richard Redman, immediatlie vpon the death of bishop Oliuer King, was translated from his bishoprike in Wales to this citie; but after fiue yeares he was remoued vnto the bishoprike of Elie, and installed there in September in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred and one. He was a gentleman borne, and descended of a verie worshipfull house, which ioined with his wisedome and learning, did much increase his credit and good report.

John Arundell.

40 John Arundell, next after the translation of bishop Redman, was remoued from Couentrie and Lichfield vnto this citie, and was installed the fiftéenth of March, one thousand fiue hundred and one. Wherein he sought not the preferment for anie liuelihods, but rather desirous to be a dweller and resiant in his countrie where he was borne: for he was descended of the Arundels of Lanherne in Cornewall, a house of great antiquitie and worship. He long inioied not his new bishoprike, for after two yeares after his installing, he had occasion to ride vnto London, and there died, and was buried in S. Clements church without Templebar, in the yeare one thousand fiue hundred and three.

Hugh Oldham.

41 Hugh Oldham, vpon the death of Arundell, by the preferment of the countesse of Richmond and Derbie, vnto whom he was chapleine, was preferred vnto this bishoprike, and installed in the same. He was a man hauing more zeale than knowledge, and more deuotion than learning; somewhat rough in speeches, but friendlie in doings. He was carefull in the sauing and defending of his liberties, for which continuall sutes was betweene him and the abbat of Tauestoke; he was liberall to the vicars choorall of his church, and reduced them to the keeping of commons, and towards the maintenance thereof he gaue them certeine reuenues, and impropriated vnto them the rectorie of Cornewood. He albeit (of himselfe) he were not learned, yet a great fauourer and a furtherer of learning and of learned men. Notwithstanding, he was sometime crossed in his honest attempt therein. He first was minded to haue inlarged Excester college in Oxford, as well in buildings as in fellowships: but after being a requester to the fellowes for one Atkins to be a fellow, in whose fauour he had written his letters and was denied, he changed his mind, and his good will was alienated. About the same time doctor Smith bishop of Lincolne was building of the college named Brasen nose, and was verie willing and desirous to ioine with him: but being denied to haue the nomination of a founder, his mind was changed. Not long after, being aduertised that bishop Fox of Winchester was minded to erect & found a new college, he ioined with him, and contributed vnto him a great masse of monie, and so a college was builded for scholars, and great liuelihods prouided for them: & then the house was named Corpus Christi college. Whereof the one of them bare the name of a founder, and the other of a benefactor. Howbeit, some diuersitie was betweene these two bishops at the first, to what vse this college should be imploied. For the founder was of the mind that he would haue made it for a house of monks; but the benefactor was of the contrarie mind, and would haue it for scholars, alleging that monks were but a sort of buzzing flies, & whose state could not long indure; whereas scholars brought vp in learning would be profitable members to the commonwealth, and good ornaments to the church of God, and continue for euer. The founder being a wise man, and of a deepe iudgement, when he had paused and considered hereof, yeldeth hereunto: and so it was concluded betweene them to make and build a college for scholars. And forthwith for the good direction, guiding, and gouernement of the said college and scholars; such wise, good, & politike statutes and ordinances were by good aduise and counsell deuised, established, and ordeined; as whereby the said college hath beene, and yet continueth one of the best nurseries for training and instructing of good scholars in learning within that vniuersitie. This bishop and the abbat of Tauestoke did still contend and continue in law during their liues: and during which suite this bishop died, being excommunicated at Rome, and who could not be suffered to be buried, vntill an absolution from Rome was procured for him. After that he had beene bishop about sixteene yeares, he died the fiue and twentith of June, one thousand fiue hundred and nineteene, and was buried in his owne church.

John Voisie.

42 John Voisie, otherwise Harman, succeeded Oldham, by the preferment of king Henrie the eight, whose chapleine he then was, and deane of his chapell as also of this church; he was doctor of the lawes, verie well learned and wise, and in great fauour with the king, who sent him sundrie times in ambassages to forreine princes; he was lord president of Wales, & had the gouernement of the kings onlie daughter ladie Marie princesse of Wales. Of all the bishops in the land he was accounted the courtlikest and the best courtier. And although he were well reported for his learning, yet better liked for his courtlike behauiour, which in the end turned not so much to his credit, as to the vtter ruine and spoile of the church: for of two and twentie lordships and manors, which his predecessors had and left vnto him, of a goodlie yearelie reuenue he left but three, & them also leased out. And where he found foureteene houses well furnished, he left onelie one house bare and without furniture, and yet charged with sundrie fées and annuities; and by these meanes this bishoprike, which sometimes was counted one of the best, is now become in temporall lands one of the meanest, and according to the forepossessing of bishop Grandeson, a place scarse left for the bishop to laie and rest his head in; and yet neuertheless he was a great fauourer of learned men, and especiallie of diuines, whome he preferred in his church aboue others. He was verie bountious and liberall vnto all men, but especiallie vnto courtiers, vnto his owne kindred and countriemen. Vpon manie he bestowed much, to the confusion of some of them; and vpon the others he spent much by building of a towne called Sutton Colshull where he was borne, which he procured to be incorporated, and made a market towne, and set vp therein making of kearsies, but all which in the end came to small effect. In his time, after the death of king Henrie the eight, there was an alteration of religion by king Edward the first, wherof insued a rebellion & commotion in this diocesse: which in some part was imputed to this bishop, bicause he laie farre from it, and dwelled in his owne countrie. Whereupon he resigned the bishoprike into the kings hands, after that he had beene bishop about thirtie yeares, and liued by the rents of the temporaltie of the bishoprike, which when he alienated and discontinued, he did receiue vnto him for terme of his owne life.

Miles Couerdale.

43 Miles Couerdale, after the resignation of Voisie, was by king Edward made bishop of this citie, & consecrated at Lambeth by Thomas Cranmer archbishop of Canturburie, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred and fiftie. He was borne in the north countrie, and from his childhood giuen to learning, wherein he profited verie much: he was one of the first which professed the gospell in this land in the time of king Henrie the eight, he translated

translated the bible out of the Hebrue into English, and wrote sundrie bookes vpon the scriptures. Which doctrine being verie new and strange in those daies, and he verie streightlie pursued by the bishops, made his escape, & passed ouer into low Germanie, where he printed the bibles of his translation and sent them ouer into England, and therof made his gaine wherby he liued. But the bishops, namelie D. Stokesleie bishop of London, when he heard hereof, and minding to preuent that no such bibles should be dispersed within this realme, made inquirie where they were to be sold, and bought them all vp; supposing that by this meanes no more bibles would be had: but contrarie to his expectation it fell out otherwise. For the same monie which the bishop gaue for these bookes, was sent ouer by the merchant vnto this Couerdale, and by that meanes he was of that wealth and abilitie, that he imprinted as manie more and sent them ouer into England; but he was then so narrowlie sought for, that he was driuen to remoue himselfe out of Flanders into Germanie, and dwelled vnder the Palsegraue of Rhene, where he found much fauour. First he taught yong children, and hauing learned the Dutch tong, the prince Palatine gaue him a benefice, named Burghsaber, where he continued and liued verie well, partlie by that benefice, and partlie by the liberalitie of the lord Cromewell, who was his good lord and reléeued him verie much. At length, when the religion was altered in England, and the gospell had a free passage, he returned & did verie much good in preaching of the same. And when the commotion in Deuon was for religion, he was appointed to attend the lord Russell, when he came to suppresse the same, and verie shortlie for his learning and godlie life was made bishop of this see; who most worthilie did performe the office committed vnto him. He preached continuallie vpon euerie holie daie, and did read most commonlie twise in the weeke in some one church or other within this citie. He was after the rate of his liuings a great kéeper of hospitalitie, verie sober in diet, godlie in life, friendlie to the godlie, liberall to the poore, and courteous to all men, void of pride, full of humilitie, abhorring couetousnesse, and an enimie to all wickednesse and wicked men: whose companies he shunned, and whom he would in no wise shrowd or haue in his house and companie. His wife a most sober, chast, and godlie matrone; his house and houshold another church, in which was exercised all godlinesse and vertue. No one person being in his house, which did not from time to time giue an account of his faith and religion, and also did liue accordinglie. And as he had a care for the succesle in religion, so had he also for the direction of the gouernement in ecclesiasticall causes. And bicause he was not skilfull therin, neither would be hindered from his godlie studies, and be incombered with such worldlie matters, which neuertheles he would haue be done in all vprightnesse, iustice, and equitie; he sent to Oxford for a learned man to be his chancellor, and by the ministerie of the writer hereof he procured and obteined one maister Robert Weston doctor of the ciuill law, & afterwards lord chancellor of Ireland, vnto whome he committed his consistorie, and the whole charge of his ecclesiasticall iurisdiction; allowing vnto him, not onelie all the fées thereunto apperteining, but also lodged and found him, his wife, familie, horsse, and man, within his owne house, and gaue him a yearelie pension of fortie pounds. And surelie the bishop was no more godlie and carefull of his part, concerning preaching; but this man also was as diligent and seuere in doing of his office, without reproch of being affectionated or corrupted. And notwithstanding this good man, now a blamelesse bishop, liued most godlie and vertuous: yet the common people, whose old bottels would receiue no new wine, could not brooke nor digest him; for no other cause, but bicause he was a preacher of the gospell, an enimie to papistrie, & a married man. Manie deuises were attempted against him for his confusion, sometimes by false suggestions, sometimes by open railings, and false libels; sometimes by secret backbitings, and in the end practised his death by imposoning: but by Gods prouidence the snares were broken and he deliuered. After that he had béene bishop about three yeares king Edward died, and then quæne Marie hauing the crowne, the religion was altered, and he deprsiued. And notwithstanding the malice of prelats and archpapists was most bitter against him, and who had sworne his death: yet by the goodnesse of God he was most miraculouslie preserued, and deliuered from out of their hands, at the sute and by the meanes of the king of Denmarke: who so earnestlie sued, & so often wrote to the quæne for him, that he was deliuered and sent vnto him; with whome after that he had staied a while, he went againe into Germanie to the Palsgraue, who most louinglie receiued him, placed him againe in his former benefice of Burghsaber, where he continued vntill the death of quæne Marie. And then the preaching of the gospell being againe receiued, & hauing a free passage, he returned into England; but would neuer returne to his bishoprike, notwithstanding it was reserued for him, & sundrie times offered him; but liued a priuat life, continuing in London, preaching & teaching the gospell, so long as the strength of his bodie would permit; and at length being verie old and striken in yeares, he died, and was honorablie buried at saint Magnus church in London.

44 John Aolsete, after the deprsuation of Miles Couerdale, was restored to this church, and for the better setling of the Romish religion did here staie for a while: but his mind was addicted to his owne countrie, that he returned thither, and made his onlie abode there, practising there what he could, to haue the making of kersies to come to some effect; but the same being more chargeable than profitable, came to small proofe. This man being verie old died in his owne house, with a pang, and was buried in his parish church there, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and fiue. John Aolsete.

45 James Troblefield succéeded bishop Aolsete, and was consecrated in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred fiftie & six, he was a gentleman borne, and of a good house, verie gentle and courteous; he professed diuinitie, but most zelous in the Romish religion, & yet nothing cruell nor bloudie. And yet that he might not séeme to do nothing, he was contented to prosecute and condemne a giltlesse poore séelie woman, named Agnes Prest for religion and hereste, & who was burned in Southingham for the same. It was laied to hir charge (as doth appeare by an indictment taken at Lancester, Die lunæ in quarta septimana quadragesimæ, anno Philippi & Mariæ secundo & tertio, before William Stanford then iustice of the assise) that she should denie the reall presence in the sacrament of the altar, and that the same was but a signe and a figure of Christs bodie, and that none doth eat reallie the bodie of Christ but spirituallie. He was verie carefull to recouer some part of the lands of his bishoprike, which his predecessor wasted, and did obteine of quæne Marie, to him and to his successors, the fee farme of the manor of Crediton. After that he had béene bishop about two yeares, quæne Marie died; and he was deprsued, and liued after a priuat life. James Troblefield.

46 William Alleie, in the second yeare of quæne Elisabeth, was chosen bishop, and installed the first of August, William Alleie.

August, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred sixtie and one. In all quéene Maries time, which were called the Marian daies, he trauelled from place to place in the north countrie, where he was not knowne; and sometimes by practising of physike, and sometimes by teaching of scholars, he picked out a poore liuing for himselfe and his wife, and so continued, being not knowne to haue béene a priest, during all quéene Maries time: after whose death he went to London, and there did read diuinitie lecture in Paules verie learnedlie, and to his great commendation; and from whense he was taken and made bishop of this citie. He was verie well learned vniuersallie, but his chiefe studie and profession was in diuinitie, and in the tongs. And being bishop, he debated no part of his former trauels, but spent his time verie godlie and vertuouslie. Upon euerie holie daie (for the most part) he preached, and vpon the wéeke daies he would and did read a lecture of diuinitie; the residue of his time, and free from his necessarie businesse, he spent in his priuat studies, and wrote sundrie books, whereof his prelections or lectures which he did read in Paules, and his poore mans librarie he caused to be imprinted: the like he would haue done with his Hebrue grammar, and other his works, if he had liued. He was well stored, and his librarie well replenished with all the best sort of writers, which most gladlie he would impart and make open to euerie good scholar and student, whose companie and conference he did most desire & imbrace. He séemed at the first appérance to be a rough and an austere man, but in verie truth, a verie courteous, gentle, and an affable man; at his table full of honest spéeches, ioined with learning and pleasantnesse, according to the time, place, and companie. All his exercises, which for the most part was at bowles, verie merrie and plesant, void of all sadnesse, which might abate the benefit of recreation; loth to offend, readie to forgiue, void of malice, full of loue, bountifull in hospitalitie, liberall to the poore, and a succourer of the néedie, faithfull to his friend, and courteous to all men; a hater of couetousnesse, and an enimie to all euill and wicked men, and liued an honest, a godlie, and vertuous life. Finallie, he was indued with manie notable good gifts and vertues, onelie he was somewhat credulous, of a hastie beléefe, and light of credit, which he did oftentimes mislike & blame in himselfe. In his latter time he waxed somewhat grosse, and his bodie full of humors, which did abate much of his wonted exercises: and hauing béene bishop about eight yeares, he died the first of Aprill one thousand fiue hundred and seauentie, and was buried in his owne church.

William Bradbridge.

47 William Bradbridge, deane of Sarisburie, was the next bishop, and consecrated at Lambeth by Matthew Parker archbishop of Canturburie, the eightéenth of March one thousand fiue hundred and seauentie: he was a professor of diuinitie, but not taken to be so well grounded as he persuaded himselfe, he was zelous in religion, but not so forwards as he was wished to be. In his latter daies he delighted to dwell in the countrie, which was not so much to his liking, as troublesome to his clergie, & to such as had anie suites vnto him. It was thought he died verie rich, but after his death it proued otherwise: he died suddenlie, no bodie being about him, at Newton Ferris, the ninth yeare of his bishoprike, vpon the nine and twentith of Julie, in the yeare of our Lord 1578, and was buried in his owne church. Thus farre the collection of Iohn Hooker, agréeing with the records.]

I. Stow.

The seuentéenth daie of Julie the quénes maiestie being on the riuer of Thames, about nine of the clocke at night (betwixt hir highnesse manour of Gréenewich & Dartford) in hir priuie barge, accompanied with the French ambassador, the earle of Lincolne, and maister vicechamberlaine; it chanced that one Thomas Appletrée, a yong man, and seruant to maister Henrie Carie, with two or three others, being in a bote on the Thames, rowing vp and downe betwixt the places aforenamed: the foresaid Thomas had a caliuer or harquebus charged with bullet, and shooting at random, by misfortune shot one of the watermen, being the second man next vnto the bales of the said barge (which sat within sir fot of hir highnesse) cleane through both armes, and moued him out of his place. For the which fact the said Thomas being apprehended and condemned to death, was on the one and twentith of Julie brought to the water side, where was a gibbet set vp, directlie placed betwixt Dartford and Gréenewich. But when the hangman had put the halter about his necke, the right honorable sir Christopher Hatton capteine of the gard, and one of hir maiesties priuie councell, shewed the quénes maiesties most gratious pardon, and deliuered him from execution. This yeare John Fox of Woodbridge, William Wicknele of Portsmouth, and Robert Moze of Harwich Englishmen, hauing béene prisoners in Turkie about the space of thirtéene or foureténe yeares, with more than two hundred and sixtie other christians of diuerse nations, by killing their kéeper, marueilouslie escaped, and returned into their natiue countries.

A traitorous fact of Thomas Appletrée.

John Fox an Englishman deliuered two hundred and three score christians frō captiuitie of the Turke.

This yeare in the moneths of September and October fell great winds and raging floods in sundrie places of this realme, as in the towne of Newport: the cotages were borne downe, the corne lost, pasture ground ouerwhelmed, and cattell drowned. In the towne of Bedford the water came vp to the market place, where cupbords, chests, stoles, and fourms swam about the houses; their fewell, corne and hate was wracke & borne awaie. Also the towne of saint Edes in Huntingtonshire was ouerflowed suddenlie in the night, when all men were at rest; & the waters brake in with such force, that the towne was almost all defaced; the swans swam downe the market place, and all the towne about the botes did flote. The towne of Gormanchester was suddenlie surprest, their houses flowed full of water, when men were at rest, and their cattell with other things were destroied.

winds and high waters.

The one and twentith of Nouember, sir Thomas Gresham knight agent to the quénes highnesse, who had in his life built the rotall Exchange in London, betwéene six and seuen of the clocke in the euening, comming from the same Exchange to his house (which he had sumptuouslie builded) in Bishopsgate stréet of London, suddenlie fell downe in his kitchin, and being taken vp was found spéechlesse, and presentlie dead, who afterwards was solemnlie buried in his owne parish church of saint Helen there, where he had prepared for himselfe a sumptuous tome or monument, without anie epitaph or inscription thereupon. This sir Thomas Gresham in his testament (which long before his death he had ordeined) bequeathed diuerse large legacies not yet performed.

Anno reg. 22.

Sir Thomas Gresham deceassed.

The eight and twentith daie of March, one Francis alias Marmaduke Glouer was hanged on a gibet set vp for that purpose by the standard in Cheape, for wilfullie murthering sergeant Grace after he was by him arrested. Also on the nert morrow, being the nine and twentith daie of March, the same gibet was set vp at Hog lane end vpon east Smithfield, nére vnto the tower of London, thereon to haue

1580

Glouer a murtherer hanged in Cheape.

Dod executed for murther.

haue hanged one Richard Dod for murthering of mistresse Skinner a widow, in hir house there by. But sir Owen Hopton lieutenant of the tower, cõmanding the officers perteining to the shiriffes of London backe againe to the west side of the crosse, toke the shiriffe of the out shire with the prisoner into an house, and after long talke brought the prisoner forth againe, & deliuered him to the officers, to be by them brought backe to London. Then he caused the gibet to be taken downe and carried awaie at his pleasure, and without further contention (to my knowledge) the said Richard Dod was in the after noone of the same date hanged at Tiborne.

A great earthquake.

On the first of Aprill, being wednesdaie in Easter weeke about six of the clocke toward euening, a sudden earthquake happening in London, and almost generallie throughout all England, caused such an amazednesse among the people as was wonderfull for the time, and caused them to make their earnest praiers to almightie God. The great clocke bell in the palace at Westminster strake of it selfe against the hammer with the shaking of the earth, as diuerse other clocks & bels in the steeples of the citie of London and elsewhere did the like. The gentlemen of the Temple being then at supper, ran from the tables, and out of their hall with their kniues in their hands. The people assembled at the plaie houses in the fields, as at the Whoreater (the Theater I would saie) were so amazed, that doubting the ruine of the galleries, they made hast to be gone. A peece of the temple church fell downe, some stones fell from saint Paules church in London: and at Christs church neere to Newgate market, in the sermon while, a stone fell from the top of the same church, which stone killed out of hand one Thomas Grete an apprentise, and an other stone fell on his fellow seruant named Mabell Gueret, and so brused hir that she liued but foure daies after. Diuerse other at that time in that place were sore hurt, with running out of the church one ouer another for feare. The tops of diuerse chimneies in the citie fell downe, the houses were so shaken: a part of the castell at Bishops Stratford in Esser fell downe. This earthquake indured in or about London not passing one minute of an houre, and was no more felt. But afterward in Kent, and on the sea coast it was felt three times; as at Sandwich at six of the clocke the land not onelie quaked, but the sea also somed, so that the ships tottered. At Douer also the same houre was the like, so that a peece of the cliffe fell into the sea, with also a peece of the castell wall there: a peece of Saltwood castell in Kent fell downe; and in the church of Hide the bels were heard to sound. A peece of Sutton church in Kent fell downe, the earthquake being there not onlie felt, but also heard. And in all these places and others in east Kent, the same earthquake was felt three times to moue, to wit, at six, at nine, and at eleuen of the clocke. The nineteenth daie of Aprill the ferrie at Lambeth was drowned with fiue men and foure horsses; other two men and fiue horsses swam to land and were saued.

A water quake.

A ferrie drowned.

William Lambe esquier deceased, his almesdeeds.

On the one and twentith of Aprill, in the yeare 1580 departed this life master William Lambe esquier, sometime gentleman of the chappell in the reigne of king Henrie the eight, citizen of London, and free of the clothworkers. Of this mans almesdeeds and manifold charities, some before, some since his death put in effectuall practise, thus reporteth a memoriall recorded in print, agreeing in truth with his last will and testament: an extract whereof for others imitation is necessarilie here to be inserted. This gentleman remembring that learning bringeth preferment, yea euen to them which are put baselie borne, as it pleased God to moue him by his good and gratious spirit, he proued himselfe by testimonials of his doings a louer of learning, and a fauourer of euerie honest profession. For in the towne of Sutton Ualens in Kent, this worshipfull gentleman at his owne costs and proper expenses erected a grammar schole for the education of youth in the feare of God, in good maners, in knowledge and vnderstanding.

The erection of a grammar schole & necessarie allowance to the maister and vsher.

He also weieng with himselfe, that the labourer ought of right to haue his hire; and that, no man goeth to warre of his owne proper charge, besides other commodities which he thought meet and necessarie, hath allowed the maister twentie pounds, and the vsher ten pounds, from time to time, as either place shall be supplied by succession, for their yearelie stipends and perpetuall pensions. To continue the rehersall of his good deeds in Sutton aforesaid, note his tender & pitifull heart toward the poore, for whose sustentation, maintenance, and releefe, he hath builded six almes houses for the impotent, and hath giuen six pounds to be yearelie paied vnto them for their necessarie prouision. Moreouer, besides this charitable deed, to keepe still within the compasse of Kent, marke the singular loue which this gentleman did beare vnto learning; for the furtherance wherof, and the more incouragement of poore scholers, he hath giuen to the schole of Maidstone ten pounds a yeare for euer, with this caueat or prouiso, that needie mens children should be preferred to the enioieng of this singular benefit.

Almes houses built for the poore.

Allowance for poore mens children to be kept at schole.

That this gentleman had not onelie a regard for the seed-plots of learning, to haue them watered with the springs of his bountie: but also a prouident eie, and a carefull hart for the profit of the commonwealth, the particulars following substantiallie do proue. For, seeing in his life time the decaie of sundrie trades, the ruine of diuerse occupations, and other inconueniences, which are like to grow to the vndoing of a multitude, except by policie they be preuented: of a meere affection (if I said fatherlie I were not controllable) he hath freelie giuen to the poore clothiers in Suffolke, to the poore clothiers of Bridgenorth in Shropshire, and to the poore clothiers at Ludlow in the said countie, three hundred pounds, to be paid by euen portions, to each seuerall towne of the said counties one hundred pounds a peece, for their supportation and maintenance at their worke and occupation. So litle esteemed he the mucke of this world, in respect of doing good, specially when he saw old age drawing him to his graue: of which mind it were to be wished all richmen would be (whom God hath made his stewards) when they war croked & bow backt, and (as the poet saith)

Obrepit canis rugosa senecta capillis.

The common wealth remembred.

A relese to poore clothiers in diuerse places.

Furthermore, the well of his weldoing not yet waring drie, but yelding liquor of relefe verie largelie, hath watered other places. For, as the countrie, so likewise the citie (the citie I meane of London) hath cause, yea iust cause with open mouth to magnifie the goodnesse of God, so mightilie working in this praisewothie esquier. The memorable monuments, which shall liue when he is dead, and shall flourish when he is rotten, are witnesses of the loue, which he being a citizen bare vnto this citie. For, let vs begin with the conduit which he of his owne costs, not requiring either collection or contribution, founded of late in Holborne, not sparing expenses so it might be substantiall, not pinching for charges so it might be durable and plentifull, as they can testifie which saw the seeking of the springs, the maner of making the trenches, the ordering of the pipes, lieng in length from the head to the said conduit, more than two thousand yards: and finallie, the framing of euerie necessarie appur-

London the better by master Lambe.

A remembrance of Holborne conduit founded and finished in An. 1577.

tenance

The wast water at the bridge running at the Standard.

tenance thereunto belonging. Besides this, means is made, by a standard with one cocke at Holborne bridge to conuey the wast, which doth such seruice, the water thereof being both sweet, pleasant, and wholsome, as neither rich nor poore can well misse. Which great worke as he aduisedlie attempted, so he commendablie finished, hauing disbursed therabouts, of his owne costs & charges, to the sum of 1500 pounds.

Prouident considerations.

And yet further note the wisedome and prouidence of this gentleman, who considering that the right vse of a good thing might cut off manie occassions of vnthriftines and idlenesse, and knowing that we are placed in this world to follow the vocation wherevnto we are called: besides that, seeing the hardnesse of this age wherein we liue, that manie would worke if they had meanes, manie neglect and care not for worke though they haue meanes, some would willinglie withstand pouertie if they might, some had rather beg and do worse than giue themselues to labour, hath béene thus beneficiall to poore women that are glad to take pains, as to bestow vpon them a hundred and twentie pales, wherewith to carrie and serue water: an honest shift of liuing, though somewhat toilesome. To descend and come downe to other his almesdeeds, you shall vnderstand that he being a member of the right worshipfull corporation and societie of Clothworkers, was not forgetfull of that companie, vnto whome he hath giuen his dwelling house in London, with other lands, and tenements, to the value of thirtie pounds or thereabouts, by them to be thus bestowed: to wit, for the hiring of a minister to read diuine seruice thrise a weeke, that is, euerie sundaie, wednesdaie, and fridaie throughout the yeare, in the chapell or church belonging to his house, called by the name of saint James in the wall by Criplegate: and for foure sermons there yéerelie to be made and preached, a competent allowance.

Poore women benefited by the conduit.

The right worshipfull Clothworkers remembred.

Allowance for foure yearelie sermons.

Out of which sum also of thirtie pounds, it is prouided that a deduction be made by the said Clothworkers, for apparelling twelue men, and as manie women, in forme as followeth: that is to saie, to euerie one of the twelue men one freeze gowne, one locorum shirt, & a good strong paire of winter shoes: to twelue women likewise one freeze gowne, one locorum smocke, & a good strong paire of winter shoes, all readie made for their wearing: remembred alwaies that they must be persons both poore and honest, vnto whome this charitable deed ought to be extended. Prouided also, that the execution hereof be done the first date of October, orderlie from yeare to yeare for euer whiles the world doth last. Moreouer, he hath giuen to those of his companie foure pounds freelie, not for a time, but perpetuallie: and thus doth his bountifulnesse manie waies appeare. To the parish of S. Giles without Criplegate, he hath giuen fifteene pounds to the bels and chime, hauing meant (as it seemeth if they had taken time) to be more liberall in that behalfe. The said bels & chime were in his life, & also after his deth kept in good order according to his will: but afterwards vpon occasion some of them newlie cast became ill of sound & out of tune: a fault in some which would be amended. The poore of the parish aforesaid, by their relefe in his life time secretlie ministred, haue iust cause to lament the losse of this right bountifull almoner. For by his means their succour was the more: now it is to be feared it will be so much the lesse, by how much it may be supposed he increased their relefe. Thus regarded he not so much his priuat thrift, as the cómon good, giuing therein to the world a testimonie of christian prudence, whose nature is to prefer the benefit of manie before the profit of one, according to that of the poet:

Publica priuatis qui sapit anteferet.

Euerie poore man and poore woman a shirt, a smock, a gowne, and a paire of shoes, &c.

Saint Giles without Criplegate benefited.

His gentlemans distributions are so diuerse, and so manie, that the rehersall of them requireth a large discourse. It is well knowen, and that can the worshipfull companie of the Stationers witnesse, that this gentleman, for the space of these foureteene or fifteene yeares, whiles he liued, was pitifull to the poore of the parish of S. Faiths, and other parishes: in which said parish church, euerie fridaie ordinarlie throughout the yeare, distribution was made of their allowance by the hands of the said worshipfull Stationers, to whome that charge was and is committed: namelie, to twelue poore people twelue pence in monie, and twelue pence in bread. Neither is this charitable déed laid aslæpe, but continued euen to the worlds end, for the perpetuall succor of the poore and impotent, a legacie of fiue pounds, thirteene shillings and foure pence, allowed to that end; the bestowing whereof is in the hands of the said worshipfull societie of Stationers, the distributors of this almesse to the poore: who are put in mind to praise God for that prouision, in this request of the benefactor grauen in mettall, and fixed fast in the wall hard by his towne:

Relefe for the poore people. M. Lambes loue to the worshipfull Stationers.

Perpetuall prouision for the poore.

I praie you all that receiue bread and pence,
To saie the Lords praier before ye go hence.

As for Christes hospitall, vnto the which he hath prooued himselfe a fatherlie benefactor, towards the bringing vp of the poore children, he hath giuen fiue pounds, which they shall inioie for the terme of fiue hundred yeares. Moreouer (marke the rare liberalitie of this vertuous gentleman) he hath giuen to the said hospitall one hundred pounds in readie monie, wherewith to purchase lands, that their relefe, by the reuenues of the same, might be perpetuall: a notable deed, and an vndoubted worke of perfect christianitie. As for S. Thomas spitle in Southwarke, toward the succour of the sicke and diseased, he hath giuen foure poundes yearelie, and for euer: so that we may see in all his procéedings with what mercie he was moued, with what pitie pricked: and finallie, in all respects how godlie giuen. And here by the waie it is to be noted, that wheras it was reported, that he gaue to the hospitall, commonlie called the Sauoie, founded by king Henrie the seuenth, to purchase lands for the behoofe of the said hospitall, one hundred pounds in monie: it is nothing so. For his beneficence towards that hospitall was staid, not thorough anie default in him; but bicause such agréements could not be concluded vpon, as he reasonablie required. Wherefore his contribution that waie ceased, fore (I dare saie) against his godlie will. Thus much I was desired to speake touching that matter, to the intent that nothing but plaine truth might be reported, with the contrarie whereof he was not a little offended.

Relefe for Christes hospitall.

I purchase for the said hospitall.

Relefe for S. Thomas spittle.

Why he staid his beneficence from the hospitall of the Sauoie.

And although offendors deserue rather to be punished than fauoured, wherevpon by politike gouernement it is prouided, that their bodies apprehended, be committed to appointed places of imprisonment: yet this good gentleman remembring that the holie Ghost willeth vs not to withdraw our hand from anie of our brethren in distresse, considering that charitie should not be partiall but indifferent, hath for the releefe of the poore prisoners of the two Counters, of Newgate, of Ludgate, of the Marshalsie, of the Kings Bench, and of the white Lion, dealt verie bountifullie, and discréetlie: giuing vnto the two Counters, fiue pounds to be paied vnto them both by twentie shillings a moneth: and to the other prisons aboue mentioned, fiue mattresses a peece, the whole number being two dozen and a halfe. In consideration of which charitable déed, how dæpelie they are bound, if they haue anie sparkle of grace, to thanke God for his goodnesse shewed vnto them by the ministerie of this gentleman, all the world maie perceiue.

Prisons for offendors.

Relefe for poore prisoners.

A charitable worke indeed.

ceiue. It were iniurie offered, to let slip vnremembred his mindfulnesse of poore maides marriages: and how willing he was to helpe them, it appeareth by his good gift of twentie pounds to be equallie diuided among fortie such in number by equall portions of ten shillings a peece: with this caueat, that these poore maides so to be married, should be of good name and fame: wherein marke how in all his bequests, wisedome is ioined as a yokefellow with his bountie.

Marriage monie for poore maids.

Lastlie, and for conclusion, this discréet gentleman, carried awaie with the zeale of a good conscience, tendering the state of his seruants, left them also at a reasonable good staie. For besides their halfe yeares board frælie giuen and granted, he hath béene beneficiall to them in diuerse other respects, which I passe ouer vnremembred. But alas! these sorowfull seruants do not a little lament the losse of so louing a maister. I omit the hundred & eight frése gownes readie made, which he bequeathed at his funerall to poore people, both men and women: with the dispersing of the remnant of all his goods after his buriall, where need and reason required. And thus you see what monuments this gentleman hath left behind him, to beare witnesse to the world of the fruitfulnesse of his faith: which if (as saint James saith) it maie be iudged by workes, and that it is a dead and a barren faith which declareth not it selfe by déeds: then the sequele maie be this, that the faith wherewith he (of whome this is written) was indued, sheweth it selfe to be the same faith which is wished, and I would to God were in the heart of euerie christian. As for his religion, it was sound; his profession sincere; his hearing of Gods word, attentiue & diligent; his vse of praier, deuout: in his sickenesse patient, willing to forsake the world, and to be with Christ, in whose faith he died; and lieth intombed in a faire large vawt in saint Faiths vnder Paules, this epitaph grauen in brasse or copper, fixed vpon his graue stone, comprising a note of our mortalitie:

His loue towards his seruants.

His faith was fruitfull.

As I was, so are ye:
As I am, you shall be:
That I had, that I gaue:
That I gaue, that I haue:
Thus I end all my cost:
That I left, that I lost.

Hitherto concerning maister Lambes almesdéeds, wherein thus much hath at large bæne spoken for others example, whome as God hath indued with riches: so it were to be wished they would vse them no worse.] The first daie of Maie, after twelue of the clocke in the night, was an earthquake felt in diuerse places of Kent, namelie at Ashford, great Chart, &c: which made the people there to rise out of their beds, and run to the churches, where they called vpon God by earnest praiers to be mercifull vnto them. Of this earthquake one writeth thus. Manie thousands haue heard and commonlie it is reported, that latelie in Kent an other earthquake was séene and felt, and so terriblie and sore the earth did tremble and quake, that it wakened people that soundlie slept, and had like to haue rocked them all aslépe that were awake. So fearefull was the matter, and so dreadfull is the wrath of God in time of visitation, and wicked season of iniquitie. This was a pretie naturall cause: in déed so I thinke. For the naturall diseases of man, and the naughtie filthinesse of the flesh (full of lust and infirmities) caused God for the correction of natures inclination, to make Douer, Sandwich, Canturburie, Grauesend, and sundrie other places tremble and shake.

I. Stow. An earthquake in Kent.

T. C.

Castels and ships séene in the aier.

The eightéenth daie of Maie, about one houre before sun setting, diuerse gentlemen of worship, and good credit, riding from Bodman in Cornewall towards Foie, there appeared to their séeming in the northeast, a verie great mist or fog, much like vnto the sea: and the forme of a cloud in the fashion of some great castell, with flags, & streamers thereon as it were standing in the sea, which presentlie vanished awaie. In whose stéed, and nére to the same place, appeared an other cloud which altered into the likenesse of a great argosie, furnished with masts, and other necessaries; and hir sailes séeming full of wind, made hir waie on the southwest of the castell, hauing streamers and flags verie warlike, with two boats at either sterne. There incontinent appeared againe the forme of a castell, and behind the same came following on the southwest side, an other great argosie, furnished as the first. This being past, there appéered three or foure gallies with their masts and flags in warlike sort, hauing boats at their sternes; and thereby appeared other small clouds to the number of twelue, which altered into the proportion of the said castels, and one following an other, as soone as anie of them vanished other came in their roomes; and this continued the space of an houre. Shortlie after the sights in the aier aforesaid, a worthie Gentleman in the countrie writ to a right good gentleman in the court, that there was séene vpon a downe called Brodwels downe, in Summersetshire, three score personages all clothed in blacke, a furlong in distance from those that beheld them; and after their appearing, and a little while tarieng, they vanished awaie; but immediatlie, an other strange companie in like maner, colour and number appeared in the same place, and they incountered one an other, and so vanished awaie. And the third time appeared that number againe all in bright armour and incountered one an other, and so vanished awaie. Foure honest men which saw it, reporting the same abroad, were examined thereof, before sir George Norton, to whome they sware, that those things they had séene were true, as here before is rehearsed.

T. C. wonders in Wiltshire and Summersetshire.

Moreouer, it is crediblie reported of manie honest men, that fiue miles from Blonsdon in Wiltshire, a crie of hounds was heard in the aier, the selfe same daie that the first earthquake was, and the noise was so great that was made, that they séemed three or foure score couples: whereat diuerse toke their greihounds, thinking some gentlemen had bæne a hunting in the chase, and thought to course: yet some of those that went out of their houses, séeing nothing below abroad, loked vpwards to the skies, and there espied in the aier fiue or six hounds perfectlie to be discerned. Now (to saie my fansie) I doubt not but thousands hold these newes for fables inuented for pleasure. But I protest before God and man, I can beléeue a great deale more stranger matter than this, in this strange world: for the people so estrange themselues from God by vsing manie strange fashions, and clapping on new conditions & natures, that except he shew some miracles, his godhead would quickelie be forgotten on earth, and men would beléeue there were no other world but this.

T. C.

The thirtéenth of June, about six of the clocke in the morning, at Shipwash within the baronie of Bothell in Northumberland, there happened a tempest of lightning and thunder, after the which, on a sudden came a great showre of haile, amongest the which were found stones of diuerse shapes marueilous to behold, as in the likenes of frogs, mattocks, swords, horse shoes, nailes, crosses of diuerse sorts, skuls of dead men, &c. The seuentéenth day of June, in the parish of Blasedon in Yorkeshire, after a great tempest of lightning & thunder, a woman of fours score yeares old, named Alice Perrin, was deliuered of an hideous monster, whose head was like vnto to a sallet or headpeece, the face like vnto a mans, except the mouth, which was round and small, like vnto the mouth of a mouse, the fore part of the bodie like to a man, hauing eight legs not one like an other, and a taile halfe a yard long. Which monster brought into the world, besides an admiration of the diuine works of God, an astonishment at his iudgements. But of these we may saie as a stranger said sometime vpon the like occasion of prodigies and wonders successiuelie insuing, not without weightie signification; to wit, that such things be as tales told to the deafe, verie few weieng in their minds the meaning & effect of strange accidents, and therfore thinke vpon nothing lesse than a reformation of their wicked life: for the which things sake God sendeth these and manie such significant warnings, before he taketh the rod in hand, and whippeth vs till we smart: we then not looking to the meanes that prouoke this vengeance, as willing to auoid them: but murmuring at the iust iudge, vnder whose heauie hand we grone, & charging him to be the author of all misfortunes falling vpon vs: which Homer trulie seemeth right well to haue noted in this sense:

Haile stones of strange shapes.

A monstrous birth.

Iouis oratio apud Homerum.

Cur stulti incusant mortales numina cœli?
Et sibi nos dicunt autores esse malorum?
Cum præter fati leges in aperta ferantur
Damna, suamentis proprijs erroribus orti.

Soldiors transported into Ireland.

About the eightéenth daie of Julie, the lord Grete toke his voiage towards Ireland as lord deputie thereof, after whom was sent diuerse bands of lustie souldiors, both horssemen and footmen, vnder the leading of expert capteins, of whose prosperous and happie successe against their enimies, the Irish and others, diuerse pamflets haue béene published, & matter more at large is set downe in the historie of Ireland. The thrée and twentith of September, at fennie Stanton in Huntingtonshire, one Agnis wife to William Linsete was deliuered of an vglie and strange monster, with a face blacke, the necke red, mouth and eies like a lion, on the forehead a roll of flesh that might be turned vp with ones finger, on the hinder part of the head a lumpe of flesh proportioned like a fether, being hollow, with one eare growing on the lower part of the chæke, his bellie big and hard, the armes big, hauing fiue fingers and a thumbe on either hand, and in place of toes on the left foot fiue fingers and a thumbe, on the right foot a thumbe and seuen fingers, & in the place of priuitie the shape both of male & female: a strange sight to be séene, and I feare, signifieth our monstrous life, which God for his mercie giue vs grace to amend, without procrastination or putting off from daie to daie, as the poet significantlie saith:

Monstrous birth.

Cras vultis, sed vult hodie vindex Deus, & cras,
Aut non vult, aut vos obruet atra dies.

Blasing star.

The eight daie of October, immediatlie after the new mone, there appeared a blasing star in the south, bushing toward the east, which was nightlie séene (the aier being cléere) more than two moneths.

Sergeants feast.

The eightéenth of October were made eight sergeents at law, to wit, William Fléetwood recorder of London, Edward Flowerdue, Thomas Snag, William Periam, Robert Halton, John Clench, John Pickering, Thomas Warmsleie; maister Snag before named was sicke, and therefore was sworne in his chamber at Greies inne, the other seuen were sworne at Westminster, and held their feast at the new Temple at London.

Proclamation against the familie of loue.

The quéenes maiestie being informed, that in sundrie places of this realme, certeine persons secretlie taught damnable heresies, contrarie to diuers principall articles of our beléefe and christian faith, who to colour their sect named themselues the familie of loue, and then as manie as were allowed by them to be of that familie to be elect and saued, and all others of what church soeuer they be, to be reiected and damned. And for that vpon conuenting of some of them before the bishops & ordinaries, it was found that the ground of their sect is mainteined by certeine lewd, heretical, and seditious books, first made in the Dutch tong, and lastlie translated into English, and printed beyond the seas, & secretlie brought ouer into the realme, the author whereof they name H. N. &c. And considering also it is found, that those sectaries held opinion, that they may before anie magistrat or ecclesiasticall or temporall, or anie other person, not being professed to be of their sect, by oth or otherwise denie anie thing for their aduantage: so as though manie of them are well knowne to be teachers and spreaders abroad of these dangerous and damnable sects; yet by their owne confession they can not be condemned. Therefore hir maiestie being verie sorie to sée so great an euill, by malice of the diuell to be brought into this hir realme, and by hir bishops and ordinaries she vnderstandeth it verie requisit, not onelie to haue those dangerous heretiks and sectaries to be seuerelie punished; but that also all other meanes be vsed by hir maiesties roiall authoritie, which is giuen hir of God to defend Christs church, to rot them out from further infecting of hir realme: she hath thought mét and conuenient, and so by hir proclamation commandeth, that all hir officers and ministers temporall shall in all their seuerall vocations assist the bishops of hir realme, and all other person to search out all persons dulie suspected, to be either teachers or professors of the foresaid damnable sects, and by all good meanes to proceed seuerelie against them, being found culpable by order of the lawes ecclesiasticall or temporall: and that all search be made in all places suspected, for the books and writings mainteining the said heresies and sects, and them to destroie and burne, &c: as more at large may appéere by the said proclamation, giuen at Richmond the third of October, and proclamed at London on the nineteenth daie of the same moneth.

The quénes maiesties purpose to rot out this pestilent sect.

Victorie against the Irish and other in Ireland.

About this time there arriued vpon the west coast of Ireland, a certeine companie of Italians and Spaniards, sent by the pope to the aid of the earle of Desmond in his rebellion, which fortified themselues stronglie nére vnto Smerwike, in a fort which they called castell del Ore, there erecting the popes banner against hir maiestie. Which when the lord Grete of Milton deputie of Ireland vnderstood, he marched thitherward, and on the first of Nouember, hearing of the arriuall of the Swift, the Tigre, the Aid, the Merlion, & other of the quénes maiesties ships, and also of thrée barks fraughted from Corke and Limerike with vittels, on the morrow after marched towards the fort, vnto the which he gaue so hot an assault, that on the ninth of Nouember the same was yéelded, all the Irishmen and women hanged, and more than foure hundred Spaniards, Italians, and Biscaies put to the sword; the coronell, capteins, secretarie, and others, to the number of twentie saued for ransome. In which fortresse was found good store of monie, bisket, bakon, oile, wine, and diuerse other prouisions of vittels sufficient for their companie for halfe a yeare, besides armour, powder, shot, and other furniture for two thousand men and vpwards.

Anno reg. 23. Randoll hanged for coniuring.

The eight and twentith daie of Nouember were arreigned in the kings bench, William Randoll for coniuring to know where treasure was hid in the earth, and goods felonsoulie taken were become; Thomas Elks, Thomas Lupton, Rafe Spacie, and Christopher Waddington, for being present, aiding, and procuring the said Randoll to the coniuration aforesaid; Randoll, Elks, Spacie, and Waddington were found guiltie, & had iudgement to be hanged; Randoll was executed, the other were reprieued. About the 24 of December in the town of Walsham in the countie of Sussex, a child of eleuen yéers old, named William Withers, laie in a trance for the space of ten daies without anie sustenance, and at the last comming to himselfe he vttered to the standers by manie strange spéeches, inueieng against pride, couetousnesse, coldnesse of charitie, and other outragious sins. To behold this child there resorted diuerse godlie & zelous preachers, as also knights, esquiers, & gentlemen, all of them hearing and séeing that which was wonderfull. And among others that came thither, there was a gentleman of great credit and worship, with certeine of his men to heare and behold the child: who hauing espied a seruingman that had béene there with his maister two times, whom he had sharplie tawnted for his great and monstrous ruffes, spake vnto him verie vehementlie, and told him that it were better for him to put on sackecloth and mourne for his sinnes, than in such abhominable pride to prance vp himselfe like the diuels darling, the verie father of pride and lieng, who sought by the exercise of that damnable sinne to make himselfe a prete to euerlasting torments in hellfire. Whereupon the seruingman, as one prickt in conscience, sore sorowed and wept for his offense, rent the band from his necke, toke a knife and cut it in péeces, and vowed neuer to weare the like againe. This for the strangenesse the reof will be condemned as a lie, speciallie of vnbeléeuers and peruers worldlings, whose hearts are so hardened, that they will not beléene though one rise from the dead, or though God should speake vnto them from heauen (as the poet noteth trulie) which he hath done in times past:

Strange spéeches of a child.

Pride in great ruffes reprooued and reformed in a seruingman.

——solióque tremendus ab alto
Altitonans cœlo signa stupenda dedit.

Ab. Hart. in R. L.

About the twelfe daie of Januarie proclamation was published at London, for reuocation of sundrie the quéenes maiesties subiects remaining beyond the seas vnder colour of studie, and yet liuing contrarie to the lawes of God, and of the realme: and also against the reteining of Iesuits and malling priests, sowers of sedition, and other treasonable attempts, &c. The thirteenth of Januarie a man was drawne to saint Thomas of Waterings, and there hanged, headed, and quartered, for begging by a licence thereunto the quéenes hand was counterfeited.

Against Iesuits and malling priests.

One executed for counterfeiting the quéenes hand.

On the fiftéenth daie of Januarie, the lords and barons of this realme began to sit in the parlement house at Westminster: and on the twentith daie of Januarie the quéenes maiestie went from White hall to the parlement house by water. Whereas a great chalenge of iusts was signified by waie of deuise before hir maiestie on Twelfe night last past, to haue bene performed the fiftéenth daie of Januarie, hir maiesties pleasure was for diuerse considerations the same should be deferred vntill the two and twentith daie of the same moneth; on which daie the same was most couragiouslie accomplished in the accustomed place at Westminster, where manie staues were valiantlie broken; but through the great concourse of people thither repairing, manie of the beholders, as well men as women, were sore hurt, some maimed, and some killed, by falling of the scaffolds ouercharged.

Parlement at Westminster.

Iusting at Westminster.

This yeare about Hallowntide last past, in the marishes of Daneseie hundred, in a place called Southminster, in the countie of Essex, a strange thing happened. There suddenlie appéered an infinite multitude of mice, which ouerwhelming the whole earth in the said marishes, did sheare and gnaw the grasse by the roots, spoiling & tainting the same with their venemous téeth: in such sort that the cattell which grased thereon were smitten with a murreine and died thereof. Which vermine by policie of man could not be destroied, till now at the last it came to passe, that there flocked togither all about the same marishes such a number of owles, as all the shire was not able to yéeld: whereby the marsh holders were shortlie deliuered from the veration of the said mice.

Mice deuoure the grasse in Daneseie hundred.

1581

This yeare (against the comming of certeine commissioners out of France into England) by hir maiesties appointment, on the six and twentith daie of March in the morning (being Easter daie) a banketting house was begun at Westminster, on the south west side of hir maiesties palace of White hall, made in maner and forme of a long square, three hundred thirtie and two foot in measure about; thirtie principals made of great masts, being fortie foot in length a peece, standing vpright; betwéene euerie one of these masts ten foot asunder and more. The walles of this house were closed with canuas, and painted all the outsides of the same most artificiallie with a worke called rustike, much like to stone. This house had two hundred ninetie and two lights of glasse. The sides within the same house was made with ten heights of degrées for people to stand vpon: and in the top of this house was wrought most cunninglie vpon cannas, works of iuie and hollie, with pendents made of wicker rods, and garnished with baie, rue, and all maner of strange flowers garnished with spangles of gold, as also beautified with hanging toseans made of hollie and iuie, with all maner of strange fruits, as pomegranats, orenges, pompions, cucumbers, grapes, carrets, with such other like, spangled with gold, and most richlie hanged. Betwixt these works of baies and iuie, were great spaces of canuas, which was most cunninglie painted, the clouds with starres, the sunne and sunne beames, with diuerse other cotes of sundrie sorts belonging to the quéenes maiestie, most richlie garnished with gold. There were of all manner of persons working on this house, to the number of three hundred seuentie and fiue: two men had mischances, the one brake his leg, and so did the other. This house was made in three weéks and three daies, and was ended the eightéenth daie of Aprill; and cost one thousand seuen hundred fortie and foure pounds, ninetéene shillings and od monie; as I was credible informed by the worshipfull maister Thomas Graue surueior vnto hir maiesties workes, who serued and gaue order for the same, as appeareth by record.

Banketting house at Westminster.

How this banketting house was garnished and decked with artificiall deuises.

The costs and charges of this banketting house.

On the fiftéenth daie of Aprill arriued at Douer these noblemen of France (commissioners from the French king to hir maiestie) Francis of Burbon prince dolphin of Auergne, Arthur Cossaie marshall of France, Lodouic Lusignian lord of Laneoc, Cauergius Caercongin countie of Tillir, Bertrand Salignacus lord Mot Fenelon, monsieur Manaissour, Barnabie Brissen president of the parlement of Paris, Claud Pinart, monsieur Marchmont, monsieur Verate; these came from Grauesend by water to London, where they were honorably receiued and interteined; and shortlie after being accompanied of the nobilitie of England, they repaired to the court and banketting house prepared for them at Westminster, as is afore said, where hir maiestie Noblemen of France arriued at Douer.

——(decus illa Britannûm Gemmáque non alijs inuenienda locis) with amiable countenance & great courtesie receiued them: and afterward in that place most roiallis feasted & banketted them. Also the nobles & gentlemen of the court, desirous to shew them all courtesie possible possible fittest for such estates, and to sport them with all courtlie pleasure, agreed among them to prepare a triumph, which was verie quicklie concluded: and being deuised in most sumptuous order, was by them performed in as valiant a manner to their endlesse fame and honor. The chiefe or chalengers in these attempts were these: the earle of Arundell, the lord Windsore, maister Philip Sidneie, and maister Fulke Grenill, who calling themselues the foure foster children of desire, made their inuention of the foresaid triumph in order and forme following.

The excellent inuention of the triumph.

The gallerie or place at the end of the tiltyard adioining to hir maiesties house at Whitehall, wheras hir person should be placed, was called and not without cause, The castell or fortresse of perfect beautie, for as much as hir highnesse should be there included; whereto the said foster children laid title and claime as their due by descent to belong vnto them. And vpon deniall or anie repulse from that their desired patrimonie, they vowed to vanquish and conquer by force who so should seeme to withstand it. For the accomplishing whereof they sent their challenge or first defiance to the quæenes maiestie: which was vttered by a boie on sundaie the sirteenth of Aprill last, as hir maiestie came from the chappell, who being apparelled in red and white, as a martiall messenger of Desires fostered children, without making anie precise reuerence at all, vttered these speeches of defiance from his masters to hir maiestie, the effect whereof insueth.

The first defie or challenge.

O ladie, that doth intitle the titles you possesse with the honor of your worthinesse, rather crowning the great crowne you hold, with the fame to haue so excelling an owner, than you receiuing to your selfe anie increase, keeping that outward ornament: vouchsafe with patient attention to heare the words which I by commandement am here to deliuer you, wherein if your ears (vsed to the thankesgiuing of your people & the due praises of the earth) shall feele a scarcelie disdaine to heare once the sound of a defie, yet dare I warrant my selfe so far vpon the replie & deceiuing shew of rare Beautie, as that malice can not fall from so faire a mind vpon the sealie messenger, whose mouth is a seruant to others direction. Know yee therefore alonelie princesse, that herby (for far off they are neuer) there lies incamped the foure long haplesse, now hopefull fostered children of Desire: who hauing beene a great while nourished vp with that infective milke, and to too much care of their fierie fosterer (though full oft that drie nurse despaire indeuored to weine them from it) being now as strong in that nurture, as they are weake in fortune, incouraged with the valiant counsell of neuer fainting Desire, and by the same assured, that by right of inheritance euen from euer, the fortresse of beautie doth belong to hir fostered children: lastlie, finding it blazed by all tongs, ingraued in all hearts, and proued by all eies, that this fortresse built by nature is seated in this realme: these foure I saie and saie againe, thus nourished, thus animated, thus intituled, and thus informed, do will you by me, euen in the name of iustice, that you will no longer exclude vertuous Desire from perfect Beautie. Whereto if you yeeld (O yeeld for so all reason requireth) then haue I no more to saie, but reioise that my satengs haue obteined so rightfull and yet so blisfull a request. But if (alas but let not that be needfull) Beautie be accompanied with disdainefull pride, and pride waighted on by refusing crueltie; then must I denounce vnto you (wo is me, answer before it be denounced) that they determine by request to accomplish their claime. And because they will better testifie to the world, they haue bin brought vp vnder the wings of honorable Desire, this honorable forewarning they send you; that vpon the foure and twentith daie of this moneth of Aprill they will besiege that fatall fortresse, vowing not to spare (if this obstinacie continue) the sword of faithfulnes, and the fire of affection. Now if so it fall out, the worthie knights of your court (moued with passion in themselues) disdaine of my senders boldnesse, or partiall liking (which I most doubt) to the maiestie of your eies, will either bid them battell before they approch, or suffering them to approch, will after labour to leuie the siege; they protest to meet them in what sort they will chose, wishing onelie it may be performed before your owne eies, whome they know as euen in iudgement as daintie in chosing: where if so they list, first at the tilt in so manie courses, as your selfe shall please to appoint; and then if anie will call them to the course of the field with lance and sword, they hope to giue such true proues of their valour, as at lest shall make their desires more noble. Vowing on the other side, that if before the night part the fraie, they do not ouercome all them that come in against them, they will yeeld themselues slaues vnto you for euer. This therefore O quæne (greater in that you are quæne of your selfe, than in passing the whole compasse of the earth) haue I deliuered my charge, not as a challenge to your knights, against whome (but in so iust a cause) they acknowledge themselues vnable to match the meanest; but as a plaine proclamation of warr, vnles the fortres of Beautie, that hath wone so manie to lose themselues, be speedilie surrendered. And now it shall be seene what knights you haue, whome Beautie may draw to resist a rightfull title. And I for my more part moued by that I see in you (though I serue your enimies) will dailie praie that all men may see you, & then you shall not feare anie armes of aduersaries: or if enimies you must haue, that either they may haue the mind of them that send me, or their fortune in that they haue long desired.

The challenge made and how to be tried.

Vertuous desire not to be excluded from perfect Beautie.

The fortresse of Beautie.

At which daie aboue said for certeine vrgent occasions, the said challenge and triumph, by hir maiesties commandement, was deferred till the first daie of Maie: at which daie for like causes it was further deferred till the next mondaie following, being the eight daie of Maie: and so till Whitsun mondaie, when they first began to performe it. The said daie being come, the foure foster children had made preparation to besiege the fortresse of Beautie, and thereto had prouided a frame of wood, which was couered with canuas, and painted outwardlie in such excellent order, as if it had bin verie naturall earth or mould, and caried the name of a rowling trench, which went on wheeles, which waie soeuer the persons within did driue it. Vpon the top whereof was placed two cannons of wood, so passing well coloured as they seemed to be in deed two faire field peeces of ordinances, and by them was placed two men for gunners clothed in crimson sarcenet, with their baskets of earth for defense of their bodies by them. And also there stood on the top of the trench an ensigne bearer in the same sute with the gunners, displaieng his ensigne, and within the said trench was cunninglie conueied diuerse kind of most excellent musike against the castell of Beautie. These things thus all in a readinesse, the challengers approched, & came from the stable toward the tiltyard, one after another in braue & excellent order as followeth.

Urgent causes why the challenge was deferd.

The order of the rowling trench with most excellent inuentions.

First, the earle of Arundell entred the tiltyard, all in gilt and ingrauen armour, with caparisons and furniture richlie and brauelie imbrodered, hauing attendant vpon him two gentlemen vshers, foure pages riding on foure spare horsses, and twentie of his gentlemen. All which aforesaid were apparelled in short clokes and venetian hose of crimson velvet, laid with gold lace, doublets of yellow sattin, hats of crimson velvet with gold bands and yellow feathers, and yellow silke stockes. Then had he sir trumpetters that sounded before him, and one and thirtie yeomen that waited after him aparelled in cassocke coats, and venetian hose of crimson velvet, laid on with red silke and gold lace, doublets of yellow taffatie, hats of crimson taffatie, with yellow feathers, and yellow worsted stockings.

The earle of Arundels entrie the first daie and his attendants.

The lord Windsors entrie the first date and his attendants.

After him proceeded the lord Windsore, in gilt and ingraven armour, with caparisons and furniture, richlie imbrodered with gold, having attendant on him foure pages riding on foure spare horses, and foure and twentie gentlemen, all aparelled in short cloaks of scarlet, lined through with orange tawnie taffatie, and laid about with silver lace, doublets of orange tawnie sattin, venetian hose of orange tawnie velvet, blacke velvet caps, with silver bands and white feathers, and silvered rapiers and daggers, with scabberds of blacke velvet; foure trumpetters, and two footmen in cassocke coats and venetian hose of orange tawnie velvet, and blacke velvet caps with silver bands and white feathers, foure groomes of his stable leading of his foure horses, in cassocke coats and venetian hose of orange tawnie taffatie and orange tawnie felts with silver bands, and white feathers. Then had he three score yeomen in coats of orange tawnie cloth, with the unicorne of silver plate on their sleeves, and orange tawnie felts with silver bands and white feathers.

M. Sidneis entrie, now sir Philip Sidnete and his attendants.

Then proceeded maister Philip Sidnete, in veris sumptuous maner, with armour part blew, and the rest gilt and ingraven, with foure spare horsses, having caparisons and furniture verie rich and costlie, as some of cloth of gold imbrodered with pearle, and some imbrodered with gold and silver feathers, verie richlie and cunninglie wrought: he had foure pages that rode on his foure spare horsses, who had cassocke coats, and venetian hose all of cloth of silver, laced with gold lace, and hats of the same with gold bands and white feathers, and ech one a paire of white buskins. Then had he a thirtie gentlemen and yeomen, & foure trumpetters, who were all in cassocke coats and venetian hose of yelow velvet, laced with silver lace, yelow velvet caps with silver bands and white fethers, and everie one a paire of white buskins; and they had vpon their coats, a scrowle or band of silver, which came scarfe wise over the shoulder, and so downe vnder the arme, with this poesie, or sentence written vpon it, both before and behind, Sic nos non nobis.

M. Fulke Greuils entrie with his traine of attendants.

Then came maister Fulke Greuill, in gilt armour, with rich and faire caparisons and furniture, having foure spare horsses with foure pages riding vpon them, and foure trumpetters sounding before him, and a twentie gentlemen and yeomen attending vpon him, who with the pages and trumpetters were all aparelled in lose ierkins of tawnie taffatie, cut and lined with yelow sarsenet, and laced with gold lace, and cut downe the arme and set with lopes and buttons of gold, venetian hose of the same lined (as aforesaid) laced with gold lace downe the side with lopes and buttons of gold, with ech a paire of yelow worsted stockings, and hats of tawnie taffetie with gold bands and yelow feathers. Having thus all entered the tiltyard, they proceeded on with the rowling trench before them, which stated against the quæne, and they passed by, as though they would behold the Fortresse of beautie; and so went about the tilt. At last the boie that vttered the first defiance pronounced these speeches to hir maiestie.

The second defie or chalenge.

If the message latelie delivered vnto you had bæne beleeued and followed (O quæne) in whome the whole storie of vertue is written, with the language of beautie; nothing should this violence haue needed in your inviolate presence. Your eies, which till now haue bæne onelie wont to discerne the bowed knees of knæling hearts, and inwardlie turned, sound alwaies the heavenlie peace of a swæt mind, should not now haue their faire beames reflected with the shining of armour, should not now be driven to see the furie of desire, nor the fierie force of furie. But sith so it is (alas that so it is) that in the defense of obstinate refusall there never groweth victorie but by compassion; they are come: what need I saie more, you see them, readie in hart as you know, and able with hands as they hope, not onelie to assailing but to prevailing. Perchance you despise the smalnesse of number. I saie vnto you, the force of desire goeth not by fulnesse of companie. Saie rather view with what unresistable determination themselves approch, and how not onelie the heavens send their invisible instrument to aid them: but also the verie earth the dullest of all the elements, which with naturall heavinesse still strives to the deepie centre; yet for advancing his enterprise is content actuelie (as you shall see) to move it selfe vpon it selfe to rise vp in height, that it maie the better command the high and highminded fortresses. Manie words, when deeds are in the field, are tedious both vnto the speaker and hearer. You see their forces, but know not their fortunes; if you be resolved, it bots not, and threats dread not. I haue discharged my charge, which was euen when all things were readie for the assault, then to offer partlie a thing not so much vnused as gratious in besiegers. You shall now be summoned to yeeld, which if it be reiected, then looke for the affectionat alarme to be followed with desirous assault. The time approcheth for their approches, but no time shall staie me from wishing, that howsoeuer this succeed, the world maie long inioie hir chiefest ornament, which decks it with hir selfe, and hir selfe with the loue of goodnesse.

Meaning the musike within the mount.

wherewith the mount moued frosse vp in height.

The rowling trench moued nære to the quæne.

Which speech being ended, the rowling trench or mount of earth was moued as nære the quænes maiestie as might be, which being setled, the musike plaied verie pleasantlie, and one of the boies being then accompanied with cornets, summoned the fortresse with this delectable song, here vnder noted.

The fortresse summoned in song.

Yeeld, yeeld, ô yeeld, you that this fort doo hold, which seated is, in spotlesse honors feeld,
Desires great force, no forces can withhold:
then to desires desire, ô yeeld ô yeeld.
Yeeld yeeld ô yeeld, trust not on beauties pride, faireneſse though faire, is but a feeble sheeld,
When strong desire, which vertues loue doth guide, claimes but to gaine his due, ô yeeld ô yeeld.
Yeeld yeeld ô yeeld, who first this fort did make,
did it for iust desires, true children beeld,
Such was his mind, if you an other take,
defense herein doth wrong, ô yeeld ô yeeld,
Yeeld yeeld ô yeeld, now is it time to yeeld, before th'assault begin, ô yeeld ô yeeld.

When that was ended, an other boie turning himselfe to the foster children and their retinue, song this alarme with plesant voice & sæmelie countenance.

The alarme song.

Alarme alarme, here will no yeelding bee, such marble eares, no cunning words can charme, Courage therefore, and let the statelie see,
that nought withstands desire, alarme alarme.
Alarme alarme, let not their beauties moove remorse in you to doo this fortresse harme,
For sith warre is the ground of vertues loue,
no force, though force be vsed, alarme alarme.
Alarme alarme, companions now begin,
about this neuer conquered wals to swarme,
More praise to vs we neuer looke to win, much maie that was not yet, alarme alarme.

Alarme

Alarme alarme, when once the fight is warme, then shall you see them yeeld, alarme alarme.

The shoting off of the two canons, the one with swéet water, and the other with swéet powder.

Which ended, the two canons were shot off, the one with swéet powder, and the other with swéet water, verie odoriferous and pleasant, and the noise of the shoting was verie excellent consent of melodie within the mount. And after that was store of prætie scaling ladders, and the footmen threw floures and such fansies against the wals, with all such deuises as might seeme fit thot for desire. All which did continue till time the defendants came in.

The maner of the defendants comming in.

Then came in the defendants in most sumptuous maner, with euerie one his seruants, pages, and trumpetters (hauing some more, some lesse) in such order as I haue here vnder placed them, with euerie one his sundrie inuention, which for that some of them be mysticall and not knowne to manie, I omit therefore for breuities sake to speake of anie. Yet such speeches as were spoken or presented for them to hir maiestie, so manie as were, or at the least as I could come by, I haue here in their order placed them, whereby their inuentions for whome they were spoken, are therein plainelie declared. Therefore I referre you to the reading of them hereafter. But thus the defendants entered the tiltyard, one after an other as followeth. First maister Henrie Greie, sir Thomas Perot, maister Anthonie Coke, maister Thomas Ratcliffe, maister Henrie Knolles, maister William Knolles, maister Robert Knolles, maister Francis Knolles, maister Rafe Bowes, maister Thomas Kelwaie, maister George Goring, maister William Tresham, maister Robert Alexander, maister Edward Dennie, maister Hercules Meautus, maister Edward More, maister Richard Skipwith, maister Richard Ward, maister Edward Digbie, maister Henrie Nowell, maister Henrie Brunkerd. And afterwards in the middest of the running came in sir Henrie Leigh, as vnknowne, and when he had broken his six staues went out in like maner againe. So passing on one after an other, when sir Thomas Perot & maister Coke came to the end of the tilt, ouer against the quéenes maiestie, one of their pages arrated like an angell vttered these spéeches vnto hir.

The defendants names that run at tilt.

Despaire, no not despaire (most high and happie princesse) could so congeale the frozen knight in the aier, but that desire (ah swéet desire) inforced him to behold the sun on the earth, whereon as he was gazing with twinkling eie (for who can behold such beames stedfastlie?) he begun to dissolue into drops, melting with such delight, that he séemed to preferre the lingering of a certeine death before the lacking of an vncerteine life. Such is the nature of ingrauen loialtie, that it chooseth rather to haue the bodie dissolued, than the mind disliked. Thus consuming with content (a swéet sickenesse is conceipt) and pining with more than speakeable passions, he suddenlie beheld that sun to be besieged which he so deuoutlie serued. Wherewith boiling in no lesse disdaine, than surprised with immoderat pensiuenesse, he vttered these words: O Ioue, if thou meane to resolue nature into contraries; why do I liue to sée it? If into nothing, why do I liue at all? If the fot scale the head, there is no rest; if desire ouershot dutie, there is no reason: and where either of these are, there can be no rule. And so setting more sighs than mate be numbred by ciphers, this present time (ah griefe) this present time, that honest & faire hearted frozen knight died (what said I) euen that which againe with griefe I must say died, whose ghost making spædie passage into the Elisian fields (for what more swift than a soule) in the midst of the infernall multitude, with schréeches, cries & clamors made both heauen & hell to redouble this eccho: O times, O men, O corruption of ma-ners! The sun is besieged, the sun (O mischiefe) the sun is besieged. Which strange and vnacquainted termes caused not onelie murmuring amongst the ghosts beneath, but a musing amongst the gods aboue: who as well to represse the tumults, which might haue risen among the shadows, as to reuenge the pride which began to grow on the earth, sent downe an angell with this commandement; Go descend, and cause Adam and Eue to appeare on the earth in that sort as they were in paradise, that the world may know them & wonder at them. For séeing out of their lomes haue issued those preposterous limmes, I know none more fit to correct them. Certes none more willing. They will attempt anie thing for thy sake, and seruice of that earthlie, and yet (O strange conceipt) most heauenlie sun. For as they were before driuen from their desire, because they desired to know the best: so now shall they be driuen vnto their desire, which they couet to honour most. This shall be their reward, they shall come néere and yet shall not search, and be they farre off, it shall warme. A cloud maie sometimes barre their sight, but nothing shall depriue them of the safegard: yet command them to be humble in affection, though feruent, least they séeme to disdaine that pride in others which they desire themselues.

The spéech of sir Thomas Perot and maister Coke to the quéene.

By the sun is meant hir maiestie, called before The fortresse of beautie.

Sir Thomas Perot & maister Coke were both in like armour beset with apples and fruit, the one signifieng Adam & the other Eue, who had haire hong all downe his helmet.

The angell speaketh to the quéene.

The sun in the highest delighteth in the shadow which is shortest, nourisheth the træ whose rot groweth deepest, not whose top springeth loftiest. This commission and counsell ended, all things were in a moment accomplished with such celeritie (for to the gods time is tied) that they were sped so sone as they were spoken. And now most renowmed and diuine sun, Adam and Eue being present, vouchsafe to heare somwhat in their behalfs pronounced. Sir knights, if in besieging the sunne ye vnderstood what you had vndertaken, ye would not destroie a common blessing for a priuat benefit. Will you subdue the sun? Who shall rest in the shadow where the wearie take breath, the disquiet rest and all comfort? Will ye bereue all men of those glistering & gladsome beams? What shall then prosper in the shining, but you will clime it by the raies? O rare exhalations! Brothers you may be to desire, but sons ye are to ill hap, which thinke you can not sinke deepe inough into the sea, vnlesse you take your fall from the sun. Desist you knights, desist, sith it is impossible to resist: content your selues with the sunnes indifferent succor, suffer the iuniper shrub to grow by the loftie oke, and clame no prerogatiue where the sun grants no priuilege; for being of the same mettall that others are, the sun will worke the like effects, as she doth in others. The giants would haue bin gods, if they could haue scaled the heauens; and you no lesse than stars could you conquer the same: but as their throwing hill vpon hill did manifest their pride, but nothing further their pretense; so your laieng chalenge vpon claime, and conquest vpon chalenge, may well proue a will but no worthinesse; a desire to reach, but no possibilitie to recouer. In which your soaring assaies if you chance to fall, the only comfort you haue is to crie with Phaeton, Magnis excidimus ausis. But if no persuasions may moue your minds, know yée proud knights, there are that haue hearts as big as mounteins, and as far aboue you in prowesse as ye are aboue all in presumption, yet not so vaine (which ye terme valiant) to assalt the sun. And whie? bicause it is impregnible. We content to inioie the light, yée to eclipse it; we to rest vnder the fæt, yée to run ouer the head; we to yéeld to that which nothing can conquer, you to conquer that which maketh all men captiues. But were it possible that head could deuise, courage attempt, or hand execute anie thing that might shew the depth of our vnspotted loialtie, some

He speaketh to the chalengers in the behalfe of the two knights Adam and Eue.

Magnis excidimus ausis, the crie of Phaeton at his fall.

shoulo

should be seene (and for your selues too soone) that your enterprises should be of as small account then, as now they are of likelihood; so deepe an impression is ingrauen in our thoughts, for the maiestie of that sun which now perfing our eies hath fullie subdued our hearts, that we are prest in hir defense to offer the whole world defiance. In proofe whereof I am charged to throw downe this gantlet, which who so dareth take vp, shall feele both the heat of their iust conceiued quarrell, and the reproch of their owne deserued follie, not by riding in breaking a few staues to end the strife, but at tourneie, or what else soeuer they can deuise, or dare aduenture to win the benefit of Beautie. Thus most renowmed & diuine Beautie, whose beams shine like the sun, haue Adam & Eue aduentured to defend the sun. The same I call Beautie the light of the world, the maruell of men, the mirrour of nature, on which their incounter if those fauourable gleames may fall, they will not onlie thinke to haue done god herein, but to be restored againe to paradise. The one meaneth to repose his trust in a woman, who like Eue cannot be beguiled, the other to rest on a saint which by a serpent will not be tempted. Thus being placed in the garden of your graces, O of all things most gratious, where vertues grow as thicke as leaues did in paradise, they will take heede to tast of the forbidden fruit, contented to behold, not coueting to take hold. And for that it hath beene long argued, and no arguing can end, whether the first offense came by the crudelitie of Adam, or the simplicitie of Eue; the one defending his fault by sound arguments, the other excusing hirs by sharpe answers: they most humblie sue for this, that either by sir courses betweene them the quarrell may be ended, or by your highnesse peremptorie sentence determined. For they both being in the world, are desirous that one might beare the blame of both. And what herein your excellencie shall set downe, there is none shall gainesaie; for whensoeuer the question shall be moued, no other reason shall be allowed or liked than this; Elizabetha dixit. This speach being thus ended, sir Thomas Perot and master Coke proceeded backward on the other side of the tilt. And when master Ratclise came likewise against the queene, one of his pages pronounced these speeches in his masters behalfe to hir maiestie.

The defendants gantlet throwne downe, &c.

The defendants sute and desire.

So manie were the misfortunes (most renowmed and beautifull princesse) of the desolate knight my master, as neither the shortnesse of the time will suffer me to repeat, nor the greatnesse of the mysterie to remember. But let this suffice, that some there were and so manifold, that geometrie whereon the bodie of man hangeth could not beare being intollerable, nor the mind which consisteth in arithmetike number being infinit. Thus alwaies crossed by fortune, whose crossing is no blessing, he determined to separate himselfe as far from societie, as his actions were from successe; who wandering through manie deserts, yet finding as he thought no place desolate, happened at the last to come to a cliffe adioining to the maine sea, couered all with mosse, whereon he was walking: much delighted with the solitarie seat, but not well liking the cold situation, he suddenlie sunke into a hollow vault, surprised at the first with feare, but seeing it at the last a place of succour, he accounted his former miseries meetlie appeased by this present fortune. In this den he vsed for his bed mosse, for his candle mosse, for his ceeling mosse, and vnlesse now and then a few coales, mosse for his meat: a drie sod God wot and a fresh, but so moistened with wet teares, and so salt, that hard it was to coniecture, whether it were better to feed or to fast. Here he gaue himselfe to continuall meditation, separating his mind from his bodie, his thought from his hart, yea diuorcing himselfe from himselfe, in so much that with his strange diet and new conceits he became so inchanted, that neither the remembrance of others, nor a thought touching himselfe could enter into his mind: an alteration seldome heard of, that the place whereas he was throwded in, should make him to forget who he is. Liuing thus a long time, for that no lim should seeme short, rising according to his maner to walke in the mosse in the grisping of the day, he espied vpon the shore certeine men either cast awaie by shipwracke, or ouer bord by pirates, vnto whome he went; and perceiuing by their plaints one which late dead amongst them to be their master, inquired whense they were? But they not willing to repeat their misfortunes, opened the bosome of the gentleman, and pulled out a scroll conteining a claime, a challenge, nate a conquest of Beautie. At the sight whereof, suddenlie (quoth he) Beautie! and therewithall appalled pansed, entring by litle and litle out of his present melancholies into his former misfortunes, who as one awaked out of a long dreame began thus to debate. O Beautie, where thy fortresse is founded I know, but what these brethren should meane I maruell; for as I am assured that to win thée none could be so fortunate, so did I thinke that to claime thée none could be so fond; when as thou O diuine Beautie art of euerie one to be desired, but neuer to be conquered of Desire. But as the eagle beholding the sunne, coueteth to build hir nest in the same, and so dimmeth hir sight: so they bewing the brightnesse of Beautie are incensed to conquere it by Desire. And what then? Bicause she is inuincible shall I be indifferent? No, I will forsake this caitife cottage, and will take arms to defend that Beauties castell. Nothing shall remoue me from mine attempt, which being performed, nothing can moue me. Yea but she hath seruants alreadie a number; I but vnles I be there, not the whole number: but manie were famous, but none more faithfull: yet alas, if thou go, thou shalt euer be infortunat: better alwaies infortunat, than once disloiall. Which words being ended, he demanded whether they would in like case aduenture with one of no lesse courage than their master, but certeinlie of greter affection: whose seruice he hauing vpon small intreatie obteined, for that belike they were desirous to see the euent for the which they had suffered such aduentures, he departed to his caue, bewing a shield out of the hard cliffe inriched onelie with soft mosse: a double signe of his desire, thinking that nothing could manifest Beautie so well as Pythagoras walnut, a tender rine and a hard shell. And now most excellent and diuine Beautie, diuine it must néeds be that worketh so heauenlie, sith he is called from his solitarie caue to your sumptuous court, from bondage to libertie, from a liuing death to a neuer dieng life, and all for the sake and seruice of Beautie: vouchsafe his shield, which is the ensigne of your fame, to be the instrument of his fortune. And for prostrating himselfe to your fét, he is here readie prest to aduenture ante aduentures for your gratious fauour.

M. Ratcliffs speech to the queene.

A mossie cliffe.

Mosse and nothing but mosse.

A claime or conquest of beautie conteined in a scroll.

Here the bole deliuered M. Ratcliffs shield to the queene.

Which speech being ended, he retired backe as the rest. And after him came the foure sonnes of sir Francis Knolles, one after an other, according to their age, and all in like armour: who comming to the end of the tilt, staied till these speeches were vttered by one of their pages, who being apparelled like vnto Mercurie, pronounced these speeches in the knights behalfes to hir maiestie.

Here enter the foure sons of sir Francis Knolles.

A similitude.

Report hath bruted all abroad, that desperat Desire with a wonderfull armie of affections hath laid his siege against the inuincible fortresse of peere-

The speech of the foure sons of sir Francis Knolles, pronounced by their page being apparelled like vnto Mercurie.

lesse

lesse beautie, and that the chiefest champions of this most famous enterprise are foure of fansies fellowes, fosterbrothers to desire, and drie nurst by despaire, valiant knights, and honorable personages, whose hautie hearts deserue renowme at least, for venturing to win the golden fleece without Medeas helpe. The giants long ago did scale the clouds men saie, in hope to win the fort of Iupiter. The wanton youth, whose waren wings did frie with soaring vp aloft, had scapt vnscorcht if he had kept a meaner gale below. So falles it out in this attempt, desire vaunts to conquer Beauties fort by force, wherein the goddesse kæpes continuallie watch and ward, so that desire may despaire to win one inch of hir against hir will. Hir statelie seat is set so high, as that no leuell can be laid against hir walles: and sooner may men vndertake to hit a starre with a stone, than to beat hir braue bulworkes by batterie. No vndermining may prevaile, for that hir fort is founded vpon so firme a rocke, as will not flit for either fraud or force. And is there anie hope to win by famine such a fort as yelds continuall food to all hir foes? And though they feed not fat therwith, yet must they either feed thereon or fast: for Beautie is the onlie bait whereon desire bites; and loue the chiefe restoritie that ladie Beautie likes, so that she can no more be left without meat, than men can liue without minds. Of all affections that are, desire is the most worthie to woo, but lest deserues to win Beautie: for in winning his saint, he loseth himselfe: no sooner hath desire what he desireth, but that he dieth presentlie: so that when Beautie yeldeth once to desire, then can she neuer vant to be desired againe. Wherfore of force this principle must stand, it is conuenient for desire euer to wish, and necessarie that he alwais want. O rare and most renowmed Beautie, O goddesse to be honored of all, not to be equalled of anie, become not now a prisoner: your fortresse is inuincible. No doubt desire will content himselfe with a fauourable parlee, and wait for grace by loialtie, not chalenge it by lance; although he make neuer so braue. The world doth know that ladie Beautie néeds no rescue to raise this siege, for that she sits aboue all reach, hir heauenlie lokes aboue when she so liks can dazell all mens eies. But though she list not vse those meanes, yet it is méete that all hir seruants come and shew themselues deuout to do hir will: perchance hir pleasure is to see the forts tried of these foure foster friends. O happie, ten times happie they whose hap shall be with fauour of hir deitie, to take in hand this braue attempt: in hope whereof these foure legitimate sonnes of despaire, brethren to hard mishap, suckled with sighes, and swathed vp in sorrow, weaned in woo, and drie nurst by desire, long time fostered with fauourable countenance, and fed with swæt fansies, but now of late (alas) wholie giuen ouer to griefe and disgraced by disdaine, are come with readie hearts and hands, to prowue against these other foure, that desire doth not deserue one winke of good fauour from ladie Beauties smiling eies, for threatning to win hir fort by force. They doubt not the victorie, if onelie they may find some like shew from their saint in fauor of their enterprise. If Mercurie haue said amisse, blame those bright beams which haue bereft him of his wit; if well, vouchsafe one becke to bid him packe awaie.

Desire and Beautie.

I claime no conquest of beautie contained in a scroll.

why desire deserues least to win beautie.

A similitude.

These speeches being ended, both they and the rest marched about the tilt, and so going backe to the nether end thereof prepared themselues to run, euerie one in his turne, each defendant sir courses against the former challengers: who performed their parts so valiantlie on both sides, that their prowesse hath demerited perpetuall memorie, and worthilie won honor both to themselues and their native countrie, as fame hath the same reported. When this daies sport was thus accomplished, the boie that vttered the defiances, in these few speeches toke his good night of the quéene.

The boie that vttered the defiance, in this spéech toke his good night of the quéene.

In the triall of this debatefull question (O your selfe) what can be said more than is? You se that séeing begins to faile. Night the ordinarie truce maker, though no truce be treated (if at least your presence make it not lightsome) will wrap all in hir blacke and mourning weeds, perchance mourning, for that the noblest desire hath béene subiect to vndeserued torments: and therefore these knights by the authoritie of darkenes verie vndesirouslie are compelled to depart from whence they came. To conclude, thus much they command me in their names to confesse, that such excellencie they find in your knights, and in comparison of them such vnableneesse in their selues, that if desire did not banish despaire as a traitor out of his kingdome, it would haue alreadie vndermined their best grounded determination: but no inward nor outward wound, no weakenesse, no wearinesse, can dant desire, nor take awaie the naturall effects that follow it. Therfore hauing left them no other courage than desire, no other strength than desire, no other beginning or ending cause but desire, they will continue this hard and hardie enterprise to morow. In the meane time they can find no place in their hearts that doth not wish you as swæt rest, as Psyche was conueied vnto by the gentle Zephyrus, and if it be possible by the same ghest visited. They wish that when your lids loke vp, your eies may be brightened, to se to morow a better daie than this, and therwithall so singular successe, as you may long, fræelie, and joyfullie inioy your selfe, to the delight of lokers, and wonder of markers. ¶ This said, and all the triumphant shewes ended, the knights in verie comelie and conuenient order (as they came) departed:

Et fessos soluunt artus, mollissima quæque
Gustant, & dulci membra quiete fouent.

The foure sonnes of sir Francis Knolles.

The running at the tilt.

The next daies shew was done in this order. The foure foster children of desire entered in a braue chariot (verie finelie and curiouslie decked) as men forewearied & halfe ouercome. The charriot was made in such sort, as vpon the top the foure knights sat, with a beautifull ladie, representing desire about them. Wherevnto their eies were turned, in token what they desired. In the bulke of the charriot was conueied rome for a full consort of musike, who plaid still verie dolefull musike as the charriot moued. The charriot was drawne by foure horsses according to the foure knights, which horsses were apparelled in white and carnation silke, being the colours of desire. And as it passed by the vper end of the tilt, a herald of armes was sent before to vtter these speeches in the knights behalfe to hir maiestie.

Here entereth a most excellent and braue charriot, with rare, curious, and costlie worke with the foure challengers in it, which charriot was verie curiouslie shadowed with fine lawne.

No confidence in themselues, O most vnmatched princesse, before whome enuie dieth, wanting all nérenes of comparison to sustein it, & admiration is expressed, finding the scope of it void of conceiueable limits, nor anie slight regarding the force of your valiant knights, hath incouraged the foster children of desire to make this daie an inheritour of yesterdaies action: but the wing of memorie alas, the sworne enimie vnto the wofull mans quietnesse, being constantlie held by the hand of perfection, and neuer ceassing to blow the cole of some kindled desire, hath brought their inward fire to blaze forth this flame vnquenchable by anie meanes: till by death the whole fewell be consumed. And therefore not able to maister it, they are violentlie borne whither desire draweth, although they must confesse (alas) that yesterdaies braue onset should come to such a confession, that they are not greatlie companied with hope, the the common suplier to desires armie. So as now from summoning this castell to yéeld, they are fallen lowlie to beséech you to vouchsafe your eies out of that impregnable fortresse, to behold what will fall out betwixt them and your famous knights: wherin though they be so overpressed with the others valour, that alreadie they could scarselie haue béene able to come hither, if the charriot of desire had not carried them; yet will they make this whole assemblie witnesses so farre of their will, that sooner their soules shall leaue their bodies than desire shall leaue their soules. In that onelie standeth their strength that gaue them their first courage, and must be their last comfort. For what resistance is there, where not onlie they are met with forren enimies, such as statelie disdeine, which loketh from so high a tower to poze desire, that though (in it selfe) it be great, yet in hir eies (so seated) it séemeth small, or such on the other side as vnfortunat despaire, which maketh the countrie so barren where they laie their siege, that it would take awaie all the food of fansie: but euen ciuill warre betwixt them and others who beare the same badge of desire: that they do so, as thus bestead they are brought to this faire passe, to desire no more, but that this death or ouerthrow maie be séene by those eies who are onlie vnhappie, in that they can neither find fellows nor sée themselues.

The first spæch the second daie.

Hope the supplier to desirs armie.

Which spéech being done, the defendants came in, in such order as they came in the daie before. Therefore I shall not need to make a new repetition of the same, sith all hath béene touched alreadie. Then went they to the tourneie, where they did verie noblie, as the shiuering of the swords might verie well testifie; and after that to the barriers, where they lashed it out lustilie, & fought couragiouslie, as if the Grécks and Troians had dealt their deadlie dole. No partie was spared, no estate excepted, but ech knight indured to win the golden fléece, that expected either fame or the fauour of his mistresse, which sport continued all the same daie. And towards the euening the sport being ended, there was a boie sent vp to the quéene being clothed in ash coloured garments in token of humble submission, who hauing an oliue branch in his hand, & falling downe prostrate on his face, and then knéeling vp, concluded this noble exercise with these words to hir maiestie.

Tourneies & barriers couragiouslie tried.

The last spéech to the quéene signifieng the humble hearted submission of the foure foster children of desire.

Most renowmed princesse of princes, in whome can nothing obteine victorie, but vertue. The foster children of desire (but heires onelie to misfortune) send me to deliuer in such words as sorrow can afford their most humble hearted submission. They acknowledge this fortresse to be reserued for the eie of the whole world, farre lifted vp from the compasse of their destinie. They acknowledge the blindnesse of their error, in that they did not know desire (how strong soeuer it be) within it selfe to be stronger without it selfe than it pleased the desired. They acknowledge they haue degenerated from their fosterer in making violence accompanie desire. They acknowledge that desire receiued his beginning and nourishment of this fortresse, and therefore to commit vngratefulnesse in bearing armes (though desirous armes) against it. They acknowledge noble desire should haue desired nothing so much, as the flourishing of that fortresse, which was to be estéemed according to it selfes liking. They acknowledge the least determination of vertue (which stands for the gard of this fortresse) to be too strong for the strongest desire, & therefore they do acknowledge themselues ouercome, as to be slaues to this fortresse for euer, which title they will beare in their foreheads, as their other name is ingrauen in their hearts. For witnesse thereof they present this oliue branch to your presence, in token of your triumphant peace, and of their peaceable seruitude, whereby they present themselues as bondmen by those bonds, which the losse of life can onelie lose. Onelie from out of that which was theirs they craue thus much, to giue some token to those knights, which maie be iudged to haue done best in ech kind of weapon, or who by his deuise hath come in best sort in this desirous strife. This being done, they being now slaues (in whome much dutie requireth) for feare of offense, dare saie no further; but wish from the bottome of their captiued hearts, that while this realme is thus fortified and beautified; desire maie be your chiefest aduersarie.

An oliue branch presented to the quéene.

Which spéech being ended, hir maiestie gaue them all praise and great thanks, which they estéemed so well, and thought themselues rewarded according to their owne wishing: and so they departed ech one in order, according to the first comming in. And thus ceassed these courtlie triumphes, set forth with most costlie brauerie and gallantnesse, whereof I maie saie as the academicall poet sometime said at the gratious entering of hir maiestie into Cambridge:

Hìc cocco murex, aurum superatur ab auro,
Naturam certant vincere quæque suam:
Nil ibi sat pulchrum, quamuis pulcherrima quæque,
Et quamuis vincant omnia, victa iacent.

The one and twentith of June in the night, the lowest images (which were of Christs resurrection, of the virgin Marie, and of kings and bishops of this realme) about the crosse in Cheape (being six square) on all the sides, were broken and defaced: whereupon two daies after, proclamation was made thorough out the citie, that who so would bewraie the doers thereof, should haue fortie crownes for their labour: but nothing came to light. The seauen and twentith of June, Thomas Butcher brewer, was conuicted in the Guildhall of London, for that he as principall, and others as accessaries, to the number of a thousand persons, on the fiue and twentith of June last past, about ten of the clocke in the night, with force of armes, in west Smithfield of London, & other stréets of the citie congregated themselues, and with diuerse exclamations, prouoked the people in maner of a rebellion, contrarie to the peace & statutes of the realme. On the eight and twentith of June, the same Thomas Butcher, being areigned at the Iustice hall in the old Bailie, was found giltie, and had iudgement to be whipped on the next market daie from Newgate thorough Smithfield, Long lane, Aldersgate street, saint Martins le grand; & so thorough the citie to the bars without Aldgate, & then to be committed to Newgate. On the 30 of June, the same T. Butcher, being deliuered vnto James Mase and other beadles, to haue receiued execution, as is aforesaid, he being whipped from Newgate into west Smithfield, was there rescued, taken from the beadles, and sent to shift for himselfe abrode: for the which fact the one & twentith of Julie, William Downe, I. Hand, T. Harres, and T. Appowell, three shomakers and a brewer, were whipped from Newgate to the middest of Smithfield, and there set on the pillorie, whereon they stood from ten of the clocke till twelue, and from thense againe committed to prison. The thirteenth of Julie, Richard Cor doctor of diuinitie, sometime schoolemaister to king Edward the first, deane of Westminster, and of Christs college in Oxenford, and of late bishop of Elie deceassed, and was buried at Elie; whose epitaph (alluding to his name and the execution of his charge, wherein he was iust) hereafter followeth:

Crosse in Cheape defaced.

Thomas Butcher whipped and rescued.

Foure men whipt and set on the pillorie.

Bishop of Elie deceassed.

Vita caduca vale, salueto vita perennis,
Corpus terra tegit, spiritus alta tenet.
In terra Christi gallus Christum resonabam,
Da Christe in cœlis te sine fine sonem.

This

Two men of strange statures to be seene.

This yeare were to be seene in London two Dutchmen of strange statures, the one in height seauen foot & seauen inches, in breadth betwixt the shoulders three quarters of a yard and an inch, the compasse of his brest one yard, an halfe, and two inches; & about the wast one yard, quarter, and one inch; the length of his arme to the hand a full yard: a comelie man of person, but lame of his legs (for he had broken them with lifting of a barrell of beere.) The other was in height but three foot, had neuer a good foot, nor ankle knee at all, and yet could he danse a galliard, he had no arme, but a stumpe to the elbow or little more on the right side, on the which, singing, he would danse a cup, and after tosse it about three or foure times, and euerie time receiue the same on the said stumpe: he would shoot an arrow neere to the marke, flourish with a rapier, throw a bowle, beat with an hammar, hew with an ax, sound a trumpet, and drinke euerie date ten quartes of the best beere, if he could get it. About the seauententh of Julie, I saw these men in the parish of saint Peter vpon Cornehill, the taller sitting on a bench bareheaded, the lesser stood on the same bench, and hauing on his head a hat with a feather, was yet the lower. Also the taller man standing on his feet, the lesser (with his hat & feather on his head) went vpright betweene his legs, and touched him not.

Euerard Hance executed.

The eightéenth of Julie, Euerard Hance, alias Ducket, a seminarie priest, was in the sessions hall in the old Bailie of London arreigned, where he before the queenes iustices affirmed that himselfe being now in England was subiect to the pope in ecclesiasticall causes, and that the pope hath now the same authoritie here in England that he had an hundred yeares past, and which he hath now at Rome, with other traitorous speeches: for the which he was condemned to be drawne, hanged, and quartered, and was executed accordinglie on the last of Julie. At the same sessions were brought from the Fleet, the Gatehouse, Newgate, and the Counters, sundrie prisoners, indicted for refusing to come to church; all which being conuicted by their owne confession, had iudgement according to the statute, to paie twentie pounds for euery moneth of such wilfull absence from the church. The first of Nouember, monsieur Francis duke of Anion, the French kings brother, and other nobles of France (hauing latelie arriued in Kent) came to London, and were honourablie receiued, and reteined at the court with banketting, and diuerse pleasant shewes and pastimes, of whome more hereafter in place conuenient.

When arreigned for not comming to church.

Monsieur duke of Anion came into England.

Ex libro cui titulus A discouerie of Edmund Campion dedicated to certeine lords of the councell.

Edmund Campion with diuerse others arreigned of high treason. The forenamed parties indictment.

On mondaie being the twentith of Nouember, Edmund Campion, Rafe Sherwin, Lucas Kerbie, Edward Rishton, Thomas Cotebam, Henrie Orton, Robert Johnson, & James Bosgraue. All these before named persons were brought vnto the high barre at Westminster: where they were seuerallie, and altogither indicted vpon high treason, the sum whereof followeth in briefe as thus. That these persons, contrarie both to loue and dutie, forsoke their natiue countrie, to liue beyond the seas, vnder the popes obedience, as at Rome, Rheimes, and diuerse other places: where (the pope hauing with other princes practised the death and depriuation of our most gratious princesse, and vtter subuersion of hir seat & kingdome, to aduance his most abhominable religion) these men, hauing vowed their allegiance to the pope, to obeie him in all causes whatsoeuer, being there, gaue their consent; yea vttermost furtherance they might, to aid him in this most traitorous determination. And for this intent and purpose they were sent ouer to seduce the hearts of hir maiesties louing subiects, and to conspire and practise hir graces death, as much as in them laie, against a great date, set and appointed, when the generall hauocke should be made, those onelie reserued that ioined with them. This laied to their charge, they boldlie and impudentlie denied. Whereupon a iurie was impanelled, their owne confessions, their owne writings, and credible witnesses viua voce produced to their faces, approuing them giltie of the former allegations, as hereafter followeth.

After the indictment was read vnto them, and their answer, that it was beyond their power to proue them faultie in such matters, so stiffelie they stood in their apparant impudencie; first was moued to them sundrie treasons past, attempted against hir maiestie by those of their sect and disposition: yet notwithstanding the vttermost of their malice, how mightilie God had defended his chosen Elisabeth, returning their dealings to their owne destruction. Among sundrie these treasonable practises, which the pope, the ancient aduersarie to hir maiestie hath at diuerse times set abroch, the rebellion in the north may remaine as a witnesse of his exceeding malice and spite against hir grace and gouernement. Whereto let vs ad the bull sent ouer by John Felton, which trattorouslie he placed on the bishop of Londons gate: in which bull, the pope vtterlie excommunicated hir maiestie, she was an heretike, he had dispossessed hir of hir crowne and dominion, she was not the lawfull queene of this realme, and hir subiects were not bound to obeie anie of hir lawes or decrees; but they were all free, and perfectlie discharged of their allegiance to hir, so that they might lawfullie, when time serued so conuenient for them, both stirre rebellion against hir, and also enter into armes against hir maiestie. The popes will in this hath bin put in execution, as through the ill demeanor of diuerse persons to him affected it was moued in the north, where mainteining themselues on the authoritie of the pope and his traitorous bull secretlie dispersed abrode, they entred into a plaine and manifest rebellion. The like was put in practise in Ireland through doctor Sanders and other traitors, who there ioined themselues togither vnder the popes standard, to bring to passe their secret appointment in this realme. Through their persuasions and dealings, the people were moued in the popes name to fight against their lawfull princesse vnder his banner; and to rebell against hir so notoriouslie as they might. The incouragement to this great disobedience they receiued through doctor Sanders a fugitiue and ranke traitor to his prince and countrie, as also through diuerse Iesuits both English and Irish, whose hypocriticall shew of holinesse and diuellish persuasions on the behalfe of the pope their maister and head, intised a multitude of the people there to change their profession in religion, and to yeld themselues to the popes authoritie, whereby they should renounce the most certeine and iust title of hir maiestie: and when forren forces should be assembled there, they to ioine with them in their intent, and so traitorouslie rebell against their lawfull souereigne. All these practises toke their originall from the pope, as well by sending his secret messengers, as also by his traitorous bull, which being sent by Pius quintus, is neuertheless confirmed (in the former authoritie) by this pope Gregorie the thirteenth, and remaineth in hope to take effect at some time or other, for which he doth watch opportunitie as conuenientlie as he mate. But God the iust reuenger of all causes, as he hath hitherto preserued hir maiestie & this litle Iland from all their malicious attempts and practises, and hath deseruedlie throwne the poke of their shame on their owne necks: so will he no doubt continue his fatherlie care, that his children shall be preserued, & their aduersaries confounded.

The rebellion in the north, onlie through the popes meanes.

The sum of the popes bull which our Englishmen beyond the seas hold as their authoritie to rebell against hir maiestie.

Doctor Sanders his rebellion in Ireland, through whome the people were seduced to fight against their lawfull princesse.

This bull remaineth in his former force by this pope, onelie a toleration for the straitnesse to the subiects there in annexed.

The end why the said seminaries were sent ouer into England.

But

Campion desireth not to heare how these treasons take their originall, and how from time to time they haue bene enterprised and confounded: wherefore to blind the peoples eies he maketh this counterfeit answer.

But saith Campion: What is this to vs here present? What appertaineth this to our indictment? We are here both seuerallie and all togither indicted of high treason; and for that that is obiected against vs we must answer. Let not other mens offenses be laid to our charge, that we should answer for other mens faults committed long since. Some of vs were then but nouices here in the vniuersities, and were altogither ignorant of these matters. What haue we to do with anie thing that they did? They that were offendors, let them answer to that you can lay against them. For vs that be here at this instant, you must either saie; Thou Campion didst this thing, or thou (naming some of the other) committedst this offense, and therupon bring your proofes and witnesses, otherwise you shall neuer be able to touch vs. As for these assertions, for the strength they haue against vs, I will not esteeme it worth a penniworth of pippins. And therefore to your indictment.

This answer so smoothlie deliuered, and with such coie lookes and protestation of action gested, that all the standers by gaue perfect notice of the man, both of his nature and disposition, as also of his prompt & ingenious wit, to shadow an absolute truth with a shew of great wisedome and learning. For this he knew right well, that before he came to that place, he had woone a maruellous goodlie report, to be such a man as his like was not to be found, either for life, learning, or anie other qualitie that might beautifie a man. So that by his fauorers and frends it was blowen abrode, that we had neither doctors, nor others that were worthie to enter disputation with him, he was so farre aboue them all, that they might not deale with him. Hereto do the great titles which they adorne him withall giue credit, saieng thus:

Ex libello quodam famoso.

Quid? Campiano deerat doctrina perito,
Doctrinæ natus qui penetrale fuit:
Cui fuit in primis sponsata scientia cunis,
Quique puer nulli mente secundus erat:
Ingenuas inuenis qui sedulus imbibit artes,
Virque videbatur vix habuisse parem, &c.

Now being brought vnto a publike triall, it stood him vpon to argue somewhat of the praise that had bene giuen him: wherefore in verie quaint and familiar eloquent gloses he stood vpon quirks and fine deuise of speech, thinking as he had deluded manie before, so at that present he might blind the eies of iustice, & acquite himselfe of his horrible treasons. But as truth sheweth most braue when she goeth bare & naked, and deceipt finest when he is cunninglie florished; euen so the poore habit of the one discouered the proud hart of the other, and confounded his boldnesse with hir sacred brightnesse, giuing all men to vnderstand, that Veritas vincit omnia. And bicause Campion would haue made such a cunning conueiance of the matter, as though it neither might or could attaint him or anie of them: it was giuen him to vnderstand, that they would not alone touch him in the sequele of the former causes, but them all, and he that thought himselfe the clerest. Wherevpon doctor Sanders and doctor Bristow, their traitorous writings in defense of the popes bull exhibited against hir maiestie, were read vnto them, how they both allowed it, and also the rebellion in the north. Afterwards it was manifestlie proued to their faces, that Bristows booke in allowance thereof, named his Motiues, was especiallie commanded to be vsed amongest them both at Rome and at Rheimes, euerie one being expresselie charged not to be without one of these bookes.

Doctor Sanders and doctor Bristows bookes were there read vnto them, wherin most traitorously they defended the rebellion against hir maiestie.

This with open mouths they altogither denied, some that they had neuer seene it, and some that they neuer heard of anie such commandement: when as John Hart one of their owne fellowes had auouched it, and therevnto subscribed. Besides, my selfe when *I came to Rheimes, saw them as common amongst them, as the litle catechisme here amongst children, the inequalitie of the number considered. Againe, at Rome they were as common likewise in the seminarie, and among the Englishmen in the citie, for *my selfe had it, and one of doctor Allens catechismes deliuered me, with great charge to embrace it as my chiefe instruction. My companion that went with me had one likewise; the rest of the witnesses had seene how common they were, and in what reuerence and authoritie they esteemed them: yet these men would with shameless faces denie it; yea, and if they might haue bene so credited, would haue sworne against it. This manifest proofe they would not grant vnto, but Campion taketh vpon him to wrest it according vnto his humor, by answering that the booke was not so ill as they tooke it for, nor deserued anie such iudgement of preiudice. Now he thought he could not be taken tardie, but supposed his argument to passe vnreprouable; for that in the new imprinting of this booke, such matters as did most sharplie touch them, were abridged, thinking none of the former bookes should come to light. But here Campion ouershot himselfe, for so slie an answer could not couer so foule a blemish. When they had notablie conuicted them of these matters, which with obstinacie they still denied, they came to the intent of their secret comming ouer into this realme, which was for the death of hir maiestie, and ouerthrow of the whole realme, which should be by domesticall rebellion and forren hostilitie, the sum whereof in briefe is thus. This little Iland, God hauing so bountifullie bestowed his blessings vpon it, that except it proue false within it selfe, no treason whatsoeuer can preuaile against it, and the pope being hereof verie well persuaded, by reason that all his attempts haue proued of no effect: he hath found out a meane, whereby he assureth himselfe to spéd of his desire. Secret rebellion must be stirred here at home among our selues, the harts of the people must be obdurated against God and their prince; so that when a forren power shall on a sudden inuade this realme, the subiects thus seduced must ioine with these in armes, and so shall the pope atteine the sum of his wish. And all this must be wrought by certeine locusts of the popes seminaries maintained at Rome & Rheimes, arriuing in England, and dispersing themselues into such places, where they thinke themselues to be surest, some in one place, and some in another; and disguising themselues like gentlemen, seruingmen, or what apparell they may find meetest for them, haue accesse to manie and sundrie places, where hauing reconciled some, their frends must likewise be of the same stampe. And so, what from father to son, husband and wife, kinsman and acquaintance, a number are seduced & brought into their detestable dealings. For, after they haue gotten anie litle ground within them to build vpon, then do they laie vnto them, what a generall bloudie daie is toward England, that the pope and other forren princes haue fullie determined to ouerrun the realme; then better it were for you (saie they) to yéeld your selues willinglie, than to sée so horrible a slaughter, both of your princesse, and all that dare presume to take hir part. Your selues, yea and your frends shall abide the same hard iudgement, except you ioine with vs in this action. Thus through terrifieng, and a thousand traitorous fetches they haue; one friend bringeth another, and one kinsman another. So that, as they themselues will make their boast, in short time they doubt not to haue the most part of all England: yea and further they presume, that hir maiestie thinking hir selfe in most kessed, & subscribed to, and what euerie one of the witnesses knew to be most certeine.

* M. A.

Campion answered this point subtilie, because in the last edition of the booke the chiefe matters against themselues were abridged.

The generall determination how to bring to passe their intent in this realme.

Their owne confession how they behaue themselues when they come into England.

They denied what one of their owne fellowes had con-safetie,

safetie, shall then be soonest of all beguiled & deceiued.

Campion colloureth their cõming ouer, affirming it was for the safegard of soules.

These are the men that make themselues so sound and substantiall, that they are as true subiects to hir maiestie, as the best of vs. Yea, saith Campion, neuer shall you proue this, that we came ouer either for this intent or purpose: but onelie for the sauing of soules, which meere loue and conscience compelled vs to do, for that we did pittie the miserable estate of our countrie. But where are your proofes (saith he) these are but quirkes by the waie, our liues I perceiue standeth vpon points of rhetorike, you haue shewen vs the antecedent, now let vs haue the Ergo. With this continuall course of boldnesse and impudencie, Campion and his fellowes would grant nothing, but stiflie denied euerie cause: and Campion he tooke it for a custome to wrest euerie thing as pleased him, saieng: that the iurie were not men learned, and therfore causes of conscience ought not to be committed to them, neither was that barre appointed to define on causes of conscience: wherfore, all that you do (saith he) is but to bring vs in Odium with the iurie. After this order he deluded the people, appealing still to the deuoutnesse of his conscience: because he saw the matter brought to the berie push that would generallie conuict them all, for the witnesses were produced and sworne, Parts confession and their owne writings before them, so that they would remoue them from their ordinarie illusions.

When he had no other shift, he fell into these words.

The deposition of G. Eliot.

George Eliot, one of the ordinarie yeomen of hir maiesties chamber, vpon his oth gaue forth in euidence as followeth. That he, liuing here in England among certeine of that sect, fell in acquaintance with one Paine a preest: who gaue him to vnderstand of a horrible treason intended against hir maiestie and the state, which he did expect shortlie to happen, the order how & after what manner in breefe is thus. That there should be leuied a certeine companie of armed men, which on a sudden should enterprise a most monstruous attempt: a certeine companie of these armed men should be prepared against hir maiestie, as manie against my L. of L. as manie gainst my L. T. as manie against S. F. W. and diuerse other, whose names he doth not well remember. The deaths of these noble personages should be presentlie fulfilled, and hir maiestie vsed in such sort, as modestie nor dutie will not suffer a subiect to rehearse: but this should be the generall crie euerie where, Quæne Marie, quæne Marie. It was also appointed and agreed vpon who should haue this man of honours rome, and who should haue that office, euerie thing was determined, there wanted nothing but the comming ouer of such preests and others, as were long looked for. Upon this report, this aforenamed George Eliot tooke occasion to question with this Paine, how they could find in their hearts to attempt an act of so great and horrible crueltie, considering how high an offense it should be to God, beside great dangers might arise thereby. Whereto Paine made answer, that the killing hir maiestie was no offense to God, nor the vttermost crueltie they could vse to hir, or anie that toke hir part, but that they might as lawfullie do it as to a brute beast; and himselfe would be one of the formost in executing of this villanous and most traitorous action.

Meaning the quæne of Scots.

A most traitorous and villanous answer: of euerie true subiect to be read with reuerence of the person.

By this you may perceiue, that the death of hir maiestie and ouerthrow of this realme was throughlie agreed vpon, and fullie determined: there wanted nothing but opportunitie, for preests both then and after came ouer continuallie to further it, so much as in them laie. To the said effect did A. M. vtter most odious matter, the reading whereof would make anie true English hart quake & tremble: and to write it, what loiall subiect is able to abide? And therefore as deriued from the diuell to his dearlings we omit the same; counting it more loialtie to hull such deuises and consultations asleepe, than to publish them to the world in blacke & white: due reuerence to the principall obiects alwaies reserued. All which abhominable stuffe, circumstances of times, places, persons, and other particulars dulie pondered, giue euident demonstration what affection these fellowes afford their lawfull quæne and countrie: well is he that can imagine most against hir maiestie, and highlie is he esteemed that beareth the most traitorous hart to hir. Yet Campion and the rest of his fellowes they plead ignorance in all these causes, they bolster vp one another with large protestations, railing words, and subtill surmises: affirming that they were not sent hither for anie such intent; which is as vntrue, as we know it for truth, that the Lord God liueth in heauen.

No tot of their good will wanted, if God did not (as he dailie doth) preuent their purposes.

For this ✶ I am able to saie my selfe, that at diuerse other times, it was whispered among them in the seminarie: that shortlie there should be preests appointed for England, to win the people against the appointed time, when as a great armie should be readie to ioine with them: and Campion, who was then at Praga in Bohemia, he was spoken of amongst them all, to be a rare and singular fellow, and therefore generallie was taken for a meet man to be sent about such a message, so that they iudged that he should be sent for to be a chiefe man in this matter. Well (saith Campion) it may be they had such an opinion of me, which in my selfe I find not to be deserued; and it may be that I was appointed to be sent into England, according as those other preests were, for the sauing of soules and benefit of my countrie: must it follow then that we are sent to practise the death of the quæne, and to seeke the ruine of our countrie? Alas, this is a hard case, and I desire you of the iurie to marke it, for these are but shadowes without anie substance. This you are to note, that we which enter into that Blessed societie of the Iesuites: we do as it were forsake the world, vowing our selues to chastitie and sinceritie of conscience, to obeie our superiours, and to be readie to go whither they shall appoint vs. If they send vs to the Indies, or to anie such places, where the people haue not the true catholike faith: we are bound by dutie in conscience to go whither they appoint vs. And shall it then be said that we come for the destruction of the prince and countrie, where we settle our selues? Alas, that were a hard case, for christian charitie willeth vs to comfort one another, and if we can to get the sheepe into the fold which hath long run astraie. And when we heare confession, we do not persuade them to anie disobedience; for that is against the nature of confession: God forbid that we should once thinke anie such thing.

Campion nor his fellowes will grant to anie thing, but raile and vse bold speeches, whereby their guiltie consciences were discouered. * M. A.

Campion coureth their traitorous intents vnder the sauing of soules.

A holie kind of life were it not for the Pope.

Behold the subtill shifts that he found out still to flie vnto, yea though the manifest disproofe laie before them, yet would he find some cauill or other: for not onelie the euidence of their generall determination beyond the seas was shewed them, but also the traitorous articles were there read vnto them, which John Hart had copied out for doctor Allen (concerning the proceeding of these traitorous causes, and for which he went purposelie to Rome to confer with the pope about) and subscribed vnto, that they were certeine and true, as also their owne confessions and writings were laid open before them, approuing them notablie guiltie of the matters aforesaid, and yet in their lieng pamphlets scattered here & there in sundry hands, they haue faces of brasse to report, that

Note here the perfect image of hypocrisie.

When manifest proofes of their treasons were laid before them: they would in no wise grant their guiltinesse.

Insidiæ sanctos implicuere viros.

Charles Sled, who sometime serued maister doctor Worton in Rome, in whose house there was manie matters determined, both by doctor Allen when he came to Rome, and diuers other doctors liuing there in the citie, as also diuerse of the seminarie: he likewise vnderstood of the prouision for the great date, that it was generallie spoken of among the Englishmen: and to be more certeine he kept a iournall or booke of their dailie dealings, noting the date, time, place, and persons present at their secret conferences, and verie much matter hath he iustified against them. One Cradocke a merchant, when he was in Rome, he vnderstood the aforesaid determination, and how that doctor Shellie the English prior, who is a knight of the Rhodes, for that he somewhat spake against such crueltie to be vsed to his natiue countrie, was somewhat misliked of himselfe, and had almost beene turned out of his office. And this aforesaid Cradocke being in prison there for the space of twentie moneths and more: it was said to him, that he might account himselfe blessed of God that he was there, because he should not see the grieuous ruine of his natiue countrie. He that hath but halfe an eie may see how these matters concord and agree togither, and noting euerie thing as it lieth, may plainelie see their horrible and traitorous deuises.

Consider euerie matter and then iudge how they concord and agree togither.

And further, there was a little booke in Latine, which they themselues brought ouer with them, it was there openlie read vnto them: wherin was certeine rules and orders prescribed, how they should behaue themselues here in England, and how if they were demanded of anie thing, they should make answer indirectlie: or to take the word it selfe, according as it is mentioned in the booke, they must answer Sophisticè, whereby is meant as thus. If they be examined as concerning their allegiance to hir maiestie, they will make their answer after this maner; She is our lawfull souereigne ladie & quéene, and we obeie hir. But then obiect vnto them; Will you obeie hir, notwithstanding the popes excommunication, or anie thing that he commandeth to the contrarie? Then will they answer: We desire you not to charge our consciences, and that you would not enter so deepe into our consciences, we trust the pope will not command vs anie thing against hir: & a hundred such like sléeuelesse answers they make, neuer agréeing to anie certeintie, but holding the pope in more reuerence than they do hir maiestie.

A booke which they vse as their instruction, how to answer to euerie question sophisticallie.

To do their dutie is a weightie burden to their consciences, and therefore they abide in their obstinacie and blindnesse.

For this consideration they carrie with them, that if by their shew of humilitie, & their deuised order of craftie answering, they might moue our magistrats to haue a good opinion of them, & not to deale so strictlie as law and their deseruing doth worthilie merit: then they might with lesse suspect go about their holie fathers businesse, in that their sophisticall answers couered so foule an abuse. And then so manie as come after them, purposelie sent about the same affaires, séeing their passage made before them, and being schooled after the same maner: they might withdraw the hearts of a number of hir maiesties subiects, by such meanes as is before largelie expressed; so that destruction should come vpon vs, before we had discouered their trecherous dealings. But God be thanked, as all their deuises haue had their deserued successe, this sophisticall order hath sped alike with them for companie: and this let them fullie assure themselues, that what meanes soeuer they séeke against their princesse and countrie, God will reward them after their owne dealings.

Campion his owne answer as concerning his allegiance to hir maiestie.

To Campion himselfe the former questions were put forth at the barre: and this answer he made to them. She is my lawfull souereigne ladie & quéene, and I do obeie hir. But when he was demanded, although the pope did expresselie command him the contrarie: if he would neuertheless faithfullie obeie hir? Oh then! they must not so déepelie enter into his conscience, that barre was not a barre to define on causes of conscience: that question touched his conscience, wherefore he flatlie said he might not answer it. No, no, he knew full well that the traitorous affaires he came about, would not allow him such a direct answer as they had looked for, and gladlie would haue had, that of a Saule they might haue made him a Paule. Wherefore his secret and guilefull behauiour made perfect apéerance of his wicked intent, which he shadowed vnder the counterfeit cloke of sauing soules, and reconciling his countriemen to the catholike faith, vnder the sweet bait of the amiable title of the societie of Iesus, to which order hauing bequeathed himselfe (and become a resolute and obstinate votarie) he thirsted after the kingdome of heauen; if we make beléeue their owne report concerning Campion, of whome they saie:

Nominis inde tui sancto deuotus Iesu
Ille sodalitio cœlica regna sitit.

Here it can not be greatlie amisse, to rehearse vnto you the cause why this pope hath tolerated the former bull, séeing this sophisticall kind of answering grew chieflie thereby. When anie of these secret messengers should be sent about their holie fathers determination here in England, to reconcile, shriue, & win hir maiesties subiects to their diuelish intent: if such misaduenture should happen to them, that their secret delings came to the eares of iustice, then they fell into the danger of law. Wherfore to shadow their subtiltie, and to prosecute the effect of their message, the pope thought good to harten them by this sophisticall addition. For well we know, & themselues likewise are not ignorant thereof, that being examined, if they should denie the quéenes maiestie to be their supreme princesse and gouernesse in all causes: then they fell into condemnation by hir lawes. Againe, if they denied the authoritie of the pope, as of force they must néeds do, if they will esteeme themselues good subiects, and manifest a dutifull and obedient heart to hir maiestie: then they breake their vow made to the pope, and so fall into his curse and condemnation likewise: so that this is certeinlie appointed them, to cleaue faithfullie to the one, and vtterlie to forsake the other.

The cause why this pope hath tolerated the former bull of Pius Quintus.

Yet that they might haue as much fauour and friendship, as the furtherance of such a cause required: this hard clause (being well scanned of diuerse our English doctors and others, both at Rome and at Rheimes) was thorough earnest sute deliuered to diuerse of the cardinals, who laieng their heads togither, and throughlie searching the bottome of euerie doubt: a toleration for that strict point was found out, which was ordeined as you haue heard before. Then in all the hast the pope was giuen to vnderstand thereof, who respecting what might be for his benefit, and what might turne to his discommoditie, authorised them this former toleration, which (God be thanked) carried as slender strength as the rest of his practises hath done. Yet all this being knowne to vs, Campion & his fellowes will grant no knowledge, but pleade still their deuout consciences. An other of their owne bookes was also there read vnto them, wherein was other orders prescribed them, how they should handle a nobleman, how a gentleman, and how a poore man: which being openlie read before them, gaue all there present to vnderstand, how assuredlie they had appointed the course for their treason. A number of inuincible proofs passing against them, they came at last to the point of their comming ouer; how suddenlie, how hastilie, & all thorough a generall appointment. Campion, he had staid a long time at Praga in Bohemia, and

Our English doctors conferring with the cardinals found out the meane for this toleration.

An other booke how to handle all maner of persons to win them to their intent.

Campion sent for from Praga to go with other priests appointed for England.

and on a sudden he was hastilie sent for to Rome: by his owne confession he knew not wherefore, but the message was in such hast, that he must come thither with all speed.

When he came to Rome, he staied there but fiue daies: in which time, receiuing the summe of their charge from the pope, as is their vsuall wont, and their father generall deliuering them what he hath in office: he was dispatched from thense with other priests, who had their viaticum from the popes treasurie, and were all especiallie apointed for England. These priests were sent (as all other are) about the chiefe cause, for that none come from thense but onelie for that purpose. The estate of the cause before expressed, it is too manifest, that Campion and his fellowes are guiltie of the matters obiected against them. For this you are to remember, that none must staie there without they will be priests; when they receiue their priesthood, they enter into their oth, which oth conteineth the summe of the treason: so that all which come from thense (hauing taken that oth) come about the execution of the treason, in that none but they that are especiallie sent, can haue their viaticum of the pope; and then he sending them, the case is too euident.

The priests are there onelie mainteined for this purpose, and none come from thense, but about this cause, which proueth them altogither guiltie.

Let not a light iudgement passe ouer a matter of so great respect, let the popes intent of keeping them there be considered, the great malice and spite that he beareth his maiestie and the relme, and then their oth to execute his commandements; all these laid together, discouereth the depth of their trecherie. But what answereth maister Campion to this? He confesseth that he was quietlie setled at Praga, and little expected anie such hastie sending for: beside that, he went to Rome with great speed, tarrieng there no longer than fiue daies, as is before expressed, and that he receiued his viaticum of the pope, when as he was dispatched thense with other priests, purposelie appointed for England, and that he came no otherwise than they did, nor for anie other intent than for the benefit of soules, as he still termed it: but he would not grant that he came for anie treason.

Campion granteth, he came as the other priests did to reconcile & shrine: but he wil not allow that he came for anie treason.

So that to seduce hir maiesties subiects, to persuade them from their duetie and obedience, and to ioine themselues in such sort, as their princesse and countrie must be destroied thereby: this is no treason in his opinion. Howbeit, Campion and his fellowes pleaded ignorance still, they saw and would not see, they were so craftilie schoold. James Bosgraue, he was at Vilna in Polonia, and as he confessed himselfe, he vnderstood that there was priests appointed for England: vpon which report he came awaie from thense in verie great hast. And in his passage, he mentioned to one in the ship, who was sworne, and confessed the same before certeine iustices, that there was such matter towards in England, as hath beene before expressed: and thereupon he sought to haue wone him, if his purpose could haue taken effect. Campion seeing this begun somewhat to touch the quicke, and that in truth it discouered the dealings of them all: he taketh vpon him to answer on his behalfe, for that they all reposed themselues on him.

James Bosgraue, his hastie comming from Vilna, whē he heard that priests were appointed for England.

He saith, that if Bosgraue did heare such news, that there were papists appointed for England, whie should they take hold on so small a cause? Flieng reports are not to be credited, for albeit he heard such newes, how knew he, if they were certeine or no? Againe (quoth he) the man hath beene long out of England, and he doth not speake English perfectlie: it maie be then that some word maie escape him vnawares, which you are not to build vpon, considering the defect of the man, for he maie peraduenture speake he knoweth not what. And where you saie, that such a one hath auouched before certeine iustices, that he vsed such and such words to him; where is the man, we are not to credit a written paper, what know we if it be true or no? Let vs heare him selfe saie so, and then we will beleeue it. See what a number of shifts he had cōtinuallie to wast the time, and all to no purpose. The mans owne confession was there, wherto himselfe had subscribed, and foure or fiue iustices set their hands to it for the certeintie thereof; yet this was not sufficient to answer them.

Campion frequenteth his accustomed order of subtil answering.

Traitors will neuer beleeue anie truth, especiallie if it touch themselues.

Robert Johnson he was likewise at Auinion in France, from whense he came also in verie great hast, vpon the report he had heard of priests that were appointed for England. Now there is an other thing to be considered, that these men, setled where they were, by their owne confession they must not depart from thense without they be appointed by their superiors, then it is easie to be answered, that they came by their superiors apointment at this present: and as the generall determination was, so they came all for one cause & intent. Edward Rishton, he being here in England, wrote a letter to Richardson a priest, and who is likewise condemned amongest them; which letter was there openlie read to his face. Now there were foure goldsmiths of his occupation latelie come ouer, who indeed were priests, and how all things went successiuelie forwards. And Campion being in the Tower wrote a letter vnto Pownd likewise, wherein he gaue him to vnderstand that he was verie sorie, that through his frailtie he had betraied those, at whose houses he had beene so frendlie interteined; wherefore he asked God hartilie forgiuenesse, and them all whome he had so highlie offended. But (saith he) as for the chiefe matter that is as yet vnreuealed, and come racke come rope, neuer shall that be discouered. A number of matters more were brought against them, which to rehearse, would require a farre more large discourse: but to be briefe, in the end, this was the full and certeine issue. That these men, when they were beyond the seas: the generall agreement and determination amongest them, was to worke the death of our most gratious princesse, to destroie hir dominion, and to erect such as pleased them when this aforesaid daie should take effect. And that their comming ouer, was to seduce hir louing subiects, to win their obedient hearts from hir, so that they should be in a readinesse to ioine with a forren power, and so they should likewise be destroiers of their princesse and countrie. And that in the meane while they themselues sought to accomplish hir maiesties death, so much as in them laie.

Robert Johnson his coming from Auinion in France.

Edward Rishtons letter to Richardson one of the condemned.

Campions letter to maister Pownd in the Tower.

This was manifestlie proued by verie large and ample euidence, credible witnesses, and their owne confessions and writings: whereon the iurie, hauing wiselie and discreetlie pondered and searched and seene into the depth of euerie cause, worthilie and deseruedlie gaue them vp all guiltie of the treasons whereof they were indicted and arreigned. Which being done, after a godlie and comfortable exhortation, persuading them patientlie to suffer and abide the death for them appointed, and to be heartilie sorie for their grieuous and hainous offenses, the sentence of death was pronounced on them: that they should depart to the places from whense they came, and from thense to be drawne on hurdles to the place of execution, where they should be hanged till they were halfe dead: then to be cut downe, their priuie members to be cut off, and their entralles taken forth, and to be burned in the fire before their eies: then their heads to be cut off, their bodies parted into foure quarters to be disposed at hir maiesties pleasure, and the Lord God to receiue their soules to his mercie. Afterwards they were conueied from thense with botes to a place of landing for them appointed, from whense they were conducted to the Tower of London, diuers of them giuing forth sundrie lewd and dishonest speeches: as Thomas Cotcham, seeing so manie people to behold them, desired that fire and brimstone might fall from heauen, to destroie both the cittie and all that were in it: with diuerse other wicked words, which for modesties sake I omit here to rehearse, desiring God in mercie to giue men better grace.

Campion was resolute in the chiefe matter.

Sentence of death denounced against Campion and his conferats.

On the next daie, being tuesdaie and the one and twentith daie of Nouember, there was brought to the said high barre these persons following; John Hart, Thomas Ford, William Filbie, Laurence Richardson, John Shert, Alexander Brian, and John Collington. Alexander Brian, he had shauen his crowne himselfe, & made him a crosse of a peece of a trencher, which he held in his hand openlie & prai-ed to: which when he was rebuked for, he boldlie and stoutlie made answer; that his crowne was of his owne shauing, and he had good hope to do it againe. In breefe, they were all indicted on the selfe same treasons as they were the daie before; and John Harts traitorous sermon which he made at Rhems against hir maiestie auouched to his face, their owne writings and confessions with substantiall witnesse produced against them, so that they were found guil-tie of their treasons, as the other were before them, except John Collington, he was quit of the former high treason by the Jurie.

A verie holie thing, but verie meet for his deuotion.

On fridaie being the first of December, Ed-mund Campion Jesuit, Ralfe Sherwin, & Alexan-der Brian seminarie priests, being condemned for high treason against hir maiesties most rotall per-son, as also for traitorous practises, touching the subuersion of the true & vndoubted religion here main-teined, with the vtter ruine and ouerthrow of this realme of England, were drawne from the Tower of London on hurdles, to the place of execution ap-pointed, garded with such a sufficient companie as might expresse the honor of iustice the larger in that behalfe. Being come to the place of execution, where diuerse of hir maiesties honorable councell, with manie honorable personages, and gentlemen of worship and good account, beside a multitude of people not here to be remembred attended their comming; Edmund Campion was first brought vp into the cart, where after the great rumor of so manie people somewhat appeased, he spake thus.

Execution of Campion, Sherwin, and Brian.

First he began (the people then present expec-king his confession) with a phrase or two in Latine, when immediatlie after he fell into English in this maner. I am here brought as a spectacle before the face of God, of angelles, and of men, satisfieng my selfe to die as becommeth a true christian & ca-tholike man. As for the treasons that haue béene laid to my charge, and I am come here to suffer for: I de-sire you all to beare witnesse with me, that thereof I am altogither innocent. Whereupon answer was made to him by one of the councell, that he might not seeme to denie th' obiections against him, hauing béene prooued so manifestlie to his face, both by suffi-cient witnesse and euidence. Well my lord (quoth he) I am a catholike man, and a priest, in that faith haue I liued hitherto, and in that faith I do intend to die; and if you esteeme my religion treason, then of force I must grant vnto you, as for anie other treason I will not consent vnto. Then was he mo-ued as concerning his traitorous and hainous of-fense to the quéenes most excellent maiestie. Where-to he answered; She is my lawfull princesse and quéene. There somwhat he drew in his words to him-selfe, whereby was gathered, that somwhat he would haue gladlie spoken: but the great timiditie and vnstable opinion of his conscience, wherein he was all the time euen to the death, would not suffer him to vtter it.

Campion in his confession implieth a de-fense of his in-nocencie.

Here is with iudgement a deepe point and high matter to be considered, that this man alwaies di-recting the course of his life to a vaineglorious ima-gination, and alwaies couetous to make himselfe famous; at this instant made a perfect discouerie of himselfe. For being somewhat learned, all matters whatsoeuer (as you haue heard before) he bare a-waie with a maiesticall countenance, the visor of vanitie aptlie fitting the face of onelie hypocrisie; what was sound he would make sophisticall, what was the infallible truth of it selfe he would carrie in his owne conceipt, and delude the people with a pleasant quirke, or some such stuffe, onlie to purchase him credit and affection. And he was not to learne to set a corragious countenance on euerie such slight reason, whereby he peruerted manie, deceiued more, and was thought such a champion, as the pope neuer had the like. But now behold the man, whom neither racke nor rope should alter, whose faith was such as he boasted inuincible: feare had caught hold on this braue boaster, and terror entred his thoughts, where-by was discouered his impudent dissimulations. Now let it with patience be moued a little, that the outward protestations of this man vrged some there present to teares, not entring into conceipt of his inward hypocrisie to make a plausible definition of this perillous deceiuer, not by coniecture, but by proofe it shall be thus answered.

Campion no-ted to be verie vaingloious.

Campion described.

Edmund Campion, as it is by men of sufficient credit reported, at what time he spent his studie here in England both in the hospitall, and also at the vniuersitie of Oxford, was alwaies addicted to a maruellous suppose in himselfe of ripe iudgement, prompt audacitie, and cunning conueiance in his schole points: wherethrough he fell into a proud and vaineglorious iudgement, practising to be eloquent in phrase, and so fine in his quirks and fantasticall coniectures, that the ignorant he won by his smoth deuises, some other affecting his pleasant imagina-tions he charmed with subtilitie and choked with so-phistrie. The learned, who beheld his practises and peremptorie order of life, pitieng his follie, and wi-shing him a more staied determination, lothed his maners; yet loued the man, because christian chari-tie willed them so to do. Now this glorious Thraso hauing by his libels made himselfe famous, and vn-der shew and suppose of great learning (though in-deed being approued, found verie simple to the spee-ches giuen of him) subdued manie to affect him ve-rie much, when he was taken he knew it stood him vpon, not to lose the credit openlie he had woone se-cretlie. Wherefore in his former ridiculous maner, both in prison, at his arreignment, yea and at his death, he continued the same in all points, which the foulnesse of his treasons blemished euerie waie. Now indeed, as our English nation is both louing and pitifull: so manie seeing the gifts of God so well bestowed on the man, and by him applied to so great abuse, through naturall kindnesse bemoned his case, wishing he had not fallen into so traitorous a cause. Then was moued to him againe his treasons and hainous offenses against the quéenes maiestie, which impudentlie he still denied, seeming to vtter words on the behalfe of one Richardson, one likewise of the condemned traitors, taking on his conscience that it was not he. Which hath bin prooued to the contra-rie, for that it is knowne how this Richardson is he, who distributed Campions libels and bookes abrode: and when he was put to his oth, whether it was he or no, he refused to sweare on his behalfe. And because the world might be fullie resolued, that (notwithstan-

A further des-cription of Edmund Campion.

Campions curious care to keepe the credit he had woone in England.

ding

ding all the pretended & colourable meanes he could vse for his excuse and innocencie) he was to suffer death deseruedlie as a traitor, &c. There was read to his face in the hearing of the assemblie a pamphlet published by authoritie as followeth.

An aduertisement and defense for truth against hir backebiters, and speciallie against the whispering fauourers and colourers of Campions and the rest of his con- federats treasons.

The true occasion of Campions & other of his stampe comming into England.

ALthough at the late arreignements at Westminster of Edmund Campion, & other his complices condemned there of sundrie high treasons, it was manifestlie declared and fullie prooued, how they all, vnder pretense of the names of Iesuits, seminarie priests, & other persons of like condition, had secretlie come into this realme, by sending of sundrie persons authorised by the pope, to moue the people by their secret persuasions to change their professions in the matter of religion, of long time quietlie established in this realme, and to be reconciled to the obedience of the pope, and withdrawen from their naturall allegiance due to the quéenes maiestie, and by these meanes to be readie in their hearts and minds and otherwise prouided, to ioine their forces as well with such as their heads and superiors which sent them intended spedilie to procure to be sent into this relme, as with other rebellious subiects by them to be thereto also excited, of purpose to depriue hir maiestie of hir life, crowne, and dignities: in like maner as latelie hath bene notoriouslie attempted and put in execution by doctor Sanders an arrant and detestable traitor, and whilest he liued one of the said Campions companions, and by other English and Irish Iesuits and traitors in Ireland, where they had first by their like secret meanes and persuasions, intised a great multitude of people of that land, first to change their profession of religion, and to acknowledge the popes authoritie, and to renounce the iust authoritie of hir maiestie; & so departing from their allegiance, vpon the arriuall of forren forces they did enter into a manifest rebellion, against the which almightie God the iust auenger of rebels by his goodnesse hath giuen hir maiestie (through hir good ministers) power to the vanquishing, not onelie of those forren forces, but also of a great number of the rebels there. Yet it is maliciouslie, falselie, and traitorouslie by some of the secret fauourers of the said Campion, and other the said condemned traitors whispered in corners, that the offenses of these traitors were but for their secret attemptings as Iesuits, by exhorting and teaching; with shriuing, massing, and such like acts, to moue people to change their religion, & to yeld their obedience to the pope as Christs vicar (although the same be of themselues offenses verie heinous, and séeds of sedition not allowable by the lawes of the realme) whereas in verie truth neuertheless it did manifestlie appeare vpon their indictments, and at their arreignements, by sundrie confessions of some of their owne companions, and by manie good proofes and witnesses produced and sworne before their faces, that their facts whereof they were arreigned and condemned, were such as were in truth hie treasons committed against hir maiesties roiall person, and against the ancient lawes and statutes of this realme, which manie hundred yeres past were in force against like traitors, and not for facts of doctrine or religion, nor yet for offenses against anie late or new statutes, the same being manie conspiracies at sundrie times beyond the seas, at Rome in Italie and other [illegible] lastlie at Rheimes in France, where there are nourished by the popes authoritie in seminaries multitudes of English Iesuits, seminarie priests, and fugitiues, whereof their heads and gouernors vse continuallie in their sermons, and in their bookes publikelie printed, as traitors to declare their traitorous minds as far forth as they can, to the depriuation of the quœnes maiestie of hir life and crowne: to which ends the said Campion and his said companions, by procurement of their said heads, came secretlie into this realme, to moue the subiects to renounce their naturall obedience; & according to a bull of the last pope Pius published to persuade all sorts with whom they durst secretlie deale, that hir maiestie by the said popes excommunication was not the lawfull quœne of the realme, nor that the subiects were bound to obeie anie of hir lawes or ministers: but that they were all frée, and discharged of their obedience and allegiance, and that they might lawfullie, yea that when time might serue, they ought to take armes against hir maiestie, as in the late rebellion in the north was manifestlie by like meanes put in execution, and as now also latelie was notoriouslie attempted in Ireland, by stirring vp the people in the popes name, and vnder his standard to an open generall rebellion. And to haue brought these things to passe in this realme, was the comming into this realme of the said Campion and his complices most manifestlie tried and prooued; as if by Gods goodnes by their apprehensions, after their secret wandrings and disguisings of themselues in a great part of the shires of the realme, these traitors had not bene now staied, and by iust punishmments ordered to be executed, there would haue appéered such mischiefe as is lamentable to be thought of; to the danger of hir maiesties person, and to the hazard and ruine of the whole realme by inuasion of the same with forren enimies, and by raising of inward warre within the realme; the end and euent whereof, as of warre ciuill, can not be without great græfe mentioned or imagined.

The craft and drift of pope Pius his seditious bull.

Much mischiefe preuented by the timelie attaching of Campion and his like.

And to the further reproofe and condemnation of the said Campion and other the traitours now condemned, they being all seuerallie and earnestlie required at the place of their arreignement to declare what they thought of the said popes bull (by which hir maiestie was in the popes intention depriued of the crowne) and of doctors Sanders, and of Bristowes traitorous writings in maintenance of the said bull, and allowance of the rebellion in the north, and of Sanders traitorous actions in Ireland; and being likewise demanded what they did thinke if the present pope should publish the like bull: none of them all, but one onelie named Rushton, could be persuaded by anie their answers to shew in anie part their misliking either of the former bull, or of doctor Sanders, or Bristowes traitorous writings or actions, or of the pope that now is, if he should now publish the like bull against hir maiestie; so as they did aparantlie shew their traitorous harts still fired to persist in their diuelish minds against their naturall allegiance: whereof God giue all good subiects, being true Englishmen borne, grace to beware, and in no sort to giue eare or succour to such pernicious traitors, howsoeuer they shall be couered with hypocrisie, & false and fained holines of Rome.

How the traitors stood opinioned to ye said factious bull, &c.

The craft and practises of the Iesuits in Ireland.

The proceeding of iustice against Campion, &c: defamed.

Campion and his complices offense was ranke treason.

This aduertisement read and heard, the time by pitifull delaies began to passe awaie, in somuch that the executioner was now to fall to his charge: whervpon Campion was exhorted to praie with the people in English; naie, to doo so he was desired, howbeit he would not: but said his Pater noster in Latine. and desired all those of the household of faith to sai[illegible] one Credo for him. Manie indirect answers he made, as when he was moued to aske the quæne forgiuenesse, and when the preacher requested him to shew some signe of a penitent sinner, then shortlie he replied: You and I, we are not of one religion. After a few silent praiers to himselfe, the cart was drawen awaie, & he committed to the mercie of God. There he hanged till he was dead, when being cut downe, he was bowelled and quartered, according as it was appointed by iustice. Rafe Sherwin seemed a man of better iudgement, more learned, and more obedient; he said the Lords praier in English, beléeuing in God that made him, in Christ his sonne that saued him, and in the Holie ghost that sanctified him: and according to the saieng of S. Augustine, desired Jesus, that he would be to him Jesus, as much to saie, as his sauiour and redæmer. He likewise confessed himselfe a catholike man and a préest, intending to die in that faith. But when the treasons were moued to him, he likewise did make denial thereof. He asked the quænes maiestie forgiuenesse, and desired that she might long liue and reigne ouer vs. Then was read to him the booke of the aduertisement, which before had bæne read to Campion, and after a few praiers he likewise ended his life. Alexander Brian séemed more obstinate and impious, using verie little signe of repentance and hartie humilitie: he vsed manie praiers to himselfe, and spake verie little worthie the rehearsall. Iustice being executed on him, he and Sherwin were quartered, according as Campion had bæne before them.

[illegible] on

Rafe Sherwins behauiour at his death.

Alexander Brians demenour at his death.

¶ No soner had iustice giuen the blow of execution, and cut off the foresaid offendors from the earth; but certeine enimies to the state politike and ecclesiastike, greatlie fauouring them, and their cause, which they falslie gaue out to be religion, dispersed abroad their libels of most impudent deuise, tending to the iustifieng of the malefactors innocencie, to the heinous and vnrecompensable defamation of the course of iustice and iudgement against them commensed and finished: in somuch that speaking of the daie whereon they died, they blushed not to intitle them martyrs, saieng among other things not publishable, as in these few verses extracted followeth:

Ex libello quodam famoso.

Vna dies viuos pariter cæsósque videbat,
In cœlum missos vidit & vna dies:
Aeterníque breui gaudent pro morte coronis,
Hæc sunt martyribus dona parata pijs.
Fœlix illa dies mensis fuit illa Decembris,
Martyrijs donans cœlica regna tribus:
Fœlix quæ sanctum suscepit terra cruorem,
*Quem cæcata odij fuderat ira * tui:*
Supremúmque manens fœlix constantia finem,
Atque in conspectu mors pretiosa Dei, &c.

* Alludit ad Angliam.

Thus slanderouslie against the administration of iustice scattered these vipers brood their lieng reports, therein to the skies aduancing the children of iniquitie as spotlesse; yea forging most monstruous fables, put them in print; as though God and nature had suffered violence to their vnappeaseable indignation, for that men of such integritie forsooth and extraordinarilie sanctified, suffered so shamefull a death: in somuch that it was bruted abroad not by men, but brute beasts, that on the selfe same daie whereon Campion was executed, the riuer of Thames did neither ebb nor flow, but stood still. O miracle! Whether this were a lie or not, as all the world may sweare it was no truth; this is certeine and vndoubted, that there was found a facultie about Campion a litle before his death, wherein authoritie was giuen him from the bishop of Rome Gregorie the thirteenth, to execute the sentence of the bull published by Pius Quintus against all the quæns maiesties subiects as heretiks, &c: and yet this man forsooth (albeit notorious) died not for treason but for religion, as with fowle mouths they are not ashamed to saie:

'Abr. Fl. Ex concione apud crucem Paulinam per D. Sellar 6. Feb. 1586.

Religio crimen non mala vita fuit.

But of this matter inough, & now to the processe of English accidents after this tragicall narration.] When the quæne of England and the monsieur the duke of Anion vnderstood by report made to hir maiestie and his highnesse by monsieur de Pruneaur (who had bæne sent ouer a litle before from the duke to the prince of Orange, and had prosecuted the treatie the former yeares as his ordinarie ambassador) what good will and great longing he had found in the prince of Orange, who was come into the Ile of Walkeren with a great number of gentlemen, and with the deputies of the states, and of the chiefest of the best cities of the low countrie to receiue his highnesse, and to do him most humble seruice: and when they had also heard the ambassage of the lords of Dhain & Junius, sent from the lords of the state to the duke, to shew vnto him the exceeding great desire which all the people had to sée his highnes, for the present ratifieng of the former couenants that had passed betwixt them: for accomplishing whereof it was needfull that he should passe ouer with all spéed: whereby the same thing was confirmed which had bæne declared oft afore by the lord of mount saint Aldegond, ordinarie ambassador to hir maiestie and his hignes: vpon the intelligence of these things, it was resolued by hir maiestie & his highnes, that the monsieur should depart. Whereupon the quæne calling the lord Howard, commanded him (for the earle of Lincolne was then sicke) to take vpon him the charge of the admerals ship, and to go to Rochester, and there to chose vessels méet for the transporting of monsieur & his traine, & to furnish them with men of war, mariners, and all manner of necessaries as well of war as of vittels. Which thing was done with such diligence and spæd, that the ships being readie with all things in lesse than eight daies, passed out of the riuer of Rochester and the Thames, and were conueied to the downes néere to the towne of Sandwich, where the monsieur was to take shipping. And for so much as the monsieur came into England accompanied but with a few princes and lords, & they also had left their traine in France, & some of the same lords were sent backe againe afterward by his commandement and for his seruice; the quæne determined to giue him a companie & traine mét for his greatnesse, taking his iournie about so great & noble exploit. And therfore (as agréeing with hir highnesse hart) she commanded the earle of Leicester master of hir horsses, the lord of Hunsdon gouernour of Berwike hir maiesties néere kinsman, Monsieur duke of Anion departeth out of England.

——(cuius fuerat matertera pulchra *Reginæ genetrix Henrici nobilis * vxor*)

* Nempe Anne Henrici 8 vxor, sereniss. reginæ Elisabethæ genetrix.

and the lord Howard the viceadmerall (of whom the first two were of hir priuie councell, and all three were knights of the order of the garter) to attend vpon him, and to assemble as great a number of English lords and gentlemen as could be gotten in so litle time, to honour him withall: whereunto the said lords obeied verie willinglie. And there went with them to accompanie them, the lord Willoughbie, the lord Windsore, the lord Sheffield, the lord Howard, the lord Awdlete second sonne to the late duke of Norffolke: master Philip Sidneie nephue to the forenamed erle of Leicester, sir George Careie, and master John & Robert Careie all three sonnes of the said lord of Hunsdon; master William Howard brother of the said lord Howard, sir Thomas Sherleie, sir Thomas Perot, sir William Russell, sir William Drurie, & sir George Bowser knights, and a great number of gentlemen; namelie, master Henrie Windsore brother to the lord Windsore, master ster John Bozough brother to the lozd Bozough, master Walter Ralegh, master Georze Carew, master Edward Hobbie, master Francis Darcie, master Michaell Stanhope, master William Knols master Francis Knolles, master Georze Digbie, master Thomas Vauasor, master Anthonie Mildemaie, master Henrie Nowell, master Nicholas Gorges, master Michaell Harecourt, master Fulke Greuill: so as the whole traine that attended vpon the said earle, was to the number of an hundred gentlemen, and more than three hundred seruingmen. The lord of Hunsdon had of gentlemen and others togither to the number of a hundred and fiftie: and the lord Howard had as manie; besides manie more, whereof diuerse were hir maiesties seruants. The quéene determined to accompanie the monsieur to the sea side, & yet neuertheless commanded the said lords to kéepe their course, and to attend vpon his highnesse to the said place, with all maner of solemnities, interteinments, and feastings. He on the other side desired and besought hir maiestie not to depart from London, as well for that the iournie would be painefull vnto hir; and for that he saw the weather faire and wind fauorable, and therefore was loth to lose anie occasion of performing his voiage with all spéed. But he could not preuaile.

The quéenes maiestie lodgeth at Rochester.

Wherevpon hir maiestie toke hir iournie with hir whole court, the first date of Februarie, & lodged that night at Rochester. The next date abiding still at Rochester, hir maiestie shewed him all hir great ships which were in that place, into most whereof his highnesse and the prince and lords of his traine entered, not without great admiration of the French lords & gentlemen, who confessed that of good right the quéene of England was reported to be ladie of the seas. Also he beheld how all those ships were readie furnished and well appointed. And hir maiestie told him that all those vessels & the furniture of them should doo him seruice, when soeuer he would imploie them: for the which he most humblie thanked hir maiestie, and so after all the great ordinance had béene shot off, they returned for that daie againe to Rochester. The third day they went to Sittingborne, where dining both togither, the quæne was serued after the English manner by the greatest ladies of hir court; and the monsieur after the French manner by the gentlemen of his traine, which ladies and gentlemen dined afterwards togither. Then his highnesse besought hir maiestie againe to go no further, declaring vnto hir that the faire weather passed awaie.

The quéenes maiestie accõpanied the monsieur to Canturburie where they & their traine parted.

But notwithstanding his intreatance the quéene went on still to Canturburie. At which place, after one daies tarriance, when she had openlie feasted all the French nobilitie, either part toke their leaue of other, not without great griefe and shew of verie great amitie, especiallie betwéene hir maiestie and the monsieur. Which thing was perceiued also in the lords and gentlemen of both nations, & likewise in the ladies, to all whome it was like griefe to depart after they had béene conuersant and had liued friendlie and brotherlie togither by the space of three moneths, without anie change or alteration of good willes. But the honor which inforced his highnesse, asswaged his griefe, and made him to proceed on his iournie with the said prince and lords of both nations.

The first daie of the same moneth, whereas he was determined to haue taken ship, he was counselled to lodge that night of Sandwich, because the wind was somewhat changed. Howbeit, some of the English gentlemen, namelie master Killegreie, master Diar and diuerse others, to eschew thronging at their imbarking went to Douer, and there taking ship the same night laie a while at anchor, and somwhat after midnight sailed awaie with certeine other vessels. The seuenth daie in the morning about nine of the clocke, his highnesse toke the sea in three great ships of war. In the greatest of them named the Discouerer sailed the monsieur himselfe with the erle of Leicester, and the lord Howard the viceadmerall; in the second called the Sentinell went the prince Dolphin; and in the third was the countie of Louall, and the lord of Hunsdon. Now as his highnesse was yet at anchor, there came a post from a lord of England, who brought him word that the states of the low countries were reuolted, and namelie the citie of Antwerpe, and therefore he praied him not to depart vntill he had more certeine newes. Notwithstanding this, his highnesse determined to depart, and so sailed awaie with fiftéene ships: and he had so faire weather (which continued euen vntill after his entering into Antwerpe, and his feasting and solemne interteinement there) that the heauen, the winds, the sea, and the earth séemed all to fauour his voiage, and to further the gladnesse which the people shewed in receiuing him with so great good will.

The prince of Orange taketh order for the interteinment of the monsieur.

In the meane time the prince of Orange, séeing the time fit, departed from Middleborough, where he had taried the monsieurs comming sir wéekes and more, and came to Flushing to take order for all things that were requisit for the honorable and commodious interteinement of so great a prince. At the which place, vnderstanding by the letters of the said lords ambassadours and others, that the monsieur was departed from London and come to Canturburie; and therefore thinking it would not be longer he arriued there: he dispatched monsieur Treslon his viceadmerall of Zeland, with a litle pinnesse called the Chase, to go before to meet the monsieur: commanding him that as soone as he had discouered his fleet, he should giue him a watchword thereof by the shot of two cannons. Monsieur Treslon hauing about nonetide discouered the ships that were parted from Douer, and thinking that they had béene the great fleet, gaue his watchword, which was the cause that a certeine vessell went forth to the sea to méet his highnesse; but anon after perceiuing his errour, he returned to Flushing, where by and by the fleet of Douer arriued. Then monsieur Treslon going forth, found the monsieur and the great fleet betwéene Newport and Dunkirke: where after salutation giuen and taken on either side, the monsieur standing vpon the hatches of his ship, espied his owne secretarie named Nephue standing likewise vpon the hatches of the Chase; to whome he sent his shipbote, commanding him to come aboord to him, which thing he did, and there aduertised the monsieur that as concerning the reuolting of the states there was no such matter, but that all things went verie well, & that his highnesse was waited for with great longing. That daie, by reason the wind was turned northeast, they could go no further, but were faine to cast anchor ouer against a place called Ostend, where they passed that night, waiting for the tide the nert morning. His ships were perceiued by them of Flushing, where after midnight arriued the lord of S. Aldegond, who assured the prince of Orange, that the nert morning the monsieur would arriue there with the tide. Wherevpon the prince of Orange and the prince of Espinoie with a great number of gentlemen toke the sea the nert morning: but bicause the tide was against them, and on the other part the monsieur hauing a side wind with him was constreined to hast to the land. By meanes whereof the prince, being not able to come aboord to him with his ship, was faine to turne saile backe againe to Flushing, where the prince Dolphin had taken land alreadie, & sought euerie where for the prince his brother.

Nephue the monsieurs secretarie.

The lord of S. Aldegond, the prince of Orange and the prince of Espinoie, &c.

When

When they had imbraced and saluted one an other like brethren; the prince of Orange, perceiuing the monsieur to approch verie neere, toke the water againe. But when he perceiued him to come downe into his bote to take land, he turned backe againe, and hied him so fast that he toke land before him, and there tarried his comming. As soone as he was arriued, while he was yet in his bote readie to come a land, the prince receiued him with great reuerence; and imbracing his highnesse knee, because he saw the weather was cold said vnto him in few words, that he was verie glad to see that happie daie, which had beene so long expected, wherein he had the honor to behold his highnesse, and to offer vnto him his most humble seruice, with goods and life, & all that he had besides; hoping that by meanes of his highnesse, that countrie hauing indured so great aduersitie, should now be fullie set at libertie. Whereunto the monsieur answered verie wiselie and brieflie. And when he had imbraced him with such honor as was due in respect of his age and doings: he came aland, and was brought by the prince to the palace of the citie: howbeit not without great difficultie, by reason of the great preasse of men of war and other people pestering one an other, the folke of that countrie thronging to see his highnesse, and the Englishmen which as then were come downe thither in great numbers preasing to know the prince of Orange. In the meane while the trumpets and drums sounded with such noise that the aire rang of it, and all the ordinance shot off, as well of the queenes ships as of the other ships, whereof the number was great which laie then in the rode, with so great roring and thundering, that they conueied the newes of his highnesse happie arriuall in the low countrie to Calis, and to other places of France. They of Flushing shot two peales, with so great noise by reason of the great number of the peeces that are in the towne, that all the ground rang of it. The monsieur found in that place all sorts of his officers; for his houshold and his gard of Swisses and Frenchmen, departing from Calis and Bullongne foure daies afore, were come to Middleborough.

Embracing of the knee.

The monsieur landeth.

Lustie discharging of guns on all sides.

The magistrates of the citie waited for him at the gates of the citie, who told him by the mouth of their recorder, that they were verie glad of his comming, and thought themselues happie to see him, in hope, that by his guiding and gouernement they should see their countrie restored to tranquillitie, and set vp againe in hir former renowme. The states of Brabant speaking by the mouth of monsieur van Stralen Amptman of Antwerpe, after their welcomming of him, declared with what mind the noble and good cities of Brabant had expected him, beseeching him most humblie to honor the countrie of Brabant with his presence out of hand. Next then the deputies of the citie of Bruselles (besides the declaration which they made of their owne good will, and generallie of all the peoples of that countrie) declared also particularlie, with what great goodwill and affection his highnesse had beene waited for in that citie, the cheefe seat of the lords of that countrie; and that after so manie mischeefes which they had suffered for withstanding the tyrannie of the Spaniards, next vnto God they had not anie hope, but in the comming of his highnesse their prince and lord. Afterward they of Antwerpe were heard, who declared the affection of the people toward his highnesse, their long longing for him, and the great desire which they had to see their prince and souereigne. The colonels and capteins of the towne spake afterward, and declared vnto him how carefullie and diligentlie they had kept the citie, in hope to put it shortlie into his hands, and reioising likewise at his comming.

The monsieur verie ioifullie receiued.

Antwerpe reioiseth at the monsieurs comming.

Vnto all these orations his highnesse answered verie sagelie and brieflie, as vnto all the residue, to the well liking and contentment of all that stood by. The prince of Orange tarried a while with the monsieur in the towne house of the citie: and then taking his leaue went to visit the princes and lords of both the nations that came with him to see how they fared, and to take order that they should want nothing, so far forth as the abilitie of the towne of Flushing (which is none of the greatest) could extend, where such prouision was made, that all were well lodged and serued, notwithstanding that aboue fiue hundred men of the onelie English lords were come aland that daie. All that after none was spent in feasting, in making of bonefires, in fireworks, in sounding of trumpets, and in all maner of tokens of ioie, which all men vttered vniuersallie for the comming of so great a prince. Also the foure members of Flanders, which came by the counsell of the prince of Orange, waited to present themselues vnto him at Middleborough.

English lords and their retinues.

The prince of Orange, perceiuing that the monsieur was minded to go the next daie to Middleborough, told him that there were three waies, the one about the castell of Ramekins, to enter in at the great chanell of Middleborough by the bout of the foreland; an other by the little chanell through the countrie; and that he had kept ships in a readinesse to go the outer waie, and a great sort of botes to go the inner waie, because his highnesse could not iorneie either by coch or on horsseback by reason of the winter, and there was but onelie one causeie whereby folke trauelled ordinarilie on foot. The monsieur beholding the fitnesse of the time, for indeed it was verie faire weather, and vnderstanding that the waie was not past a good French league in length, vndertoke to go it on foot, and so did all the rest of the princes, lords, and gentlemen, as well of the same countrie, as of France and England. A great sort of the monsieurs house, which were lodged alredie at Middleborough, came to meet him, speciallie his gard of Frenchmen and Swissers. A good waie out of the towne the magistrate of Middleborough came to meet him, as it were, about a third part of the waie, and there making an oration to him, told him of the great and long desire which all the people had of his comming, and that the people of Middleborough for their owne part thought themselues greatlie honored, in that he had vouchsafed to come to their citie, offering all dutifulnesse vnto him. His gard also met him in the same place, & then began the Swissers to march on in their order, striking vp their drums after their manner. Moreouer, sir companies of the citizens well armed and well araied stood imbattelled without the towne, who kept their place till the monsieur was past, and then they followed after leisurelie behind.

Three waies to Middleborough.

The monsieur is met going to Middleborough.

The deputies of the states of the earledome of Zeland waited his comming at the towne gate; who hauing declared the gladnesse which they conceiued, reioised at the happie successe which his highnes had had in making the peace in France, and in rescuing the citie of Cambraie by his armie and in his owne person, and in his passing into England, which they knew he had taken vpon him for none other cause than for the furtherance of the affaires of those countries; and finallie for that hauing put his person in danger of that passage, he was now happilie arriued in Zeland, most humblie thanking his highnesse, and declaring what hope they had conceiued of his presence, and therewithall offering right humblie whatsoeuer their dutie required. At the entrie of the gate one brought him a courser of Naples, but he determined with himselfe (seeing that the

The deputies of the states of the earledom of Zeland.

The monsieur would do as the com- did the princes and lords had not their horses there) to go through with his iournie on foot, and so entred into the citie of Middleborough in this order. First went the magistrates of the citie with their vnder officers and ministers of iustice. Next them the deputies of the states of Zeland. After them followed diuerse gentlemen of all the three nations, with the deputies of the cities of Brabant, and of the foure members of Flanders. Then marched the Swissers after their accustomed fashion; in whose traine were a great sort of noblemen and also gentlemen, of whome the most part were Englishmen of the retinue of the three lords sent thither by the queene. Behind them insued as it were in one troope together, the prince Dolphin, the earle of Leicester, the prince of Espinoie, the countie de Lauall, the lord of Hunsdon, the lord Howard, and the rest of the lords. Then came the monsieur himselfe, hauing on his left hand somewhat more than halfe a pase beneath him, the prince of Orange, of whome he alwaies asked some question. After him followed his gard of Frenchmen, and after them the gard of the prince of Orange; and last of all the six ensigns that stood in battell raie without the citie, and ten others which had marshalled the streets vnto the market place, where all the rest of the citizens were imbattelled. Throughout all the streets from the gate to the monsieurs lodging, there were railes, and at euerie tenth pase on either side were burning cressets. And so his highnesse and all the nobilitie which accompanied him, passed on, maruelled to see so goodlie a citie in so little an Ile, and so neere to three other good townes, not distant one from another aboue one league. But most of all they wondered at the beautie of the market stéd, and of the common hall of the citie. His highnes lodging was verie well and richlie hanged and furnished, considering the small respit that the inhabitants had, so as he was verie well and commodiouslie lodged, both he and all the princes, noblemen, and gentlemen of all nations that attended vpon him. That euening was passed in feasting, in making of bonfires in the streets, in artificiall fireworks vpon the towers and steeples, and in sounding of trumpets. The next morning the twelue deputies of the foure members of Flanders speaking to his highnesse by the mouth of monsieur Taiard the recorder of Gant, declared at large the great goodwill of all the people of Flanders towards him, and that like as they had beene of the first that had sent vnto him, so they hoped to be of the first that should yéeld all humble seruice and subiection vnto him. Whereunto his highnesse answered verie discréetlie, as his custome was. He passed the rest of the time in plaieng at tennis with the prince of Orange, and after with other lords.

The earle of Leicester and other English lords.

Burning cressets on each side.

The monsieur Taiard recorder of Gant.

A solemne feast held in the townehall.

The thirtéenth daie he had a solemne feast made him in the townehall, where his highnesse commanded the tables to be prepared of purpose, that he might haue the compante of the prince Dolphin, the prince of Orange, the earle of Leicester, the prince of Espinoie, the countie de Lauall, the lord of Hunsdon, and the lord Howard. For the lords of England were highlie regarded & honored euerie where, both in respect of his maiestie which sent them, and also for the worthines of their persons. The feast was excellentlie well furnished of all things, & speciallie of tapistrie worke & other deuises of sugar; insomuch that both the Frenchmen and Englishmen confessed, that they had not béene wont to sée such manner of seruices in their countries. The fourtéenth daie the prince of Orange would néeds go see the putting of the ships in a readinesse, which should carrie the monsieur and his traine, which were in number foure and fiftie, and therefore he would haue gone to the foreland of Middleborough. Whereof the monsieur hearing would néeds go with him. On thursdaie the fiftéenth of that moneth, his highnesse went to see the towne of Ermwiden, which is about halfe a league from Middleborough. And vnderstanding that the English lords were gone to see the towne of Vere, (called by strangers Camfer by reason of the passage that was sometime in the towne of Campe which is now drowned) he also toke bote and went thither, where all the companie was verie well receiued by the inhabitants, notwithstanding that they were taken vnprouided. The sixtéenth daie his highnesse was determined to haue taken ship, but there arose so great a storme, that the mariners councelled him to forbeare the sea for that daie: by reason whereof his imbarking was deferred till the next morrow, at which time his highnesse with all his traine sailed awaie. He himselfe was caried in a ship painted all ouer with his owne colours beset with a number of flags and pensils of the armes of Anion. The residue had their accustomed flags so greatlie feared of the Spaniards, belaied with the colours of the prince of Orange. This fléet came that daie against Beerland in the Ile of south Beueland, where they cast anchor and spent that night there. The next daie being arriued luckilie at Lisso, after manie shot of ordinance from the fort and from the ships of warre which accompanied his highnesse, they did cast anchor againe. He himselfe went aland, and laie that night in the captens lodging longing for the morning. This fort of Lisso is builded a three leagues beneath Antwerpe vpon the point of a dike or causeie in the parish of Lisso. The place is so commodious, that with a musket a man may easilie shot from the one banke of the riuer Skeld to the other; and by reason that the streame of the riuer and the tide of the sea, which passeth that waie twise a daie, do make it croked, that place being occupied by the enimie, might greatlie hinder and annoie the sailing thereof. And therefore the citizens of Antwerpe following the aduise and platforme laid forth by the prince of Orange, bestowed great cost in fortifieng that place, which hath a great tower with great bulworks rampires, and ditches, and is so well strengthned and flanked to the purpose, and hath the water so at commandement, that as now it is not to be woone by anie force. The next date being mondaie, the nintéenth daie of Februarie, his highnesse departed thense to make his entrie into the renowned citie of Antwerpe.

The monsieur goeth to see the towne of Ermwiden.

The monsieurs ships painted with his owne colours.

The fort of Lisso.

The monsieur prepareth to make his entrie into Antwerpe.

The roiall interteinement of the right high and mightie prince, Francis the French kings onelie brother, by the grace of God duke of Brabant, Aniou, Alanson, Berrie, &c, into the citie of Antwerpe.

IN all great and statelie shewes and assemblies, they that are the authors and setters forth of them, indeuour to beautifie and commend as much as they can the things which they offer to the sight of those whome they intend to honour, and of those which resort thither from strange places, to delight themselues with the beholding of them. The ancient historiographers describe vnto vs manie great triumphes, and statelie interteinements of emperours, kings, and great captens, and they forget not to put into their writings the great costlinesse and charges, and whatsoeuer else was set forth to the shew, to content the eies of the beholders. And albeit that neither gold, siluer, prétious stones, tapistrie, cloth of silke, fine linnen, diuersities of vessels, nor varietie of paintings were spared, but all such things haue inriched those shewes: yet notwithstanding, ding, there is not anie thing that hath yelded greater grace, beautie, and contentment to such assemblies, than the multitude and brightnesse of armorie and of things perteining to martiall affaires, as engines, artillerie, and shewes of cities and castels beaten downe or taken by force from the enimies. And therefore in the Romane empire (which excelled all the other not onlie in conquests, martiall discipline, and politike order of gouernment, but also in sumptuousnes and roialtie) although infinit numbers of publike games and exercises were exhibited by them being the greatest lords of the world, who not onelie spared not anie thing that was in their owne power, but also made the cities and countries, which were anie waie bound vnto them, to send vnto them whatsoeuer rare and exquisit things they could come by, to serue their turnes in the shewes which they exhibited to the people: yet notwithstanding their triumphes haue so borne the bell aboue all the rest, that the word triumphing which commeth thereof, hath bene applied to all high, great, and statelie doings.

The finest shew that can be made what it is.

The triumphs of the Romans excelled all their other shewes.

Not that in their other shewes anie thing was spared, which might content the eies euen of couetous folke, or satisfie the bloudthirstie harts of such as toke no pleasure but to behold the sheading of bloud, yea oftentimes of mans bloud before their eies: but in their triumphings nothing was so glorious as the armorie and personages of the great capteines that had bene conquerors, which thing contented the beholders far more without all comparison. And therefore when men intend to betoken the exceeding huge greatnesse of Rome, they terme it the triumphant Rome, which importeth as much as the rich, wealthie, and victorious Rome, replenished with great numbers of noble capteines, and valiant souldiors. And this terme is come of the great numbers of triumphs, which were seene there in the times of the Scipios, Paules, Claudies, Metelles, Pompeis, Cesars, and others. True it is that the other shewes also were verie glorious and beautifull to behold, and did (I wote not how) tickle the harts of such as were fed with the beholding of their riches and of the infinite numbers of lions, tigres, panthers, beares, and swordplaiers incountring one another to the death: but yet the beholding of a goodlie companie of men armed in goodlie armour, marching in good order (besides the contenting of the sight, which is far better than to see riches) doth also wonderfullie rauish mens minds, and driue the beholder into an astonishment, setting him after a sort besides himselfe; and yet neuertheless filling him with a ioy and contentation surmounting all others. For as in the pleasures of the bodie, those seeme greatest which do most alter the senses with their pleasantnes: so fares it also with the delights of the mind, which become so much the greater, when admiration being matched with them, doth also moreouer rauish the vnderstanding, and set a man as it were out of his wits. And therefore when great personages (who can better iudge of matters than plaine simple folke can) do make discourse of things that are beautifull and desireable to behold: they speake of gold, siluer, pretious stones, pictures, vessels, tablets, and diuers other exquisit iewels: but yet they passe ouer those things & stand not vpon them. But when they come to talke of faire armour, good horsses, and such other things as belong to knighthood and chiualrie: then they make such variance vpon them, as they hold it for a thing fullie agreed vpon & granted, that in beautie and glorie nothing is comparable to a goodlie armie.

Other shews of the Romãs verie gallant.

A comparison betweene the pleasures of the bodie and delights of the mind.

Onelie this matter remaineth still in question vndecided; namelie, whether is the pleasanter sight, to see three or foure great battels of footmen well appointed in bright armour, well flanked with small shot, and with their great ordinance before them: or to see as manie squadrons of horssemen, or else two or three hundred ships furnished with their flags and banners, and ranged in order as if they were readie to giue battell. But as for the rest of all goodlie things, all men are fullie agreed that they come nothing neere to anie of those three, and much lesse do them all three together, if a man might behold them all at once: as it is reported that at one instant a man might haue seene the great armie of Xerres both footmen and horssemen ranged in battell raie: and also the two fleets of the Persians and of the Grecians fighting vpon the sea by Salamine, where by the wisedome and valiantnesse of Themistocles, the Greekes got that famous victorie of the Persians. In mine opinion that is the cause why the glad receiuing and ioifull entering of Francis duke of Brabant into the citie of Antwerpe seemed so goodlie and roiall to all such as saw it: in somuch that there hath not beene anie of them which hath not confessed that he neuer saw the like. And yet were there verie manie present at it, as well of the same countrie as of strangers, which haue seene manie statelie and roiall meetings, both in the same citie and in other cities of the low countries, and also in other great cities of other countries, as Paris, London, Rome, and Lions: and yet neuertheles the common voice is, that this last hath passed all the rest. And truelie the citie had no more but six daies respit to prepare for it, as I said before: in somuch that they could not put to making anie worke of silke, nor of gold and siluer beaten or wouen, nor anie imbroderie: no nor in so short time make anie meane apparell new, nor anie rare costlinesse of imageries, pillers, triumphall arches, or other pageants: but were constreined to make a shift with such things as they had in a readinesse aforehand of their owne store.

and glorious shewes.

The respit that Antwerp had to prouide for this triumphant shew.

In other interteinments there haue in deed beene seene great plentie of riches and roialties in attires of kings and queenes, princes and princesses, lords and ladies, citizens and their wiues; but in this interteinment no such were seene: howbeit there was not anie grosenesse, nor ought that might not well beseeme the neatnesse and fineneſse of that people, although it came nothing neere the sumptuousnesse of other interteinements. As touching triumphall arches, chariots, portraitures, and such other shewes; although there were manie wittie inuentions and agreeable to the time: yet haue men seene of them in other places, which might match these. And as touching the number of their people, although it was great: yet it is well knowen that Paris excedeth them in that behalfe. But the onelie reason of this contentment commeth chiefelie of the great number of people in armour, being not fewer than twentie thousand, in so good and so faire armour: and of their order and obedience, and of the small noise which all that huge multitude made: in somuch that if it had not beene for the thundering of the canons, and the sounding of trumpets, clarions, halboies, and other instruments, there was no more noise than is among a councell of graue men. That then was in mine opinion the onlie verie cause, which was greatlie furthered by their beholding of the monsieur of Brabant, who representing the statelinesse of old time, was clothed in a large mantell, with the bonnet of his dukedome vpon his head: so that among that great number of people (which were so well armed, that three of the best cities in christendome could not shew so manie faire armors of their owne) his highnesse resembled a pretious stone or iewell set in fine gold. And bicause that they which were the beholders thereof (for they could not be euerie where, nor

Paris for multitude of people passeth.

Monsieur of Brabant his attire and habit.

A question vndecided touching gallant nor see euerie thing) will be verie glad to vnderstand of the things that so escaped them, and delight their minds now with the remembrance of the things which they saw before, as they delighted their eies and minds with the beholding of them that daie: and strange nations, to whom the fame of that so renowmed daies worke is come, will take pleasure to vnderstand the same, whereof they could not be beholders. Therefore is this booke set forth, for the satisfieng of all men, and also to make it knowen to a number of men (who partlie for enimitie, partlie for enuie, and partlie for other surmises and mistrusts will not beleeue it) with what mind and affection the prince of Orange, and the other lords and noblemen of Brabant, the good cities, and the small townes, and namelie the most renowmed citie of Antwerp, haue receiued their new prince and souereigne lord.

The cause why this report was published in print.

The monsieur saileth toward Antwerpe.

The nineteenth date of the foresaid moneth in the forenoone, the monsieur the duke of Anion departed from Lisle and sailed towards Antwerpe, hauing in his companie but twentie ships, for the rest had gotten to Antwerpe afore, as well to put themselues in a readinesse as for other affaires. And he came about eight of the clocke nigh to the new towne, and passing along by the townes side, left the foreland of Flanders on his right hand and the towne on his left, and passed beyond all the towne and the place where the castell was. By the waie he heard all the canons shot off from that part of the towne which faceth the riuer, & from a great number of ships which rode at anchor there: and he saw all the wharfes furnished with men of warre of the citie, well armed, who welcommed him with their shot, and were answered againe by the ships of warre that accompanied him, conducted by monsieur de Treslon and the viceadmerals, and diuerse capteins of Flushing. And so the first foot that he did set on land in Brabant, was at a village called Kiell, which is at the canon wharfe at Antwerpe. The states of Brabant, the magistrates of the citie, and diuers other states, comming in like order on horsebacke to the same place with their trumpets, sergeants and heralds, apparelled in cotes of the armes of Lothier, Brabant, and Limborough, alighted there, and waited on foot at the wharfe to receiue his highnesse, and to shew him the good will and affection of the states and people. But the preasse of people was so great, which resorted thither to see the prince, whome they loked for to be their duke; and againe there were so manie impediments in his landing; that it was found better for them by the aduise of the prince of Orange to returne backe, and to tarie for his highnesse vpon a theater which was prepared for him.

The monsieur landeth at a village in Brabant.

A theater erected for the monsieur to shew himselfe vpon to the people.

This theater was set vp towards a corner of the castell, and opened towards the citie, so as his highnesse being there, might at one time view both the citie and the castell, and behold the counterscarffes: the deepe ditches full of faire water cleere to the verie bottome of the chanell, inclosed on either side with hewne stone: the great and faire buildings, the goodlie walles, beautifull to loke on and verie thicke: and the broad rampires garnished with trees planted by hand, that it resembled a little forest. The monsieur was brought vp to this theater accompanied with the prince Dolphin the onelie sonne of the duke of Montpanuser: the earle of Leceister, and other English lords representing the quéene of England: the princes of Orange and Espinoie, the countie de Lauall, the other English lords, the countie de Chateaurour, and a great sort of the barons, lords and gentlemen, besides the chiefe magistrats and maisters of the companies of the citie of Antwerpe.

Prince Dolphin, the earle of Leicester, &c.

The lords of the state of Brabant waiting vpon the theater, came dutifullie downe to go and meet his highnesse: which thing he perceiuing, did stand still. Then the prince of Orange stepped forth to take his place among the states, as one of the chiefe lords and barons of the duchie of Brabant. As soone as they had saluted his highnesse, and with great humblenesse kissed his hand, they mounted vp the steps againe with him, after whome followed the princes and lords of France and of England: and when they were come vp aboue, they ranged themselues on either side. There was set for the monsieur a chaire couered with cloth of gold, wherein he sat him downe. And vpon the theater there was likewise a trauerse of cloth of gold, and all the theater was couered with tapistrie. On the front of the theater on the highest part thereof were the armes of the marquelship of the holie empire: and a little beneath them on the right hand did stand the armes of Brabant with a wreath of fruits: and on the left hand stood the armes of the citie of Antwerpe. Also there were set vp two banners of silke azured with the armes of Anion, & in one partition were written these same verses:

Kissing the monsieurs hand.

A chaire of estate.

Banners with the armes of Anion.

O noble prince, whose footsteps faith and gentlenesse preserue:
Receiue thou here the honour which thy vertue doth deserue.
That these low countries maie at length take breath by meanes of thee,
And thou a father to vs all in name and doings bee.

After that euerie man had taken his place, and silence was made, the states of Brabant began their oration by the mouth of monsieur de Hesselles doctor of both the lawes, secretarie to the said estates, and one of their councell. The summe whereof was, that the barons, noblemen, & deputies of the chiefe cities, and of the other good townes, representing the states of the duchie and countrie of Brabant, hauing now the good hap to see among them and to behold face to face the prince, in whome next vnto God they had wholie set the hope of their deliuerance, and of the establishing of their ancient rest and libertie, did highlie thanke the almightie Lord, which had shewed them that fauour: taking it for an assured warrant, that he of his infinite goodnesse and prouidence, had not forgotten nor forsaken their iust quarrell: but had chosen his highnesse to be the defender of his people and the administrer of his iustice: to the end that to Gods glorie, and to his owne honour and renowme, the stormes of all troubles, & of all other things that annoied their estate, might by the beames of his princelie maiestie, wisedome, and prowesse be chased awaie; and the brightnesse of their former prosperitie heretofore knowne to all nations, be made to spring vp & shine forth againe. In respect whereof they gaue his highnesse most humble thanks for the singular loue and good will, which he of his owne onelie motion and princelie disposition had vouchsafed to continue towards them vnto that instant, notwithstanding all the crosse dealings and practises that cunning heads could skill to put forth to the hinderance of their affaires, forsomuch as they were not ignorant that for their calamities and miseries sakes, nothing could haue fallen in, which could haue made more to the fauour and furtherance of their case. Which thing they had esteemed and would esteéme for euer, as a péereles presidént of his incomparable staiednes and rare constancie: for the which, and for the great number of his other benefits and gratious dealings towards them, they were & euer should be bound to acknowledge themselues indebted to his highnesse with all faithfull obedience, and were readie that daie (by Gods grace) to submit themselues to him, as his humble vassals and subiects. And although they doubted not but that

The summe of monsieur de Hesselles oration to the monsieur.

The states thankefulnes signified.

They acknowledged themselues indebted to the monsieur.

that his highnesse did well vnderstand, and was fullie satisfied, not onelie of the generall causes which had vniuersallie moued the states of the prouinces of the low countries togither, to sue to him for succour, and to put themselues into his hands: but also of the particular causes, which the states of that duchie and countrie of Brabant had to renounce their obedience to the king of Spaine: yet notwithstanding, to the intent to put his highnesse in remembrance therof, and to confirme that sacred resolution and high enterprise of his, builded thereupon; and moreouer to yeeld some reason of all their doings to the princes and noblemen, and vnto the rest of that whole companie, who for the honour of his highnesse were come thither of courtesie, to further the solemnitie of his interteinment: to the intent that at this his repaire thither (which alwaies was called ioifull) they might vtter the more good will and gladnesse of heart; they would saie no more but this, that as long as the dukes of Brabant (specially since the falling of that duchie into the hands of the dukes of Burgognie, and other the famous ancestors of his highnesse) gaue themselues vnto the gouerning of their subiects by themselues, thereby making it to appeere that they loued them, and were not careles of them; they reaped so great commodities and notable seruices at their hands, that their names and puissances became oftentimes renowmed, yea and sometimes dreadfull to the greatest monarchs, kings, and common-wealths of christendome, whereof their warres and conquests made proofe: howbeit that of those things, as of matters familiarlie knowne by the histories, it was not requisit to make discourse in that place and time, which were apointed to greater matters. But after that their dukes and princes either by other allurements, or being withheld in their other countrie and seigniories, began to leaue them for a time, and afterward at length to forget them, abandoning them to the pleasure and will, and sometimes also to the lust and couetousnesse of their vnder officers, whereof the king of Spaine had lastlie finished and perfected vp the worke, leauing them disdainefullie as husbandles and fatherles, vtterlie destitute of his presence by the space of twentie yeares; it came to passe, that hauing altered & changed almost all the whole state of the countrie, and committed the offices to such as by the lawes and priuileges of the countrie were not capable of them; or rather to such as would giue most for them, and yet the vnsatiable couetousnesse, malice, and exceeding tyrannicall lordlinesse of the Spaniards being not contented therewith: in the end, when they had abused the whole common-wealth after their owne lust, they grew into so great pride, that they fell to snatching of the priuat goods and substance of the inhabitants, to liuing vpon the labour and sweat of the poore: yea and to rauishing the chastitie of mens wiues and daughters: and (to fill vp the measure of all abhomination and crueltie) they fell to taking awaie the liues, & to sucking the bloud of those which sought by all meanes to please them. Whereupon in the end the great and righteous God (who hath a care of his seruants) being offended therat, made that people (who had aforetimes beene of great valour) to call to mind their former state and libertie: and gaue them both will and courage to maintein the same, in such sort as they had receiued from their forefathers. Which thing they said could not be better done than by the election which the said states of Brabant, united with the other prouinces, had made of his highnesse person to be their prince and lord, of purpose to bring all things backe to their former order; hauing first sought (howbeit in vaine) for all remedies of their mischiefes, and of the disorders of the estate, from the causes and welsprings thereof. Declaring that the dukes in old time had beene of great valour, prowesse, and power; and had made manie renowmed voiages and exploits of warre, and that amongest others, they had chosen a duke of Anion heretofore, who had beene equall with the rest in chiualrie & feats of armes, as their conquests and dominions witnessed: that they had had their princes gentle, mild, gratious, familiar, and fauourable to their subiects: and that his highnesse had in that behalfe alreadie giuen such proofes of his gentlenesse, truth, and soundnesse, that to their seeming, some ancient duke of Burgognie was raised vp againe vnto them. Insomuch that in his onelie highnesse, they firmelie beleued themselues to haue recouered whatsoeuer good renowme the duks of Brabant, Anion and Burgognie could haue left vnto them. Wherefore, insomuch as there remained no more, but to proceed in the performance of the chiefe worke, which it had pleased the souereigne God to put into the hands of his highnesse, and of the said states to performe that daie: they on their part were readie and resolute to doo him the homage, fealtie, dutie, and obedience, which loiall subiects and good vassals ought to doo to their rightfull princes: of which sort they trusted in God without doubting, that his highnesse was, & that he would promise by solemne oth vnto God so to continue.

The secretarie vnto the states falleth to the point of the matter.

The king of Spaines officers full of tyrannicall lordlines and villanie.

The cause why the states of Brabant made the monsieur their prince & lord.

The states loialtie and fealtie signified by their secretarie.

Hereunto his highnesse answered in effect, that intending not to hold the states with long talke, but onelie to be mindfull of the honor and good will which they had vouchsafed to yeeld to him, in that among so manie other great princes, they had chosen him out to deliuer them from the oppression and tyrannie of the Spaniards, and to rule them according to their customes, lawes, and priuileges: he thanked them hartilie for it, assuring them that the iustnesse and equitie of their case, their honourable dealings in his behalfe, and the loue which they had shewed him, had made him to resolue with himselfe to take vpon him their protection, and the reestablishing of their ancient libertie, and to hazard therein whatsoeuer abilitie God had put into his hands, and whatsoeuer else it should please the king his lord and brother, and the queene of England, of their fauour to bestow vpon him; yea euen to the shedding of his owne bloud and the spending of his life.

The monsieur answer to the foresaid oration.

The monsieurs promise euen to the shedding of his bloud.

This done the foresaid monsieur Hessels told his highnesse, how it was the custome there, to proclame openlie before the people in the Dutch tong the points and articles of the ioifull entrance, which the dukes of Brabant are bound to promise and sweare at their admission. Hereupon, when as one held the said articles translated into French, readie to rehearse them point by point after the proclaming of them in Dutch, forsomuch as the date was farre spent, and communication had beene had thereof alreadie, the monsieur to win time thought it expedient, by the aduise of the prince of Orange, that they should be read but onlie in Dutch. Which thing was done by the said monsieur Hessels, with a new preface added to the articles, conteining briefle the reasons and causes of that dealing. After the reading of the said articles, it was demanded of his highnes whether he liked of them, and whether he were contented to be sworne to them, or whether it were his pleasure to be further satisfied of them: Whereupon he said to the prince of Orange, that forsomuch as he had seene the articles, and conferred of them with him as they came by ship out of Zeland, he held himselfe well satisfied with them, and was well contented to sweare vnto them. Which speech of his was forthwith proclamed, and with further declaration, that for their better contentation his highnesse was

The monsieur is content to sweare to the articles agreed vpon.

desirous

desirous to haue them all knowne, that although the said articles were read but onelie in Dutch, yet would he of his owne good mind, with aduised deliberation and certeine knowledge be sworne vnto them.

Then did the said monsieur Hessels recite vnto the people in the Dutch tong, the first oth which the dukes of Brabant were of old time accustomed and bound to take for the obseruing of the said articles. Which done, deliuering the booke wherein it was contemed to maister Thierrete de Leisfield chancellor of Brabant, he read the same oth againe openlie in French, & the monsieur spake it after him word for word. Then the monsieur Hessels taking the booke againe, told the people that the dukes of Brabant made an other second oth to the barons, noblemen, cities, boroughs, & all the inhabitants & subiects of the countrie, to be to them a good & iust prince, and not to deale with them after his owne will, nor by waie of rigor, but by law and iustice, & according to their priuileges. Which oth was likewise rehearsed in the Dutch tong, & the booke deliuered againe to the said chancellor, and the monsieur repeated the oth after him as he had done the first. Then were the mantle and bonnet of the dutchie brought vnto him, which were crimosin velvet; the mantle was trailed on the ground, and both of them were furred with powdered ermine turned vp verie brode. The prince of Orange told his highnesse, that it behoued him to be apparelled in those robes. And when he asked whether he must weare them into the citie? It was answered, yea: and that it was the solemne attire of the princes and dukes of Brabant of old time. Wherevnto when his highnesse had agreed, the prince did first put vpon him the said mantle, and fastening the button thereof, said these words; My lord, you must keepe this button fast closed, that no man may pull your mantle from you. And then he set the bonnet vpon his head, and said vnto him: Sir I praie God you may well keepe this attire, for now you may well assure your selfe that you be duke of Brabant.

Then the said Hessels told him how the custome required that the states should presentlie be sworne to him againe to yeld him fealtie. Wherevpon he vttered to the people the forme of the oth; and then the said chancellor required it of the barons, noblemen, and deputies, and they pronounced it after him according to the maner of the former othes, reuerentlie doing againe their homage, and promising fealtie and obedience. After the taking of the othes on both sides, as well by the monsieur as by the states of Brabant, while his highnesse was yet still in his robes of estate, the magistrates of Antwerpe commanded their recorder and councellor maister Vanderwerke to come vp vpon the stage, to make him an offer of the marquesship of the sacred empire, in the name of the citie of Antwerpe, which thing he did as followeth. Most gratious lord and prince, the markegraue, amptman, borroughmasters, and skepons, the treasurors, and receiuers, the chiefe burgesses, and quartermaisters, the wardens, and ancients of the handicrafts, togither with the corsenels, wardens of guilds, and capteins of the citie, were verie glad when they vnderstood of your highnesse happie arriuall in the Ile of Walkeren, as they haue caused to be verie largelie and with all humilitie and reuerence shewed vnto you, by their deputies sent to your highnesse for the same purpose. But now, forsomuch as they see your highnesse not onelie arriued in the countrie of Brabant, but also receiued for duke, and for their prince and lord: their fore-conceiued ioie is greatlie increased and made fullie perfect, trusting that by this your comming there will once insue an end of the desolations, calamities, and miseries, whereinto the countrie hath beene brought by the vniust gouernement past, and by the more vniust and wrongfull warre which the enimies hold yet still to bring the whole countrie to destruction, with all maner of calamities and oppressions which they are able to deuise. And therfore they giue your highnesse most humble thanks for the paines & trauell which you haue vouchsafed to take to come into this countrie: yeelding infinitelie like thanks vnto God, for that he hath giuen & sent them such a prince, as not onelie is of abilitie and power, but also is verie willing, and well disposed to defend them from all enimies, & to rule and gouerne them with all good policie & iustice, according to the priuileges, lawes, and customs of the countrie. For although they be ioined in league with the rest of the states of Brabant, and generallie with all the states of the low countries, & that they haue all entred into armes iointlie togither; yet their so doing hath not beene to exempt and withdraw themselues from the iust gouernement of their lord and prince, but onlie to mainteine their ancient liberties, lawes, and priuileges, that being gouerned according to the same, they might liue with all dutifull obedience in good rest, peace, and tranquillitie. The full accomplishment of which their desires, they thinke themselues to haue most happilie obteined, sith it hath pleased God of his infinit grace & mercie to put into your highnesse heart, to take vpon you the souereignties of these low countries, the dukedome of Brabant, the citie of Antwerpe, and the marquesship of the sacred empire. For seeing that God hath stirred them vp so great a prince, the brother of a mightie king; they haue no doubt at all, but that your highnesse will (by Gods grace) soone find meanes to deliuer these countries from the wretched warres wherein they haue beene so long plunged.

The markegraue, amptman, borroughmaisters, skepons, and other members of this citie, thinke it not expedient to repeat the causes of the warre, and the equitie of the case whereon they stand; forsomuch as it hath diuerse times heretofore beene discussed largelie enough by the generall estates: and moreouer beene notablie knowne to the world, and manie waies allowed by your highnesse. Yet againe therfore with all humble submission and reuerence, they thanke your highnesse, that it hath pleased you to agree vnto them, and to promise the maintenance of their priuileges, lawes, and customs: yea and of the articles comprised in the principall composition, and in the ioifull entrance into the dutchie of Brabant, assuring your highnesse, that the people of the citie of Antwerpe, and of the marquesship of the holie empire shall be, and continue right humble subiects to you, euen to the spending of their bodies & goods, and whatsoeuer else they be able to make for the increasing of your honour and glorie. Herevnto his highnesse answered verie gratiouslie, that he thanked those noblemen for their good will and affection towards him; and that he meant to shew them by his doings how desirous he was to gouerne and rule the countrie with good policie and iustice. And all this he did at large and with verie great grace. This done, the said Vanderwerke turning himselfe to the people cried with a lowd voice, that his highnesse, as duke of Brabant, Alanson, Anjou, Berrete, &c: would be sworne to the citie of Antwerpe, and the marquesship of the sacred empire, desiring them to praie vnto God, that by that so good and solemne deed Gods name might be sanctified, the safetie and prosperitie of the countrie procured, and the honour and glorie of the said duke increased.

Then was the oth, which his highnesse should take,

Two oths that the dukes of Brabant were accustomed to take.

The mantle and bonnet of the dutchie of Brabant.

The monsieur created duke of Brabant.

The states promise their fealtie and obedience.

An offer of the marquesship of the sacred empire made to the monsieur.

The magistrates of Antwerps thankfulnesse to the monsieur signified.

The souereignties of what places the monsieur had vndertaken.

Antwerpe and the marquesship promiseth humble subiection.

The oth that the monsieur should take openlie read to the people.

read openlie to the people in the Flemmish tong by the same Vander wercke. Which being done, monsieur the amptman read the same oth to his highnesse in French, and his highnesse made and performed the same in his hands, which the borroughmaster of the towne of Antwerpe held vp, bicause the receiuing of the oth at his hand belonged vnto him. Also the said borroughmaster, whose name was sir Philip of Schonehouen, knéeling downe before the dukes highnesse, at the same time gaue him a gilt keie in token of subiection, and that he might dispose of the citie as of his owne: which keie was deliuered againe by his highnes to the borroughmaster, to whome he said verie gratiouslie, that he assured himselfe, that the said borroughmaster and all the burgesses and inhabitants of the citie, would kéepe the citie faithfullie for him, as they had done vntill that instant.

After the finishing and accomplishment of all the said solemnities, the heralds of Brabant and Lotricke (or in the vulgar Brabant, Wallon, Lothier, that is to saie Lotharing, or the true Lorraine) cried with a lowd voice, God saue the duke of Brabant. And then sounding the trumpets, they made a largesse, casting a great sort of péeces of gold and siluer among the standers by. These péeces were of two sorts: the one sort had on the one side the image of the monsieur then duke of Brabant: the other sort had on the one side the armes of Anion & Brabant, and about the verges was written; Francis of France duke of Brabant. On the other side of them all was a deuise of the sunne, with the monsieurs owne inscription, Cheriseth and Chaseth, which is the monsieurs ordinarie posie. Without the towne were three regiments of the citizens, to the number of a three thousand men in order of battell, who made a goodlie shew with their faire armours and their ensignes displaied. And they neuer went out of their place vntill all the ceremonies were dispatched, and that his highnesse was gone into the citie. Besides these, there was an infinit number of people in the citie, whereof manie were strangers, who maruelled greatlie at these sights, and especiallie the Frenchmen, who wondered to see their master in that apparell, and spake diuerslie of it, as is wont to be done in matters that are new and erst vnséene. But when they vnderstood how it was the dukelie apparell, and that he wore it as a representation of antiquitie, the like whereof is worne yet still by the electors of the sacred empire in their great ceremonies; they were astonished, and thought him to be a prince of more statelie countenance and maiestie than afore: in so much that it was said alowd among them, that séeing it was the mantell of the duchie, it should cost the liues of fiftie thousand Frenchmen, before it should be plucked from him againe.

Largesse cast among the standers by.

The monsieurs posie.

A shew of mẽ in armour.

The Frenchmen maruell at the monsieurs strange habiliments, &c.

As soone as the ceremonies were ended, his highnesse came downe from the theater, and mounted vpon a white courser of Naples, couered with a coperison of veluet richlie imbrodered with gold. And so he began to take his waie towards the right renowmed and rich citie of Antwerpe, and was conueied along by the counterscarfe, vnto the sumptuous and statelie gate, called Keisers gate or S. Georges gate, whereat he entered into the good citie of Antwerpe in this sort. First marched the two sergeants maiors or marshals of the citie, accompanied of two pursenants with the armes of the citie, after whome followed the trumpets with the armes of Brabant. The first companie was of Almane merchants commonlie called Easterlings, well mounted and well apparelled after the maner of Almane. Next them followed the English merchants in excellent good order, all apparelled in cassockes of blacke veluet all of one fashion. Then came the coronels and capteins of the citie: after whome followed a great number of gentlemen, as well of the same countrie as of other nations. Behind them went the bodie of the citie, that is to wit, the wickemasters, the wardens, the ancient magistrate, the masters of the wardes, the borroughmasters, deputies, and wardens of the halles, the vshers, the secretaries, the registers, the receiuers and treasurers, the schepons, the amptman, & the two borroughmasters, all apparelled in clokes of blacke veluet, and all of one fashion. After them came the trumpets of the states of Brabant, Lembourgh, and Lothier, & after them the states themselues in this order. First went the deputies of the vnder cities. The deputies of the citie of Antwerpe. The deputies of Brussels. Then succéeded the noblemen of Brabant, as the chancellor of Brabant, and aboue him Lamorall Egmond brother to the countie of Egmond, baron of Gasebecke. A great number of lords of the same countrie, of France, and of England well horsed and richlie apparelled. The Swissers with their drums and fiffes. The monsieurs owne household, among whome were intermingled certeine lords of England. Next this came the countie de Lauall, hauing on either hand an English lord. The prince of Espinoie, hauing on his right hand the lord of Hunsdon, & on his left the lord Howard: the prince Dolphin, hauing on his right hand the earle of Leicester, & on his left the prince of Orange: the markegraue of Antwerpe bareheaded, bearing the mace of iustice; the lord Peterson baron of Merode, taking vpon him that daie as marshall of Brabant, and bearing the naked sword before the dukes highnesse: then came the duke himselfe, mounted and apparelled as you haue heard afore. Next behind the duke followed countie Morice of Nassau sonne to the prince of Orange, hauing on his right hand countie Philip of Nassau nephue to the said prince, and sonne to countie John of Nassau, and on his left hand the lord Shefield. His highnes was garded by the companies of the guilds, that is to saie, by the ancient brotherhods of the archers, crossebowes, and harquebussers in so goodlie armour, as fairer could not be found: these went afore him and about him on a cluster without order, like flowre deluces vpon a rotall robe.

Lords of England and France well horsed.

The earle of Leicester on the right hand of prince Dolphin.

The companies of the guilds.

The order of the monsieurs entering into Antwerpe.

After them followed the gard of Frenchmen on a like heape, and after them the prince of Oranges gard on foot. Then lastlie in verie good order came the twentie ensignes of citizens, which had stood in order of battell without the towne. Ouer the gate where his highnes entered, there was a compartement of Doricke worke, wherein was written this title. To Francis the sonne of Henrie the second, and onelie brother of Henrie the third king of France, called by Gods singular prouidence to the souereigne principalitie of the low countries, and to the dukedome of Brabant, and the marquesship of the sacred empire, which God grant to be most happie and luckie vnto him, as to their inuested prince whom they haue most earnestlie wished for, and who as now is happilie come into this his most seruiceable citie, his most hartie fauourers: The senate & people of Antwerpe.

An inscriptiõ congratulatorie to the mõsieur.

The chariot of the maiden of Antwerpe could not go out of the citie for want of rome to turne in: and therefore it tarried for his highnes at the gate within the citie. This chariot was called the chariot of alliance: wherein sat a damosell apparelled in satin red and white, which are the colours of Antwerpe: who had in hir left hand a branch of baietræ, & on hir head a garland of laurell, in token of victorie against the tyrannies of the king of Spaine, and in token of the deliuerance which the people hoped for by meanes of their new prince, through his gratious

The chariot of the maiden of Antwerpe described.

godnesse,

The keies of Antwerpe presented to the monsieur.

goodnesse, faithfulnesse, victorioulnesse, and defense: to whom with hir other hand shee presented the keies of the towne, according to the verses written ouer hir head, which shall be set downe hereafter. Before hir were the armes of the marquesship of the holie empire. On hir right hand was Religion apparelled like one of the Sybils, holding in hir one hand an open booke, named the Law and the Gospell: and in hir other hand a sword, named Gods word: and on hir left hand was Justice holding a balance and a sword in hir hand, and ouer the balance was written, Pea and Nai.

Deuises.

Before the damosell sate Concord, clothed in white, yellow, and orange tawnie, bearing a target vpon hir arme, wherein was painted a crowned scepter, with two little snakes, and vnder them, two doues, all closed in with a garland of olive, betokening commendable gouernement with prouidence. Upon hir head shee had a helmet, betokening Wisedome. In hir hand shee carried a lance, with a penon vpon it, on the one side whereof were the armes of Anton crowned with olive, and on the other side a lambe with a woolfe, and a lion with anor, to betoken the great peacefulnesse that is looked for vnder this prince, as well in religion as in matters of state. At Concordes right hand sat Wisedome, and at hir left hand Force. In the middest of the chariot was a piller richlie made of Corinthian worke, vpon the top whereof was a hart held betweene two armed hands, which hart had two wings, betokening Union, Faith, and Force: and a sword with two serpents writhing about it, and holding their tailes to their eares, signifieng Discreet gouernement, and eares stopped against flatterers. At the fot of the piller was a compartement with the armes of Anton and Brabant. On the brest of the lion of Brabant, were the armes of the marquesship of the sacred empire, and of the citie of Antwerpe. Upon the armes was written Attonement. Upon the corners of the chariot were two armed images with morians on their heads, attired in orange white and blew. The one of them was named Faithfulnes, and the other Watchfulnes. In their hands they had each of them a shield, wherein were painted two swords across, and two doues with a sheafe of arrowes, betokening Union. Upon one of the shields was written, Defense: and vpon the other, Offense; each of the images had a penon of azure silke: in one of the which there was a pellican killing hirselfe for hir yong birds: and in the other a hen a brooding hir chickens. Ouer the maidens head were these verses set:

wisedome.

Emblems of peace & tranquillitie.

Discreet gouernement.

Attonement.

Faithfulnes. Watchfulnes.

Union.

Defense. Offense.

My rulers outrage, wickednesse,
and furious tyrannie,
Haue cast me backe these keies, which I had giuen obedientlie, Vpon conditions neuer kept,
o prince of noble fame,
With better hand of lucke and lot,
receiue thou now the same.
Thy godlines and prowesse haue of right deserued it.
O treble happie prince to whom these countries doo submit Their state! o happie Belgike, o
most happie like to bee,
Whilst vnderneath so great a prince, maist now liue safe and free.

Sir gentlemen of the citie waited at the gate with a canopie of cloth of gold frized; which they afterward vnfolded & carried it ouer the dukes head, who went vnder it into the towne in the forementioned order. All the streets from the gate to his lodging were set on either side with armed men vnder their ensignes with their fifes & drums. The officers carried gilt targets and swords in their hands: and all the rest were armed after the best and gaudiest maner that could be seene. His highnesse proceeded forth on to the corner of the street called Gasthouse street, that is to sale, the Spittlehouse street, neere vnto saint Georges church, where was a shew made in the likenesse of a table, verie great and high, which was made by one of the companies of their tragicall and comicall poets, commonlie called amongst them rhetoricians. The companie was called Care, or as some others terme it, the Followsun, after the name of a floute which followeth the sun, & the speech of the deuise was, Growing vp in vertue. The shew or table had three compartements or partitions. The first was the first booke of Samuell the fifteenth chapter, where Samuell chargeth Saule with his disobedience, & hath a peece of his garment rent off by him, in token that the kingdome should be plucked from Saules house & giuen to a better. Whereby was meant, that the soueraintie of those low countries was taken from the king of Spaine for his abhominable periuries, tyrannies, & extortions. In the second compartement was set forth, how Samuell commanded Jshate the father of Dauid to bring forth his sonnes: of whome God would make one the prince of his people, that is to wit, the yongest, which was Dauid. In the third was shewed how Dauid being annointed fought with Goliah, and ouercame him. The title or superscription was a Phrygian worke, wherein were written these verses:

A canopie carried ouer the monsieurs head.

A shew in the likenesse of a table verie great and high, &c.

The signification of the shewes concerning the K. of Spaine and the monsieur.

As God bereauing Saule of crowne and mace,
Did dispossesse him of his kingdome quight,
And after set vp Dauid in his place:
So now likewise dispatching from our sight,
The tyrans which oppressed vs by might,
He giueth thee (o noble duke) the reine
Of these our countries, ouer vs to reine.

The front and crest being garnished with battels, scutchions of armes, crestets and torches, carried the dukes deuise, Cherisheth and Chaseth. And at the fot of the table late Discord closed vp in a prison of lattis worke, where she was tormented with helhounds and serpents; and there were these verses following:

Alanson whom God Cherish aie,
Doth Chase all ire and wrath awaie.

His highnesse passing forth still beyond the place called the Chæwatelæt, came to the street named Hwiuetterstræt, that is to say, the chandlers street, where was an other statelie pageant with armes, torches, and crestets, made by an other companie of the rhetoricians, called pai ters or violers, who had for their deuise, Knit togither by singlenesse. In this pageant was painted the nere aliance of Dauid and Jonathas: to betoken the firmenesse of the oth mutuallie made by his highnes & the states of Brabant; and the magistrats, members, colonels, and capteins of the citie of Antwerpe. In this table was written in a compartement of Phrygian worke:

A statelie pageant impertinent to the present purpose.

Like as the faithfull Jonathas did promise to defend,
Good Dauid from the harmes which Saule against him did intend:
So keepe thou vs (o gratious prince) which loue to liue in rest, Against the tyrans by whose force we haue beene sore oppresst.

Then went he further to the end of the street, where the vpholsters shops are, which part was full of burning torches & barrels of burning pitch, and so came to the Mærebridge. At the entering thereof stood an oliphant bearing a castell of stone with souldiers and artillerie. Before the oliphant were painted the armes of the marquesdome and of the citie, and behind, a speare with a banner of taffetie, with the armes of Anjou in a wreath of laurell, and foure other bannerets of crimsin tafeta, pulled out, wherin were painted the hands of Antwerpe, with this poesie: Cherisheth and Chaseth. And vpon his side of his bellie were these verses manifestlie written:

An oliphant bearing a castell of stone with soldiers and artillerie.

Whome light of Phebee heretofore did lead,
I now am drawne awaie,
Her brothers beames to follow in hir stead,
A farre more certeine staie.
I thinke my change right gainefull, sith I see,
These lower countries vnder him to bee.

From the Perebridge he went along the Pere-street, vntill he came to the ward, where were foure companies ranged in order of battell. From thense he passed to the corner of Clare street, where was a stage made by a companie of rhetoricians called the Olife branch, who had for their posie, Behold grace. Upon this stage sat a damsell named Antwerpe, bearing in hir bosome a pretie daughter called the Knowledge of God: who held a coffer wherin were priuileges, lawes, franchises and truth: which were kept by the Grace of God, and by Prouidence, Wisdome, Faithfulnesse, Diligence, Loialtie, Perseuerance, Unitie, Good heed, and Order. And aloft was a compartement of Phrygian worke (verie artificiallie handled) wherein were these verses:

O prince, our father, hope of helpe and staie:
Dame grace, Gods impe, whom here thou seest to stand,
From top to toe faire clad in white araie,
With branch of olife in hir heauenlie hand:
Hath willed thee to harbor here within
The statelie walles of ladie Antwerpe, and
The loue of hir with endlesse fame to win,
By curing of hir griefes with law and right,
And eeke by putting of hir foes to flight.

Somewhat lower towards the midst, was Neptune with his threetimed mace, riding ouer wawes vpon a dolphin, & on his left hand were these verses:

Gods heauenlie grace, and soothfull skill, reuiuing Antwerpe new,
Through chare defense of faithfull league
haue kept hir safe, as dew
To thee hir duke innobled both by father and by brother,
Both kings of France, tone gone to God long since, still reigning tother.
And therefore bend thou now thy wits,
by rightfull force to wreake
Hir cruell foes, which did so oft their leagues through falshood breake.

He passed from Clare street thorough long New street to saint Katharins bridge, right ouer against Crosse street, where was a triumphall arch cunninglie painted and builded of white stone, which was garnished with his highnesses armes, and with torches and cressets, and with musike of hoboies and clarions. And on the top of it was written: To the happie comming hither of Francis, onelie brother to Henrie the third, sonne to Henrie the second, grandchild to Francis the first, now inuested duke of Brabant, the prince that hath most deerelie deserued of this their countrie, as a father of the same: The senat and people of Antwerpe. Underneath this in an other compartement of Phrygian worke, was written this: At length yet hinder not this impe to bring the weeping world againe vnto some rediesse. In passing thorough the short New street, & by the market stead, he turned toward the Coopers street in the street called Cheeselane to the great market place, which was full of torches of wax, and of barels of pitch vpon long poles vp to the highest windowes, which commonlie are fiue stories high. In this market place were imbattelled six ensignes, with the ensigne of the youth which was vnder a græne standard, all in the best armor that was to be seene in anie place of the world. In the middest of the citizens was the great giant the founder of the citie of Antwerpe, whose curace was azure, and his apparell tawnie white and graie. He bore banners of azure with the armes of Anjou, & had these giantlike speeches conteined in these verses, written before him:

Six ensignes with the ensigne of the youth vnder a græne standard.

Feerce furie, moodie rage, vnbridled ire,
Stout force, hot violence, cruell tyrannie,
Nought booted me, ne furthered my desire:
In keeping of my wished souereignetie.
The surest waie for kings to gouerne by,
Is mildnesse matched with a prudent mind,
To vice seuere, to vertue meeke and kind.
For oft the calme and quiet gouernance,
Brings things to passe which violence could not win:
Feerenesse that cais will nought at all aduance,
By mildnesse shalt thou better hold folke in:
Outragious storming is not worth a pin,
By mine example therefore haue a care,
All cruell dealings vtterlie to spare.

Behind the giant were written these verses:

See you this orped giant here,
so huge of limme and bone?
Fame saies that Antwerpe was sometime a thrall to such a one.

A damsell representing Antwerpe holding a coffer of priuileges, &c.

This giant was made by cunning to turne his face towards the duke as he passed by, and to let fall the armes of Spaine which he held in his hand, & to put vp the armes of Anjou. Also there was a stage in the same market place before the towne house, full of nymphs & vertues. But forsomuch as it serued chieflie for the daie of his taking of his oth in the citie of Antwerpe, which was the 22 daie of that moneth: it shall be spoken of more at large hereafter. His highnes departing out of the market place, toke his waie towards the street called the High street, and when he came to the street called the old Cornemarket, there was a whale carieng Neptune naked with his threforked mace in his hand, which betokened the great commodities which the citie of Antwerpe receiued by the sea and by the riuer Schelt. Before this monster was an other naked man, and by him two other portraitures, the one of nauigation, and the other of merchandize, with a booke of accounts, and a purse, such as the factors do carie with them when they go to receiue monie. Before this Neptune, in a compartement, were written these verses following:

A cunning deuise of a giant turning his head.

A whale carrieng Neptune & what it betokened.

The lordship of the seas to thee
the destinies behight:
In signe whereof I Neptune yeeld
this mace as thine of right.
That Antwerpe hauing rid all lets by thee on sea and land,
Maie once inioie hir wished fruit, and safe from perill stand.

His highnesse kept on his waie thorough the High street, to a place where sometime was the gate called S. Johns gate, which was beaten downe the yeare before: in steed whereof there was a triumphall arch of Ionian worke. This arch was wholie applied vnto his highnesse owne posie Cherisheth and Chaseth. On high ouer it was strained a couering after the maner of a round vaut, wherein was painted the sun: & vnder the sun was painted the sea with ships, and the earth clad with hir verdure. Also there appeared a cloud on both sides, so as the light of the sun did shine forth and yeeld out his force to the earth. On the outside of the bowing of the arch were painted three goddesses: namelie Flora, who held hir floures in hir hand: Ceres, who had hir corne: and Pomona, who held a horne stored with abundance of all things. Likewise the earth was clad with græne trees, fruits, and fields, replenished with all fruitfulnesse: which thing came to passe by the heat and operation of the sun, which was betokened by this word Cherisheth. On the other side being the left hand, hand, were drierie and barren fields, the aire euerie where lowring and cloudie, and the trees and plants withered: which thing was done by the three helhounds, Discord, Violence, & Tyrannie, who fled awaie at the sight of his highnes, according to the signification of his other word, Chaseth. On an other side stood the same posie againe, Cherisheth and Chaseth, by an other meane.

An arch wholie applied to the monsieurs owne posie.

Cherisheth.

A triumphall arch diuerslie garnished.

Chaseth.

At the right hand ouer the word Cherisheth was a great field well tilled, with a husbandmans house vpon it. The husbandman himselfe being apparelled after the French fashion was sowing of corne, and an other by him was spreading of mucke. At the left hand was written the word Chaseth, on which side also was painted a French capteine in armor following his alies, confederats, and souldiors: to do men to vnderstand, that by the treaties, leagues, and agreements made with the dukes highnesse, all tyrannie, violence, and discord should be chased awaie; and that by the beames of that sun, the countrie should receiue all peace, prosperitie, and abundance. Upon the forefront were these verses painted:

The monsieurs posie interpreted in a shew.

Like as the rising of the sun doth chase the night awaie,
And with his kindlie heat
the ground well cherish aie:
Euen so thy comming (noble prince) doth chase all tempests quite,
And folke with cheerefull hope of freedome much delite.

This arch was impossed aloft with scutchions of the armes of Anjou, compassed about with branches of olive, all vpon azure. Also there were diuerse other scutchions, whose field was gules bordered with argent, and a great number of burning torches. And the said arch was furnished with diuerse instruments of musicke, and the musicians themselues were clad in the colours of the citie. His highnesse passing vnder this triumphall arch, came to a place called the Dwure, that is to sate, the banke, where were two companies imbattelled, armed like all the residue. And so passing by the ward there, he went to the place that is right ouer against the mint: before the which there was a huge and monstrous seahorsse of twentie foot high, vpon whom sat a nymph called Concord, bearing a shield wherein was painted a booke and a rod, which was named, the Rule of truth. In hir hand she bare a flag, wherein was written, Faithfull aliance. This monster of the sea was named Tyrannie, and he had a bridle in his mouth with double reines of iron chained called Law and Reason. Whereby the dukes highnesse was done to vnderstand, that he as a true Perseus was to deliuer that countrie from all tyrannie, and afterward to gouerne it by iustice and reason. Ouer against the mint gate, where the street is narrowest, were two obeliskes or round spires, and betweene them a triumphall arch with his pillers of Corinthian worke, gilded and inriched with his relæse vnder him. Upon the forestront were his highnesses arms, and likewise on the sides were other armes, with banners, torches, and cressets. Under the armes of his highnesse were written these verses following:

The ornaments of the arch aloft.

A monstrous sea horsse of twentie foot high, & what it signified.

Full mightie is that common weale,
and in a happie case,
And blest with all commodities through Gods most heauenlie grace,
Where prince behaues himselfe as head, and commons him obeie
As members, either carefullie regarding others staie.

From this triumphall arch vnto the palace, that is to wit, all along saint Michaels street, which is a mile in length, stood on either side three score and ten pillers, with a space of two and twentie foot betweene piller and piller. Euerie piller was twelue foot high, and vpon the pillers was a continuall tarras, & on euerie ech other piller was a cresset: and on the pillers betweene were the armes of Brabant, Anjou, and Antwerpe, diuided according to the spaces betweene the said pillers. And the pillers were cressed about with garlands of iuie. On the side of the street towards the palace was a pageant with banners, torches, and pyramides; vpon the vppermost part of one of the sides whereof was a crane, and vpon the other side a cocke: giuing knowledge as well to the heads as to the members, that watchfulnesse is needfull. A little spaniell betokening faithfulnesse, & a little lambe betokening peace, were painted accompanied with the Sybils; which represented wisedome, loue, faithfulnesse, obedience, vertue and honor, without the which no true peace can continue. And all these were guided by the light of the holie ghost, which was resembled by a certeine brightnesse that discouered the chiefe instruments of discord, namelie Enuie and Slander, who pered out behind, Enuie gnawing hir owne heart, and Slander hauing double heart, double tong, and double face, howbeit with small effect. For on the two sides of this pageant were two counterfets, on the one side Hercules, & on the other Dauid, as it were in coper, hauing gotten the vpper hand of Goliah, betokening strength and slowtnesse: and vnderneath was Concord, who held Discord in a chaine with collars about his necke: which Discord offering with his one hand an apple of gold, and with his other hand threatning men with his force and tyrannie, was yet nerthelesse driuen into the dungeon of sorrow, where he is kept prisoner by Concord, who keepeth the doore fast shut: betokening the same thing which the countrie looketh for at his highnesse hand according to his posie Cherisheth and Chaseth. Upon the forestront of the compartement made of Phrygian worke were these verses following painted out in most liuelie forme:

Three score and ten pillers, with a space of two and twentie foot betweene each.

Proper emblems and their meanings.

Enuie and Slander.

Concord holding Discord in a chaine, &c.

O let the earth the kissings sweet of peace and iustice see,
And let hir powre hir riches foorth in all mens bosoms free:
Let godlines and faithfulnes go matched arme in arme,
And let the bond of endles loue keepe all things knit from harme.

Before the duke came at saint Michaels, where the palace was prepared for his highnesse, the daie was so farre spent, that they were faine to light vp their cressets & torches, which cast so great and cleere a light through the whole towne, that the dukes highnesse, and the princes and lords which accompanied him, and likewise the souldiors with their glistering armors, were seene more clearelie than at anie time of the daie. And as the multitude of people was verie great in the citie, so the nerer that his highnesse drew to his palace, the greater still did the number grow. So at length the duke of Brabant and Anjou entred into his palace in the order afore mentioned, hauing moreouer a two or three hundred as well of offendors as of banished folke which followed him bareheaded and fettered, crauing mercie. The heralds did cast peces of gold and siluer abrode, as they had done at the metings of all the streets as they passed through them. At the entrie of the palace was an arch of twentie foot high, resting vpon three pillers of Phrygian worke; and vpon the top thereof was a compartement wherein were the three graces, that is to wit, Uertue, Glorie, and Honor, who offered vnto his highnesse an olife branch, in token of peace, a laurell bough in token of victorie, and a crowne which was sent him from heauen. And Light with torches and cressets as cleere as the noone daie.

Three graces Uertue, Glorie, and Honor in a compartement.

vnder the compartement were written these verses:

O prince whose merits passe his praise, whose vertues haue no peeres,
Whose mind surmounts his fortune far,
whose thews exceed his yeeres:
Take gentlie heere this oliue branch, this laurell bough and crowne,
Three presents giuen thee by three nymphs, and sent from heauen downe.

¶ The oth made by Francis duke of Brabant to the members of the right renowmed citie of Antwerpe, and the oth made by them againe vnto his highnesse.

Twentie or thirtie thousand harquebusses shot off.

The duke of Brabant being come into his palace, caused a peale of a twentie or thirtie thousand harquebusses to be shot off, and then all the companies (sauing those which were to watch that night) began to withdraw themselues apase. Which thing was done in such order and with such silence, that in lesse than halfe an houre all the citie was disarmed; after which maner they had also armed themselues in lesse than an houre without anie noise in the morning. The princes also and the lords withdrew themselues to their lodgings, and then was all the great ordinance of the towne shot off twise, as it had bene at the dukes first comming to the citie, that all the towne seemed to be on fire. Cressets were lighted and fires made for ioie through all the streets and meetings, waies, and vpon the steeples, in so great number and so continuallie, that all the night resembled the daie: in so much that when they that were without the towne loked vp into the skie, they thought the element was all on fire. These bonefires continued euerie night vntill the nert thursdaie; on which daie his highnesse toke his peculiar oth to the towne of Antwerpe, in doing whereof these solemnities insuing were obserued. The amptman, boroughmaisters, and skepens of Antwerpe came to the said palace of S. Michaell the next thursdaie being the two and twentith daie of the same moneth: at which place they made humble suite vnto his highnesse, that as he had vouchsafed to giue his oth to the states of Brabant and the marquesdome of the sacred empire, and likewise to receiue theirs; so it might please him to giue his oth that daie peculiarlie to the citie of Antwerpe, and likewise to take theirs at the place of old time accustomed. Wherevnto when the duke had assented, they toke their waie in the same order that had bene obserued at his entring into the towne; sauing that the lord Edward de Clastro ambassador for Don Antonio king of Portugall, was that daie in the latter companie of the princes and lords. And so they marched along the said street of saint Michaell to the great market-sted, where the sumptuous common house of the citie is. And because that on the daie of his entrance in, it was not possible for him to take a perfect view of all the shews, by reason that the night ouertoke them, they were presented vnto his highnes againe, as well in the place before the mint, as in other places. Also there were two pageants more prepared, which were deuised both in one daie; the one was mount Parnassus wheron sat Apollo apparelled like the sun, and accompanied with the nine muses playing vpon diuerse kinds of instruments, and with sweet voice singing a certeine ditie togither written in commendation of his highnesse. This pageant was in the street called the High street, ouer against the street named Reiner street. Right ouer against this pageant was an other on the side of the street called the Flar market, which was a mossie rocke ouergrowen with drie and withered trees, wherin appeared a caue verie hideous, darke, and drierie to behold, & in the same lale lurking the three helhounds, Discord, Violence, and Tyrannie: who feeling Apollos beames, and hearing the sweetnesse and harmonie of the voices and instruments, shronke awaie and hid themselues in the deepest of the dungeon, and afterward peered out againe to harken whether that melodie and harmonie continued still or no, minding to haue come forth againe, and to haue troubled the common wealth, if the same had ceassed.

The night resembled the daie.

Solemnities vsed while the monsieur was taking his peculiar oth to Antwerpe.

Two pageants, one of mount Parnassus, and the other a mossie rocke.

His highnesse passed on, and with verie much adoe came to the great market place, by reason of the infinit multitude of people, which could not be put asunder without great paine. As soone as he was alighted from his horsse, he went vpa scaffold which had bene set vp for the same purpose, in the middest of the market place hard by the towne house; before whome went the magistrate of the citie, and a great number of princes, lords, and gentlemen. This scaffold being great and large of the heigth of fortie foot, was hanged with scarlet. Upon it was a cloth of estate, the backe whereof was cloth of gold frized, vnder the which was a chaire of the same. The daie of his first comming thither, there had bene presented vnto him on the right side, Wisedome offering him a golden scepter: on his left side, Justice offering him the sword of iustice from aboue the chaire: and behind him Clemencie offering him the cap of the dukedome. Before the chaire as it were at the foot of it, were Obedience, Faithfulnes, Loue of God, & Reuerence. And by the chaire sides there were with them, Concord, Sagenesse, Valiantnes, Good will, Truth, Pitifulnesse, Perseuerance, and Reason, of whome two on either side held ech of them a torch of virgin war, & they were all apareled like nymphes. But on this daie when his highnesse went vp to this stage, the nymphes were awaie: and in sted of them, the chaire was garnished on both sides with pillers. On the right side betweene the pillers was a lion holding a naked sword, to betoken the authoritie of the magistrate. Aboue the lion was an egle feeding hir yong, and turning hir selfe towards the shining of the sunne, as taking hir force of the prince. On the left side was an ox with a yoke on his necke, and aboue him a hen brooding hir chickens, and by hir a cocke. The ox with his yoke signified obedience: and the cocke and the hen betokened the watchfulnesse, care, and defense of the superior. The said scaffold was garnished with banners of azure beaten with the armes of Anion, and with banners of gewles beaten with the armes of Antwerpe, and with cressets and torches. And aboue among the armes were written these verses in verie faire & legible letters:

A scaffold hong with scarlet and richlie adorned.

A chaire of estate of cloth of gold frized.

Beautifull emblems about the chaire of estate, & what they signified.

At length thou art come,
and ioifull we bee,
Thy presence long lookt for here present to see.

1 Of triumphs, though statelie,
kings boast but in vaine,
Vnlesse they by iustice vprightlie doo raine.

2 Nought booteth law, authoritie, or sage forecast of wit, Vnlesse to lawfull gouernement folke doo their force submit.

3 God, God is he the harts of kings which holdeth in his hand,
He, He it is that highest things
dooth make to fall or stand.
When he with gratious looke beholds a people: they inioy
A goodlie ruler, vnder whom no troubles them annoy.

1 A little vnder, at the right hand vnder the armes of Brabant, were these verses.

2 On the left hand vnder the armes of Antwerpe was written thus.

3 This was written somwhat lower.

But if misliking make him frowne,
then makes he them a preie
To tyrants, vnder whom they tast of sorrow euerie daie.

From this scaffold he might behold before him an infinit number of people, readie to be sworne vnto him: and also three companies of banished and condemned men in fetters, and bareheaded, craving mercie at his hand, which was granted vnto them. Moreouer all the houses about the market stead had cressets burning on high before them. Now then, after that rome and silence was made, their councellor and recorder Vanderwerke propounded the matter as followeth. Right gratious lord and prince, the markegraue, the amptman, the borough masters, the skepons, the treasurors, the receiuers, the old deputies, the chiefe burgesses, the quartermasters, the wardens, the ancients of the handicrafts, the colonels, the wardens of the guilds, and the captaines of the citie, your highnesses most humble and obedient subiects, are exceeding glad to see that you, whome they haue alreadie receiued for duke of Brabant, and for their souereigne lord and prince, are readie to make your oth vnto this citie, and to receiue it at the hand of the magistrats, burgesses and citizens thereof, in respect of the citie it selfe, and of the marquesdome of the sacred empire: assuring themselues that your highnesse will be vnto them a good, righteous, and lawfull prince, to gouerne them according to their franchises, lawes, and customes: and promising mutuallie on their behalfe to your highnesse, to be good, loiall, and faithfull subiects vnto you, to spend all their goods, yea and their liues in your seruice, and in the maintenance of your dignities, rights and preheminences. And like as God hath put into your highnes mind, to take vpon you, first the protection and defense, and secondlie the whole souereingtie of the low countries and prouinces, which haue entered into league with you, vpon hope that the same God will of his gratious goodnesse and mercie so blesse and prosper your dealings and enterprises: as that they shall out of hand see the effect of that communication in the hiest degree, to the accomplishment of your roiall and heroicall desires, both in the generall, and also in the particular deliuerance of the countrie from the calamities and miseries of war: whereby they shall haue the better cause to acknowlege the great good turnes and benefits receiued at your highnesse hand, and to honor, loue, and serue you, as the verie protector of the land and father of their countrie.

Vanished and condemned men in fetters craving mercie pardoned.

When Vanderwerke had made an end, and the dukes highnesse had answered him conformablie to that which he had spoken without the towne, the said Vanderwerke told the people alowd, that the duke was readie to take and receiue his oth, at the hand of the magistrate, and of all the people and inhabiters of the citie of Antwerpe: and that God had vouchsafed to send them a prince of so rare and heroicall vertues, of so great puissance, and the onelie brother of so great a king; that they might well hope, that the same God would inable him to rid these countries within a while from the great number of calamities and miseries wherwith they were oppressed. And forsomuch as his highnesse had béene receiued with solemne deliberation of the states confederate, yea and with solemne resolution of all the members of that citie, and God had commanded men to loue, honour and obeie their princes: he exhorted the people to yéeld him all humble obedience according to Gods commandement. To which intent, the oth as well which his highnesse should make to the people, as which the people should make to his highnesse, should be read vnto them; praieng God to giue such grace vnto his highnes, as he following the same, might well rule and gouerne; and vnto the burgesses and citizens of Antwerpe, as they might performe their obedience, like good, loiall, and faithfull subiects: that Gods name might be sanctified, to the benefit, prosperitie, and safegard of the citie, and to the great increase of the dukes puissance, honour, and glorie. Then the same Vanderwerke read the oth which was to be made by the duke, with the stile of the duke of Brabant, and all his other titles. Which oth was read to his highnes in French, and receiued by sir Philip Schonehouen, lord of Waneroe, borroughmaster without the citie.

The monsieurs oth red in French.

Which being done, the said Vanderwerke read the oth which the magistrate and people were to make, which was repeated word for word by the magistrats and a great number of people which were within the hearing of it. And this oth was erected of the magistrate and people of Antwerpe by the amptman in the name and by the commandement of the duke.

The monsieur is readie to take his oth of the magistrate & people of Antwerpe.

Upon the finishing of these solemnities, the duke himselfe did cast two or three handfuls of gold and siluer among them, & then the heralds cried A larges, and the trumpets and drums were sounded euerie where, and manie instruments of muske were plaied vpon, as had béene done afore at his first arriuall. When he was come downe from the scaffold, he went to the townehouse with all the princes, lords, and gentlemen, which were verie manie: where he was receiued by the worshipfull of the citie, and dined openlie at a verie sumptuous and roiall feast prepared for him: and so that daie passed in great ioy, contentation and admiration, as well of his highnes & his companie, as of all the rest of the people. Towards night were shot off two peales of great ordinance againe, and the fires of ioy were continued much greater, and more in number than afore.

The monsieur casteth largesse of gold & siluer among the people.

Two peales of great ordinance with other signes of ioy.

Thus ended the ioifull and roiall interteinement of the right noble prince Francis, sonne and brother to the king of France, by the grace of God duke of Brabant. The rest of the worke and the daies following, the lords of the priuie councell, the officers of the aides, of the exchekers, of the chambers of the accounts, and of the other corporations, colleges, and communalties came to visit his highnes, and to offer him their humble seruice, promising all faithfulnes and obedience: all whome he receiued verie gratiouslie to their contentation, answering them so aduisedlie, with so good grace & fitnesse, without omitting anie point of that which he had purposed: that all men not onelie wondered at him, but also were inforced to honour and loue him, and to set forth his praises among the people. Finallie the deputies of the reformed churches of both the languages, being presented vnto him by the prince of Orange, were gentlie heard, and they spake to him as followeth.

What was done by the waie of courteous dutie when all the triumphs were ended.

Sir, we be sent vnto your highnes by the reformed churches of this citie, as well of the language of low Dutchland, as of the French, to shew vnto you with all humilitie, reuerence and subiection, that we haue thanked and still do thanke God with all our hart, for vouchsafing to bring your highnesse so happilie hither. And this our ioie is matched with the ioie of all other folks, as we hope your highnesse hath vnderstood by the glad and ioifull receiuing and interteining of you. Also sir we hope, that as the great honour and felicitie which these countries haue atteined vnto (wherein few countries are able to match them) haue béene purchased vnder the souereigntie and gouernement of the right renowmed princes, the dukes of Burgognie, which issued out of the most noble house of France: so vnder your guiding and gouernement being of the same house, the ancient renowme of the same dignitie shall be recouered

All promises kept on the monsieurs part, they could do no lesse.

Dukes of Burgognie issued out of the house of France.

God increasse wished to the mutuall othtakers.

uered by your prowesse, and mainteined by your wisdome. It is little more than three hundred yeeres ago, that these countries being governed by sundrie dukes, earles, and lords, had not attained the renowme which other nations have since that time so much wondered at. The first that began to give increase to it was Philip duke of Burgognie, surnamed the hardie, who was brother to king Charles the fift, the sonne of king John, and grand sonne of king Philip of Valois: of which kings your highnes is lineallie descended from the father to the sonne. For the first duke of Orleance, of whome your highnesse is lineallie descended from the father to the sonne, was the sonne of king Charles the fift; and as now there be no more heires males of the said duke of Orleance, but onelie your highnes and the king your brother. Whereby it falleth out, that the dukes of Burgognie are great uncles to your highnes by the fathers side. And therefore we doubt not but you will follow the footsteps of their vertues, in restoring the state of the countrie to hir ancient renowme and dignitie: and also mainteine and increase the honour whereunto it hath been advanced, by those noble princes your uncles.

Under whom the state hath been advanced.

Philip duke of Burgognie surnamed the hardie.

The second duke under whom this state hath been greatlie advanced, was John the second: neuertheless it came not to full perfection, untill the time of Philip the second. In which perfection it was mainteined by Charls the last duke of Burgognie so long as he lived. The said Philip the second, to whom the honour of stablishing that state most peculiarlie belongeth, was one of the most knightlie and valiant princes of his time. He wan the victorie in nine soughten fields, in most of the which he was put to the triall and hazard of his person, by fighting with his owne hands. He was a verie sage prince, and such a one as had to deale with the greatest princes in christendome: of whome some were his aduersaries, and yet he behaued himselfe so wiselie, that he atchiued all things to his honour whatsoeuer he toke in hand. Also he was verie rich: insomuch that for all his warres which lasted aboue thirtie yeares, he left behind him more substance and readie monie, than anie other prince of his time, as the writers of the histories of that age do witnes unto us. And yet notwithstanding, for all these great vertues & qualities of his, he was not named Philip the sage, nor Philip the valiant, nor Philip the rich, but Philip the good. So well do all folke by generall consent understand, which is the vertue that best beseemeth and becommeth a great prince, & is best liked of his people: namelie, that a prince be good and louing to his subiects. Surelie sir, all men hope that your highnes will follow the example of that good prince, the first bringer of the state of this countrie to perfection, a right noble and renowmed prince of the house of France. And we praise God, for that as manie as have had the honour to come into your highnes presence, yeeld record that you have verie great likelihoods of these vertues, which we praie God so to accomplish and make perfect in you, as all his people may to your great honor receiue the perfect and ripe fruits of them. And this do all the rest of the people desire as well as we.

Duke John the second, and Philip the second, aduancers of the state.

Philip the second a verie rich prince, surnamed Philip the good.

He directeth his speech to the monsieur.

Howbeit, we have a most humble sute to make peculiarlie to your highnes, which we most humblie beseech you to grant. The thing that induceth us to do it, is that you beare the name of Francis. For as oft as we heare that name named: the remembrance of that great king Francis your highnesse grandfather commeth to our mind. He was a right valiant, couragious, noble and godlie prince: and yet notwithstanding all the nations of the earth did by one common consent surname him the father of learning. For of a truth, since that emperour and great king of France, called Charles the great, there was neuer anie king of France that so highlie fauoured learning, as this great king Francis. And as the said king Charles was the founder of the famous vniuersitie of Paris, so was king Francis the restorer therof againe: and both of them to their great costs & charges called men of excellent knowledge thither out of strange countries, to teach the languages & all kinds of arts & sciences. The house of this great king Francis was as an vniuersitie, and his table was a place of conference concerning all maner of learning. And like as other great princes of his time following his example, inriched their dominions and kingdomes with learned men and learning; so we most humblie beseech your highnes to follow the example of this great king your grandfather in doing the like, and to make singular account of learning, and to take the professours therof vnder your protection. True it is sir, that through the malice of men, warre is commonlie the ouerthrower of learning. But if a great prince set himselfe against the mischiefe, he may easilie stop it. Our desire is not that your highnesse should neglect the exercise of chiualrie, for to give your selfe to studie: but to follow so the one, as the other be not left off and forgotten. For as we have seene manie commonweales florish so long as they professed chiualrie and learning togither: and yet have fallen into the hands of their enimies, euen in the chiefe flowre of their skill in sciences, by reason of their discontinuing of their former trade of armes, after which maner it fell to the Athenians to come into subiection to the kings of Macedonie: so the people which have professed armes alone without learning, have alwaies become barbarous, cruell, and vtterlie destitute of all humanitie, as we see at this date by the Tartars and Moscouits. And therefore to our seeming, a man may well sate, that chiualrie is the fundation and sinewes of a commonweale: and that learning garnisheth and beautifieth the bodie therof with liuelie and fresh colours, seruing it for inrichments and ornaments. In respect wherof, as we meant not to desire your highnesse to forget those which make profession of chiualrie, whome you ought to embrace as your strength: so we most humblie beseech you to vouchsafe to succour learning, and to mainteine learned men with your gratious fauour.

A good sute to the mõsieur, & the like of all princes and great men to be preferred and granted.

Learning and chiualrie must go togither.

A sute moued to ỹ monsieur.

Francis the monsieurs grandfather commended.

Sir, verie needfull causes move us to make this humble petition to your highnesse: for that we being professors of learning, ought to have learning in singular estimation, and to procure (if it be possible for vs) that the fruite of the things which we have injoied for a time, may be conueied to our posteritie: and secondlie for the oths sake which we have taken at the time of our proceeding in our degrees, which is, to mainteine and further the scholes and learning of the vniuersitie, in what degree soeuer we come unto. And therefore we hope that your highnesse will do us the honour to take this most humble request of ours in good part. As touching our owne persons, we promise your highnesse all obedience, faithfulnesse, and subiection: and that according to our small abilitie, we will do our indeuor towards such as we may have accesse unto, that they also may yeeld obedience to your highnesse, and to the magistrates whome it shall please you to set ouer the people. And here to make an end, we hartilie praie God to preserue your highnes a long time in happie estate among this people, and to give you the grace to rule and gouerne them iustlie and vprightlie, to rid them out of the hands of their enimies, to mainteine them long in most happie peace, and Causes that moued the making of this sute.

He speaketh in the behalfe of all the rest of like profession and facultie.

and to restore this state againe to the ancient dignitie, greatnesse, renowme, and felicitie: that after your decease you maie leaue a most blessed and famous remembrance among all nations. And for the bringing hereof to passe, we yet againe beseech the king of kings and great prince of princes, to make you as valiant as Dauid, as wise as Salomon, and as zelous of his glorie as Ezechias.

The monsieur speaketh well whatsoeuer his meaning was.

Hereunto the duke answered, that he was verie glad to see such a consent of all the people in the receiuing of him: and that he hoped so to rule and gouerne them, as they should not be disappointed of the hope which they had conceiued of his gouernement, which he would fashion out after the paterne of his predecessors and great vncles, who had gouerned these countries so happilie. And he thanked them for their good will & loue, praieng them to continue the same, and promising to take them into his protection togither with the rest of the people in generall: & that as he had heretofore a singular regard of learned men, so would he be willing to continue the same hereafter.

A good beginning in prince and people.

After this maner began this great prince to gouerne that people with great authoritie and modestie; and the people to yeld vnto him verie willing and honorable obedience; and all men hope both generallie and particularlie, that God will giue him the grace so to hold on in that so holie and commendable gouernement, as that by his example he shall shew to all princes and to all others that come after him, how greatlie the iust and lawfull gouernement availeth: and that the people on their side shall shew what maner of obedience, loue, and constancie is due to good princes: in which vertues there was neuer yet anie people that could skill to surmount them, neither shall anie hereafter, by the helpe of the great God, and euerlasting father of our saiuour Jesus Christ, to whome with the vnitie of the holie spirit be all glorie for euer and euer, Amen.]

John Paine executed at Chelmsford.

John Paine priest being indicted of high treason for words by him spoken, was arreigned and condemned at Chelmsford on the last daie of March, and was there executed on the second daie of Aprill, according to the qualitie of his offense, and as law had awarded. In the moneth of Maie, namelie, on the fifteenth daie at night, about ten of the clocke, a blasing starre appeared, descending in the northwest, the beard whereof streamed in a the southeast.

A blasing starre.

Execution of Thomas Ford, John Shert, and Robert Johnson priests of the popes order.

On mondaie being the eight & twentith of Maie, Thomas Ford, John Shert, and Robert Johnson priests, having beene before indicted, arreigned, and as well by their owne testimonie, as also sufficient witnesses produced to their faces, found giltie, and condemned for high treason intended, practised, and apointed against hir maiesties most roiall person, as also for the vtter ruine, ouerthrow, and subuersion of hir peaceable and well gouerned realme, themselues being sent as instruments, to deale for and in the behalfe of the pope, in this dissoiall and traitorous cause; according as iustice had before determined, were drawne vpon hurdles from the Tower of London to the place apointed for execution; having been so long time spared, by hir maiesties most roiall and princelie regard of mercie, to trie if either the feare of God would take place in them, consideration and respect of their owne duties moue them, or the meere loue and accustomed clemencie of hir maiestie might win them, to acknowledge hir to be their lawfull souereigne, and themselues hir subiects bound to serue hir, notwithstanding any pretense or authoritie to the contrarie, & not for matter of their popish superstition. All this notwithstanding they remained giuen ouer to their owne wickednes, and swallowed vp in the gulfe of their vndutifull affection, which caused iustice to step before mercie, committing them to the reward of their lewd and vnnaturall dealing.

To perseuere in wickednes is no constancie but obstinacie.

Consolation ministred to them as they went to their deaths.

All the waie as they were drawne, they were accompanied with diuers zealous and godlie men, who in mild & louing speeches made knowne vnto them, how iustlie God repaieth the reprobat, how fatherlie againe he receiueth the obedient, how he ouerthroweth the vngodlie in their owne deuises, and protecteth his chosen in all stormes and afflictions. In remembrance of all these, to bethinke themselues of their wickednesses passed, and to shew such hartie and zealous repentance for the same, that albeit they had so grieuouslie trespassed, yet in contrite and humble sorrowing they might be gratiouslie receiued into his heauenlie fauour, whome they had moued and stirred by their vnreuerent regard, to smite and chasten with the rod of his furie. Among which godlie persuasions, maister shiriffe himselfe, both learnedlie and ernestlie labored vnto them, moouing all good occasions he might deuise to change the obstinacie he perceiued in them, into a christianlike humilitie and repentance; but these good indeuors take no wished effect, their owne euill disposition so blinded them, that there was no waie for grace to enter.

The shiriffe himselfe trieth what he can do to conuert them.

When they were come beyond saint Giles in the field, there approched vnto the hurdle one of their owne sect, and a priest (as himselfe had confessed) who in this maner spake vnto the prisoners: O gentlemen be ioifull in the bloud of Jesus Christ, for this is the daie of your triumph and ioie. Being asked whie he vsed such words, he said vnto the prisoners againe; I pronounce vnto you; yea, I pronounce a full remission and pardon vnto your soules. Using these and other traitorous speeches, hold was laid on him. When as maister shiriffe demanded what he was, he answered; He was the voice of a crier in the wildernesse, and that he was sent to prepare the Lords waie. And notwithstanding such meanes of resistance as himselfe vsed, he was deliuered vnto Thomas Norris purseuant, who brought him vnto Newgate, where he confessed vnto him that he was a priest, and that he had so long dissembled, as he would now leaue off and do so no more.

He was the ecchо of a false and antichristian voice.

Thomas Ford his words touching his innocencie.

Being come to the place of execution Thomas Ford was first brought vp into the cart, when as he began in this maner. Whereas I am come hither to die, for matters laid vnto my charge of treason, which should be conspired against the queene, within these two yeares or somewhat more: I giue you to vnderstand, that of anie such matter I am innocent & free, for that I can proue my comming into England to be fiue yeares since. Whereupon maister shiriffe spake vnto him and said; Ford, haue mind on God, and aske him and hir maiestie heartilie forgiuenesse, whome thou hast so highlie offended; thou dost but delude the people, for it is manifestlie known how thou art guiltie of the matters laid to thy charge, here be thine owne answers to shew, affirmed vnder thine owne hand, and other witnesses to reproue thee. Whereupon *I my selfe was called forth, who iustified the causes to his face, that at his arreignement was laid to his charge, and he euidentlie and plainelie found guiltie thereof. Then were his answers whereto he had subscribed read vnto him, which is in the booke latelie set forth by authoritie. Whereupon he take occasion to tell a long circumstance of a certeine question moued at Orford, as concerning taking armes against hir maiestie, which horrible treason he seemed to approue thereby.

* The writer of this pamphlet, who seemed to be acquainted with all their dealings.

Then maister shiriffe willed him to aske hir maiestie forgiuenesse, offering him to stand his friend in in atteining hir graces mercie, if he would change his former traitorous mind, to become a true and faithfull subiect, acknowledging hir to be his lawfull souereigne ladie, notwithstanding anie thing that anie pope could saie or do to the contrarie. Whereto he answered; I haue not offended hir maiestie, but if I haue, I aske hir forgiuenesse and all the world; and in no other treson haue I offended than my religion, which is the catholike faith, wherein I will liue and die. And as for the quænes maiestie, I do acknowledge hir supremasie in all things temporall, but as concerning ecclesiasticall causes, I denie hir; that onelie belongeth to the vicar of Christ, the pope. In briefe, he granted to nothing, but shewed himselfe an impious and obstinat traitor, and so he remained to the death, refusing to praie in the English tong, mumbling a few Latine praiers, desiring those that were Ex domo Dei to praie with him, & so he died. In the meane time that he hanged, which was till he was dead, so great is the mercie of our gratious princesse, John Shert was brought from off the hurdle to the gallowes, where seeing Ford hanging, he began with holding vp his hands, as the papists are wont to do before their images; O sweet Tom, O happie Tom, O blessed Tom. Then being staied, Ford was cut downe & caried to the place where his bodie should be quartered. In which time Shert was brought vp into the cart, where looking towards the dead bodie of Ford, he fell downe on his knées, and held vp his hands vnto it, saieng againe: O happie Tom, O blessed Tom, thy sweet soule praie for me; O deare Tom, thy blessed soule praie for me. For which words being rebuked, the executioner lifted him vp on his feet, when as he prepared him to his confession, saieng; I am brought hither to this place, to die a death which is both shamefull & ignominious, for which I thanke thee my Lord God, who framing me to thine owne similitude and likenesse, hast blessed me to this good end. There being staied, because he seemed to prolong the time to small purpose, the shiriffe willed him to remember himselfe, for what cause he was come thither, how he had offended the quænes maiestie, and that he was now to aske hir forgiuenesse. Besides, he might receiue hir princelie mercie; whereto with an hypocriticall outward boldnesse, but an inward fainting feare (as afterward euerie one plainelie beheld) he gaue this answer: What (maister shiriffe) shall I saue this fraile and vile carcasse, and damne mine owne soule? No, no, I am a catholike, in that faith I was borne, in that faith will I die, and here shall my bloud seale it.

Then maister shiriffe spake vnto him, saieng; By the waie as we came you swore an oth, for which you willed me to beare witnesse that you were heartilie sorie: now I praie you let me be a witnesse, that you are heartilie sorie for offending the quæns maiestie. Whie sir (quoth he) I haue not offended hir, without it be in my religion; and if I haue offended hir, then I aske hir forgiuenesse. Maister shiriffe vpon this said vnto him; Is this the fruit of your religion, to kneele to the dead bodie of thy fellow, and to desire his soule to praie for thee? Alas, what can it either profit or hinder thee? Praie thou to God, and he will helpe thee. Maister shiriffe (quoth Shert) this is the true catholike religion, and whosoeuer is not of it is damned. I desire his soule to praie for me, the most glorious virgin Marie to praie for me, and all the holie companie of heauen to praie for me. At which words the people cried; Awaie with the traitor, hang him, hang him. O Shert (quoth maister shiriffe) forsake that whore of Rome, that wicked Antichrist, with all his abhominable blasphemies and treacheries, and put thy whole confidence in Jesus Christ. Whereto he answered; O maister shiriffe, you little remember the daie when as you & I shall stand both at one barre, and I come as witnesse against you, that you called that holie and blessed vicar of Christ the whore of Rome. At which words the people cried againe; Hang him, hang him, awaie with him. Then he beganne his Pater noster in Latine, and before he had fullie ended two petitions of it he fell into the Creed, and then to the Pater noster againe, afterward he said the Aue Maria, which done, knocking himselfe on the breast, saieng, Iesus esto mihi Iesus, the cart was drawen awaie, and he committed to the mercie of God. But then, to manifest that his former boldnesse was but meere dissembling and hypocrisie, he lifted vp his hands, and caught hold on the halter: so that euerie one perceiued his faire outward shew, and his foule inward disfigured nature, also how loth he was and vnwilling to die. Whereby he shewed that he was not indued with the audacitie and stout resolution of the heathen, who for morall vertues sake cast themselues into dangers, manie times deadlie, holding opinion, that he beareth but a counterfeit shew of vertue that shrinketh at anie torment, at anie hazard, at anie death, & therefore said:

virtus
Per scopulos durum fortis inhelat iter.

Robert Johnson being brought vp into the cart, maister shiriffe, according as he had before, both declared vnto him hir maiesties mercie if he would repent; and also willed him to be sorie for his offenses against hir: whereof he seemed to make small estimation, denieng the treasons according as the others had done, and appealing likewise vpon his religion. Then was the * writer hereof called forth, who gaue him to vnderstand, how notablie he was approued guiltie at his arreignment, & euerie matter sufficientlie handled, how according as the rest were, he was confounded to his face. Whereunto he would make no other answer, but said; Well well, (quoth he) calling the partie by his name, God forgiue the. Then were his answers read vnto him, as they had been before to the other two, he not yeelding deniall, but said he spake them & would do it againe. Then was Athanasius Creed moued to him, which he granted to be the catholike faith, whereof the pope was vicar, and that there was no other catholike faith, but onelie his. Whie (quoth the preacher) the pope is not named in it. I know not that (quoth he againe) I haue not read it. Then maister shiriffe desired him to saie his praiers in English, and he with all the companie would praie with him: which he refusing to do, in his Latine praiers the cart was drawne awaie, and he committed to Gods mercie. And thus was iustice ministred, and that execution to Gods glorie, & the ease of the common wealths greefe dispatched.

On the wednesdaie following, which was the thirtith daie of Maie, in the same maner as I haue before expressed, Luke Kirbie, William Filbie, Thomas Coteham, & Laurence Richardson, were committed from the tower of London, to the place of execution; and as the other were on the mondaie before associated and accompanied with diuerse learned and godlie preachers; euen so were these, as to saie, maister Charke, maister Perne, and diuerse others, who all the waie applied such godlie and christian persuasions vnto them (as had not the child of perdition so maruellouslie blinded them) were of force to haue wone them into grace and mercie. The speeches they vsed to them by the waie were needlesse here to set downe, for that they did especiallie concerne causes to root out that wicked opinion in them, and to establish a sound and perfect faith in place thereof; but euen as it was in the other, so it did agree in them. But Luke Kirbie seemed to chalenge

A shamelesse negatiue voice to a manifest charge of offense, and euident conuiction.

John Shert his vaine speeches at the sight of Tom Fords dead bodie dismembred.

Sherts oration to the people iustifieng the forme of a godlie martyres death.

Note Sherts obstinacie.

Shert is peremptorie in his speech to iustifie his religion.

Hudling vp of praiers mangled and packed togither after the popish maner.

* who seemed acquainted with all their practises.

Execution of Luke Kirbie, William Filbie, Thomas Coteham, and Laurence Richardson priests of the popes order.

*who was an obseruer (as he pretended) of all their doings.

lenge the * writer hereof as sufficient to proue nothing against him, which he did because it was supposed he was not there present: but what passed betweene him & the said writer, you shall heare hereafter. They being come to the place of execution, William Filbie was brought vp into the cart, where conforming himselfe vnto the death, his wicked treasons were moued vnto him, which obstinatelie and impudentlie he denied. Then was he demanded if he would acknowledge the quéenes maiestie his souereigne princesse, and supreme head vnder Christ of the church of England: No (quoth he) I will acknowledge no other head of the church than the pope onlie. Wherupon his answers were read vnto him, and he not denieng them in anie point, euen as they were wicked and impious, euen so he remained in them, still appealing that it was for his religion that he died, and not for anie treason. But the contrarie was proued vnto his face, as well by sufficient proofes, as also by the traitorous answers, whereto he had subscribed with his owne hand. At last, as he was desired, he praied for the quœnes maiestie, that God might blesse hir, and incline hir heart to mercie toward the catholikes, of which societie he was one. Then they opening his bosome, found there two crosses, which being taken from him were held vp, and shewed to all the people, beside his crowne was shauen. So after a few silent Latine praiers to himselfe, the cart was drawne awaie.

Most manifest and vndoubted tokens of a resolute votarie to the pope his vicar.

The next was Luke Kirbie, who being brought vp into the cart, offered long circumstance of spéech, as concerning that he was come thither to die, hoping to be saued in the bloud of Christ: and much matter, which were needlesse here to rehearse. Afterward, he began to saie, that there were none could approue him to be a traitor: neither had he at anie time attempted anie thing preiudiciall to hir maiestie, and that his aduersaries, naming them by speciall name, could not vpbraid him with anie thing. Wherupon master shiriffe told him that one of them was there, and asked him if he would haue him called to him. I se him (quoth he) yonder, and let him saie what he can against me. Then was the * partie bidden come somewhat nére him, to whom he began in vehement sort to saie, Consider with thy selfe how vntrulie thou hast charged me, with that which I neuer said nor thought. Besides, thou knowest that when thou camest to the Tower to me, before master lieutenant, & an other who was there present then, thou wast demanded what thou thoughtest of me, and what thou couldest saie against me? When as thou madest answer, thou knewest no harme by me, neither couldest thou at anie time saie otherwise of me than well: wherevpon thou wast asked, wherefore thou reportedst otherwise at my arreignement? Then the shiriffe said vnto him; Who can beare thée witnes of this? Quoth he againe; He spake it before master lieutenant, and an other was by then. Then was he demanded what other he was that was present? Which (after long trifling) he said was a keéper, & named him. Whereto the said writer made answer as followeth. Master Kirbie, I wish and desire you, in the feare of God, to remember your selfe: for this is not a place to report an vntruth, neither to slander anie man otherwise than you are able to proue. When as I came vnto the Tower, & made knowne to master lieutenant for what cause I was sent to speake with you, you were brought into a chamber by your keéper: and what I then moued, your selfe verie well knoweth, as concerning my allowance being the popes scholer: where what answer you made, I haue trulie, and according as you answered, alreadie set downe in print. Master lieutenant neither moued anie such words to me, as here you reported, and I call God to my witnesse, that not a motion of anie such matter was once offered to me by master lieutenant, or by your keéper. Your selfe then vttered, that at sundrie times in the seminarie there were diuerse lewd words spoken, which might better haue béene spared; and denied that you were not in my chamber, when as I lieng sicke in my bed, the traitorous spœches were moued by them, which were then present, whereof your selfe was one; with diuerse other matters which you spake vnto me, which master lieutenant himselfe heard, and your keéper being present. But if this be true which you saie, that it may be proued there were either such words moued vnto me, or anie such answer made by me, I offer to susteine what punishment the law shall afford me. Then falling to an other matter, for that this redounded to his owne confusion (as master lieutenant can well witnesse) he began to talke of my being at Rome, what frendship he had shewed vnto me, and had done the like vnto a number of Englishmen, whome he well knew not to be of that religion, both by his owne purse, as also by frending them to some of the popes chamber, he made conueiance for them thense sometime going forth miles with them: when (quoth he) had my dealings bin knowne, I should hardlie haue bin well thought of: and I knew well inough that you were neuer bent to that religion, albeit they thought the contrarie. Yea I knew well inough when you departed thense, that your disposition was contrarie to ours, and concealed it to my selfe.

Repetitio beneficij est exprobratio.

O Kirbie (quoth master shiriffe) this is verie vnlike, that you could afford such fauour to anie, who were contrarie to that religion that you professed. No, no, if you knew anie such there, you would rather helpe to persecute them than pitie them, as it is the nature of you all. M. Kirbie (quoth this writer) it is verie vnlike that you had anie such secret knowledge of me, either of my religion, or how I was secretlie bent as you séeme here to professe: for had I béene such a one as you would persuade these here you knew me to be, would you haue deliuered me those silken pictures hallowed by the pope which you did: and moreouer, make knowen vnto me sundrie of your friends here in England, to whome I should conueie them? O sir (quoth he) I confesse indeed I deliuered to thée such pictures, but thou knowest I gaue thée two Julies to go buy them with, I did it because I knew thée to be such a one, and therfore I did misdoubt thee, for I would not credit thée with my hallowed pictures. M. Kirbie (quoth the other) to denie your owne doings is marueilous impudencie; did not you in your chamber deliuer me certeine silken pictures, which you told me at Stubles being there, were hallowed by the pope, and what indulgences were alowed them? One of them, which was a crucifix, you gaue me; the other you willed me deliuer to your frends at Rheimes and in England. And because they were to few (as in deed I thinke they were no more but fiue) you gaue me two Julies, to go into the citie to buie more, which I did: and hauing brought them to you, thrée or foure of the fairest you toke from me, promising to get them hallowed at the next benediction: the other in deed you gaue me, and I toke them with me. How saie you now Kirbie (quoth master shiriffe) would you haue credited him with such matters, had you not supposed him to be one of your owne sect? Master shiriffe (quoth he) what I haue said, I know verie well. And after he was gone from Rome I sent fiftéene shillings to Rheimes to be deliuered to him, but he was departed thense towards England, before it came.

Master shiriffes words vttered by the waie of interception.

This was great & verie mercifull forbearance to let all this talke passe to and fro at the place of execution.

Then master shiriffe said to him againe; You stand vpon these points verie much, which there is none that

*The obstruer and writer of all their plots and deuises, as he pretended.

One of these two must néeds be in a fowle errour: for both holding contraries could not speake truth.

When indeed vle to repose their trust in such, whom they suppose to be like themselues.

that are here, but will iudge to be vntrue: thou hearest what he hath said vnto thée, and we haue heard that thou deniedst euerie thing. What saiest thou to thy treasons, wherefore thou art come hither to die? Wilt thou be sorie for them? aske God and his maiestie forgiuenesse, for she is mercifull, and we will carrie thee backe againe if we shall perceiue in thée anie such motion, that thou wilt forsake thy former wickednesse, and become a good and faithfull subiect. At these words the people among themselues almost generallie said: O exceeding mercie and fauour! what a gratious princesse haue we, who affoordeth such mercie vnto those that haue so ill deserued? Can there be a princesse of greater pitie, of more clemencie or tendernesse to be found in all the world? No.

Mercie offered to Kirbie notwithstanding his conuiction of treason.

Principe nil ista mitius orbis habet.

When Field the preacher in the booke read his answers to him, whereto he had subscribed with his owne hand: Whether the pope might lawfullie depose hir maiestie, or had anie authoritie to take the title of hir crowne and dignitie awaie from hir? Wherto Kirbie answered: This is a matter disputable in scholes, and therefore I may not iudge of it. I thinke this with my selfe, that if anie prince fall by infidelitie into turcisme, atheisme, paganisme, or anie such like, that the pope hath authoritie to depose such a prince. And being asked, if hir maiestie were in anie such? He said, he knew his owne conscience. An other preacher being by said vnto him, that the prince receiued his authoritie from God, and that he was to be supplied by none, but onelie by God. Againe, that Salomon said: By me (meaning by God) kings reigne, and princes decrée iustice. By me princes rule, and the nobles and all the iudges of the earth. Againe, S. Paule saith: Let euerie soule be subiect to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God, and the powers that be, are ordeined of God. Whosoeuer therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, & they that resist, shall receiue to themselues iudgement. For princes are not to be feared for good workes but for euill. Wilt thou then be without feare of the power? doo well, so shalt thou purchase praise of the same. For he is the minister of God for thy wealth; but if thou doo euill, feare, for he beareth a sword not for naught, for he is the minister of God to take vengeance on him that doth euill. If then the pope be a soule, he is to be obedient to the higher powers. And being a subiect vnto God, as all other princes be, he must not take vpon him what belongeth to God. As for the authoritie that hir maiestie hath, she hath receiued it from God; neither is the pope, or anie earthlie prince to depriue hir thereof, but onelie God. Againe, when Iesus was brought before Pilat, Pilat said vnto him; Knowest thou not that I haue power to crucifie thée, and haue power to lose thée? To the which Iesus answered: Thou couldest haue no power at all against me, except it were giuen thée from aboue. Thus maie you sée, that what prince soeuer ruleth vpon earth, hath his power and authoritie onelie from God: and not that anie mortall man can vse the authoritie of a prince at his pleasure. Now saie you to this? Wherto he would make no answer, but séemed to demand of them, if they would denie, that if a prince were in paganisme, atheisme, or gouerned by infidelitie: that such a prince might not lawfullie be deposed? Which the learned preachers answered in learned sort, approuing that as the power was of God, so princes were not to be deposed by anie, but onelie by God.

To such as are proditorioustie minded it is a matter disputable: but to a good subiect a matter determinable.

Prou. 8. 15, 16.

Rom. 13. 1, 2, 3, 4.

This counsell of the apostle they had not the grace to follow.

John. 19. 10, 11.

This demand implieth a kind of suspition or secret charge that hir maiestie is such a one.

No (quoth Kirbie againe) hath it not béene disputed in schooles for these fiue hundred yeares, and will you denie it? O maister Crowleie, maister Crowleie; and there pansed: as if that maister Crowleie had agreed with him in such a monstruous error. But maister Crowleie himselfe gaue one to vnderstand, that at such time as he conferred with the said Kirbie in the tower, about the same argument, that his answer was vnto him: If anie prince fell into anie such kind of error, that prince were corrigible, but of whome? Not of anie earthlie prince, but of that heauenlie prince, who gaue him his authoritie, and séeing him abuse it anie waie, correcteth him in his iustice. For by his attributing to the pope this authoritie, he witnessed him to be antichrist, in that he will depose princes at his pleasure, and exalt himselfe aboue all that is called God, and forgiue men their sinnes at his pleasure likewise. All this was not sufficient to mollifie the obstinate mind of Kirbie, but he would persist still in this diuelish imagination. Maister Chirtsie and the preachers, séeing him wauering, and not able to yeld anie reason for his arrogant opinion, laboured as much as in them laie to change it: when all would not serue, they desired him in hartie and humble maner to praie vnto God, to aske hir maiestie forgiuenesse, for the treasons wherein he had offended hir. Wherevnto he answered, that he had not offended in anie treason, to his knowledge. Whereupon they shewed him his treasons, which were adiudged by the people worthie of greater punishment, than he was at that time to suffer; yet would not he acknowledge them, but praied to God for hir maiestie, that she might long rule in hir authoritie, to confound all hir enimies: and that his hart was free from anie treason to hir maiestie. Then preparing himselfe vnto his praiers, the preachers desired him to praie in English with them, and to saie a praier after them; wherein, if he could find anie fault, he should be resolued thereof. O (quoth he againe) you and I were not one in faith, therefore I thinke I should offend God, if I should praie with you: at which words, the people began to crie, Awaie with him: so he saieng his Pater noster in Latine, ended his life.

Not of the pope then, belike, who is not to peere into other princes prouinces, &c.

Vox populi Dei, vox fertur esse Dei.

Then was Laurence Richardson brought vp into the cart, & to him Thomas Cotcham to be executed togither. But Cotcham séemed to vtter such words as though there had béene hope he would haue forsaken his wickednesse, so that the halter was vntied, and he brought downe out of the cart againe. In which time Laurence Richardson prepared him to death, confessing himselfe a catholike, and that he would beléeue in all things as the catholike church of Rome did, vnto the pope he allowed the onelie supremasie. In which traitorous opinion, after certeine Latine praiers, he was committed to God. Then was Cotcham brought vp to the cart againe, & the good opinion had of him before changed into that obstinat nature that was in them all, saieng to maister Chirtsie, that before he came into England, he was armed for India, and thither if he might be suffered he would passe with as much conuenient spéed as might be. Then looking to the bodie of Laurence Richardson, whereon the executioner was vsing his office, he lifted vp his hands and said; O blessed Laurence praie for me, thy blessed soule Laurence praie for me: for which words both the preachers and the people rebuked him, telling him that he ought to praie to none, but to God onelie; all helpe of man was but in vaine. Whereto he answered, he was assured that he could praie for him. In brefe, his treasons being moued to him, he denied all, albeit his owne handwriting was there to affirme it. He praied for hir maiestie, and said his Pater noster & Aue Maria: and as the cart was drawing away he said; *In manus tuas * Domine commendo spiritum meum*, and then he died. Thus did the brome of iustice sweepe awaie these noisome cobwebs, noisome both to church and Laurence Richardson and Thomas Cotcham their gestures and speeches at their deaths.

For he was not so furnished for England as to win soules so easilie to papistrie.

He should haue said Deus.

common commonwealth, as being of the diuels hatching, but nurssed and fostered of poperie, to insnare and trap seelie soules, as the spider doth the flie: from whome the Lord God deliuer euerie member of his church.

Philip Peirce hanged in Fleetstreet for killing of a sergeant.

On the second daie of June, Philip Peirse was hanged in Fléetstréet for killing one of the shiriffes sergeants that had arrested him. This man at his death, as inwardlie touched with sorrow for the offense which he had committed and died, gaue such apparant tokens and notes of a repentant mind; that partlie with his spéeches which were pathetical, and partlie with his teares which were plentifull, as also with his vehement sighs and grieuous grones, ioined with diuerse other gestures (great signes of inward grace) he so mooued the beholders, that manie which beheld him, pitied his wofull end, most yea in maner all (whereof some were such as a man would haue thought had neuer a teare to shed at such a sight, hauing viewed diuerse the like and more lamentable spectacles) with wet eies beheld him, and yet in heart reioised that he died reconciled to God. On the eight and twentith of June, Peregrine Bartie lord Willoughbie of Grobie appointed ambassador sent into Denmarke.

Lord Willoughbie ambassador sent into Denmarke.

On the eight and twentith of June, Peregrine Bartie lord Willoughbie of Grobie appointed ambassador to Frederike the second king of Denmarke with the garter, whereunto he had béene elected & chosen a long time before, toke his leaue of the quéenes maiestie at Gréenewich; with whome sir Gilbert Dethicke alias Garter principall king of armes was ioined in commission, for the inuesting of the said king into the order; and Robert Glouer alias Summerset herald was also present, and gaue his attendance in the same voiage, as likewise did a competent number of gentlemen and yeomen, in all to the number of six and fiftie persons, besides mariners, &c. The said lord ambassador prepared himselfe towards Kingstone vpon Hull, where he imbarked with his whole traine on the fourtéenth daie of Julie, and prosperouslie arriued at Elsemore in Denmarke on the one and twentith daie of the same moneth, where he was honorablie interteined.

The lord ambassadors oration in Latine to the king of Denmarke, &c.

On the thirtéenth daie of August he presented himselfe before the king in his castell of Cronebourough, and made his first spéech vnto him in Latine; which spéech being ended, the lord Willoughbie deliuered vnto the king hir maiesties letters, & withall the commission for the kings inuesture into that honorable order of the garter. Which letters the king opened, and deliuered them to Henrie Ramelis his chancellor for Germanie to read, whom he commanded to answer my lords former oration. From the king my lord was conueied to the quéenes presence, vnto whome also he deliuered hir maiesties letters with salutations. The next daie being thursdaie the fourtéenth of August, the king roiallie prepared, receiued the robes of the order with his owne hands, and with great contentment accepted and ware the garter, the collar, and the George, when as my lord concluded the whole dedication with sundrie welwishings. In the end wherof he put the king in mind of the oth and thankefull acceptation of the order to be testified by a publike instrument, as was before promised, whereunto the king answered by his chancellor Nicholas Baas with manie effectuall words: and immediatlie in signe of ioie, a great volee was discharged of all the great shot in his castell, and the lord ambassador with all his traine was roiallie feasted & rewarded. On thursdaie the sirtéenth daie of August, the king toke my lord ambassador forth on hunting two leagues from Elsemore, and there in the dinner time vttered manie louing spéeches. And after, to wit, on the one and twentith of September the lord ambassador with all his traine imbarked at Emden, and arriued at Bromeholme in Norfolke on thursdaie the seuen and twentith daie of September.

The king of Denmarke inuested into the right honorable order of the garter.

Mille tuns by gunpowder.

On the nineteenth daie of Julie certeine serkins of gunpowder to the number of seauen, and as manie or more serkins of sturgeon laden in a car vpon Galleie keie néere vnto the Tower of London, some small portion of the same powder being shed on the ground, the horsse in the said carre stroke fire with his fot, and fired all togither, where-through the sturgeon was blowen awaie, some into the Thames, some elsewhere: one serkin was driuen through a lome wall that was bowded ouer, but all was spoiled and lost, the crane on the wharfe with the houses néere adioining shattered, manie men and horsses sore blasted; the thrée men and seauen horsses died therof. On the twelfe daie of August there arose a great tempest of lightening, thunder, whirlewind, and raine, with hailestones fashioned like to the rowels of spurs two or thrée inches about in the countie of Norffolke, betweene the market townes of north Walsham and Worsted (the towne wherein the making of worsteds commonlie called Norwich worsted was first practised and toke their beginning) which tempest beat the corne flat vnto the ground, rent vp manie great trees, and shiuered them in peeces, or wound them like withies. At Hening more than a mile from Worsted, the west dore of the church, weieng more than thrée hundred pound weight, was lifted off the hookes, and throwne ouer the font, within one yard of the chancell dore; the top of the church was riuen vp, and the lead as it were blowen awaie; fiue wels of lead were rustled vp togither, like as they had béene clouts of linnen cloth, and blowen into the field without the churchyard. Also at east Russen were manie barnes blowen downe, and houses vncouered.

Strange tempest in Norffolke.

This yeare Michaelmasse terme was retourned from the vtas thereof, vntill the fourth returne of the same called Mense Michaelis, and from the said returne vntill the returne commonlie called Crastino animarum next insuing, & then retorned from Westminster to the castell of Hertford in Hertfordshire, there to begin in the said Crastino animarum, and to be continued till the end of the same terme, which was done accordinglie, where was plentie of good viands to be had for monie, but lodging hard and scant; besides the long and plaine waie that manie had vnto their hosts, and then peraduenture slepe in the chimneie corner, or vpon the hard bords with a pillow vnder their heads. Was not this a good amends?

Anno reg. 25.

Terme kept at Hertford.

This yeare Peter Moris frée denison, hauing made an engine for that purpose, conueied Thames water in pipes of lead ouer the steeple of saint Magnus church, at the north end of London bridge, and so into diuerse mens houses in Thames stréet, new Fish stréet, and Grasse stréet, vp vnto the northwest corner of Leaden hall (the highest ground of the citie of London) where the waste of the first maine pipe ran first this yeare one thousand fiue hundred eightie and two on Christmasse éeuen: which maine pipe being since at the charges of the citie brought vp into a standard there made for that purpose, and diuided into foure seuerall spouts ran foure waies, plentifullie seruing to the vse of the inhabitants néere adioining that will fetch the same into their houses, and also clensed the chanels of the stréets, north towards Bishopsgate, east towards Aldgate, south towards the Bridge, and west towards the Stocks market. No doubt a great commoditie to that part of the citie, and would be farre greater, if the said water were maintained to run continuallie, or at the least, at euerie tide some reasonable quantitie, as at the first it did; but since is much aslaked, thorough whose default I know not, sith the engine is sufficient to conueie water plentifullie: which being well considered by Barnard Randolph esquier, common sergeant of the citie of London: he being aliue, gaue and deliuered to the companie of the fishmongers in London a round sum to be imploied toward the conducting of Thames water for the good seruice of the commonwealth in conuenient order. Other legacies verie liberallie and bountifullie he gaue by his testament to be laid out in workes of charitie, as I haue noted more at large hereafter in due place, vpon occasion of recording the daie of his death. The publication of whose acts, as also of diuerse others, if they may moue the rich of this world to part with some small portion of their store to the like christian vses, I shall be glad, and thinke my paines worth the printing: otherwise I saie with one that perswading this age to walke worthie of their calling, and doubting his words should be but wind, concluded with this interrogatiue distichon:

Thames water conueied ouer saint Magnus steeple.

Justice Randolph his charitie.

Sed quid verba miser non proficientia perdo?
Quid iuuat in vacuos missa loquela notos?

Publike lecture of surgerie founded in London, & presentlie red (as also in the life of the founder) by doctor Foster, to his high praise & credit.

This yeare 1582 was there instituted and first founded a publike lecture or lesson in surgerie, to begin to be read in the college of physicians in London, in Anno 1584, the first daie of Maie, against that time new reedified in a part of the house that doctor Linacre gaue by testament to them, by John Lumleie lord Lumleie, and Richard Caldwell doctor in physicke, to the honour of God, the common profit of his maiesties subiects, and good fame, with increase of estimation and credit of all the surgians of this realme. The reader whereof to be a doctor of physicke, and of good practise and knowledge, and to haue an honest stipend, no lesse than those of the vniuersities erected by king Henrie the eight, namelie of law, diuinitie, and physicke, and lands assured to the said college for the maintenance of the publike lesson; whereunto such statutes be annexed as be for the great commoditie of those which shall giue and incline themselues to be diligent hearers for the obteining of knowledge in surgerie, as whether he be learned or vnlearned that shall become an auditor or hearer of the lecture, he may find himselfe not to repent the time so imploied. First twise a weeke thorough out the yeare; to wit, on wednesdaies and fridaies, at ten of the clocke till eleuen, shall the reader read three quarters of an houre in Latine, and the other quarter in English, wherein that shall be plainlie declared for those that vnderstand not Latine, what was said in Latine. And the first yeare to read Horatius Morus tables, an epitome or briefe handling of all the whole art of surgerie, that is, of swellings or apostems, wounds, vlcers, bonesetting, and healing of bones broken, termed commonlie fractions, and to read Oribasius of knots and Galen of bands, such workes as haue beene long hid, and are scarselie now a daies among the learned knowen, and yet are (as the anatomies) to the first enterers in surgerie and nouices in physicke; but amongst the ancient writers and Grecians well knowne. At the end of the yeare in winter to dissect openlie in the reading place all the bodie of man especiallie the inward parts for fiue daies togither, as well before as after dinner; if the bodies may so last without annoie.

What exercises are to be followed in the said college by the will of the founder.

The first yeares exercises.

The second yeare to read Tagaultius institutions of surgerie, and onelie of swellings or apostems, and in the winter to dissect the trunke onelie of the bodie, namelie from the head to the lowest part where the members are, and to handle the muscles especiallie.

The second yeare exercises.

The third yeares, and fourth yeares exercises.

The third yeare to read of wounds onelie of Tagaultius, and in winter to make publike dissection of the head onelie. The fourth yeare to read of vlcers onlie the same author, and to anatomize or dissect a leg and an arme for the knowledge of muscles, sinewes, arteries, veines, gristles, ligaments, and tendons. The fift yeare to read the first booke of Paulus Ægineta, and in winter to make anatomie of a skeleton, & therwithall to shew & declare the vse of certeine instruments; as Scamnum Hippocratis, and other instruments for setting in of bones. The sixt yeare to read Holerius of the matter of surgerie, as of medicines for surgians to vse. And the seuenth yeare to begin againe, and continue still. A godlie and charitable erection doubtlesse, such as was the more needfull, as hitherto hath beene the want and lacke so hurtfull: sith that onelie in eche vniuersities by the foundation of the ordinarie and publike lessons, there is one of physicke, but none of surgerie, and this onelie of surgerie and not of physicke; I meane so as physicke is now taken separatelie from surgerie, and that part which onelie vseth the hand as it is sorted from the apothecarie. So that now England may reioise for those happie benefactors & singular wellwillers to their countrie, who furnish hir so in all respects, that now she may as compare for the knowledge of physicke so by means to come to it, with France, Italie, and Spaine, and in no case behind them but for a lecture in simples, which God at his pleasure may procure, in moouing some hereafter in like motion and instinct to be as carefull and beneficiall as these were to the helpe and furtherance of their countrie. ¶ At the publication of this foundation, which was celebrated with a godlie assemblie of doctors collegiats and licentiats, as also some masters of surgerie, with other students, some whereof had beene academicall; doctor Caldwell so aged that his number of yeares with his white head adding double reuerence to his person (whereof I may well saie no lesse than is left written of a doctor of the same facultie verie famous while he liued,

Ab. Fl. Spectator & auditor.

Consicienda ætas, sed & ars prouectior annis, euen he, notwithstanding his age and impotencie, made an oration in Latine to the auditorie, the same by occasion of his manifold debilities vnfinished at the direction specially of the president, who (after a few words, shortlie and swetlie vttered) gaue occasion and opportunitie to D. Forster, then and yet the appointed lecturer, to deliuer his matter, which he discharged in such methodicall maner, that eche one present indued with iudgement, conceiued such hope of the doctor, touching the performance of all actions incident vnto him by that place, as some of them continued his auditors in all weathers, and still hold out; whose diligence he requiteth with the imparting of further knowledge than the said publike lecture doth afford. When the assemblie was dissolued, and the founder accompanied home, diligent care was taken for the due preferring of this established exercise: insomuch that D. Caldwell, and D. Forster, to furnish the auditors with such bookes as he was to read, caused to be printed the epitome of Horatius Morus first in Latine: then in English, which was translated by the said doctor Caldwell. But before it was halfe perfected, the good old doctor fell sicke, and as a candle goeth out of it selfe, or a ripe apple falling from the tree, so departed he out of this world at the doctors commons, where his vsuall lodging was; & was verie worshipfullie buried. But of his death hereafter, in the yeare 1584: where the daie of his decease being mentioned, matter worth the reading shall be remembred.]
Fitmáque Pæonio non renuenda choro)

The fift and sixt yeares exercises, and so to continue with Reputo principij.

Doctor Gilford president of the college of physicians.

Francis of Valois, the kings onlie brother, duke of Louthier, Brabant, Limbourgh, Gelders, Anion, Alanson, &c: earle of Flanders, Holland, Zeland, &c: marquesse of the sacred empire, lord of Friseland, &c: hauing now indifferentlie well (with his his good successes had in the vittelling, and removing the seges of Cambrete and Lochem, and winning the townes of Alast and Endonan) gotten the harts of the people, and by that meanes placed his Frenchmen in Dunkirke, Winerburgh, Dixmide, Dermond, Vilnord, and other places, thought now (vsing yong & euill counsell) to make himselfe a more absolute prince, as though it were too base a thing for his highnesse to rule with the aduise of the estates of the countries. Wherfore hauing come to him out of France the marshall Biron, with great troops of Swissers and Frenchmen, he now causeth them all at one time; to wit, on the seuenth of Januarie, to inuade so manie townes as they could make themselues maisters of; which with them toke effect in the aboue named townes, but at Bridges they were put out. And at Antwerpe on the said seuenth daie, vnder the pretense to muster his armie without the towne, vpon the verie none time of the daie, when the citizens were at dinner, he causeth two gates (as vncerteine by which he would go) to be opened for him, and the chaines ouerthwart the streets to be vnchained, which (for some suspicion had of the Frenchmen without) were locked: then he issued out with all his court and a great number of gentlemen, verie braue, mounted on great horsses aboue two hundred, manie of them being secretlie armed vnder their garments, and comming to saint Iames gate. At the bridge without met him certeine of his companies of horssemen and footmen, who staied themselues on both sides the waie, making as it were a lane for the duke to passe by with a few of his: who being past them, made a token to them with his cap, to inuade the citie: whereupon his men killed the watch, with the coronell Vlerendell, that stood bare headed to see their prince passe. Then entred the gate seuentæne ensignes of footmen, and foure coronels of horssemen, the Swissers following, & the duke crieng to them, March, march, La ville est gagnee, mais me pillon point. Being thus stronglie entred they cried, Ville gagnee viue la messe, and toke in on both sides the bulworks, turned the ordinance towards the citie, & came by diuers streets almost to the midst of the citie. The citizens at dinner hearing the alarum, verie furiouslie issued out, with such weapons as first came to their hands, and set vpon them, first, by the bylanes, other some chained vp the streets, and so barred them from going anie further. They turne all against the soldiors that were entred the citie with most violent shot. In the meane space the citizens nere and about the gate with their harquebussers bestow their small shot as thicke as haile out of windowes vpon the gate, where first they killed a horsse, and then diuers men entring, which troubled the other following, that a great number was euen in the verie gate killed, and so heaped one vpon another that the gate was stopped; wherby all that were entred within the citie, in lesse than in one houres space were killed or taken prisoners. Wherein the citizens behaued themselues so valiantlie, & so manlie, that manie for lacke of leaden pellets, toke their monie out of their purses, bowed it with their teeth, and put it in stead of pellets in their harquebussers:

Francis of Valois attempteth diuerse exploits, the issue whe. of fell out to his misfortune.

Sic sese & sobolem charam, cum vxore mariti
Defendunt, Gallis ne præda voracibus esset.

In this skirmish of so little space were slaine aboue 1530 Frenchmen horssemen and footmen, told at the burieng, and more than two thousand prisoners taken, amongst the which were the earle Fernaugus, the bishop of Constance, and manie other notable personages. And amongst the dead were the earle of saint Agnan and his sonne, the earle of Chasteaurousse, the sonne of the marshall of France Biron: monsieur de Saisonall gouernor of Vilnord, the sonne of the lord Straubean, and others. A maruellous act of citizens in their defense without anie soldiors, against old soldiors and tried men of armes, and number of so great nobilitie. A maruellous continencie & clemencie of rough citizens against their enimies, in keeping their hands from the killing of prisoners whome they had in their power, and surelie a wonderfull worke of God.

The monsieurs ambition spreading like a canker.

The French gentlemen ware armor vnder their garments: with good meaning no doubt.

Noblemen & other French taken prisoners.

Noblemen of France slaine

The prince of Orange with others had refused to go forth, and his danger was not small; with other gentlemen more, and lords of the religion. The prince Dolphin, the earle Lamall and others were with the duke lokers on, and intercessors for their friends whom they reckoned dead. After that fact, the duke with his campe was forced for lacke of vittels and necessaries, to retire him with his armie toward Machlin, and from thense with great difficultie passing great waters, with losse of manie a man got to Dermond, where he was kept in by the generall Norris, with three and twentie ensignes Englishmen and Scots, so that he lacked vittels and necessaries, whereby he was forced, as also to haue his prisoners restored, to enter into a treatie with the estates, to surrender all the townes by his men possessed, and to retire him to Dunkirke: where further with the estates, by intercession of princes was hoped a reconcilement to be made. But he seeing the countrie vnwilling, and finding himselfe sicke (as it was thought) of melancholie, he retired from Dunkirke toward France. And so as he was retired, the prince of Parma for king Philip, caused Dunkirke to be besieged, few Frenchmen left within it. And as the estates Generall and the prince of Orange would haue sent thither to rescue the towne, the marshall Biron with his Frenchmen and Swissers, the Flemings cheeflie they of Gaunt, partlie for hatred of the French, and partlie that manie now were become Spanish, would not suffer him to come ouer into Flanders, whereby Dunkirke was forced to surrender: and this losse being imputed to the duke, increased his sickenesse, so that he died at Chasteau Thierie the tenth of Julie 1583, & was rotallie buried at saint Diones by Paris.

Francis duke of Anion and Alanson retireth.

Generall Norris with 23. ensignes.

Francis duke of Alanson and of Anion sickeneth.

The monsieur was glad to retire notwithstanding this confident clamor.

¶ But before we passe the absolute cõmemoration of the monsieur, sith in some remembrances we haue atteined to a perfection, it shall not be amisse here to anner the manner of his sickenesse, as also the verie speeches which he vttered, as they are reported by James Verson Parisien, preacher to the French king, and to the said monsieur, in a discourse by him published, vnder the title of A funerall complaint, &c. Wherein whatsoeuer is spoken, deserueth the greater credit, for that the said Verson was vpon his owne certeine knowledge able to giue out the truth, and therfore intimateth to the readers of his treatise, that they are not to loke for either flatteries, or hautie, proud, and lieng arguments: he being the man who assuredlie was able to answer and beare witnes of the pietie, religion, and departure of monsieur, a sonne of France, and the kings onelie brother in the fauor of God, as the same vpon whome he reposed himselfe concerning his conscience, soule and saluation; and hauing from the beginning of his sickenes administred vnto him the holie sacrament, and did assist him to the end. You are therfore to vnderstand, that after * my said lords crosse haps and danger of life in the low countries, and his returne into his duchie of Castle Thierie, his naturall & brotherlie resolution taken to go alone to Paris, there to yeeld himselfe to his maiesties armes, a deed to be accounted and taken as a strong bulworke against whatsoeuer the popular and enuious slanders: after his returne home he conceiued an extreame contentation in dailie hearing of sermons, yea not satisfied with the

Abr. Fl. ex lib. cui tit. Regret funebre, contenant le discours de la mort de Monseigneur fils de France, frere vnicque, du roy.

* Meaning Verson the monsieurs preacher and the writer of this discourse.

onelie hearing of them, he greatlie delited to talke of the same, also to haue the same repeated vnto him. Thus did our Lord in conuenient time dispose his soule, which he purposed shortlie to visit in his next sickenesse, and that was an ague that continued without equalitie vntill the thirtenth of March, and then he fell into so strange a iudgement, that all euen the physicians began to doubt of him. For a flux of bloud issued so continuallie out of his nose and mouth, that they were still forced to hold him a basen, whereinto he voided the pure and cléere bloud. When all men were as it were astonied therat, himselfe began with a perfect mind and vnderstanding to saie; My friends, helpe me, will you suffer a christian prince thus to die? Now is the time come that God will call me to account: cause monsieur Berson to come hither.

The maner of the monsieurs sickenesse.

When I came, ha monsieur Berson (said this good prince) I am dead, I must acknowledge my God; my frend flatter me not, I will reconcile my selfe. Alas I am a great sinner, will not God haue mercie on me? Will not he forgiue me? I answered, There is no dout my lord but vpon humbling your selfe before his holie maiestie with contrition, you shall obteine remission of your sinnes. My lord, you are verie sicke, I will not flatter with you, but your whole life and your selfe resteth in the hands of God. Sickenes is naturall, or sent by God for a warning; if your disease be naturall there is hope: we will vse all means for remedie. On the one side the physicians are here readie, who shall imploie themselues. On the other side, all the world is in prater & deuotion for your health. If it procéedeth from God, it is a warning to you for the rest of your life, to the end to draw you nearer to him, either else to aduertise you of your naturall condition: that is, that you are mortall & must once pate this debt, and restore your soule to God who lent it to you, at whatsoeuer time he shall call for it. Now my lord, sith we can not certeinlie discerne the one from the other, is it not best for you to conforme your will to Gods will. Also in case God granteth you to ouerliue this sickenesse, are you not resolued to better your life, and to liue more in his feare than before? Againe, if he be determined to call you out of this world, are not you content to go into Abrahams bosome, and there to rest vnder the protection of his mercie? Resolue your selfe my lord, you haue a godlie soule.

Berson. Words of comfort to the monsieur, whether his disease were naturall, or proceeding from God.

I am (said this good prince) fullie resolued in the will of my God, let him do with me whatsoeuer shall please him: onelie that he will vouchsafe to haue mercie on me. I wold reconcile me but I shall hardlie speake: and in truth the bloud still belched out into the basen which *I held with one hand, whilest with a handkercher in the other I wiped from his face and brest a great cold sweat that euen smelt of death: as also I perceiued his nostrils to be closed vp, his eies sunke, and heard the ratling and bloud that stopped him vp. Euerie bodie being gone forth I said vnto him, My lord straine not your selfe to speake much, onelie begin with the chiefest matters, and those that most trouble your conscience, and for the rest I will instruct you. Then ioining his hands and lifting vp his eies vnto heauen, he began to sigh, mourne, and sob with extreame contrition and griefe, which when I perceiued, I still indeuoured to allure him in talking to him of God and of the merits of the bloud of Iesus Christ, wherein the greater delight that he conceiued, the more did he detest himselfe as a most miserable sinner: then might you haue séene among much sweat which as pearles ran downe his haire and beard, the great teares trickeling downe his eies, whiles with great paine he accused himselfe.

The monsieurs resolute to die.

* Namelie * Berson.

After this, diuerse spéeches passed with certeine actions betweene the monsieur and Berson, which to omit is lesse offensiue than to publish. To procéed then, the monsieur lieng in his agonie, bethought him (amongest other things) of his familie, and said; Alas I mone none but my poore seruants, & withall, that I shall die without celebration of mine Easter: will not the Lord grant me that grace? Then *I promised him that God would heare so iust a petition, and therefore willed him a while to haue patience, it should not be the first miracle that euer our Lord had wrought. Hauing thus spoken, certeine ceremonies were solemnlie commensed and finished, not without manie spæches interchanged betweene the monsieur and Berson; insomuch that (saith he) I can not rehearse all that he said vnto me; but this I dare assure you, that if his health had continued, I was thereby in hope of most profitable effects to all christendome, and to the estate and quietnesse of our France. But we were not worthie, our sinnes crieng for vengeance to God, who as he punisheth nations by giuing them wicked princes, so doth he also chastise them by taking from them the good, euen at such time as they are readie to releeue vs, and afterward we haue cause to lament and mourne.

*Berson who was then busie about certeine ceremonies incident to the time and his office.

Great hope conceiued of the monsieur if he had not béene preuented with death.

His health after this first fit continued a while, but by reason of a crum of bread that stucke in the vuula, and thereby procured a violent cough with spitting of bloud, he fell into it againe, and from thenseforth kept his bed, sometimes well and sometimes ill, yet eating his meat reasonablie well, howbeit gathering no force to the substance of his bodie. Finallie, the same daie that the physicians (after the view of the operation of a medicine) had conceiued a better opinion of him than before; being saturdaie the ninth of June about eight of the clocke at night, he was taken with a maruellous shortnesse of wind, and a paine in one of his sides: and séeing himselfe so taken before anie man spake to him, he sent for me, saieng; Now is the time that I must die, you haue greatlie abused me; howbeit they vsed all diligence. But about midnight, when there was no further hope, they sent for me. When I was come I found the good prince laid in his estate, of whome trulie I had no other opinion but that death was at hand, and therefore was verie importunat to speake vnto him, fearing least he should haue died without the sacrament, which so greatlie he had longed for.

The monsieur falleth into an extremitie of his maladie, and past hope of recouerie.

One commendable matter I noted in the nobilitie there present, which was; that there was not one but did importunatlie vrge to speake vnto him of God: for mine owne part I was verie vnpatient, & euerie one was in feare to speake first. One there was that willed me to change mine apparell, & to put on a blacke garment, least he should conceiue anie mistrust. How (said I) can I so do? He hath sent for me, and knoweth my clothing: if by my spéech he should know me, and then find my clothing changed, he will enter a greater apprehension of death than before: therefore consider of it, if anie thing fall out amisse, it will be a perpetuall reproch to vs all. In the end monsieur Fougier his steward a verie wise man so ordered the matter, and with such discretion, that he brake with him of it. At that time was he ouercome with a drowsie slæpe, and still holden with a short wind, accompanied with continuall sweats, and sometime would aske; Do men die thus? On the tenth daie of June which was sundaie, after diuers ceremoniall actions dispatched, and spéeches to and fro vttered, with pitifull sighs on all sides of inward setled sorow; the monsieur desired that he might slæpe a while: but his slæpe was not long yer he awaked, when betwixt him and Berson (all the rest being gone) something was said and done, which which (belike) was not for euerie eare & eie to heare or see. In the end, Berson perceiuing by manifest indications, that death preased vpon him, vsed these words to the monsieur, some (of likelihood) being then within the hearing. My lord, in the beginning of your sickenesse, you & I made a ioint promise vnto God, wherwith I am burdened: now therefore I do vnburden my selfe thereof, vnlesse you will helpe to burden me againe. We are witnesses that you haue loued God: now is the time that you must acknowledge him, you are verie sicke, but your soule is sound in your bodie. If it please our good God to grant you life, he granteth it to the end you should amend; so should your selfe be happie, and we content that you should liue. If he vouchsafe to call you into paradise, how blessed shall you be, or where may you be better? So that what soeuer happen, be it life, be it death, still shall you be content and happie. Resolue your selfe therefore wholie in the will of God. All we here are your faithfull seruants, and those who euermore haue desired to be so fortunate as to be honored with your commandements; whose eies and eares haue alwaies beene open to heare and obeie you, and to fulfill your will; neuer did you command anie thing, but you were immediatlie obeied. Now know you, that your selfe are Gods seruant; him you must obeie, and to his will must you wholie resolue your selfe: whether it be his will you should liue, or is his pleasure you should die still saie: His will be done.

Do men die thus? saith the monsieur drawing to his end.

Berson's words to the monsieur in the hearing of diuerse gentlemen present.

His will (meaning Gods) be done, saith the monsieur with a forced speech on his death bed.

Then with a forced speech this good prince said: His will be done. Take no care my lord said I, for anie worldlie matters. Greatnesse, riches, and renowme do perish. Paradise is to be found and possessed. It is a great matter to be a kings sonne, but it is much greater to be the child of God. You are now as a child new borne, you want nothing but the food of the children of God: you haue no more to do, but to communicat in the pretious bodie of our Lord: it is here readie, would you not gladlie haue it? I will cause you easilie to die it. He answered yes. Then taking the holie sacrament I began to saie vnto him: My Lord Iesus the heauenlie word and euerlasting sonne of God, in old time inuisible, did in the end visiblie manifest himselfe to the world in humane flesh, by taking vpon him our visible and passible nature: but because he was not perpetuallie to remaine in this humane vale, reuiuing and ascending into heauen, we had him no longer to touch and handle carnallie and visiblie. And therefore to the end not to faile of his promise, that he would be still with vs vntill the consummation of the world; he hath giuen vs inuisiblie his pretious bodie & bloud vnder these holie signes and sacraments, that by the communion in such and so pretious a gift, we might be strengthened in his loue, & through his grace be defended against all temptations & stumbling blocks of our saluation: like as Elias, who in the strength of the food for him miraculouslie ordeined, after his sleepe trauelled long iournies, euen vntill he did see God. Receiue therefore this signe and testimonie of the remission of your sinnes, and when you shall be presented before the maiestie of God, it shall be vnto you a badge and token that you belong vnto him.

The institution and vse of the sacrament of the bodie and bloud of Christ.

Then lifting vp his eies and looking all about him, this good prince opened his mouth, which presentlie I moistened with his drinke, & so gaue him the holie sacrament, and againe powred in some of his drinke to swallow it withall, which he did both deuoutlie and couragiouslie; insomuch that afterward he did eat & speake better than he had done all the night & morning before, to the great contentation of all the companie: in whose presence I did againe exhort him saieng: Now my lord, behold you are armed with the cheefe of all your desire, I beseech you comfort your selfe in the Lord. It is a great fauour that he hath shewed you, in making you (as it appeareth) inheritor vnto the faith, pietie, and christiantie of the kings of France, whose faith and descent you do hold.

Berson's exhortatorie speeches to the monsieur, preparing and setting himselfe to Godward.

Let your soule now resolue, yea although you should now die. Thinke what a contentation vnto you it shall be, to be discharged from so manie worldlie affaires, what a pleasure to exchange this mortall life for an immortall, glorious and perdurable life; feare no lets: the waie is alreadie beaten, alreadie are they passed the same, whose greatnesse & faith you do insue. The patriarchs do tarie for you, the prophets do call you: the apostles do stretch forth their armes vnto you: the martyrs do inuite you: the confessors do solicit you: the virgins do giue you place: all the saints do looke for you. We haue discharged all the duties of faithfull seruants, and such as loue you hartilie. And hauing thus spoken, with a demand or two made, and their answers added: Berson, being the mouth of the residue, said of the monsieur drawing on; that they (meaning himselfe and the companie present) waited but for the houre of his death: yet had he one houre and a halfe to liue. So soone as we were gone, he desired to haue his head laid lower: his chamberleine immediatlie called to vs for helpe, & suddenlie he gaue vp the ghost: my selfe James Berson, at the dissolution of his swæt soule from his louelie bodie, vsing these words: Go and passe on christian soule, and returne to him that hath created thee, &c.

The monsieurs departure out of this world like a lamp, whose light faileth for want of oile.

He went awaie so swætlie that it could hardlie be perceiued, insomuch that some who could not be persuaded that he was dead (for his eies were open and cleere, and his countenance no whit changed) held a looking glasse to his mouth, but there was no signe of life: others feeling his pulses, imagined they did beat, but that was bicause they were stretched euen to the nailes ends. At this word, He is gone, oh what pitie! oh God what tears! what sighes! what sobs! all was dissolued into howling and cries: those that in armor were forwardest, were now readiest in teares, sundrie swouned in the chamber, at the sound hereof the towne quaked, the castell sounded most lamentable voices: yea my selfe hauing lost all courage was forced to open the pole of my head, and to vnstop the gate of my hart, to the end with teares and lamentations to discharge that affection which I bare vnto him.

Marueilous signes of inward loue & rared affection towards the monsieur departed.

About foure of the clocke, when all were departed I tooke the linnen wherein he was lapped from about the bodie of this good prince, then did I lade and order it honestlie and with reuerence handled it, some of vs also had so good hap as to kisse his hands & head. Oh my good lord and master, neuer durst I haue beene so bold, had it not beene for the confidence you reposed in me: alas whie was it so late before I did know you, to serue you so small a time? Infinitlie am I forced to print you in my remembrance, ingraue you in my soule, and to burie you in my hart, for that you vouchsafed to make mine eares gardians of that which rested in your conscience. Mourne, mourne with me my masters, and all ye the officers of his house: we haue lost the best master in the world, for euer shall the tenth date of June beare witnesse of our mishap: hereafter shall we neuer vpon that date haue occasion to hold merie feast betweene twelue and one of the clocke, the houre of the decease of so desired a prince. The yeare 1584 is indeed a yeare of reuolution. France, France, quarter thine armes, & in lieu of lions sow in teares: for the Lord taketh from vs all our noble & honorable, and taketh the god to depriue vs of them, for my part I will beare thee companie. Moreouer for his trespasses I do giue him flowres, and for his bodie in ashes the lamentations of Flanders, at the least I inherit in his right an example of vertue, accounting my selfe infinitlie bounden vnto their maiesties, who gaue me to do the seruice apertеining to my ministerie, vnto a prince that loued me so much, and in whose house all men honored me, whose oratо I do most deuoutlie rest, desiring them to haue patience, though for recompense they haue no more but my selfe. Requiescat in pace. This is all that we purposed to saie touching the monsieur, hauing omitted much that is not communicable, & now will we turne our pen vpon passage to England, noting occurrents of our owne.]

These be verie Speculæ & Lachrymarum fontes indeed.

For he was preacher, ser to the mounsieur and lost dimidium animæ suæ by his death.

Ground remoued.

The thirteenth daie of Januarie, in the parish of Ermitage in a place called Blacke more in Dorsetshire, a peece of ground conteining three acres remoued from the place where it was first planted, and was caried cleane ouer an other close, where alder and willow trees grew, the space of fortie goad (euerie goad conteining fiftéene fot) and hath stopped vp an high waie that directed towards the market towne of Cerne; and yet notwithstanding the hedges wherewith it was inclosed, inuiron it still, and the trées stand thereon bolt vpright, sauing one oke tree, that is well nigh twentie goads remoued: the place whereas the ground had his being at the first is left like vnto a great hollow pit. The same thirteenth daie of Januarie, being sundaie, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone, the old and vnderpropped scaffolds round about the beare garden, commonlie called Paris garden, on the southside the Thames, ouer against the citie of London, ouercharged with people fell suddenlie downe, whereby to the number of eight persons men and women were slaine, and manie other sore hurt and bruised. A frendlie warning to all such as more delight themselues in the cruеltie of beasts, to see them rent one an other, than in the works of mercie, which are the fruits of a true professed faith, and ought to be the sabboth daies exercise: and not onelie a warning to works of mercie, but a watchword to put vs in mind how we violate the sabboth daie, the Lords owne daie, which he sanctified himselfe, that we by his example might sanctifie the same, and not prophane it with such gentilisme as we do, as though God would not call vs to a reckoning for abusing his holie ordinances, and falsifieng the glorious title of christians in our odious actions: for the which God will seuerelie expostulat with vs, and with indignation demand of vs why we take his lawes in our mouths, & renounce them in our minds; why we let them swim in our lips, and slip from our liues, as the vaine Iewes did, vnto whome God said in displeasure as followeth:

Eight persons killed by the fall of a scaffold at the beare garden, a warning to prophaners of the sabboth daie.

Quid de lege mea declamas ore profano?
Non hoc officij debuit esse tui:
Cùm tamen & mores & leges oderis æquas,
Et verbi officium neglegis omne mei.

Eob. Hess. in Psal. 50.

On the third of Februarie being sundaie, William Bruistar habardasher (a man of more than threescore yeares old) being lodged ouer the southwest porch of saint Brides church in Flétstréet, with a woman named Marie Breame (whome the same Bruistar had bailed out of Bridewell) were both found smothered to death, in maner following. On the same sundaie in the morning, a marriage being solemnized in that church, a strong sauour was felt, which was thought to haue béene the burning of old shoes or such like, in some gentlemans chamber there about, thereby to suppresse the infection of the plague. But in the afternoone before euening praier, the parishioners espied a smoke to issue out of William Bruistar and Marie Breame smothered to death.

Bruistars chamber, and thereupon made hast to the doore, which they found fast locked, and were forced to breake it open, but could not enter, till they had ripped vp the lead and roose of the chamber to let out the smothering stench: which being done, they found Bruistar dead, sitting on a settle by his beds side (in his apparell, and close trussed) his right thigh & right arme vp to the elbow burnt or scorched with the fire of a small pan of coales that stood before him, but now being cleane quenched with the dampe or lacke of aire. The woman also laie dead ouer the pan, so that hir armes were likewise burnt, with the nether part of hir bodie before to hir brest, and behind to the shoulders, and nothing else in the chamber burnt, but the bottome of the settle whereon Bruistar sat. Of this lamentable accident people talked diuerslie, and pamphlets were published to make the same more knowne: howbeit, to leaue the certeine meanes of the euent to his knowledge that vnderstandeth and séeth all things, let it be a warning to all ages so to liue, as that an honest report may attend their death, & shame flie from them as a cloud before the wind:

Sic sapient, sic non insipientes erunt.

1583

A man and a woman hanged at Shoolane end.

On the sixteenth of Aprill about six of the clocke in the morning, Thomas Wroth & Alice Shepheard, were hanged on a gibbet at Shoolane end in Flétstréet, for killing of a prentice in the same Shoolane. Also on the same daie about eight of the clocke in the morning, a gunpowder house, called the signe of the gun in Fetterlane nére vnto Flétstréet, and diuerse other houses nére adioining, were blowne vp, with the spoire of fiftie hundred weight of powder: two men and one woman were slaine, & diuerse other persons, as well men as women and children were sore hurt; some blasted with the flame, some bruised with the fall of timber vpon them, &c.

The gunpowder house in Fetterlane blowne vp.

Albertus Alasco, frée baron of Lasco, Vaiuode, or palatine of Siradia in Poland, arriued at Harwich in Essex, and on the last of Aprill came by water to Winchester house in Southwarke, where he remained for the most part of his abode here: of whome more hereafter at his returne into his owne countrie. Elias Thackar tailor was hanged at saint Edmunds burie in Suffolke on the fourth of June, and John Coping shoomaker on the first of the same moneth, for spreading and maintеining certeine bookes seditiousлie penned by one Robert Browne against the receiued booke of English common praier, established by the lawes of this realme their bookes (so manie as could be found) were burned before them. This yeare on the ninth of June deceased Thomas Ratclife earle of Sussex, lord chamberleine to hir maiestie, and knight of the garter, at Barmundsey in the borough of Southwarke besides London, and was on the eight of Julie next following conueied through the same citie of London toward Newhall in Essex, there to be buried in forme following. First went on fot before him fortie and fiue poore men in blacke gownes, then on horsebacke one hundred and twentie seruingmen in blacke coats, then ninetie and fiue gentlemen in blacke gownes or cloakes, besides the heralds at armes and other, which bare his helme, creast, sword, coat of armes, and banners of armes, &c. Then the deceased earle, couered with a pall of blacke veluet, in a chariot likewise couered with blacke veluet, drawne with foure goodlie geldings; next after was led the earles steed couered with blacke veluet, then sir Henrie Ratclife the succeeding erle chiefe mourner, and eight other lords all in blacke, then the lord maior and his brethren the aldermen of London riding in murrie gownes, then on fot the gentlemen of Greis in, and last of all the worshipfull companie of the merchant tailors of London in their liueries, Palatine of Siradia in Poland came into England.

Elias Thackar, and John Coping hanged at Berrie.

Thomas Ratclife earle of Sussex deceased.

uerties, for that the said earle was a brother of their companie, as manie noble men, and famous princes, kings of this realme before him had beene; as more at large is declared in * the summarie of the chronicles of England, in the eightéenth yeare of king Henrie the seuenth. The maior and aldermen, the gentlemen of Greis in, and the merchant tailors accompanied the corps to the barres without Aldgate, and returned. This was the end of that nobleman, who (whiles he liued) aduentured life and life against the enimies of the English commonwelth, and therefore in respect of his excellent seruices, deserued no lesse remembrance than is alreadie extant of him in print, whereof this following is a parcell:

*I. Stow.

——satrapas prætlarus, fortis & audax,
Elisabetha tui speciosi corporis acer
Et fidus custos, discrimen adire paratus
Quodlibet, inuicto Mauortis pectore tempo?
Cui virtus persæpè herbam porrexit Hibernus,
Quem pugnis fulgens ornat victoria parta
Sanguineis, sed laus huic maxima iudicis æqui.

Edmund Grindall archbishop of Canturburie deceassed,

Edmund Grindall doctor of diuinitie archbishop of Canturburie deceassed at Croidon in Surrie on the first date of Julie, & was there buried. This good man in his life time was so studious, that his booke was his bride, and his studie his bridechamber, wherupon he spent both his eiesight, his strength, and his health, and therefore might verie well not actiuelie but passiuelie be named as (he was) Grindall: for he grond himselfe euen to his graue by mortification. Of whome much might be spoken for others imitation (sith the vse of the historie, is to instruct succeeding ages) but this shall suffice, that as his learning & vertue were inseparable companions; so the reward of both is the good name which he hath left behind him as a monument perpetuall, bicause vertue was the founder of the same: according to the true saieng of the late poet imporing no lesse:

Abr. Hart. in R. L.

Virtutis merces eadem & labor, illa tropheum est,
Solaque dat nigræ vincere mortis iter:
Nam nisi virtutis quæratur gloria factis,
Omnis in extremis est abitura rogis.

Iustice Randolfe his charitie of one thousand nine hundred pounds,

Barnard Randolfe esquier, common sargeant to the citie of London, deceassed on the seauenth of August. This man in his life time, somewhat before his death, gaue and deliuered to the companie of the Fishmongers in London the summe of nine hundred pounds, of good and lawfull monie of England to be imploied towards the conducting of Thames water, cestterning the same in lead, and castelling with stone in the parishes of saint Marie Magdalene, and saint Nicholas cold abbeie, neere vnto old Fishstréet, seauen hundred pounds. The other two hundred pounds, to paie for euer yearelie the summe of ten pounds, that is, towards the maintenance of a poore scholar in the vniuersitie of Oxenford yearelie foure pounds. Towards the mending of the high waies in the parish of Tilehurst, in the countie of Sussex, where the said Barnard was borne, euerie yeare foure pounds. And to the poore people of the parishes of saint Nicholas Olive in Bredstréet and saint Marie Magdalene neere to old Fishstréet foure shillings, to wit, twentie shillings to either parish for euer. More he willed and bequeathed by his last will and testament to be bestowed in land or annuities, to the releefe of the poore inhabiting in the wards of Queenehithe, and castell Bainard in the citie of London, and in the aforesaid parish of Tilehurst in the countie of Sussex, the summe of one thousand pounds.

Beuroners apprehended and executed.

This yeare in the moneth of June, were sent to the seas, a ship called the barke Talbot, and a small barke, both manned with a hundred men, vnder the charge of William Borough esquier, clerke of hir maiesties nauie, for the apprehending of certeine outragious searouers, who for that they were manie in number, and well appointed (contemning the small strength that was set out against them) so boldlie behaued themselues, as that shortlie after it was confidentlie vttered, that they had vanquished in fight the said ship and barke. But within few daies after, beyond all expectation, they were by the said William Borough and his companie discomfited and taken, to the number of ten saile (whereof three were pinses) & some of the chiefe pirats, namelie Thomas Walton alias Purser, Clinton Atkinson, William Ellis, William Valentine alias Bagh, Thomas Beuen and foure more, on the thirtith of August were hanged at Wapping in the ooze beside London. Walton as he went to the gallowes rent his venecian breeches of crimsin taffata, and distributed the same peecemeale, to such his old acquaintance as stood neere about him: but Atkinson had before giuen his murrie veluet dublet with great gold buttons, and the like coloured veluet venecians laid with great gold lace (apparell too sumptuous for searouers) which he had worne at the seas, & wherein he was brought vp prisoner from Corfe castell in the Ile of Purbeke to London, vnto such his frends as pleased him, before he went to Wapping.

A briefe description of Clinton Atkinson and his parentage.

¶ This Clinton Atkinson (a personable fellow, tall of stature and well proportioned, of acceptable behauiour when he kept shop for himselfe, being a free man of London, and like enough to doo well if he had taken good waies) had his name of the late earle of Lincolne now deceassed, who christened him being an infant, & by whose speciall meanes (being growne a proper man) he was not long before saued from the like death, and yet thorough want of grace making relapse, fell within danger of law. He descended of honest parents, his father specially being a man of verie honest name, one that loued the truth, for the testimonie wherof he forsoke his owne natiue countrie, leading a hard life with his familie beyond the seas in queene Maries daies: & returning to England at the inthronization of our gratious queene Elisabeth in the seat royall, was made minister, in which vocation he died in Gods fauour, and the good opinion of his neighbors, leuing behind him (among other sonnes) this his eldest, sorted (as you see) to the shame, which malefactors of that qualitie, and so conuinced, can not auoid. This auoweth he that knew the man as well as the right hand from the left. Where (to conclude) we are to marke that it is not alwaies true, that good parents haue good children: for here is an example of degeneration, procured not by euill education (for this Clinton wanted no good bringing vp) but by bad companie and libertie, the verie spoile of many a one that otherwise might liue & thriue. Wherin by the way we are to wonder at the counsels of God, who suffreth children so much to varie from their parents in qualitie, as if they had not receiued their birthright, but were bastards & changlings: but to end with the prophet Dauids saieng:

Companie & libertie bring manie to miserie.

Intima consilij non penetranda Dei.

An heretike John Lewes burned at Norwich. See pag. 1299.

On the eightéenth daie of September, John Lewes, who named himselfe Abdoit, an obstinate heretike, denieng the godhead of Christ, and holding diuers other detestable heresies (much like to his predecessor Matthew Hamont) was burned at Norwich. On the two and twentith of September Albertus de Lasco, palatine of Siradia in Poland, before spoken of, now when he had well viewed the order of our English court and nobilitie; with other places of this realme, especiallie the vniuersitie of Oxenford, &c. taking leaue of hir maiestie, and of the nobilitie, he departed towards Poland. But before we make entrance into further occurrents, it shall not be amisse amisse to touch some necessarie circumstances of remembrance.

Palatine of Siradia in Poland returned.

A description of Albertus his person, apparell, &c.

This Albertus in the eies of the most, whereof some knew him, that might hardlie commend him, estéemed him a man for making well proportioned, of an indifferent tall stature, of countenance amiable, and complexion English like, having a white beard of such length and bredth, as that lieng in his bed, and parting it with his hands, the same ouerspred all his brest and shoulders, himselfe greatlie deliting therein, and reputing it an ornament: as for his qualities (apparant vnto the world) they were generous, his vtterance swéet, his wit plausible, in the knowledge of tongs well seene: his ordinarie attire scarlet, but when he presented himselfe to hir maiestie, a robe or gowne of purple veluet, with other habiliments and furniture agréeable; his shoes of a strange fashion, supposed of some not altogither vnlike Chaucers. Finallie, a gallant fellow he was, & (as might be gathered by some words spoken by him in *open audience) more Martiall than Mercuriall; verie active in respect of his age, and also studious in diuerse faculties, &c.

*At Oxenford, where he termed the Latine that he spake Militare Latinum, that is, souldiers Latine.

Touching the interteinement which he had at Oxenford, and how the vniuersitie did congratulate his comming, it is somewhat worth the noting. In the moneth of June, the said Albertus de Lasco, comming from the marriage of the lord Morris his daughter, with sir A. Paulets eldest sonne at Ricot, he put himselfe on the waie to Oxenford; wherof the vniuersitie (doctor Houenden then vicechancellor, & maister Leison with maister Edes proctors) hauing intelligence, prouided for his conuenient receiuing: insomuch that in the waie to Oxenford, there met him doctor Westfailing, who greeted him with a pithie salutation. In like sort did the maior and his brethren, in whose behalfe for the whole citie, the towne clerke a worshipfull maister of art, pronounced his short and sententious speech in Latine, not without some gratulatorie gift from that corporation. On the east gate wherat he entered, stood a consort of musicians, who for a long space made verie swæt harmonie, which could not but moue & delight:

Inscia plebs populúsque arrectis auribus astat,
Dulciferumque rudi suscipit aure melos.

The lord Morris his daughter maried to sir A. Paulet his eldest sonne.

All vp the high street vnto saint Maries church, on either side the waie, were decentlie marshalled scholers in their gownes & caps, batchelors and maisters in their habits and hoods. At saint Maries the orator of the vniuersitie (notable in his faculte) presented him a booke, in which were closelie couched verie rich and gorgeous gloues. From thense he marched to Christs church, where he was whilest he abode in the vniuersitie most honourablie interteined. And the first night being vacant, as in which he sought rather rest in his lodging than recreation in anie academicall pastimes, strange fire works were shewed, in the great quadrangle, besides rockets and a number such maner of deuises. On the second date, his first dinner was made him at Allsoules college, where (besides dutifull receiuing of him) he was solemnelie satisfied with scholerlie exercises and courtlie fare. This night & the night insuing, after sumptuous suppers in his lodging, he personaly was present with his traine in the hall, first at the plaieng of a pleasant comedie intituled Rivales; then at the setting out of a verie statelie tragedie named Dido, wherein the quænes banket (with Eneas narration of the destruction of Troie) was liuelie described in a marchpaine patterne, there was also a goodlie sight of hunters with full crie of a kennell of hounds, Mercurie and Iris descending and ascending from and to an high place, the tempest wherein it hailed small confects, rained rosewater, and shew an artificiall kind of snow, all strange, marueilous, & abundant.

The welcomming of Albertus to the vniuersitie of Oxenford, with a partile description of his interteinment.

Store of rosewater, and haile of sugar confects, &c.

Most of the actors were of the same house, six or seauen of them were of saint Johns, & three or foure of other colleges & hals. His second dinner the third daie was at Magdalen college, with oratorie welcomming & bountifull feasting. His third dinner the fourth daie at New college. The eloquent spéech in Gréeke Latine and Dutch with his owne vnstudied answer therevnto, & all other before rehersed, are not to be omitted; nor the publike philosophie, physike, and diuinitie disputations, in all which those learned opponents, respondents, & moderators, quited themselues like themselues, sharplie and soundlie, besides all other solemne sermons & lectures. At afternoone the fourth & last daie, he went towards Woodstocke manour, and without the north gate by the waie he was inuited vnto a banket at saint Johns college, where the gates & outward wals ouercouered with thousands of verses, & other emblematicall poetries then offered him, argued their hartie goodwils: but his hasting to his iournies end caused him not to tarie the delicat banket; yet onelie staieng the deliuerie of a swæt oration and his owne quicke wittie replie therevnto, he departed immediatlie, accompanied for a mile or two with the most of those reuerend doctors and heads of houses all on horssebacke, where the orator againe gaue him an orators fare well. And this is the somme of his interteinement, not deliuered in such sort as the dignitie of the same requireth; howbeit sufficient for a sudden remembrance.

Doctor whitegift archbishop of Canturburie.

On the three & twentith daie of September, John Whitegift doctor of diuinitie, sometimes maister of Trinitie colledge in Cambridge, and afterwards bishop of Worcester, was at Lambhith translated to the archbishoprike of Canturburie, where he at his comming to Lambehith (as also elsewhere he alwaies did) gaue euident testimonies both of mindfulnesse and thankefulnesse for his aduancements: as by the three tables hanging at the vpper end of his great chamber appeareth: their position in this sort. In the midst hir maiesties armes rotall artificiallie wrought, with as much cunning as the painter by his pencill could describe them: and vnder them this distichon of thankesgiuing, and welwishing:

Alluſio ad D. archiep. nomen.

Nestoreos fœlix regat Elisabetha per annos,
*Quæ mihi munificè * Candida dona dedit.*

On the right side, the armes of the sée of Canturburie of azure, a pall siluer garnished with crosses formé fiche sable ouer a crosse portatile gold: to the lower end whereof this distichon is fairelie fixed:

Ab. Hart. quondam Cant. & Trinitarius.

En leue multiplici premeretur cuspide corpus,
Ni baculus Christi grande leuaret onus.

On the left side are placed the ancient armes of the sée of Worcester, from the which he was translated, which are of siluer, ten torteaux, foure, three, two, one: with this distichon thereunto annexed:

Qui crucis arumnas patitur, post fata triumphat,
Lilia sic spondent fuluis coniuncta talentis.

Ouer & aboue the arms of both the said sées is his graces posie, Vincit qui patitur: a deserued posie, and iustified by his actions. The tenth of October at Easter, a towne in Norffolke neere the sea coast, about two miles from Yarmouth, there was a fish of wonderfull length, by force of the wind (being then easterlie) driuen a shore, the length whereof was from the necke vnto the taile seuenteene yards and one foote, hauing a big head; for the chap of the iaw was three yards and a quarter in length, with téeth of three quarters of a yard compas, great eies, and two great holes ouer them to spout out water, hir taile was fourteene foot broad, &c: she laie in the sands, and was sonken therein a yard and a halfe déepe,

A monstrous fish taken in Norffolke.

déepe, and yet was she aboue the sands so high, that a lather of fourtéene staues would but reach to the top of hir backe; so that in thickneſse from the backe to the bellie, she was foure yards and a halfe. John Slade, sometime a schoolemaister, and John Bodie a maister of art of Oxford, being both indicted and condemned of high treason, were drawne, hanged, and quartered: Slade at Winchester on the thirtith daie of October, and Bodie at Andouar on the second daie of Nouember.

Slade and Bodie executed.

About this time, one named Ditch a notable horsestealer, was apprehended at the sessions holden for the goale deliuerie at Newgat, on the fourth of December, ninetéene times indicted, whereof he confessed eightéene: who also betwéene the time of his apprehension and the said sessions, appeached manie for stealing of horsses, whereof (diuerse being apprehended) ten of them were condemned, and hanged in Smithfield on the first daie of December, being Fridaie, and horsse market there. He also holpe diuerse more to their horsses againe which had béene stolne from them, taking of euerie one of them ten shillings the péece or more that so recouered their horsses: wherby he made fiftéene pounds of currant monie towards his charges. James earle of Desmond in Ireland, secretlie wandering without anie succour as a miserable begger, being taken in his cabbin by one of the Irishrie, his head was cut off, and sent into England, where the same (as the head of an archrebell) was set vpon London bridge on the thirteenth daie of December. Looke for the manner of his rebellion and his death more at large set downe in the historie of Ireland.

An. Reg. 26. Horsestealers hanged, ten at once in Smithfield.

Desmonds head set on London bridge.

The tenth daie of December, through negligence of vndiscréet persons, brewing in the towne of Nantwich, in a place called Waterlode; the fire being carelesſie left, toke hold (as should séeme) vpon some straw, or such light matter, & so burst forth to the roofes of the house, and in short time so increased, that from the west end of the towne (the wind at southwest) the flame was dispersed so furiouslie into the towne on the southside, that in short space a great part of the said southside and some of the eastside was burned downe to the ground. Which fire beginning at six of the clocke in the euening, and continuing till six of the clocke in the morning following, neuer ceased burning, till it had consumed aboue the number of two hundred houses, besides brew houses, barnes, stables, &c: in all about six hundred houses, so that by estimation of manie, the losse of houses and goods amounted to aboue thirtie thousand pounds, as more at large appeared by a particular booke printed of that matter. About this time, John Somerusle a furious yong man of Elstow in Warwikeshire, of late discouered and taken in his waie comming with full intent to kill the quéenes maiestie (whom God long prosper to reigne ouer vs) confessed the treason, and that he was moued thereunto in his wicked spirit, by certeine traitorous persons his kinsmen and alies, and also by often reading of certeine seditious bookes latelie published, for the which the said Somerusle, Edward Arden a squire of Parkehall in Warwikeshire, Marie Arden his wife (father and mother in law to the said Somerusle) and Hugh Hall priest, being with other before indicted at Warwike, were on the sixtéenth of December arreigned in the Guildhall of London, where they were found guiltie and condemned of high treason. On the nintéenth of December, John Somerusle, and Edward Arden, being brought from the tower of London to Newgate of the same citie, and there shut vp in seuerall places: within two hours after, Somerusle was found (desperatlie) to haue strangled himselfe. And on the morrow being the twentith of December, Edward Arden was drawne from Newgate into Smithfield, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered: whose head with Somerulles was set on London bridge, and his quarters on the gates of the citie; but the bodie of Somerusle was buried in the Morefields, néere vnto the windmils without Moregate. A dreadfull example of Gods heauie iudgement vpon those two offendors; but specially against the last, whome God deliuered to a reprobat mind, in somuch that his owne hands became his hangman, preuenting the office of the common executioner, who should haue performed that last action vpon him: whereof the iustice of God in vengeance made himselfe the finisher and fulfiller. Thus much by the waie of terror, that the remembrance hereof, by the reading & reporting of the same, maie make men euill minded, amazed at the rigorous reuengement which God taketh (when he séeth his due time) vpon the wicked: after his long sufferance and patience most wickedlie abused; wherof the poet saith:

Vltio procedit (fateor) diuina gradatim,
Nec quoties peccant fulmina vibrat eis:
Supplicy verò iusta grauitate rependit
Turpia, quæ longo tempore facta tulit.

Somerusle, Arden, and others arreigned.

Arden executed.

In this yeare 1583 (which should haue béene noted in the fore part of the yeare) by the meanes of a certeine astrologicall discourse, vpon the great and notable coniunction of the two superior planets, Saturne and Iupiter, prognosticated to be the eight and twentith of Aprill; the common sort of people, yea and no small multitude of such as thinke scorne to be called fooles, or counted beggers, whilest they were in expectation of this coniunction, were in no small imaginations, supposing that no lesse would haue béene effectuated, than by the said discourse was prophesied. Into these fansies not void of feare and mistrust they were drawne with the more facilitie, for that they had read, and heard, & pondered, and suspected, and in part beléeued the predictions of such euents as should insue by influence of that coniunction. For it was termed the great and notable coniunction, which should be manifested to the ignorant sort, by manie fierce and boisterous winds then suddenlie breaking out. It was called the greatest and most souereigne coniunction among the seuen planets: why so? Because lawes, and empires, and regions are ruled by the same: which foretelleth the comming of a prophet, & the destruction of certeine climats and parts of the earth, and new found heresies, and a new founded kingdome, and damages through the pestilence, and abundant showers: which doth prognosticat the destinie of a great and mightie king, much sorrow & heauinesse to men, losses to rich and noble men, yea and those to which are accounted and reputed like to prophets, and a multitude of locusts: which doth foreshew, that weightie and wonderfull things shall come into the world: which doth threten continuall ouerflowes of waters, and particular deluges in some countries: finallie, which menaceth much mischiefe. The publication, oft reading, and talking of this coniunction, with the remembrance of the instant wherin it should be, made manie (when the daie foretold was come) to looke for some strange apparition or vision in the aire; and withall, put them in mind of an old and common prophesie, touching the yeare 1588, which is now so rife in euerie mans mouth. That yeare was manie hundred yeares ago foretold and much spoken of amongst astrologers, who haue as it were, Vnanimi consensu, prognosticated, that either a marueilous fearfull & horrible alteration of empires, kingdoms, segniories and estates, togither likewise with other most wonderfull, and verie extraordinarie accidents,

This booke for the time that it was in request, set peoples tongs on worke, and filled their minds with strange conceipts.

Why it was called the great coniunction.

Touching the yeare of wonders, gathered to be 1588.

dents, as extreame hunger and pestilence, desperat treasons and commotions shall then fall out, to the miserable affliction and oppression of huge multitudes: or else, that an vtter and finall ouerthrowe and destruction of the whole world shall insue: which prophesie is conteined in these verses following:

Leouitius Regiomontanus.

Post mille expletos à partu Virginis annos,
Et post quingentos rursus ab orbe datos:
Octogesimus octauus mirabilis annus
Ingruet, is secum tristia fata feret.
Si non hoc anno totus malus occidet orbis,
Si non in nihilum terra, fretúmque ruet:
Cuncta tamen mundi sursum ibunt atque retrorsum,
Imperia, & luctus vndique grandis erit.

The great peare of 1588 is more talked of than feared.

So that by this prophesie, either a finall dissolution, or a wonderfull horrible alteration of the world is then to be expected. All these considerations laid together, as well the prediction of the coniunction in expectation, as also the dreadfull euents, which were to insue therevpon: and vpon the necke of these, the great peare of 1588 in euerie mans mouth, the more frequent and common by occasion of a booke extant vnder the title of the end of the world, and the second comming of Christ, made diuerse diuerslie affected; insomuch that some conuersing and conferring, looked for no lesse than was prophesied; and talking verie religiouslie, seemed as though they would become sanctified people: howbeit, the day of the coniunction being past, with a certeine counterchecke against the said astrologicall discourse in some points defectiue, and no such euents palpablie perceiued as were prognosticated; people fell to their former securitie, and condemned the discourser of extreame madnesse and follie: whereof no more but this, Scientia nullum habet sibi inimicum præter ignorantem.

When people saw nothing in the aire (as they looked for) they fell to derision.

1584

Cartar executed for printing a traitorous booke.

On the tenth of Januarie in the yeare 1584 at a sessions holden in the iustice hall in the old baillie of London for goale deliuerie of Newgate, William Cartar of the citie of London was there indicted, arreigned, and condemned of high treason, for printing a seditious and traitorous booke in English, intituled A treatise of schisme: and was for the same (according to sentence pronounced against him) on the next morrow, which was the eleuenth of Januarie, drawne from Newgate to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered. And forthwith against slanderous reports, spread abroad in seditious books, letters and libels, thereby to inflame the hearts of our countriemen, and hir maiesties subiects: a booke was published, intituled, A declaration of the fauorable dealing of hir maiesties commissioners, &c. Which booke I haue thought good in this place to set downe (for the better instruction of the reader) euen as the same was printed and published, and thus it followeth.

A declaration of the fauourable dealing of hir maiesties commissioners appointed for the examination of certeine traitors, and of tortures vniustlie reported to be done vpon them for matters of religion.

A declaration of the fauorable dealing of hir maiesties commissioners, for the examining of traitors.

To the reader.

GOod reader, although hir maiesties most mild and gratious gouernement be sufficient to defend it selfe against those most slanderous reports of heathenish and vnnaturall tyrannie and cruell tortures, pretended to haue béene executed vpon certeine traitors, who latelie suffered for their treason, and others, aswell spread abroad by rungates, Iesuits, and seminarie men in their seditious bookes, letters, and libels, in forren countries and princes courts, as also insinuated into the hearts of some of our owne countriemen and hir maiesties subiects: yet for thy better satisfaction I haue conferred with a verie honest gentleman, whom I knew to haue good and sufficient meanes to deliuer the truth against such forgers of lies and shameless slanders in that behalfe, which he and other that do know and haue affirmed the same will at all times iustifie. And for thy further assurance and satisfaction herein, he hath set downe to the view of all men these necessarie notes following.

Touching the racke and torments vsed to such traitors as pretended themselues to be catholikes, vpon whom the same haue béene exercised, it is affirmed for truth, and is offered vpon due examination so to be proued, to be as followeth. First, that the formes of torture in their seueritie or rigour of execution, haue not béene such and in such maner performed, as the slanderers and seditious libellers haue slanderouslie & maliciouslie published. And that euen the principall offendor Campion himselfe, who was sent & came from Rome, and continued here in sundrie corners of the realme, hauing secretlie wandered in the greatest part of the shires of England in a disguised sort, to the intent to make spetiall preparation of treasons; and to that end and for furtherance of those his labours, sent ouer for more helpe and assistance, and cunninglie and traitorouslie at Rome before he came from thense, procured toleration for such prepared rebels to keepe themselues couert vnder pretense of temporarie and permissiue obedience to hir maiestie the state standing as it doth; but so sone as there were sufficient force whereby the bull of hir maiesties deprivation might be publikelie executed, they should then ioine all togither with that force vpon paine of curse and damnation: that verie Campion, I saie, before the conference had with him by learned men in the Tower, wherin he was charitablie vsed, was neuer so racked, but that he was presentlie able to walke, and to write, and did presentlie write and subscribe all his confessions, as by the originals thereof may euidentlie appeare.

The slanderous report, concerning the extreame vse of ỹ racke conuinced.

Campion and Bryant were tw fauourablie vsed: and far vnder the proportion of their treasonable offenses.

A horrible matter is also made of the starving of one Alexander Bryant, how he should eat claie out of the wals, gathered water to drinke from the droppings of houses, with such other false ostentations of immanitie: where the truth is this, that what soeuer Bryant suffered in want of food, he suffered the same wilfullie & of extreame impudent obstinacie, against the mind and liking of those that dealt with him. For certeine traitorous writings being found about him, it was thought conuenient by conference of hands to vnderstand whose writing they were, and therevpon he being in hir maiesties name commanded to write, which he could verie well do, and being permitted to him to write what he would himselfe, in these termes, that if he liked not to write one thing, he might write another, or what he listed (which to do being charged in hir maiesties name was his dutie, and to refuse was disloiall and vndutifull) yet the man would by no meanes be induced to write anie thing at all. Then was it commanded to his keeper to giue vnto him such meat, drinke, and other conuenient necessaries as he would write for, and to forbeare to giue him anie thing for which he would not write.

But Bryant being thereof aduertised and oft moued to write, persisting so in his curst heart by almost two daies and two nights, made choise rather to lacke food, than to write for the sustenance which he might readilie haue had for writing, & which he had indeed readilie and plentifullie so sone as he wrote. And as it is said of these two, so is it to be said of other; with this, that there was a perpetuall care

The curst & stubborne hart of Bryant.

care had, & the quænes seruants the warders, whose office and act it is to handle the racke, were euer by those that attended the examinations speciallie charged, to vse it in as charitable maner as such a thing might be.

Secondlie it is said, and likewise offered to be iustified, that neuer anie of these seminaries, or such other pretended catholikes, which at anie time in hir maiesties reigne haue bæne put to the racke, were vpon the racke or in other torture demanded anie question of their supposed consciences as what they beleeued in anie point of doctrine or faith, as the masse, transubstantiation, or such like: but onelie with what persons at home, or abroad, and touching what plats, practises and conferences they had dealt about attempts against hir maiesties estate or person, or to alter the lawes of the realme for matters of religion, by treason or by force, and how they were persuaded themselues, and did persuade other touching the popes bull and pretense of authoritie, to depose kings and princes; and namelie, for deprivation of hir maiestie, and to discharge subiects from their allegiance, expressing herein alwaie the kinglie powers and estates, and the subiects allegiance ciuilie, without mentioning or meaning therein anie right that the queene as in right of the crowne hath ouer persons ecclesiasticall being hir subiects. In all which cases, Campion and the rest neuer answered plainelie, but sophisticallie, deceitfullie and traitorouslie, restraining their confession of allegiance onelie to the permissiue forme of the popes toleration. As for example, if they were asked, whether they did acknowledge themselues the quænes subiects and would obeie hir, they would saie, Yea: for so they had leaue for a time to do. But adding more to the question, and they being asked, if they would so acknowledge & obeie hir anie longer than the pope would so permit them; or notwithstanding such commandement as the pope would or might giue to the contrarie: then they either refused so to obeie, or denied to answer; or said, that they could not answer to those questions without danger. Which verie answer without more saieng, was a plaine answer to all reasonable vnderstanding, that they would no longer be subiects, nor persuade other to be subiects, than the pope gaue licence. And at their verie arreignement, when they laboured to leaue in the minds of the people and standers by, an opinion that they were to die, not for treason, but for matter of faith and conscience in doctrine, touching the seruice of God, without anie attempt or purpose against hir maiestie, they cried out that they were true subiects, and did and would obeie and serue hir maiestie. Immediatlie, to proue whether that hypocriticall and sophisticall speach extended to a perpetuitie of their obedience, or to so long time as the pope so permitted, or no; they were openlie in place of iudgement asked by the quænes learned counsell, whether they would so obeie and be true subiects, if the pope commanded the contrarie? They plainlie disclosed themselues in answer, saieng by the mouth of Campion: This place (meaning the court of hir maiesties Bench) hath no power to inquire or iudge of the holie fathers authoritie: and other answer they would not make.

Ergo it is false which the infamous libeller hath said abrode, Religio crimen non mala vita fuit.

This is consonant to the report set downe before in the discouerie of Campion, pag. 1325.

What allegiance these fellows meant to hir maiestie may appeare by these words of Campion, being the mouth of the rest.

Thirdlie, that none of them haue bæne put to the racke or torture, no not for the matters of treason, or partnership of treason or such like, but where it was first knowen and euidentlie probable by former detections, confessions, and otherwise, that the partie so racked, or tortured, was giltie, and did know, and could deliuer truth of the things wherewith he was charged: so as it was first assured, that no innocent was at anie time tormented, and the racke was neuer vsed to wring out confessions at aduenture vpon vncertenties, in which doing it might be possible that an innocent in that case might haue bin racked.

Fourthlie, that none of them hath bæne racked or tortured, vnlesse he had first said expressie, or amounting to as much, that he will not tell the truth, though the quæne command him. And if anie of them being examined did saie he could not tell, or did not remember, if he would so affirme in such maner as christians among christians are beleeued; such his answer was accepted, if there were not apparant euidence to proue that he wilfullie said vntrulie. But if he said that his answer in deliuering truth, should hurt a catholike, & so be an offense against the charitie, which they said to be sinne, & that the quæne could not command them to sin, & therfore how soeuer the quæne commanded, they would not tell the truth, which they were knowen to know, or to such effect: they were then put to the torture, or else not.

As namelie Campion, of whom an infamous libeller reporteth (in commendation forsoth of his constancie) Non secreta mea tortus licèt ore fatebor.

Fiftlie, that the proceeding to torture was alwaie so slowlie, so vnwillinglie, & with so manie preparations of persuasions to spare themselues, and so manie meanes to let them know that the truth was by them to be vttered, both in dutie to hir maiestie, and in wisedome for themselues, as whosoeuer was present at those actions, must needes acknowledge in hir maiesties ministers, a full purpose to follow the example of hir owne most gratious disposition: whome God long preserue.

Thus it appeereth, that albeit by the more generall lawes of nations, torture hath bæne, and is lawfullie iudged to be vsed in lesser cases, and in sharper maner for inquisition of truth in crimes not so neere extending to publike danger, as these vngratious persons haue committed, whose conspiracies and the particularities thereof it did so much import and behoue to haue disclosed: yet euen in that necessarie vse of such proceeding, inforced by the offendors notorious obstinacie, is neuertheless to be acknowledged the sweet temperature of hir maiesties mild and gratious clemencie, and their slanderous lewdnesse to be the more condemned, that haue in fauour of hainous malefactors, and stubborne traitors, spred vntrue rumors and slanders, to make hir mercifull gouernement disliked, vnder false pretense and rumors of sharpenesse and crueltie to those, against whom nothing can be cruell, and yet vpon whom nothing hath bæne done but gentle and mercifull.

The execution of iustice in England for maintenance of publike and christian peace, against certeine stirrers of sedition, and adherents to the traitors and enimies of the realme, without anie persecution of them for questions of religion, as is falslie reported and published by the fautors and fosterers of their treasons.

IT hath bæne in all ages and in all countries a common vsage of all offendors, for the most part, both great and small, to make defense of their lewd and vnlawfull facts by vntruths, and by colouring and couering their dæds (were they neuer so vile) with pretenses of some other causes of contrarie operations or effects: to the intent not onelie to auoid punishment or shame, but to continue, vphold, and prosecute their wicked attempts, to the full satisfaction of their disordered and malicious appetites. And though such hath bæne the vse of all offendors, yet of none with more danger than of rebels and traitors to their lawfull princes, kings, and countries. Of which sort of late yeares are specialtie to be noted certeine persons naturallie borne subiects in the realme of England and Ireland, who hauing for some good time profes-

All offendors couer their faults with contrarie causes.

Rebels do most dangerouslie couer their faults.

professed outwardlie their obedience to their souereigne ladie quéene Elisabeth, haue nevertheless afterward bene stirred vp and seduced by wicked spirits, first in England sundrie yeares past, and secondlie and of later time in Ireland, to enter into open rebellion, taking armes and comming into the field against hir maiestie and hir lieutenants, with their forces vnder banners displaied, inducing by notable vntruths manie simple people to follow and assist them in their traitorous actions.

Rebellion in England and Ireland.

And though it is verie well knowen, that both their intentions and manifest actions were bent to haue deposed the quéenes maiestie from hir crowne, and to haue traitorouslie set in hir place some other whome they liked, whereby if they had not bene spédilie resisted, they would haue committed great bloudsheds and slaughters of hir maiesties faith-full subiects, and ruined their native countrie:
yet by Gods power giuen vnto hir maiestie, they were so spédilie vanquished, as some few of them suffered by order of law according to their deserts, manie & the greatest part vpon confession of their faults were pardoned, the rest (but they not manie) of the principall, escaped into forren countries, & there, bicause in none or few places rebels and traitors to their naturall princes and countries dare for their treasons chalenge at their first musser open comfort or succour, these notable traitors and rebels haue falselie informed manie kings, princes and states, and spectallie the bishop of Rome, commonlie called the pope (from whom they all had secretlie their first comfort to rebell) that the cause of their flieng from their countries was for the religion of Rome, and for maintenance of the said popes authoritie:
whereas diuerse of them before their rebellion liues so notoriouslie, the most part of their liues, out of all good rule, either for honest maners, or for anie sense in religion, as they might haue bene rather familiar with Catiline, or fauourers to Sardanapa-lus, than accounted good subiects vnder anie christian princes. As for some examples of the heads of these rebellions, out of England fled Charles Neuill earle of Westmerland, a person vtterlie wasted by loosenesse of life, and by Gods punishment euen in the time of his rebellion bereaued of his children that should haue succeeded him in the earledome, and his bodie now eaten with vlcers of lewd causes (as his companions do saie) that no enimie he hath can wish him a viler punishment: a pitifull losse to the realme of so noble a house, neuer before in anie age attainted for disloialtie. And out of Ireland ran awaie one Thomas Stukeleie, a defamed person almost thorough all christendome, and a faithlesse beast rather than a man, fleeing first out of England for notable pirasies, and out of Ireland for trecheries not pardonable, which two were the first ringleaders of the rest of the rebels, the one for England, the other for Ireland.

The rebels vanquished by the quéens power.

Some of the rebels fled into forren countries.

Ringleaders of rebels, Charles Neuill earle of Westmerland, and Thomas Stukeleie.

But notwithstanding the notorious euill and wicked liues of these & others their confederats, void of all christian religion, it liked the bishop of Rome, as in fauour of their treasons, not to colour their offenses, as themselues openlie pretend to do, for auoiding of common shame of the world: but flatlie to animate them to continue their former wicked purposes, that is, to take armes against their lawfull quéene, to inuade hir realme with forren forces, to pursue all hir good subiects & their native countries with fire and sword: for maintenance whereof there had some yeares before, at sundrie times, procéeded in a thundering sort, buls, excommunications, and other publike writings, denouncing hir maiestie being the lawfull quéene, and Gods annointed seruant not to be the quéene of the realme, charging and vp-on paines of excommunication commanding all hir subiects to depart from their naturall allegiances, whereto by birth and by oth they were bound: prouoking also and authorising all persons of all degrees within both the realmes to rebell. And vpon this antichristian warrant, being contrarie to all the lawes of God and man, & nothing agréable to a pastorall officer, not onelie all the rable of the foresaid traitors that were before fled; but also all other persons that had forsaken their native countries, being of di-uerse conditions and qualities, some not able to liue at home but in beggerie, some discontented for lacke of preferments, which they gaped for vnworthilie in vniuersities and other places, some bankerupt merchants, some in a sort learned to contentions, being not contented to learne to obeie the laws of the land, haue manie yeares running vp and downe, from countrie to countrie, practised some in one corner, some in an other, some with seeking to gather forces and monie for forces, some with instigation of princes by vntruths, to make warre vpon their naturall countrie, some with inward practises to murther the greatest, some with seditious writings, and verie manie of late with publike infamous libels, full of despitefull vile termes and poisoned lies, altogither to vphold the foresaid antichristian and tyrannous warrant of the popes bull.

The practises of the traitors rebels, and fugitiues to execute the bull.

And yet also by some other meanes, to further these inuentions, bicause they could not readilie preuaile by wate of force, finding forren princes of better consideration & not readilie inclined to their wicked purposes, it was deuised to erect vp certeine schooles which they called seminaries, to nourish and bring vp persons disposed naturallie to sedition, to continue their race & trade, and to become sedmen in their tillage of sedition, and them to send secretlie into these the quéenes maiesties realmes of England & Ireland vnder secret maskes, some of priesthood, some of other inferiour orders, with titles of seminaries for some of the meaner sort, and of Jesuits for the stagers and ranker sort and such like, but yet so warilie they crept into the land, as none brought the markes of their priesthood with them. But in di-uers corners of hir maiesties dominions these seminaries or sedmen and Jesuits, bringing with them certeine Romish trash, as of their hallowed war, their Agnus Dei, their graines, and manie kind of beads, and such like, haue as tillagemen laboured secretlie to persuade the people to allow of the popes foresaid buls and warrants, & of his absolute autho-ritie ouer all princes and countries, and striking manie with pricks of conscience to obeie the same; whereby in processe of small time, if this wicked and dangerous, traitorous, & craftie course had not bene by Gods goodnesse espied and staied, there had followed imminent danger of horrible vprores in the realmes, and a manifest bloudie destruction of great multitudes of christians.

Seminaries erected to nurse seditious fugitiues.

The seminas rie fugitiues come secretlie into the reims to induce the people to obeie the popes bull.

For it can not be denied but that so manie as should haue bene induced & thoroughlie persuaded to haue obeied that wicked warrant of the popes, and the contents thereof, should haue bene forthwith in their harts and consciences secret traitors, and for to be in déed errant and open traitors: there should haue wanted nothing but opportunitie to feele their strength & to assemble themselues in such numbers with armour and weapons, as they might haue presumed to haue bene the greater part, and so by open ciuill warre to haue come to their wicked purposes. But Gods goodnesse, by whome kings do rule, and by whose blast traitors are commonlie wasted and confounded, hath otherwise giuen to hir maiestie as to his handmaid and deare seruant, ruling vnder him, the spirit of wisedome and power, whereby

The effect of the popes bull against the quéene of England.

Powers of sedition taken, conuented, & executed for treason.

by the hath caused to me of these seditious sedmen and sowers of rebellion, to be discouered for all their secret lurkings, and to be taken and charged with these former points of high treason, not being dealt withall vpon questions of religion, but iustlie by order of lawes, openlie condemned as traitors.

At which times, notwithstanding all maner gentle waies of persuasions vsed, to moue them to desist from such manifest traitorous courses and opinions with offer of mercie; yet was the canker of their rebellious humors so deepelie entered and grauen into the harts of manie of them, as they would not be reduced from their traitorous determinations. And therefore as manifest traitors in mainteining and adhering to the capitall enimie of hir maiestie & hir crowne (who hath not onelie beene the cause of two rebellions alreadie passed in England and Ireland, but in that of Ireland did manifestlie wage and mainteine his owne people, captains, and souldiers vnder the banner of Rome, against hir maiestie, so as no enimie could do more) these I saie haue iustlie suffered death not by force or forme of anie new lawes established, either for religion or against the popes supremasie, as the slanderous libellers would haue it seeme to be; but by the ancient temporall lawes of the realme, and namelie by the lawes of parlement made in king Edward the third his time, about the yeare of our Lord 1330, which is aboue two hundred yeares and more past, when the bishops of Rome and popes were suffered to haue their authoritie ecclesiasticall in this realme, as they had in manie other countries. But yet of this kind of offendors, as manie of them, as after their condemnations were contented to renounce their former traitorous assertions; so manie were spared from execution, & do liue still at this date: such was the vnwillingnes in hir maiestie to haue anie bloud spilt, without this verie vrgent, iust, and necessarie cause proceeding from themselues.

The seditious traitors condemned by the ancient lawes of the realme, made two hundred yeres past.

Persons condemned, spared from execution, vpon refusall of their treasonable opinions.

And yet neuertheless, such of the rest of the traitors as remaine in forren parts, continuing still their rebellious minds, and craftilie keeping themselues aloofe off from dangers, cease not to procure sundrie other inferiour seditious persons, newlie to steale secretlie into the realme, to renue the former seditious practises, to the execution of the popes foresaid bull against hir maiestie and the realme, pretending when they are apprehended, that they came onelie into the realme by the commandement of their superiors, the heads of the Iesuits, to whome they are bound (as they saie) by oth against either king or countrie, and here to informe or reforme mens consciences from errors in some points of religion, as they thinke meet. But yet in verie truth, the whole scope of their secret labours is manifestlie proued, to be secretlie to win all people, with whom they dare deale; so to allow of the popes said buls, and of his authoritie without exception, as in obeieng thereof, they take themselues fullie discharged of their allegiance and obedience to their lawfull prince and countrie: yea, and to be well warranted to take armes to rebell against hir maiestie, when they shall be thereunto called; and to be readie secretlie to ioine with any forren force that can be procured to inuade the realme, whereof also they haue a long time giuen, and yet do for their aduantage, no small comfort of successe. And so consequentlie the effect of their labours is to bring the realme not onelie into a dangerous warre against the forces of strangers (from which it hath beene free aboue three and twentie or foure and twentie yeares, a case verie memorable and hard to be matched with an example of the like) but into a warre domesticall and ciuill, wherein no bloud is vsuallie spared, nor mercie yeelded, and wherein neither the vanquishor nor the vanquished can haue iust cause of triumph.

The forren traitors continue sending of persons to moue sedition in the realme.

The seditious fugitiues labour to bring the realme into a warre externall and domesticall.

And forsomuch as these are the most euident perils that necessarilie should follow, if these kind of vermine were suffered to creepe by stealth into the realme, and to spred their poison within the same, howsoeuer when they are taken, like hypocrits, they colour and counterfeit the same with profession of deuotion in religion: it is of all persons to be pealed in reason, that hir maiestie and all hir gouernours and magistrats of iustice, hauing care to mainteine the peace of the realme (which God hath giuen in hir time, to continue longer than euer in anie time of hir progenitors) ought of dutie to almightie God the author of peace, and according to the naturall loue and charge due to their countrie, and for auoiding of the floods of bloud, which in ciuill warres are seene to run and flow, by all lawfull meanes possible, as well by the sword as by law, in their seuerall seasons to impeach and repell these so manifest and dangerous colourable practises, and works of sedition and rebellion.

The dutie of the queene and all hir gouernors to God and their countrie, is to repell practises of rebellion.

And though there are manie subiects knowne in the realme, that differ in some opinions of religion from the church of England and that do also not forbeare to professe the same: yet in that they do also professe loialtie and obedience to hir maiestie, and offer readilie to hir maiesties defense, to impugne & resist anie forreine force, though it should come or be procured from the pope himselfe: none of these sort are for their contrarie opinions in religion prosecuted or charged with anie crimes or paines of treason, nor yet willinglie searched in their consciences for their contrarie opinions, that sauour not of treason. And of these sorts, there haue beene and are a number of persons, not of such base and vulgar note as those which of late haue beene executed, as in particular, some by name are well knowne, and not vnfit to be remembred. The first and chiefest by office was doctor Heth, that was archbishop of Yorke, and lord chancellor of England in queene Maries time; who at the first comming of hir maiestie to the crowne, shewing himselfe a faithfull and quiet subiect, continued in both the said offices, though in religion then manifestlie differing; and yet was he not restreined of his libertie, nor depriued of his proper lands and goods, but leauing willinglie both his offices, liued in his owne house verie discreetlie, and inioied all his purchased lands during all his naturall life, vntill by verie age he departed this world, and then left his house and liuing to his friends. An example of gentlenesse neuer matched in queene Maries time.

None charged with capitall crimes, being of a contrarie religion, and professing to withstand forreine forces.

The like did one doctor Poole that had beene bishop of Peterborough, an ancient graue person, and a verie quiet subiect. There were also others that had beene bishops and in great estimation, as doctor Tunstall bishop of Duresme, a person of great reputation, and also whilest he liued of verie quiet behauiour. There were also other, as doctor White & doctor Ogglethorpe, the one of Winchester, the other of Carlill, bishops, persons of courteous natures, and he of Carlill so inclined to dutifulnes to the queenes maiestie, as he did the office at the consecration and coronation of hir maiestie in the church of Westminster: and doctor Thurlebie, & doctor Watson yet liuing, one of Elie, the other of Lincolne, bishops: the one of nature affable, the other altogither sowre, and yet liuing. Whereto may be added the bishop then of Exceter, Turberuile, an honest gentleman, but a simple bishop, who liued at his owne libertie to the end of his life: and none of all these pressed with anie capitall paine, though they mainteined the popes authoritie against the lawes of the realme. And some abbats, as maister Feckenam yet liuing, a person also of quiet and courteous behauiour, for a great time. Some also were deanes, as doctor Worall deane of Windsore, a person of great modestie, learning and knowledge: doctor Cole deane of Paules, a person more earnest than discreet: doctor Reinolds deane of Excester, not vnlearned, and manie such others, hauing borne office & dignities in the church, & that had made profession against the pope, which they onelie began in quæne Maries time to change: yet were these neuer to this date burdened with capitall peanes, nor yet depriued of anie their goods or proper liuelods, but onelie removed from their ecclesiasticall offices, which they would not exercise according to the lawes. And most of them, & manie other of their sort for a great time were deteined in bishops houses in verie ciuill and courteous maner, without charge to themselues or their friends, vntill the time that the pope began by his buls & messages, to offer trouble to the realme by stirring of rebellion. About which time onlie, some of these aforenamed, being found busier in matters of state tending to stir troubles, than was meete for the common quiet of the realme, were remoued to other more priuat places, where such other wanderers as were men knowne to moue sedition, might be restreined from common resorting to them to increase trouble, as the popes bull gaue manifest occasion to doubt: and yet without charging them in their consciences or otherwise, by anie inquisition to bring them into danger of anie capitall law: so as no one was called to anie capitall or bloudie question vpon matters of religion, but haue all inioied their life as the course of nature would: and such of them as yet remaine, may (if they will not be authors or instruments of rebellion or sedition) inioie the time that God and nature shall yeld them without danger of life or member.

Names of diuerse ecclesiasticall persons professing contrarie religion, neuer charged with capitall crimes.

The late fauorers of the popes authoritie were the chiefe aduersaries of the same, by their doctrines and writings.

And yet it is worthie to be well marked, that the chiefest of all these and the most of them, had in time of king Henrie the eight, and king Edward the first, either by preaching, writing, reading, or arguing, taught all people to condemne, yea to abhorre the authoritie of the pope: for which purpose they had many times giuen their othes publikelie, against the popes authoritie, and had also yeelded to both the said kings the title of supreame hed of the church of England next vnder Christ, which title the aduersaries do most falselie write and affirme, that the quænes maiestie now vseth: a manifest lie & vntruth, to be seene by the verie acts of parlement, and at the beginning of hir reigne omitted in hir stile. And for proofe that these foresaid bishops and learned men had so long time disauowed the popes authoritie, manie of their books and sermons against the popes authoritie remaine printed both in English and Latin to be seene in these times, to their great shame and reproofe to change so often, but speciallie in persecuting such as themselues had taught and stablished to hold the contrarie. A sin, nære the sin against the holie ghost.

A great number of laie persons of liuelod being of a contrarie religion, neuer charged with capitall crime.

There were also and yet be a great number of others, being laie men of good possessions and lands, men of good credit in their countries, manifestlie of late time seduced to hold contrarie opinions in religion for the popes authoritie: and yet none of them haue bene sought hitherto to be impeached in anie point or quarell of treason, or of losse of life, member or inheritance. So as it may plainelie appeare, that it is not, nor hath bene for contrarious opinions in religion, or for the popes authoritie alone, as the aduersaries do boldlie and falslie publish, that anie persons haue suffered death since hir maiesties reigne. And yet some of these sort are well knowne to hold opinon, that the pope ought by authoritie of Gods word to be supreame and onelie head of the catholike church through the whole world, and onelie to rule in all causes ecclesiasticall, and that the quænes maiestie ought not to be the gouernour ouer anie hir subiects in hir realme being persons ecclesiasticall: which opinions are neuertheless in some part by the lawes of the realme punishable in their degrees. And yet for none of these points haue anie persons bene prosecuted with the charge of treason, or in danger of life.

No person charged with capitall crime for the onelie maintenance of the popes supremasie.

And if then it be inquired, for what cause these others haue of late suffered death, it is truelie to be answered as afore is often remembred, that none at all were impeached for treason to the danger of their life, but such as did obstinatlie maintein the contents of the popes bull afore mentioned; which do import, that hir maiestie is not the lawfull quæne of England, the first and highest point of treason: and that all hir subiects are discharged of their oths and obedience; a second high point of treason: and all warranted to disobeie hir and hir lawes; a third and a verie large point of treason. And thereto is to be added a fourth point most manifest, in that they would not disallow the popes hostile procedings in open warres against hir maiestie in hir realme of Ireland, where one of their companie doctor Sanders, a lewd scholer and subiect of England, a fugitiue and a principall companion and conspirator with the traitors and rebels at Rome, was by the popes speciall commission a commander, as in forme of a legat, and sometime a burser or paiemaster for those wars. Which doctor Sanders in his booke of his church monarchie, did afore his passing into Ireland openlie by writing, gloriouslie auow the foresaid bull of Pius Quintus against hir maiestie, to be lawfull; and affirmeth that by vertue thereof one doctor Morton, an old English fugitiue and conspirator, was sent from Rome into the north parts of England, which was true, to stirre vp the first rebellion there, whereof Charles Neuill the late earle of Westmerland was a head captein.

Foure points of treason.

Such condemned onelie for treason, as maintein the effects of the popes bull against hir maiestie and the realme.

Doctor Sanders maintenance of the popes bull.

And thereby it may manifestlie appeare to all men, how this bull was the ground of the rebellions both in England and Ireland, and how for maintenance thereof, and for sowing of sedition by warrant and allowance of the same, these persons were iustlie condemned of treason, and lawfullie executed by the ancient lawes temporall of the realme, without charging them for anie other matter than for their practises and conspiracies both abroad and at home against the quæne and the realme; and for the maintening of the popes foresaid authoritie and bull, published to depriue hir maiestie of hir crowne, and for withdrawing and reconciling of hir subiects from their naturall allegiance due to hir maiestie and to their countrie, and for moouing them to sedition: and for no other causes or questions of religion were these persons condemned; although true it is, that when they were charged & conuinced of these points of conspiracies and treasons, they would still in their answers colourablie pretend their actions to haue bene for religion: but in deed and truth they were manifested to be for the procurement and maintenance of the rebellions and wars against hir maiestie and hir realme.

The persons that suffered death, were condemned for treason & not for religion.

The diuersitie betwixt truth and falshood.

And herein is now the manifest diuersitie to be seene and well considered betwixt the truth of hir maiesties actions, & the falshood of the blasphemous aduersaries: that where the factious partie of the pope the principall author of the inuasions of hir maiesties dominions, do falselie allege that a number of persons, whom they terme as martyrs, haue died for defense of the catholike religion; the same in verie truth may manifestlie appeare to haue died (if they so will haue it) as martyrs for the pope, but yet as traitors fors against their soueraigne and quéene in adhering to him, being the notable and onelie open hostile enimie in all actions of warre against hir maiestie, hir kingdomes and people: and that this is the meaning of all these that haue so obstinatlie mainteined the authoritie and contents of this bull, the verie words of the bull do declare in this sort, as doctor Sanders reporteth them.

A full proofe that the maintainers of the bull are directlie guiltie of treason.

Pius Quintus pontifex maximus, de apostolicæ potestatis plenitudine, declarauit Elisabetham prætenso regni iure, necnon omne & quocunque dominio, dignitate, priuilegióque priuatam: itémque proceres, subditos & populos dicti regni, ac cæteros omnes qui illi quomodocunque iurauerunt, à iuramento huiusmodi ac omni fidelitatis debito, perpetuo absolutos: That is to saie, Pius Quintus the greatest bishop, of the fulnesse of the apostolike power, declared Elisabeth to be bereaued or depriued of hir pretended right of hir kingdome, and also of all and what soeuer dominion, dignitie and priuilege: and also the nobles, subiects and people of the said kingdome, and all others which had sworne to hir anie maner of wais, to be absolued for euer from such oth, and from all debt or dutie of fealtie, &c: with manie threatning cursings, to all that durst obeie hir or hir lawes. As for execution hereof, to proue, that the effect of the popes bull and message was a flat rebellion, it is not amisse to heare what the same doctor Sanders the popes firebrand in Ireland also writeth in his visible church monarchie, which is thus.

Doctor Morons secret imbassage from Rome to stir the rebellion in the north.

Pius Quintus pontifex maximus, Anno Domini 1569 reuerendum presbyterum Nicolaum Mortonum Anglum in Angliam misit, vt certis illustribus viris authoritate apostolica denuntiaret, Elisabetham quæ tunc rerum potiebatur, hæreticam esse: ob eámque causam, omni dominio & potestate excidisse, impunéque ab illis velut ethnicam haberi posse, nec eos illius legibus aut mandatis deinceps obedire cogi: That is to saie, Pius Quintus the greatest bishop, in the yeare of our Lord 1569, sent the reuerend priest Nicholas Morton an Englishman into England, that he should denounce or declare by the apostolike authoritie to certeine noblemen, Elisabeth, who then was in possession, to be an heretike: & for that cause, to haue fallen from all dominion and power, and that she may be had or reputed of them as an ethnike, and that they are not to be compelled to obeie hir lawes or commandements, &c. Thus you see an ambassage of rebellion from the popes holinesse, the ambassador an old doting Englishe priest, a fugitiue and conspirator, sent (as he saith) to some noble men, and these were the two earles of Northumberland and Westmerland, heads of the rebellion. And after this, he followeth to declare the successe therof, which I dare saie he was sorie it was so euill, with these words.

Qua denuntiatione multi nobiles viri adducti sunt, vt de fratribus liberandis cogitare auderent, ac sperabant illi quidem catholicos omnes summis viribus affuturos esse: verùm etsi aliter quàm illi expectabant res euenit, quia catholici omnes nondum probè cognouerant, Elisabetham hæreticam esse declaratam, tamen laudanda illorum nobilium consilia erant: That is: By which denuntiation, manie noblemen were induced or led, that they were boldened to thinke of the freeing of their brethren, and they hoped certeinlie that all the catholikes would haue assisted them with all their strength: but although the matter happened otherwise than they hoped for, because all the catholikes knew not that Elisabeth was declared to be an heretike, yet the counsels and intents of those noblemen were to be praised. A rebellion and a vanquishing of rebels verie smoothlie described.

This noble fact here mentioned was the rebellion in the north: the noblemen were the earles of Northumberland and Westmerland: the lacke of the euent or successe was, that the traitors were vanquished, and the quenes maiestie and hir subiects had by Gods ordinance the victorie: and the cause why the rebels preuailed not, was because all the catholikes had not béene dulie informed that the quenes maiestie was declared to be (as they terme it) an heretike: which want of information, to the intent to make the rebels mightier in number and power, was diligentlie and cunninglie supplied by the sending into the realme of a great multitude of the seminaries and Jesuits, whose speciall charge was to informe the people thereof, as by their actions hath manifestlie appéered. A supplement to amend the former errour.

And though doctor Sanders hath thus written, yet it may be said by such as fauoured the two notable Jesuits, one named Robert Persons (who yet bideth himselfe in corners to continue his traitorous practise) the other named Edmund Campion (who was found out being disguised like a roister and suffered for his treasons) that doctor Sanders treason is his proper treason in allowing of the said bull, and not to be imputed to Persons and Campion. Therefore to make it plaine that these two by speciall authoritie had charge to execute the sentence of this bull, these acts in writing following shall make manifest, which are not fained or imagined, but are the verie writings taken about one of their complices, euen immediatlie after Campions death: although Campion before his death would not be knowen of anie such matter. Whereby may appéere what trust is to be giuen to the words of such pseudomartyrs.

Persons and Campion are offendors as doctor Sanders is, for allowance of the bull.

Facultates concessæ pp. Roberto Personio & Edmundo Campiano, pro Anglia, die 14 Aprilis, 1580.

Petatur à summo domino nostro explicatio bullæ declaratoriæ per Pium Quintum contra Elisabetham & ei adhærentes, quam catholici cupiunt intelligi hoc modo; vt obliget semper illam & hæreticos, catholicos verò nullo modo obliget rebus sic stantibus, sed tum demum quando publica eiusdem bullæ executio fieri poterit. Then followed manie other petitions of faculties for their further authorities, which are not néedfull for this purpose to be recited: but in the end followeth this sentence as an answer of the popes. Has prædictas gratias concessit summus pontifex patri Roberto Personio, & Edmundo Campiano in Angliam profecturis, die 14 Aprilis, 1580. Præsente patre Oliuerio Manarco assistente. The English of which Latine sentences is as followeth.

Faculties granted to the two fathers Robert Persons and Edmund Campion, for England, the fourteenth daie of Aprill, 1580.

Faculties granted to Persons and Campion by pope Gregorie the thirteenth Anno 1580.

Let it be asked or required of our most holie lord, the explication or meaning of the bull declaratorie made by Pius the fift against Elisabeth, & such as do adhere or obeie hir, which bull the catholikes desire to be vnderstood in this maner: that the same bull shall alwaies bind hir and the heretikes; but the catholikes it shall by no meanes bind, as matters or things do now stand or be: but hereafter, when the publike execution of that bull maie be had or made. Then in the end the conclusion was thus added. The highest pontife or bishop granted these foresaid graces to father Robert Persons & Edmund Campion, who are now to take their iournies into England, the 14 daie of Aprill, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred and eightie. Being present the father Oliuerius Manarke assistant.

By what authoritie Campion came into England.

Hereby it is manifest, what authoritie Campion had to impart the contents of the bull against the quéens maiestie, howsoeuer he himselfe denied the same: for this was his errand.

And though it be manifest that these two Iesuits, Parsons and Campion, not onelie required to haue the popes mind declared for the bull; but also in their owne petitions shewed how they and other catholikes did desire to haue the said bull to be vnderstood against the quéene of England: yet to make the matter more plaine how all other Iesuits and seminaries; yea how all papists naming themselues catholikes, do or are warranted to interpret the said bull against hir maiestie and hir good subiects, howsoeuer they will disguise it, you shall see what one of their fellowes, named Hart, who was condemned with Campion and yet liueth, did amongst manie other things declare his knowledge thereof the last daie of December in the same yeare one thousand fiue hundred and eightie, in these words following. The bull of Pius Quintus (for so much as it is against the quéene) is holden amongest the English catholikes for a lawfull sentence, and a sufficient discharge of hir subiects fidelitie, and so remaineth in force: but in some points touching the subiects, it is altered by the present pope. For where in that bull all hir subiects are commanded not to obeie hir, and she being excommunicate and deposed, all that do obeie hir are likewise innodate and accursed, which point is perillous to the catholikes: for if they obeie hir, they be in the popes curse, and if they disobeie hir, they are in the quéenes danger: therefore the present pope to releéue them hath altered that part of the bull, and dispensed with them to obeie and serue hir, without perill of excommunication: which dispensation is to indure but till it please the pope otherwise to determine.

Hart's confession of the interpretation of the bull of Pius Quintus.

Wherefore to make some conclusion of the matters before mentioned, all persons both within the realme and abroad, maie plainelie perceiue that all the infamous libels latelie published abroad in sundrie languages, and the slanderous reports made in other princes courts of a multitude of persons, to haue beene of late put to torments and death onelie for profession of the catholike religion, and not for matters of state against the quenes maiestie, are false and shameleSSe, and published to the maintenance of traitors and rebels. And to make the matter seeme more horrible or lamentable, they recite the particular names of all the persons, which by their owne catalog exceed not for these fiue and twentie yeares space, aboue the number of three score, forgetting or rather with their stonie and senseleSSe harts not regarding, in what cruell sort in the time of quéene Marie, which little exceeded the space of fiue yeares, the quéenes maiesties reigne being fiue times as manie, there were by imprisonment, torments, famine, and fire, of men, women, maidens, and children, almost the number of foure hundred, beSides such as were secretlie murthered in prisons: and of that number, aboue twentie that had beene archbishops, bishops, and principall prelats or officers in the church lamentablie destroied; and of women aboue three score, and of children aboue fortie, and amongest the women, some great with child, and one, out of whose bodie the child by fire was expelled aliue, and yet also cruellie burned: examples beyond all heathen crueltie.

A conclusion that all the infamous bookes against the quéene and the realme, are false.

Difference of the small numbers that haue beene executed in the space of fiue and twentie yeares, from the great numbers in fiue yeares of quéene Maries reigne.

And most of the youth that then suffered cruell death, both men, women, and children (which is to be noted) were such, as had neuer by the sacrament of baptisme, or by confirmation, professed, or was euer taught or instructed, or euer had heard of anie other kind of religion, but onelie of that which by their bloud and death in the fire they did as true martyrs testifie. A matter of an other sort to be lamented in a christian charitie with simplicitie of words, and not with puffed eloquence, than the execution in this time of a verie few traitors; who also in their time, if they exceeded thirtie yeares of age, had in their baptisme professed, and in their youth had learned the same religion which they now so bitterlie oppugned. And beSides that, in their opinions they differ much from the martyrs of quéene Maries time: for though they which suffered in quéene Maries time continued in the profession of the religion wherein they were christened, and as they were perpetuallie taught; yet they neuer at their death denied their lawfull quéene, nor maintained anie of hir open and forren enimies, nor anie procured rebellion or ciuill warre, nor did sow anie sedition in secret corners, nor withdrew anie subiects from their obedience, as these sworne seruants of the pope haue continuallie done.

And therefore all these things well considered, there is no doubt, but all good subiects within the realme do manifestlie see, and all wauering persons (not being led cleane out of the waie by the seditions) will hereafter perceiue, how they haue béene abused to go astraie. And all strangers, but speciallie all christian potentats, as emperours, kings, princes, and such like, hauing their souereigne estates, either in succession hereditarie, or by consent of their people, being acquainted with the verie truth of these hir maiesties late iust and necessarie actions, onelie for defense of hir selfe, hir crowne, and people, against open inuadours, and for eschewing of ciuill warres, stirred vp by rebellion, will allow in their owne like cases, for a truth and rule (as it is not to be doubted but they will) that it belongeth not vnto a bishop of Rome as successour of saint Peter, and therein a pastour spirituall, or if he were the bishop of all christendome, as by the name of pope he claimeth, first by his bulles or excommunications, in this sort at his will in fauour of traitors and rebels, to depose anie souereigne princes, being lawfullie inuested in their crownes by succession in bloud, or by lawfull election; and then to arme subiects against their naturall lords, to make warres, and to dispense with them for their oths in so doing, or to excommunicat faithfull subiects for obeieng of their naturall princes, & lastlie himselfe to make open warre, with his owne souldiers, against princes mouing no force against him.

In aduertisement vnto all princes of countries abroad.

For if these high tragicall powers should be permitted to him to exercise, then should no empire, no kingdome, no countrie, no citie or towne be possessed by anie lawfull title, longer than one such onelie an earthlie man, sitting (as he saieth) in saint Peters chaire at Rome, should for his will and appetite (without warrant from God or man) thinke méet and determine: an authoritie neuer chalenged by the Lord of lords the sonne of God, Iesus Christ our onelie Lord and sauiour, and the onelie head of his church, whilest he was in his humanitie vpon the earth; nor yet deliuered by anie writing or certeine tradition from saint Peter, from whome the pope pretendeth to deriue all his authoritie; nor yet from saint Paule the apostle of the gentils: but contrariwise by all preachings, precepts and writings, conteined in the gospell and other scriptures of the apostles, obedience is expreSSelie commanded vnto all earthlie princes; yea, euen vnto kings by especiall name, and that so generallie, as no person is excepted from such

The authoritie proclaimed by the pope not warranted by Christ or by the two apostles Peter and Paul.

duti[e]

dutie of obedience, as by the sentence of saint Paule euen to the Romans, appeareth, Omnis anima sublimioribus potestatibus sit subdita, that is, Let euerie soule be subiect to the higher powers: within the compasse of which law or precept, saint Chrysostome being bishop of Constantinople, writeth, that Euen apostles, prophets, euangelists, and monks are comprehended.

And for proofe of saint Peters mind herein, from whome these popes claime their authoritie, it can not be plainelier expressed, than when he writeth thus, Proinde subiecti estote cuiuis humanæ ordinationi, propter Dominum, siue regi, vt qui supereminet, siue præsidibus ab eo missis, that is, Therefore be you subiect to euerie humane ordinance or creature for the Lord, whether it be to the king, as to him that is supereminent, or aboue the rest, or to his presidents sent by him. By which two principall apostles of Christ, these popes the pretensed successors, but chiefly by that which Christ the sonne of God the onelie maister of truth said to Peter and his fellow apostles, Reges gentium dominantur, vos autem non sic, that is, The kings of the gentils haue rule ouer them, but you not so, maie learne to forsake their arrogant and tyrannous authorities in earthlie and temporall causes ouer kings and princes, and exercise their pastorall office: as saint Peter was charged thrise at one time by his Lord and maister, Pasce oues meas, Fæd my shæpe, and peremptorilie forbidden to vse a sword, in saieng to him, Conuerte gladium tuum in locum suum, or Mitte gladium tuum in vaginam, that is, Turne thy sword into his place: or, Put thy sword into the scabbard.

All which precepts of Christ and his apostles were dulie followed and obserued manie hundred yeares after their death, by the faithfull and godlie bishops of Rome, that dulie followed the doctrine and humilitie of the apostles, and the doctrine of Christ, and were holie martyrs, and thereby dilated the limits of Christs church and the faith more in the compasse of an hundred yeares, than the latter popes haue done with their swords and cursses these fiue hundred yeares, and so continued vntill the time of one pope Hildebrand, otherwise called Gregorie the seuenth, about the yeare of our Lord, one thousand three score and fourtéene; who first began to vsurpe that kind of tyrannie, which of late the late pope called Pius Quintus, and since that time Gregorie now the thirtéenth hath followed, for some example as it séemeth: that is, where Gregorie the seuenth, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three score and fourtéene, or thereabout, presumed to depose Henrie the fourth, a noble emperor then being; Gregorie the thirtéenth now at this time, would attempt the like against king Henrie the eights daughter and heire quéene Elisabeth, a souereigne, and a maiden quéene, holding hir crowne immediatlie of God.

Pope Hildebrand the first that made warre against the emperor.

And to the end it may appeare to princes, or to their good councellors in one example, what was the fortunat successe that God gaue to this good christian emperor Henrie, against the proud pope Hildebrand, it is to be noted, that when the pope Gregorie attempted to depose this noble emperor Henrie, there was one Rodulph a noble man, by some named the count of Rœnfield, that by the popes procurement vsurped the name of the emperor, who was ouercome by the said Henrie the lawfull emperor, and in fight hauing lost his right hand, he, the said Rodulph, lamented his case to certeine bishops, who in the popes name had erected him vp, and to them he said, that the selfe same right hand which he had lost, was the same hand wherewith he had before sworne obedience to his lord and maister the emperor Henrie; and that in following their vngodlie counsels, he had brought vpon him Gods heatie and iust iudgements. And so Henrie the emperor prenailing by Gods power, caused Gregorie the pope by a synod in Italie to be deposed, as in like times before him his predecessor Otho the emperor had deposed one pope John for manie heinous crimes: & so were also within a short time three other popes, namelie, Syluester, Bennet, and Gregorie the first, vsed by the emperor Henrie the third, about the yeare of our Lord, one thousand fortie and seuen, for their like presumptuous attempts in temporall actions against the said emperors.

Pope Gregorie the seuenth deposed by Henrie the fourth.

Manie other examples might be shewed to the emperors maiestie, and the princes of the holie empire now being, after the time of Henrie the fourth: as of Henrie the fift, and Frederike the first, and Frederike the second, and then of Lewes of Bauar, all emperors, cruellie and tyrannouslie persecuted by the popes, and by their buls, cursses, and by open wars, and likewise to manie other the great kings and monarchs of christendome, of their noble progenitors, kings of their seuerall dominions. Whereby they may see how this kind of tyrannous authoritie in popes to make warres vpon emperors & kings, and to command them to be deprsiued, toke hold at the first by pope Hildebrand, though the same neuer had anie lawfull example or warrant from the lawes of God of the old or new testament: but yet the successes of their tyrannies were by Gods goodnesse for the most part made frustrat, as by Gods goodnesse there is no doubt, but the like will followe to their confusions at all times to come.

Henrie the fift. Frederike the first. Frederike the second. Lewes of Bauar, emperors.

And therefore, as there is no doubt, but the like violent tyrannous procédings by anie pope in maintenance of traitors and rebels, would be withstood by euerie souereigne prince in christendome in defense of their persons and crownes, and maintenance of their subiects in peace: so is there at this present a like iust cause that the emperors maiestie, with the princes of the holie empire, and all other souereigne kings & princes in christendome, should iudge the same to be lawfull for hir maiestie being a quéene, and holding the verie place of a king and a prince souereigne ouer diuers kingdoms and nations; she being also most lawfullie inuested in hir crowne: and as for good gouerning of hir people, with such applause and generall allowance, loued, and obeied of them; sauing a few ragged traitors, or rebels, or persons discontented, whereof no other realme is frée, as continuallie for these fiue & twentie yeares past hath béene notablie séene, and so publikelie marked, euen by strangers repairing into this realme, as it were no cause of disgrace to anie monarch and king in christendome, to haue hir maiesties felicitie compared with anie of theirs whatsoeuer: and it maie be, there are manie kings and princes could be well contented with the fruition of some proportion of hir felicitie.

Whatsoeuer is lawfull for other princes souereignes, is lawfull for the quéene and crowne of England.

And though the popes be now suffered by the emperor, in the lands of his owne peculiar patrimonie, and by the two great monarchs, the French king and the king of Spaine, in their dominions and territories (although by manie other kings not so allowed) to continue his authoritie in sundrie cases, and his glorious title to be the vniuersall bishop of the world, which title Gregorie the great aboue nine hundred yeares past, called a prophane title, full of sacrilege, and a preamble of antichrist: yet in all their dominions & kingdoms, as also in the realme of England, most notablie by manie ancient lawes it is well knowne, how manie waies the tyrannous power of this his excessiue authoritie hath béene, and still is restreined, checked and limited by lawes and pragmatikes, both ancient and new, both in France and Spaine and other dominions: a verie large field for the lawyers of those countries to walke in and discourse.

The title of vniuersall bishop is a preamble of antichrist.

An. Do. 1074. The iudgement of God against the popes false erected emperor.

And howsoeuer the popes canonists, being as his bombarders, do make his excommunications and curses appeare fearefull to the multitude and simple people: yet all great emperors and kings aforetime, in their owne cases, of their rights and roiall preeminences, though the same concerned but a citie or a poore towne, and sometime but the not allowance of some vnworthie person to a bishoprike or to an abbeie, neuer refrained to despise all popes curses or forces; but attempted alwaies, either by their swords to compell them to desist from their furious actions, or without anie feare of themselues, in bodie, soule, or conscience, stoutlie to withstand their curses, and that sometime by force, sometime by ordinances and lawes: the ancient histories whereof are to manie to be repeated, and of none more frequent and effectuall than of the kings of France. And in the records of England doth appeare, how stoutlie the kings & the baronadie of England from age to age, by extreame penall laws haue so repelled the popes vsurpations, as with the verie name of præmunires his proctors haue béene terrified, and his clergie haue quaked, as of late cardinall Wolsele did prooue.

But leauing those that are ancient, we may remember how in this our owne present or late age, it hath béene manifestlie séene, how the armie of the late noble emperour Charles the fift, father to king Philip that now reigneth, was not afraid of his curses, when in the yeare of our Lord 1527, Rome it selfe was besieged and sacked, and the pope then called Clement, and his cardinals, to the number of about thirtie and three, in his mount Adrian or castell S. Angelo, taken prisoners and deteined seauen moneths or more, and after ransomed by Don Vgo di Moncada a Spaniard; and the marquesse of Guasto, at aboue foure hundred thousand duckets, besides the ransomes of the cardinals which was much greater; hauing not long before time béene also (notwithstanding his curses) besieged in the same castell by the familie of the Colonies and their fautors his nert neighbours being then imperialists, and forced to yeld to all their demands. Neither did king Henrie the second of France, father to Henrie now king of France, about the yeare 1550, feare or regard the pope or his court of Rome, when he made seuerall strict edicts against manie parts of the popes claimes in prejudice of the crowne and clergie of France, retracting the authoritie of the court of Rome greatlie to the hinderance of the popes former profits. Neither was the armie of king Philip now of Spaine, whereof the duke of Alua was generall, stricken with anie feare of cursing, when it was brought afore Rome against the pope, in the yeare of our Lord 1555, where great destruction was made by the said armie, and all the delicat buildings, gardens, and orchards, nert to Rome walles ouerthrowne, wherewith his holinesse was more terrified than he was able to remoue with anie his curses. Neither was quéene Marie the quénes maiesties noble late sister, a person not a little deuoted to the Romane religion, so afraid of the popes cursings; but that both shée and hir whole councell, and that with the assent of all the iudges of the realme, according to the ancient lawes, in fauour of cardinall Pole hir kinsman, did most strictlie forbid the entrie of his bulles, and of a cardinals hat at Calis, that was sent from the pope for one frier Peito, an obseruant pleasant frier, whom the pope had assigned to be a cardinall in disgrace of cardinall Pole: neither did cardinall Pole himselfe at the same time obeie the popes commandements, nor shewed himselfe afraid, being assisted by the quéene, when the pope did threaten him with paine of curses and excommunications; but did still oppose himselfe against the popes commandement, for the said pretended cardinall Peito: who notwithstanding all the threatenings of the pope, was forced to go vp and downe in the stréets of London like a begging frier, without his red hat: a stout resistance in a quéene for a poore cardinals hat, wherin she followed the example of hir grandfather king Henrie the seuenth, for a matter of Allum, wherein the king vsed verie great seueritie against the pope.

So as howsoeuer the christian kings for some respects in policie can indure the pope to command where no harme nor disaduantage groweth to themselues, yet sure it is, and the popes are not ignorant, but where they shall in anie sort attempt to take from christian princes anie part of their dominions, or shall giue aid to their enimies, or to anie other their rebels, in those cases, their bulles, their curses, their excommunications, their sentences and most solemne anathematicals, no nor their crosse keies, or double edged sword, will serue their turnes to compasse their intentions. And now, where the pope hath manifestlie by his bulles and excommunications attempted asmuch as he could, to depriue hir maiestie of hir kingdomes, to withdraw from hir the obedience of hir subiects, to procure rebellions in hir realms, yea to make both rebellions and open warres with his owne capteines, souldiers, banners, ensignes, and all other things belonging to warre: shall this pope Gregorie or anie other pope after him, thinke that a souereigne quéene, possessed of the two realmes of England and Ireland, stablished so manie yeares in hir kingdomes as three or foure popes haue sit in their chaire at Rome, fortified with so much dutie, loue and strength of hir subiects, acknowledging no superiour ouer hir realms, but the mightie hand of God: shall she forbeare, or feare to withstand and make frustrate his vnlawfull attempts, either by hir sword or by hir lawes; or to put his soldiers inuadors of hir realme to the sword martiallie, or to execute hir lawes vpon hir owne rebellious subiects ciuillie, that are proued to be his chiefe instruments for rebellion, & for his open warre? This is sure, that howsoeuer either he sitting in his chaire with a triple crowne at Rome, or anie other his proctors in anie part of christendome, shall renew these vnlawfull attempts; almightie God the king of kings whom hir maiestie onlie honoreth and acknowledgeth to be hir onlie souereigne Lord and protector, & whose lawes and gospell of his son Jesus Christ she séeketh to defend, will no doubt but deliuer sufficient power into his maidens hand his seruant quéene Elisabeth, to withstand and confound them all.

And where the seditious trumpetors of infamies & lies haue sounded forth and intituled certeine that haue suffered for treason, to be martyrs for religion: so may they also at this time (if they list) ad to their forged catalog the headlesse bodie of the late miserable earle of Desmond, the head of the Irish rebellion: who of late, secretlie wandering without succour, as a miserable begger, was taken by one of the Irishrie in his caben, and in an Irish sort, after his owne accustomed sauage maner, his head cut off from his bodie: an end due to such an archrebell. And herewith to remember the end of his chiefe confederats, may be noted for example to others, the strange manner of the death of doctor Sanders the popes Irish legat, who also wandering in the mountains in Ireland without succor, died rauing in a frensie. And before him, one James Fitzmoris the 1527 Rome sacked, and the pope Clement take prisoner by the emperors armie.

1550 King Henrie the second of France his edicts against the pope and his courts of Rome.

The besieging of Rome and the pope by the duke of Alua and king Philips armie.

Quéene Marie and cardinall Pole resisted the pope.

D. Peito a begging frier.

The kings of christendome neuer suffer popes to abridge their titles or rights, though they suffer them to haue rule ouer their people.

The quéene of England may not suffer the pope by anie meanes to make rebellions in hir realme.

Additaments to the popes martyrologe.

The strange ends of James earle of Desmond, D. Sanders, James Fitzmoris.

the first traitour of Ireland next to Stukeleie the rakehell, a man not vnknowen in the popes palace for a wicked craftie traitor, was slaine at one blow by an Irish noble yong gentleman, in defense of his fathers countrie which the traitor sought to burne.

John of Desmond. A fourth man of singular note was John of Desmond, brother to the earle, a verie bloudie faithlesse traitor, & a notable murderer of his familiar friends, who also wandring to seeke some preie like a woolfe in the woods, was taken & beheaded after his owne vsage, being (as he thought) sufficientlie armed with the popes buls and certeine Agnus Dei, & one notable ring with a pretious stone about his necke sent from the popes finger (as it was said) but these he saw saued not his life. And such were the fatall ends of all these, being the principall heads of the Irish warre and rebellion, so as no one person remaineth at this daie in Ireland a knowen traitor: a worke of God and not of man.

John Somerusle. To this number they may (if they seeke number) also ad a furious yong man of Warwikeshire, by name Somerusle, to increase their kalendar of the popes martyrs, who of late was discouered and taken in his waie, comming with a full intent to haue killed hir maiestie, whose life God alwaies haue in his custodie. The attempt not denied by the traitor himselfe, but confessed, and that he was moued therto in his wicked spirit, by intisements of certeine seditious and traitorous persons his kinsmen and allies, & also by often reading of sundrie seditious vile bookes latelie published against hir maiestie, and his end was in desperation to strangle himselfe to death: an example of Gods severitie against such as presume to offer violence to his anointed. But as God of his goodnesse hath of long time hitherto preserued hir maiestie from these and the like treacheries: so hath she no cause to feare, being vnder his protection, she saieng with king Dauid in the psalme: My God is my helper and I will trust in him, he is my protection, and the strength or the power of my saluation. And for the more comfort of all good subiects against the shadowes of the popes bulles, it is manifest to the world, that from the beginning of hir maiesties reigne, by Gods singular goodnesse, hir kingdome hath inioied more vniuersall peace, hir people increased in more numbers, in more strength, and with greater riches, & with lesse sickenesse, the earth of hir kingdomes hath yelded more fruits, and generallie all kind of worldlie felicitie hath more abounded since and during the time of the popes thunders, bulles, curses and maledictions, than in anie other long times before, when the popes pardons and blessings came yearelie into the realme: so as his curses and maledictions haue turned backe to himselfe and his fautors, that it may be said to the blessed queene Elisabeth of England and of hir people, as was said in Deuteronomie of Balaam: The Lord thy God would not heare Balaam, but did turne his maledictions or curses into benedictions or blessings: the reason is, for bicause thy God loued thee.

The prosperitie of England, during the popes curses.

Although these former reasons are sufficient to persuade all kind of reasonable persons to allow of hir maiesties actions, to be good, reasonable, lawfull and necessarie: yet bicause it may be, that such as haue by frequent reading of false artificiall libels; and by giuing credit to them, vpon a preiudice or foreiudgement afore grounded, by their rooted opinions in fauour of the pope, will rest vnsatisfied: therfore as much as may be, to satisfie all persons as farre forth as common reason may warrant, that hir maiesties late action in executing certeine seditious traitors, hath not proceeded for the holding of opinions, either for the popes supremasie, or against hir maiesties regalitie; but for the verie crimes of sedition and treason: it shall suffice briefle, in manner of a repetition of the former reasons, to remember these things following.

Reasons to persuade by reason the fauourers of the pope, that none hath beene executed for religion but for treason.

The first reason.

First, it cannot be denied, but that hir maiestie did for manie yeares suffer quietlie the popes bulles and excommunications without punishment of the fautors thereof, accounting of them but as of words or wind, or of writings in parchment waied downe with lead, or as of water bubbles, commonlie called in Latine Bullæ, & such like: but yet after some proofe that courage was taken therof by some bold and bad subiects, she could not but then esteeme them to be verie preambles, or as forerunners of greater danger: and therefore, with what reason could anie mislike, that hir maiestie did for a bare defense against them, without other action or force, vse the helpe of reuiuing of former lawes, to prohibit the publication or execution of such kind of bulles within hir realme?

The second reason.

Secondlie, when notwithstanding the prohibition by hir lawes, the same bulles were plentifullie (but in secret sort) brought into the realme, and at length arrogantlie set vpon the gates of the bishop of Londons palace neere to the cathedrall church of Paules the principall citie of the realme, by a lewd person, vsing the same like a herald sent from the pope: who can in anie common reason mislike, that hir maiestie finding this kind of denunciation of warre, as a defiance to be made in hir principall citie by one of hir subiects, auowing and obstinatlie maintaining the same, should according to iustice cause the offendor to haue the reward due to such a fact? And this was the first action of anie capitall punishment inflicted for matter sent from Rome to moue rebellion, which was after hir maiestie had reigned about the space of twelue yeares or more: a time sufficient to proue hir maiesties patience.

The bull of Pius Quintus set vp at Paules.

The first punishment for the bull.

The third reason.

Thirdlie, when the pope had risen vp out of his chaire in his wrath, from words and writings to actions, and had contrarie to the aduise giuen by saint Barnard to one of his predecessors, that is, when by his messages he left Verbum, and toke Ferrum, that is, left to feed by the word, which was his office, and began to strike with the sword which was forbidden him, and stirred hir noblemen and people directlie to disobedience and to open rebellion, which was the office of Dathan and Abiram, and that hir lewd subiects by his commandement had executed the same with all the forces which they could make or bring into the field: who with common reason can disallow that hir maiestie vsed hir roiall lawfull authoritie, and by hir forces lawfull subdued rebels forces vnlawfull, and punished the authors thereof no otherwise than the pope himselfe vseth to do with his owne rebellious subiects, in the patrimonie of his church, as not manie moneths passed he had beene forced to intend? And if anie prince of people in the world would otherwise neglect his office, and suffer his rebels to haue their wils; none ought to pitie him, if for want of resistance and courage he lost both his crowne, his head, his life, and his kingdome.

Rebellion in the north.

Fourthlie, when hir maiestie beheld a further increase of the popes malice, notwithstanding that the first rebellion was in hir north parts vanquished, in that he interteined abroad out of this realme, the traitors and rebels that fled for the rebellion, and all the rable of other the fugitiues of the realme, & that he sent a number of the same in sorts disguised into both the realmes of England and Ireland, who there secretlie allured hir people to new rebellions, and at the same time spared not his charges to send also out of Italie by sea, certeine ships with capteines of his owne, with their bands of souldiers, furnished with treasure, munition, victels, ensignes, banners, and

The fourth reason.

The innasion of Ireland by the pope.

and all other things requisite to the warre, into hir realme of Ireland, where the same forces with other auxiliar companies out of Spaine landed, and fortified themselues verie stronglie on the sea side, and proclamed open warre, erecting the popes banner against hir maiestie: may it be now asked of these persons, fauourers of the Romish authoritie, what in reason should haue béene done by hir maiestie otherwise, than first to apprehend all such fugitiues so stolen into the realme, and dispersed in disguising habits to sow sedition, as some priests in their secret profession, but all in their apparell as rotters or ruffians, some scholers, like to the basest common people, and them to commit to prisons, and vpon their examinations of their trades and hants, to conuince them of their conspiracies abroad, by testimonie of their owne companions, and of sowing sedition secretlie at home in the realme? What may be reasonablie thought was meet to be done with such seditious persons, but by the lawes of the realme to trie, condemne and execute them? And specíallie hauing regard to the dangerous time, when the popes forces were in the realme of Ireland, and more in preparation to follow as well into England as into Ireland, to the resistance whereof hir maiestie and hir realme was forced to be at greater charges, than euer she had béene since she was quéene thereof. And so by Gods power, which he gaue to hir on the one part, she did by hir lawes suppresse the seditious stirrers of rebellion in hir realme of England, and by hir sword vanquished all the popes forces in hir realme of Ireland, excepting certeine capteines of marke that were saued from the sword, as persons that did renounce their quarrell, and seemed to curse or to blame such as sent them to so vnfortunate and desperate a voiage.

The popes forces vanquished in Ireland.

The politike aduersaries satisfied.

But though these reasons, grounded vpon rules of naturall reason, shall satisfie a great number of the aduersaries (who will yeld that by good order of ciuill and christian policie and gouernement, hir maiestie could nor can do no lesse than she hath done, first to subdue with hir forces hir rebels and traitors, and next by order of hir lawes to correct the aiders & abettors, & lastlie to put also to the sword such forces as the pope sent into hir dominions) yet there are certeine other persons, more nicelie addicted to the pope, that will yet séeme to be vnsatisfied: for that, as they will tearme the matter, a number of sillie poore wretches were put to death as traitors, being but in profession scholers or priests, by the names of seminaries, Iesuits, or simple scholemaisters, that came not into the realme with anie armour or weapon, by force to aid the rebels and traitors, either in England or in Ireland in their rebellions or wars; of which sort of wretches the commiseration is made, as though for their contrarie opinions in religion, or for teaching of the people to disobeie the lawes of the realme, they might haue bene otherwise punished and corrected, but yet not with capitall paine. These kinds of defenses tend onelie to find fault rather with the seueritie of their punishments, than to acquit them as innocents or quiet subiects.

Obiection of the papists, that the persons executed, are but scholers and vnarmed.

But for answer to the better satisfaction of these nice and scrupulous fauourers of traitors, it must be with reason demanded of them (if at least they will open their eares to reason) whether they thinke that when a king being stablished in his realme, hath a rebellion first secretlie practised, and afterward openlie raised in his realme by his owne seditious subiects; and when by a forren potentate or enimie the same rebellion is maintained, and the rebels by messages and promises comforted to continue, and their treasons against their naturall prince auowed; and consequentlie when the same potentat and enimie, being author of the said rebellion, shall with his owne proper forces inuade the realme and subiects of the prince that is so lawfullie and peaceablie possessed: in these cases, shall no subiect fauouring these rebels, and yéelding obedience to the enimie the inuador, be committed or punished as a traitor; but onelie such of them, as shall be found openlie to carrie armour and weapon? Shall no subiect, that is a spiall and an explorer for the rebell or enimie against his naturall prince, be taken and punished as a traitor, bicause he is not found with armour or weapon; but yet is taken in his disguised apparell, with scrolles and writings, or other manifest tokens, to proue him a spie for traitors, after he hath wandered secretlie in his souereignes campe, region, court, or citie? Shall no subiect be counted a traitor, that will secretlie giue earnest and prest monie to persons to be rebels or enimies, or that will attempt to poison the vittels, or the founteins; or secretlie set on fire the ships or munition, or that will secretlie search and sound the hauens and creeks for landing, or measure the depth of ditches, or height of bulworks and walles, bicause these offendors are not found with armor or weapon? The answer I thinke must néeds be yéelded (if reason and experience shall haue rule with these aduersaries) that all these and such like are to be punished as traitors: and the principall reason is, bicause it can not be denied, but that the actions of all these are necessarie accessaries, and adherents proper to further and continue all rebellions and warres. But if they will denie, that none are traitors that are not armed, they will make Iudas no traitor, that came to Christ without armour, colouring his treason with a kisse.

Many are traitours though they haue no armour nor weapon.

Now therefore it resteth to aplie the facts of these late malefactors that are pretended to haue offended but as scholers, or bookemen; or at the most but as persons that onelie in words and doctrine, and not with armour did fauour and helpe the rebels and the enimies. For which purpose let these persons be termed as they list, scholers, scholemaisters, bookemen, seminaries, priests, Iesuits, friers, beadmen, Romanists, pardoners, or what else you will; neither their titles, nor their apparell hath made them traitors, but their traitorous secret motions & practises: their persons haue not made the warre, but their directions and counsels haue set vp the rebellions. It is trulie to be pondered, that the verie causes finall of these rebellions and warres, haue béene to depose hir maiestie from hir crowne: the popes bull hath roared it so to be. The causes instrumentall are these kind of seminaries and sedmen of sedition: their secret teachings and reconciliations haue confirmed it. The fruits and effects thereof are by rebellion to shed the blood of all hir faithfull subiects: the rewards of the inuadors (if they could preuaile) should be the disinheriting of all the nobilitie, the clergie, and the whole communaltie, that would (as they are bound by the lawes of God, by their birth, and othes) defend their naturall gratious quéene, their natiue countrie, their wiues, their children, their familie, and their houses.

The application of the scholasticall traitors, to others, that are traitors without armor.

And now examine these which you call vnarmed scholers and priests, wherefore they first fled out of the realme, why they liued and were conuersant in companie of the principall rebels and traitors at Rome, and in their places, where it is proued that they were partakers of their conspiracies? Let it be answered why they came thus by stealth into the realme? Why they haue wandered vp & downe in corners in disguised sort, changing their titles, names and maner of apparell? Why they haue intised and sought to persuade by their secret false reasons, the people to allow and beléeue all the actions and attempts what soeuer the pope hath done, or shall doo, to be lawfull? Why they haue reconciled and withdrawne so manie people in corners from the lawes of the realme to the obedience of the pope, a forreine potentate and open enimie, whome they know to haue alreadie declared the quæne to be no lawfull quæne, to haue mainteined the knowne rebels and traitors, to haue inuaded hir maiesties dominions with open warre? Examine further, how these vagarant disguised vnarmed spies haue answered, when they were taken and demanded what they thought of the bull of pope Pius Quintus, which was published to deprive the quænes maiestie, and to warrant hir subiects to disobeie hir: whether they thought that all subiects ought to obeie the same bull, and so to rebell? Secondlie, whether they thought hir maiestie to be lawfull quæne of the realme, notwithstanding the said bull or anie other bull of the pope? Thirdlie, whether the pope might giue such licence as he did to the earls of Northumberland and Westmerland, and other hir maiesties subiects to rebell as they did? Or giue power to doctor Sanders a naturall borne subiect, but an vnnaturall borne priest, to take armes and moue warres as he did in Ireland? Fourthlie, whether the pope may discharge the subiects of hir maiestie, or of anie other princes christened, of their oths of obedience? Fiftlie, whether the said traitorous priest doctor Sanders or one Bristow a rebellious fugitiue, did in their bookes write trulie or falslie, in approuing the said bull of Pius Quintus, and the contents thereof? Lastlie, what were to be done, if the pope or anie other assigned by him, would inuade the realme of England, and what part they would take, or what part anie faithfull subiect of hir maiesties ought to take? To these few questions verie apt to trie the truth or falshod of any such seditious persons, being iustlie before condemned for their disloialtie, these lewd vnarmed traitors I say would in no wise answer directlie herto, as all other faith full subiects to anie christian prince ought to doo.

Six questions to trie traitors from scholers.

And as they by refusall to answer directlie to these questions onelie, might haue bene iustlie conuinced as guiltie of treason: so yet were they not therevpon condemned, but vpon all their other former actions committed both abroad & in the relme, which were no lesse traitorous than the actions of all other the spies and traitors, and of Judas himselfe afore remembred, which had no armor nor weapon, and yet at all times ought to be adiudged traitors. For these disguised persons (called scholers or priests) hauing bene first conuersant of long time with the traitors beyond the sea in all their conspiracies, came hither by stealth in time of war and rebellion by commandement of the capitall enimie the pope or his legats, to be secret espials and explorers in the realme for the pope, to deliuer by secret, Romish tokens, as it were an earnest or prest, to them that should be in readines to ioine with rebels or open enimies, and in like sort with their hallowed baggages from Rome to poison the senses of the subiects, powring into their hearts malicious and pestilent opinions against hir maiestie and the lawes of the realme; and also to kindle and set on fire the hearts of discontented subiects with the flames of rebellion, & to search & sound the depths and secrets of all mens inward intentions, either against hir maiestie, or for hir: and finallie, to bring into a beadroll, or as it were into a muster roll, the names and powers with the dwellings of all them that should be readie to rebell, and to aid the forreine inuasion.

The offendors executed for treason, not for religion.

These kinds of seditious actions for the seruice of the pope and the traitors and rebels abroad, haue made them traitors: not their bookes, nor their beads, no nor their cakes of wax which they call Agnus Dei, nor other their relikes, no nor yet their opinions for the ceremonies or rites of the church of Rome: and therefore it is to be certeinelie concluded, that these did iustlie deserue their capitall punishments as traitors, though they were not apprehended with open armour or weapon. Now if this latter repetition, as it were of all the former causes and reasons afore recited, may not serue to stop the boisterous mouthes, and the pestiferous tongs, and venemous breaths of those that are infected with so grosse errors, as to defend seditious subiects, stirrers of rebellion against their naturall prince and countrie; then are they to be left without anie further argument of the almightie God, as persons that haue couered their eies against the sunnes light, stopped their eares against the sound of iustice, and oppressed their hearts against the force of reason, and as the psalmist saith: They speake lies, they are as venemous as the poison of a serpent, euen like the deafe adder that stoppeth his eares.

Vnreasonable and obstinate persons are left to Gods iudgement.

Wherefore with christian charitie to conclude, if these rebels and traitors, and their fautors would yet take some remorse and compassion of their naturall countrie, and would consider how vaine their attempts haue bene so manie yeares; and how manie of their confederats are wasted by miseries and calamities, and how none of all their attempts or plats haue prospered, and therefore would desist from their vnnaturall practises abroad: and if these seminaries, secret wanderers, and explorators in the darke, would implote their trauels in the works of light and doctrine according to the vsage of their schooles, and content themselues with their profession and deuotion: and that the remnant of the wicked flocke of the sedmen of sedition would cease from their rebellious, false and infamous railings and libellings, altogether contrarie to christian charitie: there is no doubt by Gods grace (hir maiestie being so much giuen to mercie and deuoted to peace) but all colour and occasion of shedding the bloud of anie more of hir naturall subiects of this land, yea all further bodilie punishment should vtterlie cease. Against whose malices, if they shall not desist, almightie God continue hir maiestie with his spirit and power long to reigne and liue in his feare, and to be able to vanquish them all, being Gods enimies, and especiallie hir rebels and traitors both at home & abroad, & to maintaine & preserue all hir naturall good louing subiects, to the true seruice of the same almightie God, according to his holie word & will. Manie other things might be remembred for defense of other hir maiesties princelie, honorable, and godlie actions in sundrie other things, wherein also these and the like seditious railors haue of late time without all shame, by fained and false libels sought to discredit hir maiestie & hir gouernement: but at this time, these former causes and reasons alleaged by waie of aduertisements, onelie for maintenance of truth, are sufficient to iustifie hir maiesties actions to the whole world in the cases remembred. Magna est veritas, & præualet: Great is truth, and she ouercommeth. 2. Esd. 4.

On the two and twentith of Januarie, John Watson bishop of Winchester deceased at Wolseie, and was buried at Winchester on the sixteenth daie of Februarie; a man he was well taught by the art which he professed and practised, to esteeme this life as it is, euen transitorie & verie vaine; wherin as men are the further stept in age, so should they be the lesse desirous to liue, and take death comming timelie (which is, when as naturall heate and the moisture radicall are decaied) in such good part, as nothing thing more acceptable. But who thinkes his death to come timelie; but the godlie wise, who haue learned, that as men haue daies of life decreed, so they haue daies of death determined; according to the tetrastichon, which that famous man Ioachimus Camerarius (an excellent man and of singular note) made a little before his departing out of this world:

Bishop of winchester deceased.

Morte nihil tempestiua esse optatius aiunt,
Sed tempestiuam quis putat esse suam?
Qui putat ille sapit; quoniam vt solatia vitæ,
Sic & quisque suæ tempora mortis habet.

Five executed for treason.

On the seuenth of Februarie were arreigned at Westminster, James Fenne, George Haddocks, John Munden, John Sutter, and Thomas Homerford: all fiue were found guiltie of high treason, and had iudgement to be drawne, hanged, bowelled, and quartered, and were executed at Tiborne on the twelfedaie of Februarie. ¶ In this yeare, 1584, euen at the prime of the yeare, namelie in Aprill, maister Walter Raleigh esquier, a gentleman from his infancie brought vp and trained in martiall discipline, both by land and sea, and well inclined to all vertuous and honorable aduentures, hauing built a ship and a pinesse, set them to the sea, furnished with all prouisions necessarie for a long viage, and committed the charge of them to two gentlemen (his owne seruants) the one called Philip Amadis, the other Arthur Barlow, with direction to discouer that land which lieth betweene Norembega and Florida in the west Indies; who according to their commission, made as sufficient a discouerie thereof as so short a time would permit: for they returned in August next following, and brought with them two sauage men of that countrie, with sundrie other things, that did assure their maister of the goodnesse of the soile, and of great commodities that would arise to the realme of England, by traffique, if that the English had anie habitation, and were planted to liue there. Whereupon, he immediatlie prepared for a second viage, which with all expedition (nothing at all regarding the charges that it would amount vnto) did presentlie set in hand.

A. F. ex add. G. C.

Maister Walter Raleigh his viage for the discouerie of that land which lieth betweene Norembega and Florida.

Philip Amadis, and Arthur Barlow.

Two sauage men and other things brought from the said land discouered.

Maister Walter Raleigh prepareth for a second viage to the said land late discouered.

This countrie of Norembega aforesaid (and the land on this side of it) sir Humfrie Gilbert, brother to sir Walter Raleigh, a man both valiant and well experienced in martiall affaires, did attempt to discouer, with intention to settle an English colonie there, in the yeare 1578: hauing in his companie his two brethren, Walter and Carew Raleighs, Henrie Knolles, George Carew, William Careie, Edward Dennie, Henrie Nowell, Miles Morgan, Francis Knolles, Henrie North, and diuerse other gentlemen of good calling, and ten sailes of all sorts of shipping, well and sufficientlie furnished for such an enterprise, weighed anchor in the west countrie, & set to the sea. But God not fauoring his attempt, the iourneie tooke no good successe: for all his ships inforced by some occasion or mischance, made their present returne againe; that onelie excepted, wherein his brother Walter Raleigh was captaine, who being desirous to do somewhat worthie honor, tooke his course for the west Indies, but for want of vittels and other necessaries (needfull in so long a viage) when he had sailed as far as the Ilands of Cape de Verde vpon the coast of Affrica, was inforced to set saile and returne for England. In this his viage he passed manie dangerous aduentures, as well by tempests as fights on the sea; but lastlie he arriued safelie at Plimouth in the west countrie in May next following. Sir Humfrete Gilbert notwithstanding this vnfortunate successe of his first attempt, enterprised the said viage the second time, and set to the sea with three ships and pinesses, in the yeare 1584, in the which iourneie he lost his life; but in what sort no man can witnesse. For being by force of foule weather separated from his companie, he was neuer heard of afterwards.]

Gentlemen that associated sir Humfrete Gilbert in his viage to Norembega 1578.

The viage hath not wished successe.

Maister Walter Raleigh sailed as far as Cape de Verde, &c. and arriueth in safetie at Plimouth.

Sir Humfrie Gilbert seuered from his companie, dead, and neuer heard of.

¶ In this yeare, and the twentith daie of Maie departed out of this life that famous father of physicke and surgerie, the English Hippocrates and Galen, I meane doctor Caldwell, and was buried on the first of June immediatlie following at S. Benets church by Paules wharfe, at the vpper end of the chancell: his bodie was verie solemnelie accompanied to the church with a traine of learned and graue doctors, besides others of that facultie, the heralds of armes doing him such honour at his funerall as to him of dutie apperteined. Of this mans rare loue to his countrie hath beene spoken before, where mention is made of the institution of a surgerie lecture perpetuallie to be continued for the common benefit of London, and consequentlie of all England: the like whereof is not established nor vsed in anie vniuersitie of christendome (Bononie and Padua excepted) and therefore the more to be esteemed. Indeed the like institution was in towardnesse, whiles Francis the French of that name the first liued: but when he died, as the court that he kept in his time was counted a vniuersitie, but after his death made an exchange thereof with another name: so likewise discontinued or rather vtterlie brake off that purposed institution of a surgerie lecture at Paris: so that in this point London hath a prerogatiue excelling the vniuersities.

Ab. Fl. herum omnium maximè conscius.

The decease of D. Caldwell physician of whom there is former mẽtiõ, pag. 1349.

The court of Francis the first a vniuersitie, &c: pag. 1343.

This D. Caldwell in his last will and testament gaue manie great legacies to a great number of his poore kinsfolkes, as also vnto others nothing allied vnto him. He gaue in his life time two hundred pounds to be lent gratis forener to the Clothiers in Burton, whereby clothing might be maintained, the poore artificers set on worke, and the poore citizens in Lichfield also benefited: the corporation of the said towne being bound for the receiuing and deliuering thereof euerie fiue yeares to the youngest and poorest occupiers. He gaue great summes of monie to the poore townships in Staffordshire where he was borne, both towards the releeuing of their priuat estate, as also to the reparing of their bridges and amending of their high wates, for the commoditie of all the countrie. He left large sums of monie to be employed by his executors at their discretion, where charitie moued; as also to the publishing of such learned bookes of physicke and surgerie (with sundrie chargeable formes grauen in copper and finished in his life) as he meant (if he had liued) to see extant.

The distributions of D. Caldwell in his life time: and his bequests after his death.

His commentaries vpon some part of Paulus Aegineta, and other bookes.

Diuerse good workes in his daies he had done, and hath left order to be done after his death: which was verie mild and still, not vnlike the decease of a babe in the cradle; hauing beene assailed with no extremitie of sickenesse (his * ordinarie infirmitie excepted which was intermissiue) that either might wring him or wearie him to make him impatient. So that he died as sleeping, hauing left behind him both credit of lerning, cunning, & other good ornaments, the very beautie of his age, which was exactlie found by true computation to be threescore and foureteene, in which yeare he died; as may be gathered by his counterfet so naturallie conueied into colours, with his white beard, the hollownesse of his cheekes, the wrinkels of his browes, the liuelie sight of his eies, and other accessaries; and all within a module, the circumference whereof exceedeth not six inches, if it amount to so much in exact measure, as a man beholding the said representation, would sweare that it were not possible for art to draw more neere in imitation to nature. So that this doctor dieng in so ripe an age, was committed to holie ground, where he rested in peace, his cote armour bearing witnesse

*His ordinarie infirmitie was the colicke, which tormented him excedinglie.

His age and counterfet which seemed to be made 1571, and in the yeare of his age 13.

of

The armes of Caldwell blasoned.

of his ancestrie: for he beareth azure, a crosse forme fiche or, within an vrle of starres or: the second argent, a fesse indented sable charged with foure leuses heads erant raised or: the third as the second, and fourth as the first quarterlie. Also he beareth to his crest on a tosse or and azure, a cocks head argent, couped, membred geules supporting *a crosse forme fiche or; betweene two wings sable, and mantled geules doubled argent.

*The crosse forme fiche was the cote of Cadwallader the last king of Britains, in An. Dom. 680.

In further memorie of whome (so long as the church wherin he lieth buried doth stand, and the monuments therein blessed from sacrilegious hands) there remaineth fixed in the wall ouer his graue, a copper plate wherein his said cote armour is workemanlie grauen, with the armes of the physicians colledge so vnder it, as they are knit vnto it. On either side of this latter scutchion are set certeine binding hands and other instruments of surgerie in their right formes, with their proper vse also to be practised vpon ech members be the same head, leg, arme, hand, or foot: all workemanlie wrought, & vnder the same a memoriall grauen for wished perpetuitie:

Caldwallus iacet hic patriæ studiosus alumnus,
Chirurgis Chiron, Hippocrates Medicis:
Hercules laqueis dum fascia membra reuincit,
Galenus priscæ laudis & artis amans:
Chirurgis stabilem lecturam condidit, illis
Præfecit Medicus, quos ea turba colat:
Plintheus hinc astat laqueus, Carchesius inde
Fascia; quæ studij sunt monumenta sui:
Felix Chirurgus patronum qui tibi talem
Nactus es, & felix qui dolet æger erit.

These figures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, haue relation to certeine marks, namelie the mullet, the cinquefoile, the flourdelice, the hãd, the cressant or mone, and the pansie, grauen in the copper plate, which marks are referred to their like, in and about the armes aboue said.

Laquei { Plintheus 1 / Carchesius 2
Fascia { Totum caput cingens 3 / Rhombus 4
Machinamenta { Scamnum Hippocratis 5 / Glossocomium 6

Quem tibi vinxisti charum dum vita manebat,
Te cum Melpomene post tua fata canet.
Ric. Forsterus.

Francis Throckmorton arreigned and condemned of high treason.

In this yeare of our Lord 1584, on the one and twentith daie of Maie, Francis Throckemorton esquier, was arreigned in the Guildhall of the citie of London, where being found guiltie of high treason, he was condemned and had iudgement accordinglie, to be drawne, hanged, boweled, and quartered. A discouerie of whose treasons, practised and attempted against the queens maiestie and the realme, were afterward; to wit, in the moneth of June, published as followeth.

A true and perfect declaration of the treasons practised and attempted by Francis Throckemorton, late of London, against the queenes maiestie and the realme.

Whereas there haue beene verie lewd and slanderous brutes and reports giuen out, of the due and orderlie proceedings held with Francis Throckemorton latelie arreigned & condemned of high treason at the Guildhall in London, the one and twentith daie of Maie last, whereby such as are euill affected toward hir maiestie, and the present gouernement, haue indeuoured falselie and iniuriouslie to charge hir maiestie and hir faithfull ministers with crueltie and iniustice vsed against the said Throckemorton, by extorting from him by torture, such confessions as he hath made against himselfe, & by inforsing the same to make them lawfull euidence to conuict him of the treasons therein specified: albeit hir maiesties subiects in generall, calling to mind the mild and temperate course she hath held all the time of hir most happie reigne, might rather impute hir clemencie and lenitie vsed towards all sorts of offendors to a kind of fault, than tax hir with the contrarie: yet such as allow of practises and treasons against hir maiestie, do alwaies interpret both of the one and of the other, according to the particular affections that do possesse them, that is, to the worst. And forsomuch as the case of Throckemorton at this time hath beene subiect to their sinister constructions; and considering that lies and false brutes cast abroad are most commonlie beleeued, vntill they be controlled by the truth: it hath beene thought expedient in this short discourse to deliuer vnto your view and consideration, a true and perfect declaration of the treasons practised and attempted by the said Throckemorton against hir maiestie and the realme, by him confessed before his arreignement, whereby hir maiestie was iustlie and in reason perswaded to put him to his triall.

But how can their interpretations be sound, whose iudgements are corrupt?

You shall likewise perceiue what course hath beene held with him by hir commissioners to bring him to confesse the truth: with what impudencie and how falselie he hath denied his saiengs and confessions: and lastlie, how by a new submission and confession of his said treasons since his condemnation, he endeuoureth to satisfie hir maiestie, and to shew the reasons that moued him to denie the first, which he affirmeth and confirmeth by the last: which may in reason satisfie, though not all; yet such as are not forestalled, or rather forepoisoned and infected with the lies and vntruths alreadie spred and deliuered in fauour of the traitor & his treasons. You shall therefore vnderstand, that the cause of his apprehension grew first vpon secret intelligence giuen to the quænes maiestie, that he was a priuie conueier and receiuer of letters to and from the Scotish quæne: vpon which information neuertheless diuerse moneths were suffered to passe on, before he was called to answer the matter, to the end there might some prowse more apparant be had to charge him therewith directlie: which shortlie after fell out, and thereupon there were sent vnto his houses in London, and at Lewsham in Kent, to search and apprehend him, certeine gentlemen of no meane credit and reputation: of whome, two were sent to his house by Paules wharfe, where he was apprehended, & so by one of them conueied presentlie awaie; the other remaining in the chamber to make search for papers, writings, &c: which might giue proofe of his suspected practises.

The premisses being all sufficient cannot but answer ante circumstance touching this traitor.

In that search, there were found the two papers conteining the names of certeine catholike noblemen and gentlemen, expressing the hauens for landing of forren forces, with other particularities in the said papers mentioned, the one written in the secretarie hand (which he at the barre confessed to be his owne handwriting) and the other in the Romane hand, which he denied to be his, and would not shew how the same came vnto his hands: howbeit in his examinations he hath confessed them both to be his owne handwriting: and so they are in truth. There were also found among other of his papers, twelue petidegrées of the descent of the crowns of England, printed and published by the bishop of Rosse, in the defense of the pretended title of the Scotish quæne his mistresse: with certeine infamous libels against hir maiestie printed and published beyond the seas: which being found in the hands of a man so euill affected, comparing the same with his doings and practises against hir maiestie, you will iudge the purpose wherefore he kept them.

The bishop of Rosse an enimie to the English state.

Shortlie after his apprehension, he was examined by some of hir maiesties priuie councell, how he came by the said two papers of the hauens: and he most

most impudentlie denied with manie protestations that he neuer saw them, affirming they were none of his, but were foisted in (as he termed it) among his papers by the gentlemen that searched his house. Notwithstanding being more earnestlie pressed to confesse the truth, he said they had bene left (he knew not how) in his chamber by a man of his, who not long before was departed out of the realme, named Edward Rogers, alias Puttebie, by whome they were written. And to make this deuise to carie some colour of truth, after his committing vnto the Tower, he found the meanes to get three cards, on the backeside of which cards he wrote to his brother George Throckemorton to this effect. I haue bene examined by whome the two papers, conteining the names of certeine noblemen and gentlemen, and of hauens, &c. were written; & I haue alleged them to haue bene written by Edward Puttebie my man, of whose handwriting you know them to be: meaning by this deuise to haue had his brother confirme his falshod.

A colour of truth to countenance a manifest lie.

These cards were intercepted, and thereby the suspicion before conceiued of his practises increased. Wherevpon, as vpon other iust cause and matter against him, hauing bene sundrie times brought before some of the principall personages of hir maiesties most honourable priuie councell; and by them with all industrie examined, and persuaded in verie mild and charitable maner, to confesse the truth, promising to procure pardon for him, in case he would bewraie the depth of his practises: but no persuasion preuailing, hir maiestie thought it agreeable with good policie, and the safetie of hir roiall person and state, to commit him ouer to the hands of some of hir learned councell and others hir faithfull seruants and ministers, with commission to them, to assaie by torture to draw from him the truth of the matters appearing so weightie as to concerne the inuading of the realme, &c. These men by vertue of that commission, proceeded with him, first as the councell had formerlie done by waie of persuasion, to induce him to confesse: but finding that course not to preuaile, they were constreined to commit him to such as are vsuallie apointed in the Tower to handle the racke, by whome he was laied vpon the same, and somewhat pinched, although not much: for at the end of three dales following, he had recouered himselfe, and was in as good plight as before the time of his racking: which if it had then or anie other time bene ministred vnto him with that violence that he and his fauourers haue indeuoured slanderouslie to giue out, the signes thereof would haue appeared vpon his limbs for manie yeares.

The maner of proceeding against Throckemorton by commission.

At this first time of torture he would confesse nothing, but continued in his former obstinacie and denial of the truth. The second time that he was put to the racke, before he was strained vp to anie purpose, he yelded to confesse anie thing he knew, in the matters obiected against him: wherevpon he was losed. And then the commissioners proceeded with him according to such interrogatories as had bene deliuered vnto them: which for the more brenitie shall here be omitted, the intent of this declaration tending onelie to discouer vnto you the treasons and treacherous dealings of the said Francis Throckemorton as well before as since his imprisonment, for your better knowledge of the man, and manifestation of the due and iust proceedings held with him by hir maiesties commissioners apointed vnto that seruice. And here you are to note, that when he was first pressed to discouer by whome the plots of the hauens were set downe, and to what purpose; he began (without anie further interrogation ministred) by waie of an historicall narration, to declare that at his being at Spaw in the countrie of Liege certeine yeares past, he entered into conference with one Jennie a notorious knowne traitor, touching the altering of the state of the realme here, and how the same might be attempted by forren inuasion; and to the like effect had sundrie conferences with sir Francis Englefield in the low countries, who dailie solicited the Spanish king in Spaine, and his gouernors in the said countries, to attempt the inuading of the realme, continued a course of practising against hir maiestie & the state, by letters betweene sir Francis Englefield & himselfe, till within these two yeares last past, and that he did from time to time acquaint sir John Throckemorton his late father with his traitorous practises, who (as he said) seeing no probabilitie of successe in them, dissuaded him from anie further meddling with those practises.

Jennie a notorious knowne traitor, & conferres with Throckemorton.

He hath further confessed, that he vsed his fathers aduise & opinion in setting downe the names of the catholike noblemen & gentlemen, and did acquaint him with the description of the hauens for the landing of forces, which he conceiued and put in writing onelie by view of the map, & not by particular light or suruete of the said hauens.

Item, he hath also confessed, that vpon the intermission of writing of letters, and the accustomed intelligences passed betweene sir Francis Englefield and him, he was made acquainted by his brother Thomas Throckemorton, by letters and conference, and by Thomas Morgan by letters (two of the principall confederats and workers of these treasons residing in France) with a resolute determination agreed on by the Scotish queene and hir confederats in France and in other forren parts, and also in England, for the inuading of the realme.

Sir Francis Englefield, Thomas Throckemorton, and Thomas Morgan.

That the duke of Guise should be the principall leader and executor of that inuasion.

That the pretention (which should be publikelie notified) should be to deliuer the Scotish queene to libertie, & to procure euen by force from the queenes maiestie a tolerance in religion for the pretended catholikes. But the intention (the bottome whereof should not at the first be made knowne to all men) should be vpon the queenes maiesties resistance, to remoue hir maiestie from hir crowne and state.

A pretention of an inuasion into England.

That the duke of Guise had prepared the forces, but there wanted two things, monie, and the assistance of a conuenient partie in England, to ioine with the forren forces; and a third thing, how to set the Scotish queene at libertie without perill of hir person.

The speciall meanes wanting.

For the first thing wanting, that is, monie; messengers were sent from forren parts both to Rome and Spaine, & their returne dailie expected to their liking. And the Spanish ambassadour to incourage the English to ioine both in purse & person, did giue out, that the king his maister would not onlie make some notable attempt against England, but also would beare halfe the charge of the enterprise. For the second thing, that is, the preparing of a sufficient partie in England, to receiue and to ioine with the forren forces, one especiall messenger was sent ouer into England in August last, vnder a counterfeit name from the confederats in France, to signifie the plat and preparation there, and to solicit the same here.

The Spanish ambassadours words tending to this inuasion.

The intent of this declaration what it is.

That Thomas Throckemorton his brother made him priuie to his negotiation at his last being here in England; and that therevpon Francis Throckemorton toke vpon him to be a follower and meane for the effectuating thereof among the confederats in England, with the helpe of the Spanish ambassadour, whome he instructed how and with whome to deale for the preparing of a conuenient partie here within within the realme, for that himselfe would not be seene to be a sounder of men, least he might be discouered, and so indanger himselfe and the enterprise, knowing that the ambassadour being a publike person, might safelie deale therein without perill.

Landing places for forren forces about Brundell in Sussex.

That the duke of Guise and other heads of the enterprise had refused some landing places, and made spectall choise of Sussex, and about Arundell in Sussex, both for the neere cut from the parts of France, where the duke did or best could assemble his force, and for the opportunitie of assured persons to giue assistance, &c.

That he, taking vpon him the pursute of this course, shewed the whole plot and deuise of the hauens for landing to the Spanish ambassadour, who did incourage him therin; he promising, that if he might haue respit vntill the next spring, the same should be done more exactlie.

Charles Paget vnder the name of Pope alias Spring a confederat in this action.

That at the time of Thomas Throckemortons being here, least the negotiation of the enterprise, by some casualtie, might faile in the onelie hand of one man Thomas Throckemorton, there was also from the confederats sent ouer into Sussex, Charles Paget, vnder the name of Pope alias Spring, and therof an aduertisement couertlie sent vnto Thomas Throckemorton, both that Thomas might vnderstand it, and not be offended that an other was ioined with him in his labour.

That the Spanish ambassador, by aduertisements from the confederats, was made priuie to this comming of Charles Paget vnder the name of Pope, and yet knowne to him to be Charles Paget.

That the said ambassador did, according to his said aduertisements, know & affirme that Charles Paget was come ouer to view the hauens and countrie for landing of such forren forces about Arundell, and specially to sound and conferre with certeine principall persons for assistance.

The same ambassadour also knew and affirmed, that Charles Paget had accordinglie done his message, and had spoken with some principall persons here according vnto his commission, and was returned.

This would be feared and therefore alwaies by policie preuented.

He moreouer confessed that there was a deuise betweene the Spanish ambassadour and him, how such principall recusants here within the realme, as were in the commission of the peace in sundrie counties, might vpon the first brute of the landing of forren forces, vnder colour and pretext of their authoritie and the defense of hir maiestie, leuie men, whome they might after ioine to the forren forces, and conuert them against hir maiestie.

In these few articles is briefly compriſed the whole effect of his confession made at large, without anie interrogatorie particularlie ministred, other than vpon the two papers before mentioned, conteining the names of men and hauens. And here you are to note, that at the time of his apprehension, there was no knowledge or doubt had of these treasons, or of his priuitie vnto them; but onelie an information and suspicion deliuered and conceiued of some practise betweene him and the Scotish queene, as is before mentioned. For the discouering whereof, after he had beene sundrie times vpon his allegiance commanded to declare his doings in conueieng and receiuing of letters to and from hir; he did voluntarilie confesse that he had written diuerse letters vnto hir, and had conueied manie to and fro, betweene hir and Thomas Morgan in France, by whose meanes he was first made knowne to hir, and that he had receiued as manie letters from hir. He also declared the effect of his letter to hirs, & of hirs to him: which letters betweene them were alwaies written in cipher, and the cipher with the nullities and marks for names of princes and counsellors he sent vnto the queenes maiestie written with his owne hand. He also deliuered the names of some, by whome he conueied his letters vnto the Scotish queene, as by one Godfrie Fulgeam, who fled the realme immediatlie vpon Throckemortons apprehension; and one other person, whome he described by his stature, shape, and apparell, and the manner apprehended and examined, hath confessed the same: the mans name is William Ardington.

Throckemorton wrote diuerse letters to Marie the Scotish queene.

Godfrie Fulgeam was glad to cries Fugiam.

The summe and effect of the most part of these confessions, although they were at the time of his arreignement opened and dilated by hir maiesties sergeant, atturnie, and solicitor generall at the bar, and therefore seeme not needfull to be repeated here; yet because the purpose of this discourse is to shew sufficient proofe, that the matters conteined in his said confessions, are neither false nor feigned (as Francis Throckmorton most impudentlie affirmed at his triall, alledging that they were meere inuentions of himselfe by policie to auoid the torture) they haue beene here inserted, to the end you may the better iudge of the proofes, presumptions, and circumstances following, by comparing the matters with their accidents, and consequentlie see the falshood of the traitor, the iust and honorable proceedings of hir maiestie, and the honest and loiall indeuors of hir ministers imploied in the discouering of the treasons.

The reason why Throckmortons confessions are here mentioned.

Throckemorton was at Spaw, and elsewhere, &c.

First, it is true and not denied by himselfe, that he was at Spaw about the time by him mentioned, and had conference with Jennete in that place, and with sir Francis Englefield in Flanders, and that he hath written letters to sir Francis, and receiued letters from him: for if he should denie the same, he were to be conuinced by good proofe: for it hath beene noted in him by manie of his countriemen, English subiects, that both in those parts and in France, he did continuallie associat himselfe with English rebels and fugitiues. If then you consider with whome he hath conuersed beyond the seas, and compare his religion with theirs, you will iudge of his conuersation accordinglie. And it is to be supposed, that those men, knowne to be continuall practisers against the queenes maiestie and this realme, from whense for their treasons and vnnaturall demeanours they are worthilie banished, will not in their conuenticles and meetings forget to bethinke them of their banishment, and how they might be restored to their countrie, whereunto no desert in hir maiesties life time (which God long continue) can well (without hir maiesties great mercie) restore them.

This is a principall marke where at they shoot, and therefore they cannot but meditat vpon the meanes.

Then I praie you, what conferences might maister Throckemorton haue with sir Francis Englefield, with Jenneie, with Liggons, with Owen, and with such like, who were his dailie companions in France and in the low countries? He hath written letters to sir Francis Englefield. To what purposes? He haunted continuallie two ambassadors in London, by whose meanes he sent and receiued letters to and from beyond the seas dailie. To whome, and from whome? Euen to and from Thomas Morgan, and Thomas Throckemorton at Paris, men knowne to hir maiestie and hir councell to be notorious practisers, verie inward with the duke of Guise, and contriuers of the treasons and deuises for the inuasion intend. And for verie certeine knowledge thereof, we need not be beholding to Francis Throckemorton onelie (although he hath said much of them) but to others of better credit than himselfe.

The duke of Guise his enterprise to inuade the realme.

That the duke of Guise did vndertake the enterprise to inuade the realme with a forren power, to be defraied by the pope and king of Spaine (a part of maister Throckemortons confession) and he in truth the first discouerer thereof to hir maiestie: if he will say that it was but inuention, it will approue false. For since he discouered the same, there haue béene diuerse aduertisements thereof sent to hir maiestie from forren princes hir highnesse louing neighbors and allies; as also by other good meanes and intelligences from hir ambassadors and seruants residing in other countries. If he denie (as he hath done) that he neuer had knowledge of anie such matter when he confessed the same, it hath no likelihood of truth: for Throckemorton was neuer knowne to be a prophet to foretell things De futuro.

The Spanish ambassador and Throckemorton did often times conuerse and conferre.

He resorted often to the Spanish ambassador, at the least twise a weeke when he was in London: this often repaire could not be to conferre with the ambassador for the exchange of monie for his brother, as he pretended at his arreignement: there was some other cause. When he was apprehended, he had a casket couered with greene veluet, verie cunninglie conueied out of his chamber by a maidseruant of the house, taken vp vnder a beds side in his chamber (one of the gentlemen who were sent to apprehend him then being in the chamber, & vnknowing thereof) which casket not long after his apprehension, was by one John Meredith a follower of Throckemorton, conueied to the hands of the Spanish ambassador. And why to him? If the matters therein might well haue abidden the light, why should not the casket haue béene kept still at home? And if not there, why not sent to some other place of safetie, as well as to the Spanish ambassador? It is to be conceiued, that this casket was not conueied thither without the direction of Francis Throckemorton, though caried by Meredith, who did well know of what moment the matters were that were within the casket, & of what danger to Throckemorton if they had béene disclosed; & therefore meant to bestowe them in a safe place where they could not readilie be had (as he thought) and with a person not vnacquainted with the qualitie of them. After the deliuerie of the casket, Meredith fled: for in truth he was priuie to the treasons, and a fellow practiser in them. To whome Francis Throckemorton, being taken short at the time of his apprehension, and forced to run vp a staire to deface a letter, which he was then in writing to the Scotish quéene in cipher (as he hath confessed) being suddenlie apprehended, and so forced to depart awaie presentlie out of his house, deliuered priuilie into the hands of Meredith, either the cipher by the which he was writing his letter to the Scotish quéene, or a letter in cipher by him written vnto hir: therefore he trusted Meredith as a man priuie to his doings.

Throckemorton surprised and put to a narrow shift.

Feare is an ordinarie tormentor of a guiltie conscience.

You are also to vnderstand, that Throckemorton was in verie great feare of the discouering of this casket after his apprehension. For remaining two or three daies prisoner in the house of one of the gentlemen that were sent to apprehend him, before he was committed to the Tower, he was permitted to talke with a solicitor of his law causes, who brought him certeine bookes drawne, or other like papers written, which he made shew to peruse. But that was not the matter why he sent for his solicitor: for in perusing the bookes, he conueied into them a little péece of paper, vpon the which he had written with a cole; I would faine know whether my casket be safe: or to the like effect. The solicitor departing from him, and resorting to Throckemortons house, not far distant from the place where he remained prisoner, opening his papers, did shake out this peece of paper, which he toke vp and deliuered to one of Francis Throckemortons men; but the casket was alreadie conueied to the Spanish ambassador. Wherby you will perceiue what care he had of the casket, & how much it might import him to haue the writings or matters within the same concealed. He being examined touching the casket, and what was in the same, he denied at the first that euer he had anie such casket; but finding afterwards that the casket was discouered, he confessed the casket, and said there were certeine letters therein that came to his hands for the Scotish quéene from Thomas Morgan at Paris, and other letters and papers, but confessed not all, as it is supposed. That Charles Paget came ouer into the realme to euill purposes, as Throckemorton doth declare in his confession, could not be inuented: for euen at the same time that he mentioneth, Paget came ouer, in secret and suspicious maner, staied not aboue fifteene daies, indeuored in a sort to find the disposition of William Shellie esquier, how he might stand affected to giue assistance to the treasons, although Paget discouered not directlie his traitorous intents to Shellie: therefore all Throckemortons confessions were not forged or inuented.

The clouds of lies cannot so darken the truth but it will appeare.

How William Shellie stood affectioned to these treasonable plots.

But bicause the two papers produced at his arreignement, conteining the description of the hauens for the commodious landing of forces, do most apparantlie condemne him, and are a manifest argument of his priuitie to the whole treason; you may not forget that he acknowledged one of the papers written in the secretarie hand, to haue béene of his owne doing, but denied the other written in the Romane hand. In the which, vnder the title of Cheshire, &c: is said, Vpon the landing of forren supplies, Chester shall be taken. But what in your opinions might be vnderstood by that sentence, Chester shall be taken, when you shall compare the paper in the secretarie hand with the other written in the Romane hand, intituled; The names of noblemen and gentlemen in euerie countie fit to be dealt with all in this matter (which in truth were both one, although the Romane were somewhat more inlarged) the question is to be asked, What matter? The answer followeth necessarilie, To assist the forren forces that shall come to inuade the realme: for that there is an other title in that paper ouer the names of the hauens, &c: Hauens in euerie coast fit for the landing of forces. Now iudge you, to what end these names of men and descriptions of hauens, their entries, capacities, what winds bring vnto them from Spaine, France, and Flanders, were written and set downe by Throckemorton: the papers are both of his owne handwriting, and the secretarie but a proiect or copie of the Romane.

Certeine words and clauses of letters treasonable.

Is it not likelie (thinke you) that he would acquaint the Spanish ambassador with these papers (as he hath confessed) when he made him partaker of the rest of his traitorous practises & deuises, as you haue heard, and thought his casket of treasons to be most safelie committed to his hands? It may be thought that there is no man of so simple vnderstanding, that will iudge to the contrarie, vnlesse he be partiallie affected to excuse the treasons. And now to shew vnto you what mind this man hath caried towards hir maiestie; you are to be informed that Francis Throckemorton, after he had discouered to hir maiestie his course of practising, repenting himselfe of his plaine dealing in the bewraieng thereof, said to some of the commissioners vpon occasion of speach; I would I had béene hanged when I first opened my mouth to declare anie of the matters by me confessed. And being at other times sent vnto by hir maiestie with offer of pardon, if he would disclose the whole packe and complices of the treasons; he vsed this argument to persuade hir maiestie, that he had confessed all, saieng that Sith he had alreadie brought himselfe by his confessions within

What mind Throckemorton hath caried towards hir maiestie.

within the danger of the lawes, to the vtter ruine of his house and familie, he wondered why there should be anie conceit in hir maiestie, that he had not declared all. But to persuade such as were sent vnto him for these purposes, the rather to beleeue that he could discouer no more, at one time he vsed these speeches following with great vehemencie: Now I haue disclosed the secrets of hir who was the dearest thing vnto me in the world (meaning the Scotish queene) and whom I thought no torment should haue drawen me so much to haue prejudiced as I haue done by my confessions. I see no cause why I should spare anie one, if I could saie ought against him: and sith I haue failed of my faith towards hir, I care not if I were hanged.

This vehement speach importeth some secrets of great moment betweene Throckemorton and the Scotish queene.

And when he began first to confesse his treasons, which he did most vnwillinglie, after he was entered into the declaration of them before all the commissioners, vpon aduisement he desired he might deliuer his knowledge but to one of them onelie: wherevnto they yeelded. And thereupon removing aside from the place where he sat by the racke, he vsed this prouerbe in Italian, Chi a perso la fede, a perso l'honore; that is, He that hath failed his faith, hath lost his reputation; meaning thereby (as it may be conceiued) that he had giuen his faith to be a traitor, and not to reueale the treasons: & then he began to confesse as you haue heard. By this discourse, conteining the principall heads of his treasons, and the proofes and circumstances of the same, you that are not transported with vnduetifull minds and affections, will clearelie perceiue how impudentlie and vntrulie he denied at his arreignement the truth of his confessions, charging hir maiestie with crueltie, and hir ministers with vntruths in their proceeding against him. But the cause that moued him thereto, was the vaine conceit he had taken that his case was cleere in law, by the intermission of the time betweene his confession made and his arreignement, grounding himselfe vpon a statute of the thirteenth yeare of hir maiesties reigne, in the which there are certeine treasons specified and made of that nature, that no person shalbe arreigned for anie of those offenses committed within anie of the queenes maiesties dominions, vnlesse the offendor be thereof indicted within six moneths next after the same offense committed; and shall not be arreigned for the same, vnlesse the offense be proued by the testimonie and oth of two sufficient witnesses, or his voluntarie confession without violence: wherein he was greatlie deceiued. For it was made manifest vnto him by the lord chiefe iustice and other of the iudges in commission at his triall, that his treasons were punishable by a statute of 25. Edw. 3. which admitted no such limitation of time or proofe. Herein his skill failed him, and forgot the aduise giuen vnto him by some of the commissioners, who (pitieng his misfortune for sundrie good gifts of the mind appearing in him) assured him that there was no waie so readie for him to redeeme his life, as by submission and acknowledging of his offense, which for a time after he had confessed his treasons he was contented to follow, and now eftsoones after his condemnation by a new submission to the queens maiestie the fourth of June had resumed that course. The submission Verbatim, written with his owne hand, followeth.

Chi a perso la fede, a perso l'honore, an Italian prouerbe.

The cause that moued Throckemorton to denie his confessiõs at his arreignement.

These gifts in him were Vt venenum in aureo poculo.

To hir most excellent maiestie, euen to hir owne roiall hands.

Throckemortons submission in a letter, answering ad verbum with his owne handwriting.

MOst excellent prince, and my most gratious souereigne, sith to me the most miserable of all your maiesties poore distressed subiects, being iustlie condemned by the ordinarie and orderlie course of your maiesties laws, there resteth no further meane of defense but submission: vouchsafe, most excellent prince, gratiouslie to accept the same, which prostrate in all humilitie I here present vnto the hands of your most excellent maiestie; beseeching the same, that as iustice hath beene deriued from your highnesse, as from the founteine, to the triall of mine actions: so I may receiue from the same spring, some drop of grace and mercie for the great & grieuous offense, wherof I rest by your maiesties lawes iustlie condemned: some part, I saie, of that your accustomed gracious clemencie, wherof most your distressed subiects haue tasted, and few beene depriued. And albeit the inconsiderate rashnesse of vnbridled youth hath withdrawen me from that loiall respect, which nature & dutie bound me to owe vnto your maiestie, as to my lawfull & naturall dread soueraigne; and that the naturall care in me of the defense of my life moued me latelie to the vntrue & vndutifull gainesaieng of some such points as had beene before by me in most humble sort confessed: neuertheless, I most humblie beseech your most excellent maiestie, that in imitation of God, whose image (both in respect of the happie place you hold, as also in regard of your singular wisdome and other the rare and singular vertues & perfections wherwith God & nature hath plentifullie indued you) you represent vnto vs here in earth, it may please your maiestie to commiserate the lamentable estate of me now the most miserable of all your maiesties subiects and gratiouslie to grant vnto me remission and forgiuenes, that not onelie doo most humblie confesse my selfe worthie of death; but also in shew of my repentance and sorowfull afflicted mind, doo not craue at your maiesties hands the prolonging of my life, if the same shall not stand with your gratious good plesure; but rather desire the trebling of the torment iustlie by your maiesties lawes imposed vpon me, if the same may be anie satisfaction to your maiestie for the heinous crime whereof I remaine by your maiesties lawes iustlie condemned; or anie mitigation of your maiesties indignation worthilie conceiued against me, that desire not to liue without your fauour; and dieng will wish from my hart, that my end may be the beginning of your maiesties securitie, and my death the preseruation of your life, and the increase both to your maiestie, and to this your most flourishing commonwelth, of all the most happie blessings of almightie God.

his owne handwriting.

He sueth for vndeserued mercie to hir maiestie in his miserie, in whose fauour he might haue liued by loialtie.

Your maiesties most wofull subiect in that he hath offended you:

Francis Throckemorton.

He sent vnto hir maiestie, together with the said submission, a declaration written likewise with his owne hand, conteining the effects of the most principall points of his treasons formerlie confessed: retracting onelie the accusation of his father, and some other particularities of no moment to cleere him of his treasons, the effect wherof followeth in his owne words, as he set them downe.

A declaration, &c: written by Throckemorton to the queenes maiestie.

The declaration which Throckmorton sent to hir maiestie, with his letter of submission.

THe onelie cause why I coined the practise first by me confessed, and vniustlie touched my father, was, for that partlie I conceiued that the paper written so long since, could not now by law haue touched me: but principallie, for that I was willing thereby to colour the setting downe of those names and hauens in Romane hand, which were written long after the time by me confessed vpon occasion of conference betweene the Spanish ambassador and me of this latter practise. Mine intelligence with the Scotish queene began a little before Christmas was two yeares: the cipher I had from Thomas Morgan in France; the first letter I receiued by Godfrie Fulgeam, by whome also came all such others as I after receiued for the most part, vnlesse it were such as came to me by F. A. his hands, who as he told me, receiued them of the fellow by me spoken of in my former confessions, whose name, I protest before God, I know not, nor whense he is. And for such letters as came vnto me in the absence of Fulgeam, they were inclosed vnder a couerture from Fulgeam, and were deliuered me by the hands of Robert Tunstead his brother in law, vnto whome I deliuered such as I had for the Scotish queene, couered with a direction vnto Fulgeam: and once I remember or twise I sent by one of my men called Butler, letters for the Scotish queene to the house of the said Tunstead, nere Buckestones, couered with a direction to Tunstead, and vnder a letter to Fulgeam. In such letters as came to me from the Scotish queene, were inclosed letters to F. A. manie times, and most times some for Thomas Morgan. Hir letters to me contained, &c.

William Ardington.

But before I returned mine answer vnto hir, I vnderstood of the death of the duke of Lenor, and withall heard from Morgan, with whome all mine intelligence was (for with my brother I neuer had anie, other than that the matters by me written to Morgan were by him imparted vnto my brother most times) that by the persuasion of the pope and the king of Spaine, the duke of Guise had yeelded to performe the iournie in person: and that it was thought that the nert waie to atteine libertie for the Scotish queene, and to reforme Scotland, was to begin here in England. And therefore he desired to know from me, whether in mine opinion catholikes would not backe any such force as should be sent, considering a demand of tolerance in religion for them should insue the well performing of the said enterprise, and what I thought the force would amount vnto, both of horsse and footmen, and where I thought to be the fittest landing. Mine answer was, that as then, I saw no great probabilitie of the good successe of such an enterprise, for that the catholikes were timorous, dispersed, the matter perillous to be communicated vnto manie, without which I saw not how ante estimat could be made of the forces: besides, that it was an imminent danger vnto the Scotish queene, whereof I saw no remedie.

The next way to atteine libertie for the Scotish queene, &c.

I woke notice of this matter in my nert letters to the Scotish queene, whose answer was, that she latelie heard of that determination, &c. Vpon my former answer vnto Morgan, he desired me, that I would conferre with the Spanish ambassador, to whom I should be recommended from thense. Hereupon the said ambassador sent for me, and brake with me in this matter, assuring me that in his opinion he found it verie easie to make great alteration here with verie little force, considering the disse in men to warre, and troubles would so amaze them (as he thought) that they would be as soone ouerthrowne as assailed: & he could not thinke but in such a case catholikes would shew themselues, sith the purpose tended to the obteining for them libertie of conscience: and therefore he desired me to acquaint him, what I thought men would do in such a case, and where I thought the fittest landing, and what holds in these parts were easiest to be surprised. I answered him, that (as it seemed) the enterprise stood vpon great vncerteinties, if it depended of the knowledge of a certeine force to be found here, which no man could assure him of, vnlesse he had sounded all the catholikes, which was not possible without a manifest hazard of the discouerie of the purpose. For as for anie great personage, I know no one to be drawne to this action, that could carrie anie more than his ordinarie retinue: the onlie waie in such a case was (I told him) for such as would be drawne into this matter, and were of credit in their countries, to leuie forces vnder colour of the princes authoritie.

The pestilent persuasion of the Spanish ambassador to prefer this pernicious enterprise.

But for that these things depended vpon vncerteine grounds, which was not fit to be vsed in so great an action, I said it was to be resolued, that the force to be sent should be of that number, that what backing soeuer they should find here, they might be able of themselues to incounter with anie force that might be prouided to be sent against them, and therefore they could not be lesse than fiftéene thousand men. For the place of their landing, I said it depended much vpon the force that should be sent: for if that were in great number, it mattered not where they landed: if in a small companie, then was it requisit that it should be in the countries best affected, & furthest from hir maiesties principall forces, which I said to be in the northerne parts on either side. To the danger of the Scotish queene by me obiected, he said he knew no remedie, vnlesse she might be taken awaie by some two hundred horsse, which I told him I saw not to be possible: for that I knew not anie gentleman in those parts (which were men, if anie, to performe it) that I durst wish to be made acquainted with the matter before hand.

The resolution was frustrate as also the later of the plot: such was Gods iustice to persecute & supplant both the one and the other.

Finallie, our conclusion was, that I should informe him of the hauens as particularlie as I could: and within few daies after, finding by him that the force intended hither, was farre inferior vnto that I spake of; and that there was some different betweene the pope & the king of Spaine for the charge, I told him that the surest course and of least danger were, to send a supplie into Scotland, where a small force would breed a great alteration, and things being there established by the good liking of the king, I thought it was in him by a continuall war, & by incursions so to annoie this state, as hir maiestie here should be forced to yeeld the libertie of the Scotish queene, and what should thereupon haue beene reasonablie demanded for the benefit of the catholikes here. And herein I said it would be a great furtherance, if at the same time some few were landed in Ireland, where: although they abide the same hazard that the former forces susteined; yet would the charge be so great to hir maiestie, and so great an occasion of dispersing of hir forces, as a much lesse companie than was spoken of first by me, would (being landed here in a conuenient place) shake the minds of men generallie, and be of force (if ante thing) to draw them to shew themselues in the furtherance of the purpose.

This Spanish ambassador had no good meaning in mouing this request.

He vtterlie reiected the purpose for Ireland, and disliked not the purpose for Scotland; but still he was in mind to haue forces landed here: and therefore desired me verie earnestlie to inquire particularlie of the hauens on the side of Cumberland and Lancashire, and what men were dwelling there that were well affected in religion, and what places easie to be taken, and what apt for fortification. The nert time that I went to the Spanish ambassador, he found himselfe greeued that he vnderstood matters were determined in France without his priuitie: and told me that Persons the Iesuit was gone vnto Rome, sent (as he thought) to vnderstand the popes mind.

was this (thinke you) a naturall subiects opinion, or not rather the conceipt of a tyrannous traitor?

The places thus appointed for them to remaine in, were chiefly foure, the two churches of our ladie, and saint Nicholas, the deputies house, and the staple, where they rested a great part of that daie, and one wholenight, and the next daie till three of the clocke at afternoone, without either meat or drinke. And while they were thus in the churches, and those other places, the duke of Guise in the name of the French king, in their hearings made a proclamation, strictlie charging all and euerie person that were inhabitants of the towne of Calis, hauing about them anie monie, plate, or iewels, to the value of one groat to bring the same forthwith, and laie it downe vpon the high altars of the said churches vpon paine of death; bearing them in hand also, that they should be searched. By reason of which proclamation, there was made a great & sorowfull offertorie. And while they were at this offering within the churches, the Frenchmen entered into their houses, and rifled the same, where was found inestimable riches and treasure: but specialtie of ordinance, armor, and other munitions.

The duke of Guises proclamation to bring in monie and plate, &c.

The French fall to spoiling and rifling.

¶ Thus dealt the French with the English in lieu and recompense of the like vsage to the French when the forces of king Philip preuailed at S. Quintins: where not content with the honour of victorie, the English in sacking the towne sought nothing more than the satisfieng of their greedie veine of couetousnesse, with an extreame neglect of all moderation. So likewise did the Spanish soldiors, and the rest that could come to finger anie thing of value: insomuch that neither monie nor plate, either of siluer or gold, rich hangings, bedding nor houshold stuffe was spared: but what they could not carie awaie for cumbersomnesse, they sold dogcheape; were the same necessarie furniture seruiceable for the chamber, the kitchin, or anie other roome in a mans house. Pearls and pretious stones, iewels and owches, the rich ornaments of the French dames were then bought and sold at a low price, which a long time had béene kept shut vp vnder locke and keie: all laie open now to the greedie eie of the soldiors, who like landlords kept possession of houses, as C.O. noteth, of whom I haue borrowed the report of this reuell rout, saieng:

Armatis muros firmissimáque occupat vrbis
Militibus victor, dominantur in ædibus altis
Iam vacuis veterum dominorum Marte phalanges
Conspicuæ.]

About two of the clocke the next daie at after noone, being the seuenth of Januarie, a great number of the meanest sort were suffered to passe out of the towne in safetie, being garded through the armie with a number of Scotish light horssemen, who vsed the Englishmen verie well and friendlie: and after this euerie daie for the space of three or foure daies togither, there were sent awaie diuerse companies of them till all were auoided, those only excepted that were appointed to be reserued for prisoners, as the lord Wentworth, & others. There were in the towne of Calis fiue hundred English souldiors ordinarie, and no more: and of the townesmen not fullie two hundred fighting men (a small garison for the defense of such a towne) and there were in the whole number of m[illegible], women, and children (as they were accounted when they went out of the gate) foure thousand and two hundred persons. But the Lord Wentworth deputie of Calis, sir Rafe Chamberleine capteine of the castell, John Harlston capteine of Ricebanke, Nicholas Alexander capteine of Newnambridge, Edward Grimstone the comptrollor, John Rogers surueior, with others, to the number of fiftie (as aforesaid) such as it pleased the duke of Guise to appoint, were sent prisoners into France.

The poorest & meanest sort voided out of Calis.

Garison of soldiors that were in Calis

Thus haue ye heard the discourse of the ouerthrow and losse of the towne of Calis, the which enterprise was begun and ended in lesse than eight daies, to the great maruell of the world, that a towne of such strength, and so well furnished of all things as that was (sufficient numbers of men of warre onlie excepted) should so suddenlie be taken and conquered, but most specialtie in the winter season, that time all the countrie about (being marish ground) is commonly ouerflowne with water. The said towne was won from the French king by K. Edward the third, in the time of Philip de Valois then French king: and being in possession of the kings of England two hundred and eleuen yeares, was in the time of Philip and Marie king & queene of England lost within lesse than eight daies: being the most notable fort that England had. For the winning whereof, king Edward aforesaid, in the 21 yeare of his reigne, was faine to continue a siege eleuen moneths and more. Wherefore it was iudged of all men, that it could not haue come so to passe, without some secret trecherie.

Calis conquered and lost in lesse than eight daies.

How long Calis was in possession of the kings of England.

Here is also to be noted, that when queene Marie and hir councell heard crediblie of the Frenchmens sudden approch to that towne, the with all speed possible (but somewhat too late) raised a great power for the rescue thereof; the which comming to Douer, staied thereabouts till the towne was woone, either for that their whole number was not come togither, or for that there were not ships readie sufficient to passe them ouer, although the wind and weather serued verie well to haue transported them thither, till the sundaie at night after the towne was deliuered: for then began a maruellous sore and rigorous tempest, continuing the space of foure or fiue daies togither, that the like had not béene séene in the remembrance of man. Wherefore some said that the same came to passe through necromancie, and that the diuell was raised vp and become French, the truth whereof is knowne (saith maister Grafton) to God. True it is that after the said tempest began, for the time it lasted, no ship could well brooke the seas, by reason of the outragious storms. And such of the queenes ships as did then aduenture the passage, were so shaken and torne with the violence of the weather, that they were forced to returne in great danger, & not without losse of all their tackle and furniture: so that if this tempestuous weather had not chanced, it was thought that the armie should haue passed to haue giuen some succors to Guisnes, and to haue attempted the recouerie of Calis.

As good neuer as too late.

A terrible tempest.

Rich. Grafton.

The queenes ships sore shaken with storme and tempest.

But if the same armie might haue béene readie to haue transported ouer in time, before the losse of Calis, and whilest the weather was most calme and sweet, as was possible for that time of the yeare, the towne might haue béene preserued; and the other péeces which through want of timelie succours came into the enimies possession. And thus by negligence of the councell at home, conspiracie of traitors elsewhere, force and false practise of enimies, holpen by the rage of most terrible tempests of contrarie winds and weather, this famous fort of Calis was brought againe and left in the hands and possession of the French. ¶ Now were he worthie of a kingdome, that could sensiblie and significantlie set forth the insolent triumphs and immoderate reioising of the French for the recouerie of Calis so long possessed by the English, and now in forren tenure. In describing whereof a man had néed of manie heads fraught with extraordinarie inuention, and of many hands readilie to deliuer in writing his rare conceipts in this case. For as they are a people depending wholie vpon extremities in their actions: so in this they vsed no measure, insomuch that euen the learneder sort among them, namelie Ternebus, Auratus,

Abr. Fl. ex opere historico Schardij collectio ratus, Bellaius, and others did both pen and publish pamphlets in Latine verse, replenished with scoffs and vnreuerend termes against the English, calling them Perfidos, and in flowting sort Diuisos orbe Britannos; but aduancing to the skies their Henrie, their Guise, and the rest of the rowt that were actors in this conquest. A sight of which verses in some part I may not omit (for it requireth a booke to transcribe all) least I might be thought to impose vpon them a false charge. This therefore in the forme of a dialog betweene a post and the people writeth Auratus the French kings publike reader in the Greeke tong:

Ex tomo tertio historiarum Schardij de capto Caleso pag. 1973 &c.

N. Clamate Galli nunc ter io io.
V. Quæ læta Gallis instat oratio?
N. Capti Caletes. V. Multa paucis
Digna nouo memoras triumpho.
N. Victre Galli, sed duce Guisio.
V. Io triumphe, nunc ter io io.
N. Victre victores Britannos.
V. Nunc ter io, ter io triumphe.
N. Annos ducentos serua Britanniæ
Vrbs liberata est. V. Nunc ter io io,
N. Migrate iam prisci coloni.
V. Nunc ter io, ter io triumphe, &c.

And thus proceedeth he in his ode beine of inuention, concluding with a question, whether the king of France or the duke of Guise are the more happie and blessed person? The answer is made that they are both blessed, the king for the duke sake, and the duke for the kings; and therefore his posie must of force sing and sound to them both thrise, that is, oftentimes Ter io triumphe, ter io triumphe. But I would to God the English had not beene so son and so suddenlie turned out of their old possession, nor the French fondlings obteined such a iust cause of immoderate ioy and outragious triumph.]

But to leaue Calis in the present state, you shall vnderstand, that so sone as this duke of Guise (contrarie to all expectation) had in so few daies gained this strong towne of Calis (afore thought impregnable) and had put the same in such order as best seemed for his aduantage, proud of the spoile, and pressing forward vpon his good fortune, without giuing anie long time to the residue of the guides or capteines of the forts there, to breath vpon their businesse, the 13 date of the said moneth being thursdate, with all prouision requisite for a siege, marched with his armie from Calis, vnto the towne and fort of Guisnes, fiue miles distant from thence. Of which towne and castell at the same time there was capteine a valiant baron of England, called William lord Greie of Wilton, who not without cause suspecting a siege at hand, and knowing the towne of Guisnes to be of small force, as being large in compasse, without walles or bulworks, closed onlie with a trench, before the Frenchmens arriuall had caused all the inhabitants of the towne to auoid, and so manie of them as were able to beare armes he caused to retire into the castell, which was a place well fortified with strong and massie bulworks of bricke, hauing also an high and mightie tower, of great force and strength, called the Keepe.

The duke of Guise marcheth to the fort and town of Guisnes.

The L. Greie capteine of Guisnes.

The towne being thus abandoned, the Frenchmen had the more easie approch to the castell, who thinking to find quiet lodging in those vacant houses, entred the same without any feare. And being that night at their rest (as they thought) a chosen band of souldiors appointed by the lord Greie, issued out by a posterne of the said castell, and slue no small number of their sleepie ghests, & the rest they put out of their new lodgings, and maugre the duke and all the French power, consumed all the houses of the towne with fire. That notwithstanding, the said duke with all diligence began his trenches. And albeit the shot of the great artillerie from the castell was terrible, & gaue him great impeachment: yet did he continue his worke without intermission, and for examples sake wrought in his owne person as a common pioner or labourer. So that within lesse than three daies, he brought to the number of fiue & thirtie batterie peeces, hard to the brim of the castell ditch, to batter the same on all sides, as well forthright as acrosse. But his principall batterie he planted against the strongest bulworke of all, called Marie bulworke, thinking by gaining of the stronger to come more easilie by the weaker. Rabutine.

The L. Greie taketh the French at a sleepie aduantage.

On mondaie morning therefore by breake of the date, they had laid two battries to the said bulworke, thirteene canons in the one, and nine in the other, with which they plied it so well, as that by noone they had not onelie dismounted their counter batterie within, but also cleane cut awaie the hope of bricke off the whole forestront of their bulworks, whereof the filling being but of late digged earth, did crimble awaie. Which the enimie finding about two of the clocke in the same afternoone, sent forth or fiftie forlorne boies with swords and targets to viewe and assaie the breach. The ditch at that place before the batterie was not foure and twentie foot broad, now assuredlie not a dozzen, nor in deapth aboue a mans knees, wherefore with small ado they came to the breach, and with as little paine came vp the same, the clime was so easie; from whence hauing discharged certeine pistols vpon the Englishmen, and receiued a few pushes of the pike, they retired. And making report of the easinesse of the breach, strait a band or two of Gascoigns (as it was thought) threw themselues into the ditch, and vp they came. Then a little more earnestly the Englishmen leaned to their tackling, their flankers walked, their pikes, their culuers, their pots of wild fire were lent them, the harquebush saluted them, so as follie maister Gascoigne was set downe with more hast than he came vp with good spéed: and so ended mondaies worke, sauing that vpon the retire from the assalt, they gaue seuen or eight such terrible tires of batterie, as tooke cleane away from them within the top of their vaumure and maunds, leauing them all open to the canons mouth. Wherby surelie but for night that came on, the Englishmen had beene forced to haue abandoned the place. Batterie laid to the Marie bulworke.

The Gascoignes put backe with more hast than they came vp with good spéed.

At this assault was slaine of gentlemen, one capteine Bourne an Englishman, verie valiant, also a Spanish gentleman, and common souldiours to the number of fortie or fiftie. There was also sore hurt at the same assault, one other Spanish capteine, with diuerse others, whom for the auoiding of tediousnesse I let passe. At night the lord Greie came to the bulworke, and hauing rendred thanks to God for that daies good successe, did greatlie commend them all for their manfull defense and valiant behauiour, exhorting them to continue therein, as the onelie thing wherein their safetie and good name did rest. The batterie (as before is told) hauing laid the bulworks open, they within were inforced for winning of a new vaumure, to intrench within the bulworke six foot deepe, and nine in thicknesse, which maruellouslie did strengthen the peece, the same being of no great largenesse before. By the next daie being tuesdate, they had planted two batteries more; the one in the market place of the towne, to beate a curteine of the bodie of the castell, of sir canons; the other vpon the rampire of the towne of three peeces, to beat the Cat and a flanker of the Barbican, which two garded one side of the Marie bulworke.

The number slaine at this assault.

The lord Greie commendeth his souldiours.

This morning they bestowed most in battering at the flankers, which the daie before they had felt, and in deed woone euerie one from them within, saBattering at the flankers.

uing

uing that of the Cat, which laie high and somwhat secret, and an other at the end of a braie by the gate on the other side of the bulworke: all the rest, as those of the Garden bulworke which chéeflie beheld the maine breach of the Barbican, and of the Kéepe, were quite béereued them. And besides the enimie continuallie interteined the breach, with eight or nine tires the houre. In the afternoone, about the same houre that they made their attempt the daie afore, a regiment of Swisses, with certeine bands of Frenchmen approched the dich, as if presentlie they would haue giuen the assault: but there they did staie, sending to the breach onelie a capteine or two, séeking thereby to haue discouered what flankers yet were left to them within: wherein they were preuented, the lord Grate hauing before warned the gunners not to disclose them, but vpon extremitie. And thus after an houres plaie with the harquebush onelie, and a light offer or two of approach, this people retired them, and gaue the canon place againe, which by night had driuen them within anew to become moldwarps, and to intrench themselues with all spéed possible.

Certeine Swisses and French approch the dich as if they would offer assault.

The morrow being wednesdaie, by the péepe of daie, all the batteries began, and without intermission held on till one of the clocke in the afternoone, and especiallie that in the market place so preuailed, as hauing cleane ruined the old wall, did driue through the rampire, and a new countermure of earth raised vpon the same, where the lord Greie himselfe sitting vpon a forme, with sir Henrie Palmer, and maister Lewes Diue his lordships cousin and deputie, made a faire escape, the forme being stricken asunder vnder them, without anie further harme to anie of them: though sundrie other that daie and the nert following lost their liues on the same curteine by the foresaid battrie, which full in flanke did beat it, wherein yet was his lordships onelie abode as his chéefest place, to view and regard the behauiour and néed of all the other lims, from which also a quoit might be throwne into Marie bulworke. The enimies canon (as is said) hauing plaid thus all the morning, and well searched (as they thought) euerie corner that flankers might lurke in, about the foresaid houre of one of the clocke, the Englishmen might descrie the trench before the breach to be stuffed with ensignes. The L. Greie streight expecting that which followed, gaue word incontinentlie to euerie place to stand on their gard, incouraging euerie man to continue in their well begun endeuor. A tower that was called Webs tower, and yet standing, which flanked one side of the beaten bulworke, he stuffed with twentie of the best shot with curriers. These things no soner thus ordered, but that eight or nine ensignes of Swisses, and three of Gascoigns, did present themselues vpon the counterscarfe; and without staie the Gascoignes flue into the ditch, run vp the breach, whome they within receiue with harquebush shot, but they requite the Englishmen againe with two for one. The top of the vaumure or rather trench, the enimie boldlie approcheth, the pike is offered, to handblowes it commeth. Then the Swisse with a statelie leasure stepeth into the dich, and close together marcheth vp the breach, the fight increaseth, waxeth verie hot, & the breach all couered with the enimies. The small shot in Webs tower began now their parts, no bullet that went in vaine. On the other side againe 20 of the Spaniards on the inside of the braies had laid themselues close till the heat of the assault: and then shewing themselues, did no lesse gall the enimies than the tower. Thus was it no lustilier assailed than brauelie defended. At last after an houres fight and more, the gouernors without, finding the great slaughter that theirs went to, and small auaile, and perceiuing the two little casemates of the tower and braies to be the chéefest annoiances, did cause a retire to be sounded: and withall three or foure of the canons in the market place, to be turned vpon Webs tower, the which at two tires brought cleane downe the same vpon the souldiors heads, wherein two or three were slaine outright, others hurt to death, and who escaped best, so maimed or bruised, as they were no more able to serue.

The Swisses & Gascoigns giue the assault.

The danger which my lord Greie escaped sitting vpon a forme with two gentlemen.

The manhood of the Spaniards against the French.

The enimie this while hauing breathed, and a brace of an hundred shots put forth onelie to attend on the few Spaniards that kept the corners of the braies the assault afresh is begun, and their beaten bands with new companies relieued. The lord Greie also sent into the bulworke two hundred fresh men. Now grew the fight heaute vpon the Englishmen, all their defense resting in the pike and bill, their chéefest flankers being gone, their places to bestow shot in taken from them, their fier-works in manner spent, the Spanish shot on the other side so ouerlaid, as not one of them but was either slaine or marred, yer a quarter of the assault was past. The easinesse of the fight thus alluring the enimie, vnappointed companies flue to the breach, and courage was on euerie side with them, what hauocke they made it is not hard to gesse. My lord Greie perceiuing the extremitie, sent to the two forenamed flankers, that they should no longer spare. They streight went off, the diches and breach being couered with men. These vnlooked for ghests made the enimie that was coming to pause, and the other alreadie come to repent their hast. Three or foure bowts of these salutations began to cleare well the breach, though the dich grew the fuller at night. At last parted with no great triumph of others winnings (for as the Englishmen within went not scotfrée) so suerlie no small number of their enimies carcasses toke vp their lodgings in the ditch that night.

A fresh assault begun and the fight hot and heaute against the English.

Enimies slaine.

My lord Greies worke after the skirmish ended.

My L. Greie hurt by mischance.

The French make bridges.

Consultation betweene the lord Greie and the English gentlemen.

My lord Greie this night came into the bulworke, where after praise first to God, he gaue thanks and commendations to them all. The slaine men he caused to be buried, the hurt to be remoued and looked vnto, saw the breach repared, inquired of their lacks, and (as he might) supplied the same. They that were great could not be helped, as corpowder, fierworks, yea and pikes began to faile vs. The most part of the night he here bestowed, and longer as was thought had tarried, had not a scaberdles sword about one of the souldiors as he went in the throng & darke amongst them, thrust him almost through the fot: whereupon he withdrew him to be dressed, vsing first vnto his souldiors an exhortation to acquite themselues no lesse valiantlie the next daie, assuring them that one or two more such bankets as this last, giuen to the enimie, would cole their courages for anie more assaults.

This night now, great noise & working was heard in the dich, whereupon the bulworke was once or twice on alarum. At the last with cressets it was espied that they were making a bridge. The morning came, and then the same was séene to be finished, emptie casks with ropes fastened togither, & sawed bords laid thereon. This yet did but put them within, in a certeintie of that which before they accounted of, and stood prepared for. To be short, the enimies spent all the daie till it was full two of the clocke in batterie, & beating at the two last flankers, which at length they wone from them within, & the gunners of either slaine. Whereupon the lord Greie taking counsell of sir Henrie Palmer, maister Lewes Diue and Pontdragon the leader of the Spaniards: it was resolued, that there might be order to make a facasie within the bulworke, and presentlie to withdraw all from thence, sauing a certeine for a face and stale to toll in the enimie, and then to haue blowne it vp vp whole to the destruction of them all.

Rich. Grafton.

The duke of Guise and mõsieur Dandelot with their powers.

In the meane time, the duke of Guise hauing giuen order to monsieur Dandelot coronell of the French footmen, that he with his bands should be in a readinesse to giue the assault when signe should be giuen, did withdraw him to an higher ground, from whence he might plainlie discouer the behauiour as well of his souldiors in the assault giuing, as also of the defendants in answering the same. And perceiuing not so manie of the English part appearing for defense (as he douted there would) gaue order forthwith, that a regiment of his most forward lanceknights should mount the breech, to open the first passage: and that monsieur Dandelot with his French footbands should backe them, which order was followed, with such hast & desperat hardines, that entring a deepe ditch full of water, from the bottome whereof to the top of the breach, in some places, was well neare fortie fot, without feare either of the water beneath, or the fire aboue, they mounted the breach.

Rabutine.

And whereas the duke had prepared (as ye haue heard) bridges made of planke bords, borne vp with casks and emptie pipes, tied one to another, for his men to passe the said ditch: manie of them now at this assault, without care of those bridges, plunged into the water, and toke the nert waie to come to the assault. Which hot hast notwithstanding, the assaillants were at the first so stoutlie repelled and put backe by the defendants, being furnished with great store of wildfire, and other fucasies for the purpose, that they were turned headlong one vpon another, much faster than they came vp, not without great wast and slaughter of their best and most forward souldiors, to the small comfort of the stout duke, who (as is said before) stood all this while vpon a little hill to behold this businesse. Wherefore he not indouring this sight any longer, as a man inraged, ran among his men, & reproouing some, and incouraging other, that the assault was hot renewed, with much more vehemencie and furie than before, and with no lesse sturdie obstinacie and desperation receiued by the defendants, whereby all the breach beneath was filled with French carcases.

The desperat aduenture of the French.

The duke of Guise in a rage with his soldiers.

This notwithstanding, the duke still redoubled his forces with fresh companies, and continued so manie assaults one vpon another, that at the last charge, being most vehement of all the other, the Englishmen being tired, and greatlie minished in their numbers, by slaughter and bloudie wounds, were of fine force driuen to auoid, & so after halfe an houres fight, the enimie entered. Which when the lord Greie beheld, he leaped to the top of the rampire, wishing of God that some shot would take him. When one that stood nert him, by the scarfe suddenlie pulled him downe, otherwise the effects had well declared the earnestnes of the praier: for he was not yet vp againe, when a canon shot grated vpon the same place from whence he fell. And thus verie narrowlie hée scaped the danger of that shot, which if it had hit him would (no doubt) haue wrought his dispatch. For what is the weake frame of a mans bodie to mightie forts and strong castels, builded of timber and stone, beside the iron worke therewith compact, oftentimes redoubling the strength of the same? And yet these (we see by experience) ruinated, battered, and laid leuell manie times with the thundering shot of this dreadfull artillerie: an engine of no great antiquitie, and not vsed among ancient warriours in former ages, but a late deuise of a Franciscan frier; pitie it is that euer he was borne to set abroch such a pestilent inuention, as the poet noteth, shewing also the vse and the mischeefous effect therof as followeth:

The English forced to auoid & the enimie entereth.

Tormenti genus est ex ferro aut ære coactum,
Quod Franciscanus frater reperisse refertur,
Vt capias paucis validissima castra diebus,
Qua vix cepisses arma toto prius anno, &c.

But to proceed. The fight within the bulworke yet lasted, to the great slaughter of them that defended it. Herevpon my lord Greie presentlie called to maister Lewes Diue, and others that were about him, to follow him to the gate. The maze was such, that besides his sonne maister Arthur Greie, and now lord Greie, maister Lewes Diue, captcine Brickewell, and halfe a dozen of armed corslets, not a man else did follow him. By this means the Englishmen were cleane driuen out of the bulworke, the enimie yet not daring to passe the brases, gaue them that escaped good leisure to recouer the gate, where my lord Greie holding the wicket himselfe, receiued them in. Vpon the taking of this bulworke, the souldiors of Whiteleies bulworke and the base court in discomfiture abandoned their charges, fleeing to the castell: so that more than the Keepe and the bodie of the castell no part was free from the enimie. My lord Greie hauing receiued all his, caused the gates to be rammed vp.

Arthur Greie now lord Greie.

The enimie is dastardlie, all his victories notwithstanding.

Thus were the cheefe bulworks and vtter lims of the castell of Guisnes obteined by the French, on saint Sebastians date, being the twentith of Ianuarie, but yet not without great expense of bloud on both sides: for of the French part there were slaine in those assaults aboue the number of eight or nine hundred, and of the English not manie fewer: amongst whom the greatest losse lighted vpon those few Spaniards and Wallons that were come to assist the English at that present. It was now night: when a trumpetter came to the ditches side in the base court, & sounded a summons: who being called vnto, & asked what he would, told that he was sent to my lord Greie by the duke of Guise, with offer of a parlee if it would be harkened vnto. The souldiors no sooner heard these newes, but forsaking the walles came all in rowt togither, & confusedlie speaking to their chiefteine the said lord Greie, praied him to harken to the message, & to haue consideration of their liues, which so long as anie hope remained, they willinglie had ventured. The lord Greies answer was, that he maruelled, either what causeles mistrust of his caring for them was now come vpon them, or what sudden vnwonted faintnesse of mind had so assailed them, as to cause them in such disorder to forsake their places, and leaue the walles naked, and he willed them to returne to the same.

Ric. Grafton.

A trumpetter from the duke of Guise to the lord Greie.

My lord Greie hereof toke counsell, and it was thought good not to reiect the offer, the extremitie on euerie side weied. The trumpetter receiuing answer, accordinglie departed, & without long abode returned againe, requiring in the dukes behalfe hostages for a truce during the parlee from vs, he minding to deliuer the like into the castell. From him in fine monsieur Destrees, and a gentleman of the kings chamber were sent in: and maister Arthur Greie my lords sonne, and maister Lewes Diue, were put out. Monsieur Dandelot in the braies receiued them, and caried them ouer the vnfortunate bulworke, being come vpon naked and new slaine carcases, some of them spralling yet and groning vnder their fet, were onelie the earth they trod on. So passing downe the breach somewhat to the ease of the former heanie sight, they saw it, and the ditch little lesse fraught with the enimies corpses. Then to the campe they came, and were lodged in the said Dandelots tent.

Hostages required on the dukes part from the lord Greie during the time of the parlee, &c.

The nert daie in the morning, the lord Greie was to meet the duke abrode: betweene them willinglie one houre was spent in talking without agreement, onelie vpon this point, that the lord Greie would haue his bands depart with their ensignes displaied, which

The duke and the lord Greie haue communication an whole houre.

Dafl. vi. supra

the crowne, amongest others, speaketh verie commendablie and deseruedlie of this deceassed earle, who (at such time as the said booke was published vnder the title aforenamed) had béene lord great admerall of England thirtie yeares, and of councell vnto three princes: alwaies of vnspotted report speciallie for allegiance, and therefore as singularlie beloued in his life; so accordinglie bemoned at his death. The words that concerne this noble mans memorall are thus extant, to the aduancement of his honour, testified by report of two English poets:

O Clintone tuæ concessa est regia classis
Tutelæ, totos ter denos circiter annos:
Consuluisse tribus (nec & hæc tibi gloria parua)
Principibus, veterum satraparum sanguine clares,
Multa gerens pelago præclarè, multáque terris:
Hunc decorat comitem grandi Lincolnia fastu.

And before this, namelie in the yeare 1564, at what time the said noble man was honored with the title of Præfectus maris, and attendant vpon his maiestie in presence, at his being in Cambridge, where she was magnificallie interteined with all hir troope of lords and traine of ladies, &c: thus did an academike write in praise of the forenamed earle:

Regnatórque maris Clintonus, cuius in vndis
Excellens nomen præcipuúmque decus:
Ille mihi Neptunus, aquas mouet ille tridente,
Hunc Triton, hunc pelagi dij, deæq; colunt.

Jesuits, seminaries, and massing priests set ouer the seas and banished out of this realme of England for euer.

On the one and twentith date of Januarie, one and twentie Jesuites, seminaries, and other massing priests, late prisoners in the Tower of London, Marshalsee, and Kings bench, were shipped at the Tower wharfe, to be conueied towards France, & banished this realme for euer, by vertue of a commission from hir maiestie, as may more fullie appeare by that which followeth.

A vew of the said commission from the queenes maiestie.

WHere as the quænes most excellent maiestie, forseeing the danger that hath and might grow vnto the realme, by accesse of Jesuits and seminarie priests, and other like wandering and massing priests comming hither to seduce and withdraw hir louing subiects from their due obedience to God and hir maiestie; and therewithall, traitorouslie to practise the moouing and stirring of rebellion within the realme, as hath appeared by sufficient proofe against them, and by confession of sundrie of themselues; for the which diuerse of the said Jesuits and seminaries haue béene tried, condemned, and executed by the ordinarie and orderlie course of hir maiesties lawes, and yet they haue not refrained dailie to practise and attempt the like treasons. Hir maiestie notwithstanding, following the accustomed course of hir princelie clemencie, liking rather for this time to haue them onelie banished out of the realme, than to suffer the iustice of hir lawes to be executed against them (although they haue deserued the same in the highest degrée) hath giuen power to vs of hir maiesties priuie councell & others, by commission and warrant vnder the great seale of England, bearing date the fiftéenth date of this present month of Januarie, to sée this hir purpose and determination for their banishment put in execution. By vertue whereof, we haue proceéded thereunto, and haue committed to the charge of these bearers, William Bolles one of hir maiesties yeomen of hir chamber, and Anthonie Hall, the persons whose names do follow, that is to saie, James Bosgraue, John Hart, Edward Rushton, Jaspar Heiwod, William Tedder, Samuell Coniers, Arthur Pits, William Wharmington, Richard Slake, William Hartlie, Richard Norris, William Dean, William Bishop, Robert Nutter, Thomas Stephanson, John Colliton, Christopher Tomson, Thomas Worthington, John Barns, William Smith, clearks, being Jesuits, seminaries, and other wandering and massing priests, and Henrie Orton gentleman: all which haue béene apprehended in this realme, to be by them imbarked, and transported beyond the seas, according to such direction as they haue receiued in that behalfe.

The quænes maiesties mercies notable.

The names of such Iesuites (Iesuits, I should say) as by vertue of the quænes commission were banished out of the quænes dominions.

These shall be therefore by the authoritie aforesaid, to will and require you, and in hir maiesties name strictlie to charge and command you, and euerie of you hir maiesties officers, as well within the realme of England and Ireland, as in anie other parts of hir maiesties dominions and countries, to whome it may and shall apperteine, not onelie to suffer them to passe vnder the charge of the said William Bolles and Anthonie Hall: but also that in case by contrarietie of winds, or extremitie of weather, they shall be after their imbarking, driuen into anie port or creéke within anie of your iurisdictions, that vpon the sight of this passport ye aid and assist the said Bolles, and Anthonie Hall, if they shall so require you, in séeing them safelie reteined, committed, & kept in custodie (if they shall come aland) till such time as they the said William Bolles and Anthonie Hall may with safetie put againe into the sea, to transport them to such place beyond the sea, as by our direction they are appointed; and to suffer them effsoones to imbarke and depart, without staie or interruption. Forsesséing, that they the said Jesuits and seminaries, and other the wandering and massing priests aforesaid, nor anie of them, nor the said Henrie Orton be suffered to conueie or transport out of the realme, anie thing that by the lawes be prohibited or forbidden. Whereof (as of the rest commanded herein) we require you not to faile, as you will answer to the contrarie at your perils. Giuen vnder our hands at Grénewich the twentith daie of Januarie, in the seuen and twentie yeare of hir maiesties reigne. ¶ Now followeth a certificat of the maister that transported the forenamed one and twentie banished persons, as followeth.

A further charge vpon the said seminaries touching transportation.

To the right honorable lords and o- thers of hir maiesties most honorable priuie councell, and all other officers to whome it may apperteine.

THese may be to certifie, &c: that William Bolles, yeoman vsher of hir maiesties chamber, and Anthonie Hall of London skinner, hauing imbarked at the Tower wharfe of London, the one and twentith date of Januarie 1584 one and twentie persons being banished men into my barke called the Marie Martin of Colchester, to be transported and conueied into Normandie, for sixtéene of which said one and twentie persons they had compounded with me aforehand. The same William Bolles and Anthonie Hall haue satisfied and paid me for all their passages and vittels, and haue also hired at Douer an experimented pilot for the coasts of Normandie; which said Bolles and Hall with the said banished men in their charges, after their being by contrarie winds driuen to state against Erith, at Grauesend, in Tilberie hope, at Lée, at the Spaniard, at the Downes, at Douer, and at Rie, were by force of weather and chase of pirats driuen to Bullen, and there arriued all safelie the second day of Februarie 1584, and thense sent the said banished men, some by horsse, but most on foot, with conducts to Abbi-

A certificat to the lords of the councell, &c: concerning the forsesaid matter.

nile

ulle in the coasts of Normandie. Witnesse my hand hereunto this fift of Februarie, 1584. ¶ By me Matthew Strut.

An other certificat, written and directed into England by the said banished men.

A certificat worthie to hang vpon perpetuall record, wherein the Jesuits do acknowledge the exceeding courteous and bountifull vsage shewed vnto them at and in their banishment, &c. Note good reader note.

TO all magistrats, officers, & ministers, within the realme of England or elsewhere, to whome it may in anie wise apperteine: this may be to giue certification, that we whose names are here vnder written, who were imbarked at the Tower wharfe of London the one and twentith daie of Januarie 1584, and there receiued into the charge of maister William Bolles, and maister Anthonie Hall, by commission from their lordships and other hir maiesties most honorable priuie councell, haue beene by them the said William Bolles and Anthonie Hall verie friendlie & honestlie intreated, and with carefull diligence safelie conducted, transported, & conueied to the prouince of Normandie, & by them left this third daie of Februarie, according to the English computation, in the yeare of Christ 1584, which said Bolles and Hall haue in our presence paid the maister of the barke which transported vs for his whole fraught and vittels in the ship, for the time of our remaining abroad: and generallie so well vsed vs in all respects, that we can not but acknowledge our selues much beholding to them & fullie satisfied, in hauing beene committed to the charge of so courteous officers, sith the case standeth so with vs that we are banished our countrie contrarie to our desires, wherein we take no little griefe of mind. For testimonie wherof, we haue hereunto set our seuerall hands this present third daie of Februarie 1584. Jaspar Halwod, Edward Rushton, John Hart, &c.

¶ O Lord what a mercifull quéne is this, in such sort to forgiue and forget iniuries, yea treasonable iniuries, as by banishment onelie to chastise them, that deserued extreame punishment? Yea with a banishment scarse fitlie to be so termed; sith in the execution thereof there was such clemencie shewed, as that the banished by their owne confessions haue left acknowledged vnder their owne handwriting, a notable kind of courtesie receiued by the meanes of hir maiestie. And therefore they cannot but in conscience commend hir highnesse tender affection so gratiouslie exchanged for seuere affliction; insomuch that it may rightlie be reported of hir, highnesse, which the poet spake of Caesar, that is to saie:

Ouid. lib. 1. de Pont.

Est piger ad pœnas princeps, ad præmia velox,
Cuique dolet quoties cogitur esse ferox.

Earle of Derbie ambassador into France.

Henrie earle of Darbie appointed to be hir maiesties ambassador, to Henrie the third French king, and to inuest him with the order of the garter, toke his leaue of the quénes maiestie at Grænewich on the twentith daie of Januarie, and with him such gentlemen as were present, were admitted to kisse hir highnesse hand. Maister Robert Cooke, Clarencieux appointed to attend in that voiage in place of Garter, whose rome was void, and Robert Glouer Somerset herald likewise appointed to that iourneie, were referred to the two and twentie daie of the same moneth. Noble men and gentlemen attending on the earle of Derbie; the lord Sands with eight seruants, lord Windsore, eleuen seruants, maister Scrope sonne and heire to the lord Scrope two seruants, maister Windsore brother to the lord Windsore three seruants, sir Richard Sherborne three seruants, sir Randolph Brereton sir seruants, maister Clarencieux for Garter foure seruants, maister Anthonie Cooke foure seruants, maister Gerard sonne and heire to sir Thomas Gerard, maister Fléetwod, maister Nudigate, maister Stallage gentleman vsher, the quénes seruants. Maister Somerset herald of armes two seruants, maister Crompton, maister Smith, maister Denton, maister Thomas Wils one seruant. The earls owne; maister Thomas Arden steward two seruants, maister Fox controllor one seruant, maister Newton gentleman vsher one seruant, maister Philips chapleine one seruant, maister Alexander gentleman of the horse one seruant, maister Norcrosse physician one seruant. The earls waiting gentlemen; maister Dawnie sonne and heire to sir John Dawnie one seruant, maister Legh son and heire to sir Piers a Legh one seruant, maister Warren one seruant, maister Thomas Sherborne sonne to sir Richard Sherborne, maister Wollie had one seruant, maister Parket one seruant, maister Richard Starkie one seruant, maister Stanlie one seruant, maister Brierton, maister Hanmer one seruant, maister Flod one seruant, maister Salisburie one seruant, maister Bushie my lords page, maister Downes one seruant, maister Francis Starkie one seruant, maister Baptist one seruant, maister Randolph one seruant, maister Tusser, maister Chambers one seruant, maister Foxton, maister Russell one seruant. The earles yeomen fiftie. This traine had to carie trunks, males, and chests, fiue carts and a wagon throughout from Calis to Paris, besides the earls sumpter horse and garde viands on horse backe.

The lord ambassadour passeth from London to Grauesend, and so to Douer, and arriueth at Calis.

On the six and twentith daie of Januarie, the earle with his traine passed from London to Grauesend in a tilt boat called a light horseman, and there taking post horses rid to Sittingborne, and there lodged, from whense they rid to Douer, where they imbarked and landed at Calis on the first of Februarie, the earle of Derbie lord ambassador, with the lords Sands and Windsor transported in the quéens ship named the Skout, the other gentlemen & traine in craiers of Douer to the number of eight in the whole, there they were all receiued and welcomed to the towne by monsieur de Gourdon gouernour thereof, and rested there the next daie: on which daie at night the said earle, barons, and principall gentlemen were inuited to a supper, by the said monsieur de Gourdon, which was prepared for them in a merchants house in verie sumptuous sort and great interteinement, and after supper musicke and dansing, some ladies and gentlewomen of the towne being purposelie brought to the place to interteine and to danse with the noblemen and others.

Monsieur de Gourdon gouernour of Calis interteineth the ambassadour.

On the third of Februarie the whole traine went from Calis to Bullogne to bed, where they were verie well interteined, the gouernors deputie presenting the earle with certeine pots of wine of sundrie sorts. On the fourth of Februarie they rid to Monstrell to bed, and there were likewise presented. On the fift they went to Albeuill to bed, and were met with one hundred and fiftie shot of harquebuzers at the entrie of the towne, where on either side the streets were made ranks of shot all the way as they passed to their lodging, & after marched off about the market place, giuing manie a volée of shot till it waxed darke, the gouernor of the towne presenting sundrie sorts of wine. And the daie following they toke their iournie to Amiens to bed, where of monsieur Creuicure called Boniuet, lieutenant of Picardie for the king, accompanied with an hundred gentlemen, and best citizens, met the earle halfe a mile without the towne, and so rid talking with him & his traine. That night the said Creuicure presented the earle with great store of verie large and good fresh water fish, and the towne with wine of diuerse sorts,

The flattering & the honorable receiuing of the lord ambassadour before he came in presence & audience of the French king.

Monsieur Creuicure lieutenant of Picardie méeteth the lord ambassadour, &c.

soꝛts, and the daie following being sundaie, the said Creuecure inuited the earle to dinner, which dinner was greatlie commended. After dinner his loꝛdship & traine went to Bꝛethmill to bed, the nert daie to Cleremont, where he staied tuesdaie, and on wednesdaie the tenth of Febꝛuarie to Luzarch.

Sir Edward Stafford the quéenes ambassadoꝛ resident with the French king, &c.

On the 11 he went to S. Denise, where by the waie his loꝛdship was met by sir Edward Stafford, hir maiesties ambassadoꝛ resident with the French king, who bꝛought with him diuerse gentlemen of England, to the number of thirtie hoꝛsse, and so accompanied him to S. Denise where they kept companie all the daie following being fridaie. On saturdaie his loꝛdship made his entrie into Paris, about two oꝛ thꝛée of the clocke at after noone, there being of the loꝛd ambassadoꝛs traine moꝛe than two hundꝛed hoꝛsse; and midwaie betwéene saint Denise and Paris, there met with their loꝛdships sent from the king, the duke of Montpensier a pꝛince of the bloud, the loꝛds of Caulignie, le Chapelle aux Ursins, countie de Lude, de Pienne, de Malicoꝛne, de la Moth Fenelon, who had sometimes béene ambassadoꝛ liger in England, Destrie, D'abin, de Fontaines, de Coꝛmisson, the marques of Curton, the countie de Gꝛignan, all councellоꝛs in the councell, & knights of the holie ghost. The duke of Tremouille, the counties de Bꝛissac, de Creance, Sancerre, and of Lasoꝛe, with a great number of loꝛds and barons, gentlemen of the chamber, which all were cõmanded by the king to mount on hoꝛssebacke, and accompanie the said duke de Montpensier, who met the earle of Derbie and the English traine midwaie betwixt Paris and saint Denise, and did accompanie him vnto hostell de Longueuille, sometime called the hostle of Anion. At his loꝛdships entrie into the said lodging, the siers de Marle and de Gonaix maistres de hostell to his maiestie, gaue him to vnderstand how they were appointed by the king to haue care of his good vsage and interteinement, who likewise had apointed mesiers de la Moth Fenelon, the marques de Curton, & the countie de Gꝛignan, to kéepe his loꝛdship companie at all times. And so was his loꝛdship with the other loꝛds and gentlemen lodged in the said hostell de Longueuille, where was thꝛée tables verie sumptuouslie furnished foꝛ them all of the kings cost; the one table in the great chamber foꝛ the loꝛds and gentlemen, seruants to hir maiestie; the other in the hall foꝛ the erle of Derbies gentlemen; and the third in a gallerie beneath foꝛ gentlemens seruants, besides liuerie into euerie chamber, both of war, wood, wine, and such like, in as great plentie as could be desired.

The loꝛd ambassadoꝛs interteinement and vsage.

The statelie & the honoꝛable receiuing of the loꝛd ambassadour beꝛoꝛe he came in pꝛesence & audience of the French king.

On sundaie the fourtéenth of Febꝛuarie after the English account, and the foure and twentith after the French reckoning, the said earle betwixt the houres of two and thꝛée in the after none, went from his lodging by a posterne thꝛough the garden, which is néere to the Louure, accompanied with the said loꝛds de la Moth Fenelon, de Curton, and Gꝛignan, togither with the sier de Gondie, & the said de Marle, and de Gonaix, and found the capteins of the regiment of the kings gard, making two ranks on either side of the stréet, beginning from the posterne to the Louure gate, who welcõmed him in the kings behalfe. Without the gate of the said Louure he was receiued by the lieutenants of the great pꝛouost of France & his archers; at the Louure gate by the sier de Montegnie capteine thereof to his maiestie and his archers; which archers togither with those of the great pꝛouost made two ranks from the said gate of the Louure to the foot of the staiers. From the foot of the staiers his loꝛdship was receiued by the sier de Perdillon the French lieutenant of the Swissers of the kings gard, which from the foot of the said staiers to the doꝛe of the hall, made two ranks foꝛ his loꝛdships passage. At the entrie of the hall, his loꝛdship was receiued by the sier de Chasteau viaux knight of the holie ghost, and capteine of the archers of the kings gard; who likewise from the said doꝛe vnto the doꝛe of the antichamber made two ranks. From the doꝛe of the antichamber, his loꝛdship was receiued by the sier de Combault of the holie ghost, chiefe maister de hostell to the king, and by the other maisters of the hostell to his maiestie, and by his gentlemen waiters; and there in the said antichamber all the said earle of Derbies officers and gentlemen wearing liueries were apointed to staie, and the quéenes seruants that pꝛocéeded nert after them, and beforе the said earle went still foꝛward. At the entrie of the chamber of estate his loꝛdship was receiued by the sier de Liencourt knight of the holie ghost, chiefe escuir of the kings escuir, and the other escuires of the escuir togither, with the lieutenant of the hundꝛed gentlemen of his maiestie, who made likewise two ranks foꝛ his loꝛdships passage from that chamber doꝛe to the chamber of audience, euerie of them bearing halberds in their hands. At the entrance of the antichamber, his loꝛdship was receiued by the duke Joieuls, accompanied with the gentlemen of the kings chamber oꝛdinarie, who made two ranks from that chamber doꝛe to the doꝛe of the chamber roiall.

The chamber roiall, & manner of receiuing and conducting of the loꝛd ambassadour thereunto, and other notable obseruations.

Into the said chamber roiall first entred all the gentlemen, the quéenes maiesties seruants, the loꝛds that had receiued and accompanied the said earle and loꝛds: and the said duke de Joieuls accompanied the said earle of Derbie euen vnto the bars that stood about the edge of the haltpase, oꝛ mounting stoꝛe in the same chamber, where the king stood at his beds fèet, accompanied without the said barriers on his right hand with the cardinals of Bourbon, Mandosme, and Joieuls; and on the left hand with the loꝛds, the pꝛinces of Contie, the countie de Soissons, and duke Montpensier, pꝛinces of the bloud: the dukes de Neuers, Delbeuse, de la Tremouille, de Retz, monsieur le chancelloꝛ, sier de Vilequier, du Bouchase, de la Valette, Dantragues, de la Chapelle aux Ursins, Chauignie, la Vauguion, countie de Mauleurier, Clermont, Dantragues, de Larchaut, and other knights of the holie ghost, and councellоꝛs of the estate in great number. The said earle with the loꝛd ambassadoꝛ oꝛdinarie of England alonelie entered within the said haltpase within the barriers vnto his maiestie, of whom they were receiued with great courtesie, & as amiable countenance as could be. And the earle deliuered the quéenes maiesties letters vnto the king with great reuerence, and then making rehearsall of that he had in charge to saie, the said ambassadoꝛ pꝛesented vnto the king the loꝛds Sands and Windsoꝛ, with other the English knights and gentlemen; which all one after an other mounted vpon the haltpase, kissed their hands, & did their reuerence vnto the king. Then the erle toke his leaue, and was conducted by all the loꝛds & capteins that had beforе receiued him, and conueied him vnto the place where they had first receiued him. Afterwards he went to salute the quéene mother, and at the entrance into hir antichamber he was receiued by monsieur de Lansac knight of the holie ghost, and knight of honour vnto the same quéene, whome he found accompanied with hir néece the pꝛincesse of Loꝛaine standing at hir beds head, the pꝛincesses of Conde and Jontie, and the duches of Neuers standing at the beds fèet, the duchesses Dusez, and of Rez, and other ladies and gentlewomen in great number. From thense his loꝛdship was conueied to the quéene Regents chamber, at the entrance whereof he was receiued by the countie de Fiesque knight of

The earle of Darbie & sir Edward Stafford, &c: are courteouslie receiued of the king.

The loꝛd ambassadoꝛ saluted the quéene mother.

The loꝛd ambassadour conueied to the quéene Regents chamber.

of the holie ghost, and hir knight of honour, finding hir accompanied with the duchesses of Montpensier and Joieulx, who stood at hir beds fèet, the ladie of Rosden hir ladie of honour and other ladies and gentlewomen also in great number, and then returned to the foresaid hostell de Longueuille.

On mondaie the fiftéenth of Februarie, the king by monsieur le Moth Fenelon told to the lord ambassador his mind, touching the receipt of the order, that he intended to receiue on the thursdaie following in the after noone, at the Augustine friers, which was done accordinglie with a mantle of blew veluet, and a hood, and collar of the order, with a booke of the statutes of the order, which all were inuested vpon the king in a place called maison de Nautralles; but the oth was ministred vnto the king in the friers church, Magnificat being then song, or singing. On sundaie the eight and twentith of Februarie, the ambassador with his traine toke their leaue, at whose returne from the court to his lodging he was presented that night with a rich cupbord of plate, worth twelue hundred pounds at the least; and vnto maister Clarenceaux was giuen a chaine of gold worth one hundred and twentie pounds and better, of two hundred thirtie and six links; to maister Sumerset a chaine of one hundred and fiftie links, worth one hundred marks; and to Thomas Mils a chaine of the same value.

The French king inuested into the order of the garter.

Gifts of roiall magnificence bestowed and receiued.

On the thursdaie following, the earle with his traine set forward homewards from Paris vnto saint Denise, and so were lodged all the waie in the same lodgings that before they had bene receiued in, and arriued prosperouslie in England, from Bullogne to Douer, on fridaie the twelfe day of March; and on the tuesdaie following were brought to the quenes maiesties presence at Greenewich, who gratiouslie welcommed them home.

William Parrie hanged and quartered at Westminster.

This yeare on the second daie of March being tuesdaie, William Parrie was drawne from the Tower thorough the citie of London to Westminster, and there in the palace court, hanged, boweled, and quartered, for high and horrible treasons by him practised, as maie appeare by the discourse that followeth, published vpon his execution, to giue generall intimation of his notorious trecheries vnto all the quenes maiesties subiects.

A true and plaine declaration of the horrible treasons practised by William Parrie against the queenes maiestie, and of his conuiction and execution for the same, the second of March 1584, according to the account of England.

A description of william Parrie.

THis William Parrie, being a man of verie meane and base parentage, but of a most proud and insolent spirit, bearing himselfe alwaies far aboue the measure of his fortune, after he had long led a wastfull and dissolute life, and had committed a great outrage against one Hugh Hare, a gentleman of the inner temple, with an intent to haue murthered him in his owne chamber, for the which he was most iustlie conuicted, seeing himselfe generallie condemned with all good men for the same, and other his misdemeanors, he left his naturall countrie, & gaue himselfe to trauell into forren parts beyond the seas. In the course of this his trauell he forsoke his allegiance and dutifull obedience to hir maiestie, and was reconciled, and subiected himselfe to the pope. After which, vpon conference with certeine Jesuits and others of like qualitie, he first conceiued his most detestable treason to kill the quéene (whose life God long preserue) which he bound himselfe by promise, letters, and vowes, to perfourme and execute: and so with this intent he returned into England in Januarie one thousand fiue hundred foure score & three; and since that did practise at sundrie times to haue executed his most diuelish purpose and determination: yet couering the same so much as in him laie with a veile and pretense of great loialtie vnto hir maiestie.

William Parrie reconciled to the pope: and of his treason In superlatiuo gradu.

O papisticall dissimulation.

Immediatlie vpon his returne into England, he sought to haue secret accesse to hir maiestie, pretending to haue some matter of great importance to reueale vnto hir: which obteined, and the same so priuatlie in hir highnesse palace at Whitehall, as hir maiestie had but one onelie councellor with hir at the time of his accesse, in a remote place, who was so far distant, as he could not heare his speech. And there then he discouered vnto hir maiestie (but shadowed with all craftie and traitorous skill he had) some part of the conference and proceeding as well with the said Jesuits, and other ministers of the popes, as especiallie with one Thomas Morgan a fugitiue, resiant at Paris, who aboue all others did persuade him to proceed in that most diuelish attempt (as is set downe in his voluntarie confession following) bearing hir maiestie notwithstanding in hand, that his onelie intent of proceeding so farre with the said Jesuits, and the popes ministers, tended to no other end, but to discouer the dangerous practises deuised and attempted against hir maiestie by hir disloiall subiects and other malicious persons in forren parts: albeit it hath since appeared most manifestlie, as well by his said confession, as by his dealing with one Edmund Neuill esquier, that his onelie intent of discouering the same, in sort as he craftilie and traitorouslie did, tended to no other end, but to make the waie the easier to accomplish his most diuelish and wicked purpose.

Thomas Morgan a fugitiue and furtherer of Parries purpose.

Edmund Neuill not ignorant of this attempt.

And although anie other prince but hir maiestie (who is loth to put on a hard censure of those that protest to be loiall, as Parrie did) would rather haue proceeded vnto the punishment of a subiect that had waded so farre, as by oth and vow to promise the taking awaie of hir life (as he vnto hir maiesties selfe did confesse) yet such was hir goodnesse, as in stead of punishing, she did deale so gratiouslie with him, as she suffered him not onelie to haue accesse vnto hir presence: but also manie times to haue priuat conference with hir, and did offer vnto him vpon opinion once conceiued of his fidelitie towards hir (as though his wicked pretense had bene, as he protested, for hir seruice) a most liberall pension. Besides, to the end that he might not grow hatefull to the good and well affected subiects of the realme (from whome he could in no sort haue escaped with safetie of his life, if his diuelish purpose had bene reuealed) hir maiestie did conceale the same, without communicating it to anie creature, vntill such time as he himselfe had opened the same vnto certeine of hir councell, and that it was also discouered; that he sought to draw the said Neuill to haue bene a partie in his diuelish and most wicked purpose.

O gratious quéene and too too fauourable cuen to thine enimies.

A verie rare example, and such as doth more set forth the singular goodnesse and bountie of hir maiesties princelie nature, than commend (if it be lawfull for a subiect to censure his souereigne) hir prouidence such as ought to be in a prince and person of hir maiesties wisdome and qualitie. And as the goodnesse of hir maiesties nature did hereby most manifestlie shew it selfe to be rare in so extraordinarie a case, and in a matter of so great perill vnto hir owne roiall person: so did the malice of Parrie most euidentlie appeare to be in the highest and extreamest degrée, who notwithstanding the said extraordinarie grace and fauour extended towards him, did not onlie lie perſuade the ſaid Neuill to be an aſſociat in the ſaid wicked enterpriſe: but did alſo verie vehementlie (as Neuill confeſſeth) importune him therein, as an action lawfull, honourable, and meritorious, omitting nothing that might prouoke him to aſſent thereunto. But ſuch was the ſingular goodneſſe of almightie God (who euen from hir maieſties cradle by manie euident arguments hath ſhewed himſelfe hir onelie and eſpeciall protector) that he ſo wrought in Neuils heart, as he was moued to reueale the ſame vnto hir maieſtie, and for that purpoſe made choice of a faithfull gentleman and of good qualitie in the court, vnto whome vpon mondaie the eight of Februarie laſt paſt, he diſcouered at large all that had paſſed betweene Parrie and him, who immediatlie made it knowne to hir maieſtie. Whereupon hir highneſſe pleaſure was, that Neuill ſhould be examined by the earle of Leceſter, and ſir Chriſtopher Hatton: who in the euening of the ſame daie did examine him, and he affirmed conſtantlie all which he had before declared to the ſaid gentleman.

The malice of Parrie groweth to an extremitie of mischiefe against the quéene.

Neuill diſcouereth the intended treaſon againſt hir maieſtie.

Did euer anie man read or heare of the like magnanimitie in a woman?

In the meane time, hir maieſtie continued hir ſingular and moſt princelie magnanimitie, neither diſmaied with the rarenelle of the accident, nor appaled with the horror of ſo villanous an enterpriſe, tending euen to the taking awaie of hir moſt gratious life (a matter eſpeciallie obſerued by the councellor that was preſent at ſuch time as Parrie after his returne did firſt diſcouer vnto hir maieſtie his wicked purpoſe; who found no other alteration in hir countenance, than if he had imparted vnto hir ſome matter of contentment) which ſheweth manifeſtlie how ſhe repoſeth hir confidence wholie in the defenſe of the almightie. And ſo hir maieſtie, following the wonted courſe of hir ſingular clemencie, gaue order that Parrie the ſame mondaie in the euening (though not ſo knowne to him) ſhould be ſent vnto maiſter ſecretaries houſe in London, he being then there; who according vnto ſuch direction as he receiued from hir maieſtie, did let him vnderſtand, that hir highneſſe (in reſpect of the good will ſhe knew he bare vnto the ſaid Parrie, & of the truſt that Parrie did outwardlie profeſſe to repoſe in maiſter ſecretarie) had made eſpeciall choice of him to deale with him in a matter that concerned hir highlie, and that ſhe doubted not, but that he would diſcharge his dutie towards hir, according vnto that extraordinarie deuotion that he profeſſed to beare vnto hir.

Parrie is committed to the cuſtodie & examination of ſir Francis Wallingham.

And therevpon he told him that hir maieſtie had béene aduertiſed, that there was ſomewhat intended preſentlie againſt hir owne perſon, wherwith ſhe thought he could not but be made acquainted, conſidering the great truſt that ſome of hir worſt affected ſubiects repoſed in him: and that hir pleaſure therefore was, that he ſhould declare vnto him his knowledge therein: and whether the ſaid Parrie himſelfe had let fall anie ſpéech vnto anie perſon (though with an intent onelie to haue diſcouered his diſpoſition) that might draw him in ſuſpicion, as though he himſelfe had anie ſuch wicked intent. But Parrie with great and vehement proteſtations denied it vtterlie. Wherupon maiſter ſecretarie, the rather to induce him to deale more plainelie in a matter ſo important, declared vnto him, that there was a gentleman of qualitie euerie waie as good or better than himſelfe, and rather his friend than enimie, that would auouch it to his face: yet Parrie perſiſted ſtubbornelie in his former deniall, and iuſtification of his owne innocencie, and would not in anie reſpect yéeld that he was partie or priuie to anie ſuch motion, enterpriſe, or intent.

Parrie denieth with proteſtations whatſoeuer is demanded of him.

Being lodged that night at M. ſecretaries houſe, the next morning he deſired earneſtlie to haue ſome further ſpéech with maiſter ſecretarie: which granted, Parrie declared to him that he had called to remembrance that he had once ſome ſpéech with one Neuill a kinſman of his (ſo he called him) touching a point of doctrine contained in the anſwer made to the booke, intituled, The execution of iuſtice in England; by which booke it was reſolued, that it was lawfull to take awaie the life of a prince, in furtherance of the catholike religion: but he proteſted that they neuer had anie ſpéech at all of anie attempt intended againſt hir maieſties perſon. Which denials of his (at two ſundrie times after ſo much light giuen him) doth ſet forth moſt apparantlie both the iuſtice and prouidence of God: his iuſtice, for that (though he was one of a ſharpe conceipt) he had no power to take hold of this ouerture, thereby to haue auoided the danger that Neuils accuſation might bring him into by confeſſing the ſame, as a thing propounded onelie to ſéele Neuils mind, whome before he had reported vnto maiſter ſecretarie he found a perſon diſcontented, and therefore his confeſſion might to verie great purpoſe haue ſerued to haue cléered himſelfe touching the intent: his prouidence, for that of his great mercie he would not ſuffer ſo dangerous and wicked a member to eſcape and liue to hir maieſties perill.

Parrie deſirous to haue ſome ſpéech with maiſter ſecretarie.

The ſame daie at night, Parrie was brought to the earle of Leiceſters houſe, and there eftſoons examined before the ſaid earle of Leiceſter, maiſter vicechamberlaine, and maiſter ſecretarie: he perſiſted ſtill in his denials of all that he was charged with. Wherupon, Neuill being brought before him face to face, iuſtified his accuſation againſt him. He notwithſtanding would not yet yéeld to confeſſe it, but verie proudlie and inſolentlie oppoſed his credit againſt the credit of Neuill, affirming that his no, was as good as Neuils yea, & as by way of recrimination, obiected the crime to Neuill himſelfe. On the other ſide, Neuill did with great conſtancie affirme all that he had before ſaid, and did ſet downe manie probable circumſtances of the times, places, and maners of their ſundrie conferences, and of ſuch other accidents as had happened betwéene them in the courſe of that action: wherevpon Parrie was then committed to the Tower, and Neuill commanded by their honors to ſet downe in writing vnder his hand, all that which before he had deliuered by words: which he did with his owne hand as followeth.

Parrie is examined before certeine lords of the counſell, &c.

Neuill chargeth Parrie ſo preciſelie, that he is committed to the Tower.

Edmund Neuill his declaration the tenth of Februarie, 1584, ſubſcribed with his owne hand.

WIlliam Parrie the laſt ſummer, ſome after his repulſe in his ſute for the maiſterſhip of ſaint Katharins, repaired to my lodging in the White friers, where he ſhewed himſelfe a perſon greatlie diſcontented, and vehementlie inueighed againſt hir maieſtie, and willed me to aſſure my ſelfe, that during this time and ſtate, I ſhould neuer receiue contentment. But ſith, ſaid he, I know you to be honorablie deſcended, and a man of reſolution, if you will giue me aſſurance, either to ioine with me, or not to diſcouer me, I will deliuer vnto you the onelie meanes to do your ſelfe good. Which when I had promiſed him, he appointed me to come the next daie to his houſe in Fenter lane: & repairing thither accordinglie, I found him in his bed; where vpon he commanded his men forth, and began with me in this order.

Note the malicious humor of Parrie becauſe he might not obteine preferment to his liking.

My lord ſaid he (for ſo he called me) I proteſt before God, that three reaſons principallie do induce me to enter into this action which I intend to diſco-

A triple reason that moued Parrie to his pretended treason.

ner vn to you: the replanting of religion, the preferring of the Scotish title, and the aduancement of iustice, wonderfullie corrupted in this commonwealth. And therevpon entred into some discourses, what places were fit to be taken to giue entrance to such forren forces as should be best liked of, for the furtherance of such enterprises as were to be vndertaken. And with these discourses he passed the time, vntill he went to dinner: after which, the companie being retired, he entered into his former discourses. And if I be not deceiued (said he) by taking of Mutnborough castell, we shall hinder the passage of the quéenes ships forth of the riuer. Wherevnto when he saw me vse no contradiction, he shooke me by the hand. Tush (said he) this is nothing: if men were resolute, there is an enterprise of much more moment, and much easier to performe: an act honorable, and meritorious to God and the world. Which séeing me desirous to know, he was not ashamed to vtter in plaine termes, to consist in killing of hir maiestie: wherein, saith he, if you will go with me, I will lose my life, or deliuer my countrie from hir bad and tyrannous gouernment. At which speeches finding me discontented, he asked me if I had read doctor Allens booke, out of which he alledged an authoritie for it. I answered, no, and that I did not beléeue that authoritie. Well (said he) what will you saie, if I shew further authoritie than this, euen from Rome it selfe, a plaine dispensation for the killing of hir, wherein you shall find it (as I said before) meritorious? God cousine said I, when you shall shew it me, I shall thinke it verie strange, when I shall see one to hold that for meritorious, which another holdeth for damnable. Well, said Parrie, doo me but the fauour to thinke vpon it till to morrow: and if one man be in the towne, I will not faile to shew you the thing it selfe: and if he be not, he will be within these fiue or six daies; at which time if it please you to méete me at Chanon row, we may there receiue the sacrament to be true ech to other, and then

Parrie counted it an act meritorious to murther hir maiestie.

O villanous persuasion or inducement to be accessarie to the treason!

I will discouer vnto you both the partie, & the thing it selfe. Wherevpon I praied Parrie to thinke better vpon it, as a matter of great charge both of soule and bodie. I would to God, said Parrie, you were as perfectlie persuaded in it as I am! for then vndoubtedlie you should doo God great seruice.

Not long after eight or ten daies (as I remember) Parrie comming to visit me at my lodging in Herns rents in Holborne, as he often vsed, we walked forth into the fields, where he renewed againe his determination to kill hir maiestie, whom he said he thought most vnworthie to liue, and that he wondered I was so scrupulous therein. She hath sought, said he, your ruine and ouerthrow, why should you not then séeke to reuenge it? I confesse (quoth I) that my case is hard, but yet am I not so desperat as to reuenge it vpon my selfe, which must néeds be the euent of so vnhonest and vnpossible an enterprise. Unpossible, said Parrie! I wonder at you, for in truth there is not anie thing more easie: you are no courtier, and therefore know not hir customes of walking with small traine, and often in the garden verie priuatlie, at which time my selfe may easilie haue accesse vnto hir, and you also when you are knowen in court. Upon the fact we must haue a barge readie to carie vs with spéed downe the riuer, where we will haue a ship readie to transport vs if it be néedfull: but vpon my head, we shall neuer be followed so far. I asked him; How will you escape forth of the garden? For you shall not be permitted to carie anie men with you, and the gates will then be locked, neither can you carie a dag without suspicion. As for a dag (said Parrie) I care not: my dagger is enough. And as for mine escaping, those that shall be with hir, will be so busie about hir, as I shall find opportunitie enough to escape, if you be there readie with the barge to receiue me.

Note Parries pestilent humor of malice against hir maiestie.

These doubts were of aduantage to Neuill, but meanes of reprochfull ruine to Parrie.

But if this séeme dangerous in respect of your reason before shewed, let it then rest till hir comming to saint James, and let vs furnish our selues in the meane time with men and horsse fit for the purpose: may ech of vs kéepe eight or ten men without suspicion? And for my part, said he, I shall find good fellowes that will follow me without suspecting mine intent. It is much, said he, that so manie resolute men maie doo vpon the sudden, being well appointed with ech his case of dags: if they were an hundred waiting vpon hir, they were not able to saue hir, you comming on the one side, and I on the other, and discharging our dags vpon hir, it were vnhappie if we should both misse hir. But if our dags faile, I shall best irre me well with a sword yer she escape me. Wherevnto I said: God doctor giue ouer this odious enterprise, & trouble me no more with the hearing of that, which in heart I loth so much. I would to God the enterprise were honest, that I might make knowne vnto thée whether I want resolution! And not long after, hir maiestie came to saint James, after which, one morning (the daie certeine I remember not) Parrie reuiued againe his former discourse of killing hir maiestie, with great earnestnesse and importunitie persuading me to ioine therein: saieng he thought me the onelie man of England like to performe it, in respect of my valure, as he termed it.

Note the traitorous practise of Parrie laid downe in order as it should haue béene done.

Wherevpon I made semblance as if I had beene more willing to heare him than before, hoping by that means to cause him to deliuer his mind to some other that might be witnesse thereof with me, wherin neuertheless I failed. After all this, on saturdaie last being the first of Februarie, betwéene the houss of fiue and six in the afternoone, Parrie came to my chamber, and desired to talke with me apart, whereupon we drew our selues to a windowe. And where I had told Parrie before, that a learned man whom I met by chance in the fields, vnto whom I proponed the question touching hir maiestie, had answered me that it was an enterprise most villanous and damnable, willing me to discharge my selfe of it: Parrie then desired to know that learned mans name, and what was become of him, saieng after a scornefull maner; No doubt he was a verie wise man, and you wiser in beléeuing him: I said further, I hope you told him not that I had anie thing from Rome. Yes in truth, said I. Wherevnto Parrie said, I would you had not named me, nor spoken of anie thing I had from Rome! And therevpon he earnestlie persuaded me eftsoones to depart beyond the seas, promising to procure me safe passage into Wales, and from thense into Britaine, whereat we ended. But I then resolued not to doo so, but to discharge my conscience, and laie open this his most traitorous and abhominable intention against hir maiestie: which I reuealed in sort as is before set downe.

Marke the resolutenes of Parrie to accomplish his treason by oft frequenting the action.

Neuill is resolued at no hand to be partaker with Parrie in his treason.

Edmund Neuill.

AFter this confession of Edmund Neuill, William Parrie the eleuenth daie of Februarie last, being examined in the Tower of London, by the lord Hunsdon lord gouernour of Berwike, sir Christopher Hatton knight vicechamberleine to hir maiestie, and Francis Walsingham knight principall secretarie to hir maiestie, did voluntarilie and without anie constraint, by word of mouth make confession of his said treason, and after set it downe in writing all with his owne hand in his lodging in the Tower, and sent it to the court the thirteenth of the same, by the lieutenant of the Tower. The parts Parries voluntarie confession in the hearing of certein lords, &c.

where-

whereof concerning his maner of doing the same, and the treasons wherewith he was iustlie charged are here set downe, word for word, as they are written and signed with his owne hand & name, the eleuenth of Februarie, 1584.

The voluntarie confession of William Parrie, in writing all with his owne hand.

¶ The voluntarie confession of William Parrie, doctor of the lawes (now prisoner in the Tower) & accused of treason by Edmund Neuill esquier, promised by him (with all faith & humilitie) to the queenes maiestie, in discharge of his conscience and dutie towards God and hir. Before the lord Hunsdon lord gouernor of Berwike, sir Christopher Hatton knight vicechamberlaine, sir F. Walsingham knight principall secretarie, the thirteenth of Februarie, 1584.

Parrie.

Note the treasons pretended of Parrie laid downe in order as it should haue beene done.

Macke, good and gratious ladie, whose hard hap it was to interteine so bad & graceless a seruant.

IN the yeare 1570 I was sworne hir maiesties seruant, from which time vntill the yeare 1580, I serued, honored, and loued hir with as great readinesse, deuotion and assurance as anie poore subiect in England. In the end of that yeare, and vntill Midsummer 1582, I had some trouble for the hurting of a gentleman of the Temple. In which action I was so disgraced and oppressed by two great men (to whome I haue of late béene beholden) that I neuer had contented thought since. There began my misfortune, and here followeth my wofull fall. In Julie after, I laboured for licence to trauell for three yeares, which (vpon some consideration) was easilie obteined. And so in August, I went ouer with doubtfull mind of returne, for that being suspected in religion, and not hauing receiued the communion in two and twentie yeares, I began to mistrust my aduancement in England. In September I came to Paris, where I was reconciled to the church, and aduised to liue without scandale, the rather for that it was mistrusted by the English catholikes, that I had intelligence with the greatest councellour of England. I staied not long there, but remoued to Lions (a place of great traffike) where, bicause it was the ordinarie passage of our nation to and fro betweene Paris and Rome, I was also suspected.

Parrie sueth for licence to trauell beyond sea, and obteineth it.

Parrie iustifieth himselfe in religion before the inquisitor of Millaine.

To put all men out of doubt of me, and for some other cause, I went to Millaine, from whense as a place of some danger (though I found fauour there) after I had cléered my conscience, and iustified my selfe in religion before the inquisitor, I went to Venice. There I came acquainted with father Benedicto Palmio, a graue and a learned Iesuit. By conference with him of the hard state of the catholikes in England, & by reading of the booke De persecutione Anglicana, and other discourses of like argument, 1 I conceiued a possible meane to relieue the afflicted state of our catholikes, if the same might be well warranted in religion and conscience by the pope, or some learned diuines. I asked his opinion, he made it cléere, commended my deuotion, comforted me in it, and after a while made me knowen to the Nuntio Campeggio, there resident for his holinesse. By his meanes I wrote vnto the pope, presented the seruice, and sued for a passport to go to Rome, and to returne safelie into France. Answer came from cardinall Como, that I might come, and should be welcome. I misliked the warrant, sued for a better, which I was promised: but it came not before my departure to Lions, where I promised to staie some time for it.

Neuill is reuolted at no hand to be partaker with Parrie in his treason.

Parrie is resolued in the plot of his treacherous deuise.

And being indéed desirous to go to Rome, and loth to go without countenance, I desired Chyllofero de Salazar, secretarie to the king catholike in Venice, who had some vnderstanding (by conference) of my deuotion to the afflicted catholikes at home and abroad, to commend me to the duke di Noua terra gouernour of Millaine, and to the countie of Oliuaris Embt, then resident for the king his master in Rome: which he promised to do effectuallie for the one, and did for the other. And so I toke my iourne towards Lions, whither came for me an ample passport (but somewhat too late) that I might come & go In verbo pontificis per omnes iurisdictiones ecclesiasticas, absq; impedimento. I acquainted some good fathers there of my necessitie to depart towards Paris by promise, & praied their aduises vpon diuerse points, wherein I was well satisfied. And so assuring them that his holinesse should heare from me shortlie, it was vndertaken that I should be excused for that time.

Note with what fetlows, enimies to God and his church, Parrie linketh himselfe.

In October I came to Paris, where (vpon better opinion conceiued of me amongst my catholike countriemen) I found my credit well setled, and such as mistrusted me before, readie to trust and imbrace me. And being one daie at the chamber of Thomas Morgan a catholike gentleman (greatlie beloued and trusted on that side) amongst other gentlemen, talking (but in verie good sort) of England, I was desired by Morgan to go vp with him to another chamber, where he brake with me, and told me that it was hoped and loked for, that I should do some seruice for God and his church. I answered him I would do it, if it were to kill the greatest subiect in England: whom I named, and in truth then hated. No no, said he, let him liue to his greater fall and ruine of his house: 2 it is the quéene I meane. I had him as I wished, and told him it were some done, if it might be lawfullie done, and warranted in the opinion of some learned diuines. And so the doubt once resolued (though as you haue heard I was before reasonablie well satisfied) I vowed to vndertake the enterprize, for the restitution of England to the ancient obedience of the sée apostolike. Diuers diuines were named, doctor Allen I desired, Parsons I refused. And by chance came maister Wats a learned priest, with whome I conferred, and was ouerruled.

Note the diuelish conference betweene Morgan and Parrie.

Parrie vowseth to vndertake the killing of the queene.

3 For he plainelie pronounced (the case onelie altered in name) that it was vtterlie vnlawfull: with whome manie English priests did agrée as I haue heard, if it be not altered, since the booke made in answer of the execution of the English iustice was published, which I must confesse hath taken hard hold in me, and (I feare me) will do in others, if it be not preuented by more gratious handling of the quiet and obedient catholike subiects, whereof there is *good and greater store in England than this age will extinguish. Well, notwithstanding all these doubts, I was gone so far by letters and conference in Italie, that I could not go backe, but promised faithfullie to performe the enterprise, if his holinesse vpon my offer & letters would allow it, & grant me full remission of my sinnes. 4 I wrote my letters the first of Januarie 1584, by their computation, toke aduise vpon them in confession of father Aniball a Codreto a learned Iesuit in Paris, was louinglie imbraced, commended, confessed, and communicated at the Iesuits at one altar with the cardinals of Mandolmi and Narbone: whereof I praied certificat, and inclosed the same in my letter to his holines, to lead him the rather to absolue me, which I required by my letters, in consideration of so great an enterprise vndertaken without promise or reward.

*O Lord what a lamentable hearing is this!

Parrie is now become altogither past grace, and growne resolute with Iudas to kill the Lords annointed.

5 I went with Morgan to the Nuntio Ragazzoni, to whome I read the letter and certificat inclosed, sealed it, & left it with him to send to Rome: he promised great care of it, and to procure answer; and so louinglie imbraced me, wished mee good speed, and promised that I should be remembred at the altar.

6 After this I desired Morgan, that some speciall man might be made priuie to this matter, least he dieng, and I miscarieng in the execution, and my intent neuer truelie discouered, it might sticke for an euerlasting spot in my race. Diuerse were named, but none agreed vpon for feare of bewraieng.

7 This being donne, Morgan assured me, that shortlie after my departure, the L. Fernehurst (then in Paris) should go into Scotland, and be readie vpon the first newes of the queens fall, to enter into England with 20 or 30000 men to defend the queene of Scotland (whom, and the king hir sonne, I do in my conscience acquit of anie priuitie, liking, or consent to this, or anie other bad action, for anie thing that euer I did know.)

A promise for a Scotish inuasiõ after the deuise of Parrie executed.

I shortlie departed for England, and arriued at Rie in Januarie 1583, from whense I wrote to the court, aduertised some, that I had a speciall seruice to discouer to the queens maiestie. 8 Which I did more to prepare accesse and credit, than for anie care I had of hir person, though I were fullie resolued neuer to touch hir (notwithstanding anie warrant) if by anie deuise, persuasion, or policie she might be wrought to deale more grationslie with the catholikes than she doth, or by our maner of proceeding in parlement meaneth to do, for anie thing yet seene. I came to the court (then at Whitehall) praied audience, had it at large, and verie priuatlie discouered to hir maiestie this conspiracie, much to this effect, though couered with all the skill I had: she tooke it doubtfullie, I departed with feare. And amongst other things, I cannot forget hir maiesties gratious speech then vttered touching the catholikes, which of late, after a sort I auowed in parlement: she said to me that neuer a catholike should be troubled for religion or supremasie, so long as they liued like good subiects. Whereby I mistrusted that hir maiestie is borne in hand, that none is troubled for the one or the other. It may be truelie said that it is better than it hath beene, though it be not yet as it should be.

Note the villans ill mind to hir maiestie.

Note hir maiesties vndeserued gratiousnes to pretended catholikes.

In March last, while I was at Greenewich (as I remember) suing for saint Katharines, came letters to me from cardinall Como, dated at Rome the last of Januarie before, whereby I found the enterprise commended, and allowed, and my selfe absolued (in his holinesse name) of all my sinnes, and willed to go forward in the name of God. That letter I shewed to some in court, who imparted it to the queene: what it wrought, or maie worke in hir maiestie, God knoweth: onelie this I know, 9 That it confirmed my resolution to kill hir, and made it cleere in my conscience, that it was lawfull and meritorious. And yet was I determined neuer to do it, if either policie, practise, persuasion, or motion in parlement could preuaile. I feared to be tempted, and therefore alwaies when I came neere hir, I left my dagger at home. 10 When I looked vpon hir maiestie, & remembred hir manie excellencies, I was greatlie troubled: and yet I saw no remedie, for my vowes were in heauen, my letters and promises in earth, and the case of the catholike recusants and others little bettered.

Note Parries resolution by letters from cardinall Como.

Parrie is in a mammering what to do as maie be noted by these speeches interrogatorie.

Sometimes I said to my selfe: Why should I care for hir? What hath she done for me? Haue I not spent ten thousand markes since I knew hir seruice, and neuer had penie by hir? It maie be said, she gaue me my life. But I saie (as my case stood) it had beene tyrannie to take it: and I feare me it is little lesse yet. If it please hir gratiouslie to looke into my discontentments, would to Jesus Christ she had it, for I am wearie of it. And now to come to an end of this tragicall discourse. In Julie I left the court, vtterlie reiected, discontented, and as hir maiestie might perceiue by my passionate letters, careless of my selfe. I came to London: doctor Allens booke was sent me out of France: 11 It redoubled my former conceipts, euerie word in it was a warrant to a prepared mind. It taught that kings maie be excommunicated, depriued, and violentlie handled. It proueth that all warres ciuill or forren, vndertaken for religion, is honourable. Hir maiestie maie do well to read it, and to be out of doubt (if things be not amended) that it is a warning, and a doctrine full dangerous. This is the booke I shewed, in some places read, and lent to my cousine Neuill (the accuser) who came often to mine house, put his finger in my dish, his hand in my purse, and the night wherein he accused me, was wrapped in my gowne, six moneths at least after we had entered into this conspiracie: in which space hir maiestie, and ten princes in seuerall prouinces might haue beene killed. God blesse hir maiestie from him: for before almightie God I loie and am glad in my soule, that it was his hap to discouer me in time, though there were no danger neere.

Parrie deliurat.

Parrie desperat.

How long the conspiracie was in handling ere it was detected.

And now to the matter of our meetings. He came to me in the beginning of August, and spake to me in this or the like sort: Cousine, let vs do somewhat, sith we can haue nothing. I offered to ioine with him, and gladlie heard him, hoping bicause I knew him to be a catholike, that he would hit vpon that I had in my head: but it fell not out so. He thought the deliuerie of the queene of Scotland easie, presuming vpon his credit and kinred in the North: I thought it dangerous to hir, and impossible to men of our fortunes. He fell from that to the taking of Berwike; I spake of Quinborough and the naule, rather to interteine him with discourse, than that I cared for those motions, my head being full of greater matter. 12 I told him that I had an other maner of enterprise, more honourable and profitable vnto vs, and the catholikes commonwealth, than all these, if he would ioine in it with me, as he presentlie vowed to do. He pressed to know it, I willed him to sleepe vpon the motion: he did so, and (belike ouertaken) came vnto me the next morning to my lodging in London, offered to ioine with me, and take his oth vpon a bible, to conceale and constantlie to pursue the enterprise for the aduancement of religion: which I also did, and meant to performe: the killing of the queene was the matter.

Note the actions that should haue beene commenced and finished in this conspiracie.

This oth and all of the like qualitie and nature are violable Salua interim anima.

The maner and place, to be on horssebacke, with eight or ten horsses, when she should ride abroad about saint Iames, or some other like place. It was once thought fit in a garden, and that the escape would be easiest by water into Shepeie, or some other part: but we resolued vpon the first. This continued as agreed vpon manie moneths, till he heard of the death of Westmerland, whose land and dignitie (whereof he assured himselfe) bred belike this conscience in him to discouer a treason in Februarie, contriued and agreed vpon in August. If it cost him not an ambitious head at last, let him neuer trust me. He brought a tall gentleman (whome he commended for an excellent pistolier) to me to Chanon Row, to make one in the match: but I refused to deale with him, being loth to laie my head vpon so manie hands.

The death of Westmerland reported.

M. Neuill hath (I thinke) forgotten, that he did sweare to me at diuerse times, that all the aduancement she could giue, should serue but for hir scourge, if euer time and occasion should serue: and that although he would not laie hand vpon hir in a corner, his hart serued him to strike off hir head in the field. Now leauing him to himselfe, thus much (to make an end) I must confesse of my self: I did meane to trie what might be done in parlement, to do my best to hinder all hard courses, to haue praied hearing ring of the quenes maiestie, to moue hir (if I could) to take compassion vpon hir catholike subiects, and when all had failed, to doo as I intended. If hir maiestie by this course would haue eased them, though she had neuer preferred me, I had with all comfort and patience borne it: 13 but if she had preferred me without ease or care of them, the enterprise had held. ¶ God preserue the quéne, & incline hir mercifull hart to forgiue me this desperat purpose, and to take my head (with all my hart) for hir better satisfaction.

Parrie charged with grieuous speeches of cursed disloialtie.

W. Parrie.

God (no doubt) will preserue good quéne Elisabeth, though a thousand such traitors as Parrie conspire hir death to their owne destruction.

After which, for the better manifesting of his treasons, on the fourteenth of Februarie last past, there was a letter written by him to hir maiestie, verie voluntarilie, all of his owne hand, without anie motion made to him. The tenor whereof, for that which concerneth these his traitorous dealings, is as followeth.

A letter written by Parrie to hir maiestie.

YOur maiestie maie see by my voluntarie confession, the dangerous fruits of a discontented mind: & how constantlie I pursued my first conceiued purpose in Venice, for the releefe of the afflicted catholikes, continued it in Lions, and resolued in Paris to put it in aduenture, for the restitution of England to the ancient obedience of the see apostolike. You maie see withall how it is commended, allowed, and warranted in conscience, diuinitie, and policie, by the pope and some great diuines: though it be true or likelie, that most of our English diuines (lesse practised in matters of this weight) doo vtterlie mislike and condemne it.

Parries purpose conceiued in Venice, continued in Lions, resolued in Paris, to be executed in England.

The enterprise is preuented, and conspiracie discouered, by an honourable gentleman my kinsman, and late familiar friend, maister Edmund Neuill, priuie and by solemne oth (taken vpon the bible) partie to the matter, wherof I am hardlie glad, but now sorie (in my verie soule) that euer I conceiued or intended it, how commendable or meritorious so euer I thought it. God thanke him, and forgiue me, who would not now (before God) attempt it (if I had libertie and oportunitie to doo it) to gaine your kingdome. I beseech Christ that my death and example maie as well satisfie your maiestie, and the world, as it shall glad and content me.

Neuill charged by Parrie to be accessarie to the treason.

The queene of Scotland is your prisoner, let hir be honourablie intreated, but yet surelie garded. The French king is French, you know it well enough, you will find him occupied when he should doo you good; he will not loose a pilgrimage to saue you a crowne. I haue no more to saie at this time, but that with my hart & soule I doo now honour & loue you, am inwardlie sorie for mine offense, and readie to make you amends by my death and patience. Discharge me A culpa but not A pœna, good ladie. And so farewell, most gratious and the best natured and qualified queene that euer liued in England. From the Tower, the fourteenth of Februarie, one thousand fiue hundred eightie and foure.

W. Parrie.

Compare these warnings with the euents in Anno 1585, 1586, specialtie about August.

After which, to wit, the eighteenth of Februarie last past, Parrie, in further acknowledging his wicked and intended treasons, wrote a letter all of his owne hand in like voluntarie maner to the lord treasuror of England, and the earle of Leicester, lord steward of hir maiesties house, the tenor wherof is as followeth.

Parries guiltie conscience enforceth it selfe by voluntarie confession.

William Parries letter to the lord treasuror, and the earle of Leicester.

MY lords, now that the conspiracie is discouered, the fault confessed, my conscience cleared, and mind prepared patientlie to suffer the paines due for so hainous a crime; I hope it shall not offend you, if crieng Miserere with the poore publicane, I leane to despaire with cursed Caine. My case is rare and strange, and for anie thing I can remember, singular: a naturall subiect solemnlie to vow the death of his naturall queene (so borne, so knowne, and so taken by all men) for the releefe of the afflicted catholikes, and restitution of religion. The matter first conceiued in Venice, the seruice (in generall words) presented to the pope, continued and vndertaken in Paris, and lastlie commended and warranted by his holinesse, digested and resolued in England, if it had not beene preuented by accusation, or by hir maiesties greater lenitie and more gratious vsage of hir catholike subiects.

A traitor of singular note by his owne confession was Parrie.

This is my first and last offense conceiued against my prince or countrie, and doth (I cannot denie) conteine all other faults whatsoeuer. It is now to be punished by death, or most gratiouslie (beyond all common expectation) to be pardoned. Death I doo confesse to haue deserued, life I doo (with all humilitie) craue, if it may stand with the queenes honor, and policie of the time. To leaue so great a treason vnpunished were strange; to drawe it by death in example were dangerous; a sworne seruant to take vpon him such an enterprise vpon such a ground, and by such a warrant, hath not beene seene in England; to indict him, arreigne him, bring him to the scaffold, and to publish his offense, can doo no good; to hope that he hath more to discouer than is confessed, or that at his execution he will vnsaie anie thing he hath written, is in vaine; to conclude, that it is impossible for him in time to make some part of amends, were verie hard, and against former experience.

An offense sufficient to hang 1000 traitors without drop of mercie.

Parrie had more glosing rhetorike than faithfull obedience.

The question then is, whether it be better to kill him, or (least the matter be mistaken) vpon hope of his amendment to pardon him. For mine owne opinion (though parciall) I will deliuer you my conscience. The case is good queene Elisabeths, the offense is committed against hir sacred person, and she may (of hir mercie) pardon it without preiudice to anie. Then this I say in few words, as a man more desirous to discharge his troubled conscience, than to liue: Pardon poore Parrie and releeue him; for life without liuing is not fit for him. If this may not be, or be thought dangerous, or dishonorable to the queenes maiestie (as by your fauors, I thinke it full of honor and mercie) then I beseech your lordships (and no other) once to heare me before I be indicted, and afterwards (if I must die) humblie to intreat the queenes maiestie to hasten my triall and execution: which I praie God (with all my heart) may proue as honorable to hir, as I hope it shall be happie to me, who will while I liue (as I haue doone alwaies) praie to Iesus Christ for hir maiesties long and prosperous reigne. From the Tower the eighteenth of Februarie, 1584. W. Parrie.

God Lord with what heart might Parrie hope after anie thing but death, hauing beene so captiuall a traitor?

AND where in this meane time sir Francis Walsingham secretarie to hir maiestie, had dealt with one William Creitchton, a Scot for his birth, and a Iesuit by his profession, now prisoner also in the Tower, for that he was apprehended with diuerse plots for inuasions of this realme, to vnderstand of him, if the said Parrie had euer dealt with him in the parties beyond the seas touching that question, whether it were lawfull to kill hir maiestie or not. The which at that time the said Creitchton called not to his remembrance: yet after vpon better calling it to mind, vpon the twentith date of Februarie last past, he wrote vnto maister secretarie Walsingham thereof voluntarilie, all of his owne hand, to the effect following.

Creitchton apprehended with diuerse plots for inuasions of this realme.

William Creitchtons letter to sir Francis Walsingham, Febr. 20.

RIght honorable sir, when your honor demanded me if maister Parrie did aske me, if it were leason to kill the queene; in deed and veritie, then I had no remembrance at all thereof. But since, thinking on the matter, I haue called to mind the whole fashion of his dealing with me, and some of his arguments: for he dealt verie craftilie with me, I dare not say maliciouslie. For I did in no wise thinke of anie such deseine of his, or of anie other, and did answer him simplie after my conscience and knowledge to the veritie of the question. For after that I had answered him twise before, Quòd omninò non liceret; he returned late at euen by reason I was to depart earlie in the next morning toward Chamberie in Sauoie where I did remaine, and being returned out of the closse within one of the classes of the college, he proponed to me of new the matter, with his reasons and arguments.

Note Creitchtons report of Parries craft and malice.

Creitchtons reasons to repell Parries traitorous allegations.

First he alleged the vtilitie of the deed for deliuering of so manie catholikes out of miserie, and restitution of the catholike religion. I answered, that the scripture answereth thereto, saieng: Non sunt facienda mala, vt veniant bona. So that for no good, how great that euer it be, may be wrought anie euill, how little that euer it be. He replied that it was not euill to take awaie so great euill, and induce so great good. I answered, that all good is not to be doone, but that onelie: Quòd bene & legitimè fieri potest. And therefore, dixi Deum magis amare aduerbia, quàm nomina. Quia in actionibus magis ei placent bene & legitimè, quàm bonum. Ita vt nullum bonum liceat facere, nisi bene & legitimè fieri possit. Quòd in hoc casu fieri non potest. Yet said he, that seuerall learned men were of the opinion, Quòd liceret. I answered, that they men perhaps were of the opinion, that for the safetie of manie in soule and bodie, they would permit a particular to his danger, & to the occult iudgement of God: or perhaps said so, moued rather by some compassion and commiseration of the miserable estate of the catholikes, nor for anie such doctrine that they did find in their bookes. For it is certeine, that such a thing is not licit to a particular, without speciall reuelation diuine, which exceedeth our learning and doctrine. And so he departed from me. Out of the prison in the Tower, the 20 of Februarie.

Deum magis amare aduerbia quàm nomina.

Creitchton holdeth Parries attempt vnlawfull: note.

Your honors poore seruitor in Christ Iesu, W. Creitchton prisoner.

Parrie saith and vnsaith like a traitor to shift off the heauie charge of treason.

AND where also the same Parrie was on the same twentith date of Februarie examined by sir Francis Walsingham knight, what was become of the letter conteined in his confession to be written vnto him by the cardinall de Como: he then answered, that it was consumed and burnt. And yet after, the nert date following, being more vehementlie vrged vpon that point in examination (because it was knowne that it was not burnt) he confessed where he had left it in the towne: whereupon, by Parries direction it was sent for, where it had beene lapped vp togither with other friuolous papers, and written vpon the one side of it; The last will of William Parrie. The which letter was in the Italian tong as hereafter followeth, with the same in English accordinglie translated.

Amon Signore, mon signor Guglielmo Parrie.

Cardinall de Como his animating letter to Parrie to persuere in his diuelish deuise.

MOn Signore, la Santita di N.S. ha veduto le lettere di V.S. del primo con la fede inclusa, & non può se non laudare la buona dispositione che scriue di tenere verso il seruitio & beneficio publico, nel che la Santita sua lesforta di perseuerare, con farne riuscire li effetti che V.S. promette: & acciochè tanto maggiormente V.S. sia aiutata da quel buon spirito che l'ha mosso, le concede sua benedittione, plenaria indulgenza & remissione di tutti li peccati, secondo che V.S. ha chiesto, assicurandosi che oltre il merito, che n'hauera in cielo, vuole anco sua Santitata constituirsi debitore a reconoscere li meriti di V.S. in ogni miglior modo che porta, & cio tanto piu, quanto che V.S. vsa maggior modestia in non pretender niente. Metta dunque ad effetto li suoi santi & honorati pensieri, & attenda a star sano. Che per fine io me le offero di core, & le desiderio ogni buono & felice successo. Di Roma a 30 di Gennaro, 1584.

But as God would, Parries enterprise wanted that wished Buono & felice successo.

Al piacerdi V.S.
N. cardinali di Como.
Al Sig. Guglielmo Parri.

Cardinall de Comos letter to D. Parrie, 30. Ian. 1584 by account of Rome.

MOn signor, his holinesse hath seene your letter of the first, with the certificat included, and cannot but commend the good disposition & resolution which you write to hold towards the seruice and benefit publike: wherein his holines dooth exhort you to perseuere, & to bring to effect that which you haue promised. And to the end you may be so much the more holpen by that *good spirit which hath moued you thereynto, he granteth vnto you his blessing, plenarie indulgence and remission of all your sinnes, according to your request. Assuring you, that besides the merit that you shall receiue therfore in heauen, his holines will further make himselfe debtor to acknowledge your deseruings in the best maner that he can: and so much the more, in that you vse the greater modestie in not pretending anie thing. Put therefore to effect your *holie and honorable purposes, and attend your health. And to conclude, I offer my selfe vnto you hartilie, and doo desire all good and happie successe. From Rome the 30 of Ianuarie, 1584.

B god clearegie in the meane time of that allowance treasons in this sort.

*Good spirit, naie malignant spirit & more than diabolike call.

*Naie curssed and abhominable purposes, with destruction to the vndertaker.

At the pleasure of your Signorie,
N. Card. of Como.

VPon all which former accusation, declaration, confessions and prowes, vpon mondaie the two and twentith date of Februarie last past, at Westminster hall, before sir Christopher Wraie knight chiefe iustice of England, sir Gilbert Gerrard knight maister of the rolles, sir Edmund Anderson knight chiefe iustice of the common plees, sir Roger Manwood knight chiefe baron of the exchekier, sir Thomas Gawdie knight one of the iustices of the plees before hir maiestie to be holden, & William Periam one of the iustices of the common plees, by vertue of hir maiesties commission to them and others in that behalfe directed: the same Parrie was indicted of high treason, for intending and practising the death and destruction of hir maiestie, whome God long prosper, and preserue from all such wicked attempts. The tenor of which indictment appeareth more particularlie in the course of his arreignment following.

Parrie conuented, and arreigned at Westminster hall the 22 of Februarie.

The maner of the arreignment of William Parrie the 25 of Februarie 1584, at Westminster

The names of such personages of honor and worship as had the triall of Parrie arreigned.

minster, in the place where the court commonlie called the Kings bench is vsuallie kept by vertue of hir maiesties commission of oier and terminer, before Henrie lord Hunsdon gouernour of Barwike, sir Francis Knolles knight treasuror of the queenes maiesties household, sir Iames Croft knight comptrollor of the same household, sir Christopher Hatton knight vicechamberleine to hir maiestie, sir Christopher Wraie knight chiefe iustice of England, sir Gilbert Gerrard knight master of the rols, sir Edmund Anderson knight chiefe iustice of the common plees, sir Roger Manwood knight chiefe baron of the exchecker, and sir Thomas Hennage knight treasuror of the chamber.

The lieutenant of the tower returneth his precept.

First three proclamations for silence were made, according to the vsuall course in such cases. Then the lieutenant was commanded to returne his precept, who did so, and brought the prisoner to the bar, to whome Miles Sands esquier clerke of the crowne said; William Parrie hold vp thy hand: and he did so. Then said the clerke of the crowne; Thou art here indicted by the oths of twelue good and lawfull men of the countie of Midleser, before sir Christopher Wraie knight and others, which take the indictment by the name of Wi. Parrie, late of London gentleman, otherwise called Wi. Parrie, late of London doctor of the law, for that thou as a false traitor against the most noble and christian prince, quæne Elisabeth thy most gratious souereigne and liege ladie, not hauing the feare of God before thine eies, nor regarding thy due allegiance (but being seduced by the instigation of the diuell, and intending to withdraw and extinguish the hartie loue and due obedience, which true & faithfull subiects should beare vnto the same our souereigne ladie) diddest at Westminster in the countie of Midleser on the first daie of Februarie, in the fix and twentith yeare of hir highnesse reigne, and at diuerse other times and places in the same countie, maliciouslie, and traitorouslie conspire and compasse, not onelie to depriue and depose the same our souereigne ladie of hir roiall estate, title and dignitie; but also to bring hir highnesse to death and finall destruction, and sedition in the realme to make, and the gouernement thereof to subuert, and the sincere religion of God established in hir highnesse dominions to alter and supplant.

The indictment against Parrie wherein his heinous treason appeareth.

Parrie sent letters to Gregorie the 13 bishop of Rome: and what was the scope of them.

And that, whereas thou William Parrie, by thy letters sent vnto Gregorie bishop of Rome, diddest signifie vnto the same bishop thy purposes and intentions aforesaid, and thereby diddest praie and require the same bishop to giue thee absolution; that thou afterwards, that is to saie, the last day of March in the fix and twentith yeare aforesaid, diddest traitorouslie receiue letters from one called cardinall de Como, directed vnto thee William Parrie, whereby the same cardinall did signifie vnto thee, that the bishop of Rome had perused thy letters, and allowed of thine intent; and that to that end he had absolued thee of all thy sinnes, and by the same letter did animate and stir thee to proceed with thine enterprise; and that thereupon, thou, the last daie of August in the fix and twentith yeare aforesaid, at saint Giles in the fields, in the same countie of Midleser, diddest traitorouslie confer with one Edmund Neuill esquier, vttering to him all thy wicked and traitorous deuises, and then and there diddest mooue him to assist thee therein, and to ioine with thee in those wicked treasons aforesaid, against the peace of our said souereigne ladie the quæne, hir crowne and dignitie. What saiest thou William Parrie, art thou guiltie of these treasons whereof thou standest here indicted, or not guiltie?

Parrie procured Neuill to assist him in his treasons.

Then Parrie said; Before I plead not guiltie, or confesse my selfe guiltie, I praie you giue me leaue to speake a few words: and with humbling himselfe began in this maner. God saue quæne Elisabeth, & God send me grace to discharge my dutie to hir, and to send you home in charitie. But touching the matters that I am indicted of, some were in one place, and some in another, and done so secretlie, as none can see into them, except that they had eies like vnto God: wherefore I will not laie my bloud vpon the iurie, but do mind to confesse the indictment. It conteineth but the parts that haue beene openlie read, I praie you tell me. Wher vnto it was answered, that the indictment conteined the parts he had heard read, & no other. Wher vpon the clerke of the crowne said vnto Parrie, Parrie, thou must answer directlie to the indictment, whether thou be guiltie or not.

Parries answer to the indictment, wherein he confesseth it.

Then said Parrie, I do confesse that I am guiltie of all that is therein conteined: and further to, I desire not life, but desire to die. Vnto which the clerke of the crowne said; If you confesse it, you must confesse it in maner and forme as it is compriled in the indictment. Wherevnto he said; I do confesse it in maner and forme as the same is set downe, and all the circumstances thereof. Then the confession being recorded, the quænes learned councell being readie to praie iudgement vpon the same confession, master vicechamberleine said: These matters conteined in this indictment, and confessed by this man, are of great importance; they touch the person of the quænes most excellent maiestie in the highest degree, the verie state and weldoing of the whole commonwealth, and the truth of Gods word established in these hir maiesties dominions, and the open demonstration of that capitall enuie of the man of Rome, that hath set himselfe against God and all godlinesse, all good princes and good gouernement, and against good men. Wherefore I praie you for the satisfaction of this great multitude, let the whole matter appeare, that euerie one may see that the matter of it selfe is as bad as the indictment purporteth, and as he hath confessed.

Parrie confesseth that he is guiltie of all things conteined in the indictment.

Whereto in respect that the iustice of the realme hath beene of late verie impudentlie slandered, all yelded as a thing necessarie to satisfie the world in particular, of that which was but summarilie compriled in the indictment, though in the law, his confession serued sufficientlie to haue proceeded thereupon vnto iudgement. Wherevpon the lords and others the commissioners, hir maiesties lerned councell, and Parrie himselfe agreed, that Parries confession (taken the eleuenth and thirteenth of Februarie 1584, before the lord of Hunsdon, master Vicechamberleine, and master Secretarie) and cardinall de Como his letters, and Parries letters to the lord treasuror and lord steward, should be openlie read.

Certeine special matters vnder writing read in open audience of the multitude for their satisfaction.

And Parrie, for the better satisfieng of the people and standers by, offered to read them himselfe: but being told how the order was, that the clerke of the crowne should read them, it was so resolued of all parts. And then maister vicechamberleine caused to be shewed to Parrie his said confession, the cardinals letter, and his owne letter aforesaid: which after he had particularlie viewed euerie leafe thereof, he confessed, and said openlie they were the same. Then said maister vicechamberleine; Before we proceed to shew what he hath confessed, what saie you (said he to Parrie) is that which you haue confessed here true, and did you confesse it freelie and willinglie of your selfe, or was there ante ertort means vsed to draw it from you? Surelie (said Parrie) I made that confession freelie without ante constraint, and that is all true, and more to: for there is no treason that hath beene since the first yeare of the quæne ante waie

Sir Christopher Hattons collection out of Parries indictment.

Parries confession was not Coacta but Voluntaria: ergo more credible touching touching religion, saving receipt of Agnus Dei, and persuading of others, wherein I haue not much dealt, but I haue offended in it. And I haue also deliuered mine opinion in writing, who ought to be successor to the crowne: which he said to be treason also.

Parries confession of his treasons was read by his owne assent, & letter of cardinall di Como vnto Parrie also read.

Then his confession of the eleuenth and thirteenth of Februarie, all of his owne handwriting, and before particularlie set downe, was openlie and distinctlie read by the clerke of the crowne. And that done, the cardinall di Como his letter in Italian was deliuered vnto Parries hand, by the direction of maister vicechamberleine, which Parrie there perused, & openlie affirmed to be wholie of the cardinals owne handwriting, and the seale to be his owne also, and to be with a cardinals hat on it: and himselfe did openly read it in Italian, as before is set downe. And the words bearing sense as it were written to a bishop or to a man of such degrée, it was demanded of him by maister vicechamberleine, whether he had not taken the degrée of a bishop? He said, No: but said at first, those tearmes were proper to the degrée he had taken: and after said that the cardinall did vouchsafe as of a fauour to write so to him. Then the copie of that letter in English as before is also set downe, was in like manner openlie read by the clerke of the crowne, which Parrie then acknowledged to be trulie translated. And thereupon was shewed vnto Parrie his letter of the eighteenth of Februarie, written to the lord treasuror, and the lord steward: which he confessed to be all of his owne handwriting, and was as before is set downe.

Parries letter of the eighteenth of Februarie to the lord treasuror and the earle of Leicester read.

These matters being read openlie for manifestation of the matter, Parrie praied leaue to speake; whereto maister vicechamberleine said: If you will saie anie thing for the better opening to the world of those your foule and horrible facts, speake on: but if you meane to make anie excuse of that which you haue confessed, which else would haue bene and do stand proued against you; for my part, I will not sit to heare you. Then hir maiesties atturnie generall stood vp and said: It appeareth before you my lords, that this man hath bene indicted and arreigned of seuerall most heinous and horrible treasons, and hath confessed them, which is before you of record: wherefore there resteth no more to be done, but for the court to giue iudgement accordinglie, which here I require in the behalfe of the quenes maiestie. Then said Parrie, I praie you heare me for discharging of my conscience; I will not go about to excuse my selfe, nor to seeke to saue my life, I care not for it, you haue my confession of record, that is inough for my life: and I meane to vtter more, for which I were worthie to die; and said: I praie you heare me, in that I am to speake to discharge my conscience. Then said maister vicechamberleine; Parrie, then do thy dutie according to conscience, and vtter all that thou canst saie concerning those thy most wicked facts.

The quenes atturnie requireth iudgement.

Then said Parrie: My cause is rare, singular and vnnaturall, conceiued at Venice, presented in generall words to the pope, vndertaken at Paris, commended and allowed of by his holinesse, and was to haue bene executed in England, if it had not bene preuented. Yea, I haue committed manie treasons, for I haue committed treason in being reconciled, and treason in taking absolution. There hath bene no treason since the first yeare of the quenes reigne touching religion, but that I am guiltie of (except for receiuing of Agnus Dei, & persuading as I haue said) and yet neuer intended to kill quene Elisabeth. I appeale to hir owne knowledge and to my lord treasurors and maister secretaries. Then said my lord of Hunsdon: Hast thou acknowledged it so often, and so plainelie in writing vnder thy hand, and here of record; and now, when thou shouldest haue thy iudgement according to that which thou hast confessed thy selfe guiltie of, dost thou go backe againe, and denie the effect of all? How can we beleeue that thou now saiest?

Parrie had for his credit afore time said vnto secretlie, that he had bene solicited beyond the seas to commit the fact, but he would not do it, wherewith he craftilie abused both the quenes maiestie, & those two councellors, wherof he now would helpe himselfe with these speeches against most manifest proofs.

Then said maister vicechamberleine; This is absurd, thou hast not onelie confessed generallie, that thou wert guiltie according to the indictment, which summarilie, and yet interpretle words doth conteine that thou haddest traitorouslie compassed and intended the death & destruction of hir maiestie: but thou also saidst particularlie that thou wert guiltie of euerie of the treasons conteined therein, whereof the same was one in plaine & expresse letter set downe, and read vnto thée; Yea thou saiedst that thou wert guiltie of more treasons to beside these; And diddest thou not vpon thy examination voluntarilie confesse, how thou wast moued first thervnto by mislike of thy state after thy departure out of the realme: And that thou diddest mislike hir maiestie for that she had done nothing for thée? How by wicked papists and popish bookes thou wert persuaded that it was lawfull to kill hir maiestie? How thou wert by reconciliation become one of that wicked sort, that held hir maiestie for neither lawfull quene, nor christian? And that it was meritorious to kill hir? And diddest thou not signifie that thy purpose to the pope by letters, and receiuedst letters from the cardinall, how he allowed of thine intent, and excited thée to performe it, and thereupon diddest receiue absolution? And diddest thou not conceiue it, promise it, vow it, sweare it, and receiue the sacrament that thou wouldest do it? And diddest not thou thereupon affirme, that thy vowes were in heauen, and thy letters and promises on earth to bind thée to do it? And that what soeuer hir maiestie would haue done for thée, could not haue remoued thee from that intention or purpose, vnlesse she would haue desisted from dealing as she hath done with the catholikes, as thou callest them? All this thou hast plainelie confessed; and I protest before this great assemblie, thou hast confessed it more plainelie & in better sort, than my memorie will serue me to vtter: and saiest thou now, that thou neuer meantest it?

Note all this charge of maister vicechamberleine to be a recapitulatiõ of all or most the treasons of Parrie.

Ah (said Parrie) your honors know how my confession vpon mine examination was extorted. Then both the lord Hunsdon and maister Vicechamberleine affirmed, that there was no torture or threatning words offered him. But Parrie then said, that they told him, that if he would not confesse willinglie, he should haue torture. Whereunto their honors answered, that they vsed not anie speech or word of torture to him. You said, said Parrie, that you would proceed with rigour against me, if I would not confesse it of my selfe. But their honors expresse affirmed that they vsed no such words. But I will tell thée, said maister Vicechamberleine, what we said; I spake these words: If you will willinglie vtter the truth of your selfe, it may do you good, and I wish you to do so; if you will not, we must then proceed in ordinarie course to take your examination. Whervnto you answered, that you would tell the truth of your selfe. Was not this true? Which then he yelded vnto. And hereunto, hir maiesties attournie generall put Parrie in remembrance what speeches he vsed to the lieutenant of the Tower, the quenes maiesties sergeant at law, M. Gaudie, and the same attournie on saturdaie the twentith of Februarie last at the Tower, vpon that he was by them then examined by order from the lords: which was, that he acknowledged he was most mildlie and fauourablie dealt with, in all his examinations: which he also at the bar then acknowledged to be true.

Parrie chargeth the lords of the councell with vntruth.

Parrie reproued of false speeches, and so by himselfe also confessed.

Then maister vicechamberleine said, that it was wonder wonder to sée the magnanimitie of hir maiestie, which after that thou haddest opened those traitorous practises in sort as thou hast laid it downe in thy confession, was neuertheless such, and so far from all feare, as that she would not so much as acquaint anie one of hir highnesse priuie councell with it, to his knowlege, no not vntill after this thine enterprise discouered and made manifest. And besides that which thou hast set downe vnder thine owne hand, thou diddest confesse, that thou haddest prepared two Scotish daggers fit for such a purpose: and those being disposed awaie by thée, thou diddest saie that an other would serue thy turne. And withall, Parrie, diddest thou not also confesse before vs how wonderfullie thou wert appalled and perplexed vpon a sudden at the presence of hir maiestie at Hampton court this last summer, saieng that thou diddest thinke thou then sawest in hir the verie likenesse and image of king Henrie the seuenth? And that therewith, and vpon some speaches vsed by hir maiestie, thou diddest turne about and weepe bitterlie to thy selfe? And yet diddest call to mind that thy vowes were in heauen, thy letters and promises on earth; and that therefore thou diddest saie with thy selfe, that there was no remedie but to do it? Diddest thou not confesse this? The which he acknowledged.

The magnanimitie of the quéenes maiestie notified by sir Christopher Hatton.

The lord of Hunsdons speéches convincing Parrie manifestlie of hie treason.

Then said the lord Hunsdon; Saiest thou now, that thou diddest neuer meane to kill the quéene? Diddest thou not confesse, that when thou diddest vtter this practise of trecherie to hir maiestie, that thou diddest couer it with all the skill thou haddest; and that it was done by thee, rather to get credit and accesse thereby, than for anie regard thou haddest of hir person? But in truth thou diddest it, that thereby thou mightest haue better opportunitie to performe thy wicked enterprise. And wouldest thou haue run into such feare as thou diddest confesse that thou wert in, when thou diddest vtter it, if thou haddest neuer meant it? What reason canst thou shew for thy selfe? Which that he cried out in a furious maner: I neuer meant to kill hir: I will laie my bloud vpon quéene Elisabeth and you, before God and the world: and thereupon fell into a rage and euill words with the quéenes maiesties attourneie generall. Then said the lord Hunsdon; This is but thy popish pride & ostentation, which thou wouldest haue to be told to thy fellowes of that faction, to make them beléeue that thou diest for poperie, when thou diest for most horrible and dangerous treasons against hir maiestie, and thy whole countrie. For thy laieng of thy bloud, it must lie on thine owne head, as a iust reward of thy wickednesse. The lawes of the realme most iustlie condemne thée to die out of thine owne mouth, for conspiring the destruction both of hir maiestie, and of vs all: therefore thy bloud be vpon thée: neither hir maiestie, nor we at anie time sought it; thy selfe hast spilt it.

Parries exclamation of outrage and vnpatientnesse.

Parrie abuseth the honorable and worshipfull of the bench with termes vncouth and darke speéches.

Then he was asked what he could saie, why iudgement of death ought not to be awarded against him? Whereto he said, he did sée that he must die, because he was not setled. What meanest thou by that, said maister vicechamberleine? Said he, Looke into your studie, and into your new bookes, and you shall find what I meane. I protest (said his honor) I know not what thou meanest: thou dost not well to vse such darke speéches, vnlesse thou wouldest plainelie vtter what thou meanest thereby. But he said, he cared not for death, and that he would laie his bloud amongst them. Then spake the lord chiefe iustice of England, being required to giue iudgement according to law, and said; Parrie, you haue beene much heard, and what you meane by being setled, I know not; but I see you are so setled in poperie, that you cannot setle your selfe to be a good subiect. But touching that you should saie to stale iudgement from being giuen against you, your speéches must be of one of these kinds; either to proue the indicment (which you haue confessed to be true) to be insufficient in law; or else to pleade somewhat touching hir maiesties mercie, why iustice should not be done of you. All other speéches wherein you haue vsed great libertie, is more than by law you can aske. These be the matters you must looke to, what saie you to them? Whereto he said nothing.

More libertie of speech giuen to Parrie than by law was allowable.

Then said the lord chiefe iustice; Parrie, thou hast béene before this time indicted of diuerse most horrible and hatefull treasons, committed against thy most gratious souereigne, and native countrie: the matter most detestable, the maner most subtill and dangerous, and the occasions and meanes that lead thée thereunto most vngodlie and villanous. That thou diddest intend it, it is most euident by thy selfe. The matter was the destruction of a most sacred and an anointed quéene thy souereigne and mistresse, who hath shewed thée such fauour, as some thy betters haue not obteined: yea, the ouerthrow of thy countrie wherein thou wert borne, & of a most happie common-wealth whereof thou art a member, and of such a quéene, as hath bestowed on thée the benefit of all benefits in this world (that is to saie) thy life, hertofore granted thée by hir mercie when thou hadst lost it by iustice & desert. Yet thou hir seruant sworne to defend hir, mentest with thy bloudie hand to haue taken awaie hir life, that mercifullie gaue thée thine, when it was yéelded into hir hands. This is the matter wherein thou hast offended.

Parries treasons recapitulated by the lord chiefe iustice, both for maner and matter.

The maner was most subtill and dangerous, beyond all that before thée haue committed anie wickednesse against hir maiestie: for thou making shew as if thou wouldest simplie haue vttered for hir safetie the euill that others had contriued, diddest but seeke thereby credit & accesse, that thou mightest take the apter opportunitie for hir destruction. And for the occasions and meanes that drew thée on, they were most vngodlie and villanous: as the persuasions of the pope, of papists, and popish bookes. The pope pretendeth that he is a pastor, when as in truth he is far from feeding of the flocke of Christ, but rather as a woolfe seeketh but to feed on & to sucke out the bloud of true christians, and as it were thirsteth after the bloud of our most gratious and christian quéene. And these papists and popish bookes, while they pretend to set forth diuinitie, they do indéed most vngodlie teach and persuade that which is quite contrarie both to God and his word. For the word teacheth obedience of subiects toward princes, & forbiddeth anie priuat man to kill; but they teach subiects to disobeie princes, & that a priuat wicked person may kill. Yea & whome? a most godlie quéene, & their owne naturall and most gratious souereigne. Let all men therfore take héed how they receiue anie thing from him, heare or read anie of their bookes, and how they confer with anie papists. God grant hir maiestie, that she maie know by thée, how euer she trust such like to come so néere hir person!

The occasions and meanes that induced Parrie to these treasons.

The danger & damnablenesse of popish bookes either read or listened vnto of papists, &c.

But see the end, and why thou diddest it, and it will appeare to be a most miserable, fearefull, and foolish thing: for thou diddest imagine, that it was to relieue those that thou callest catholikes, who were most likelie amongst all others to haue felt the worst of it, if thy diuelish practise had taken effect. But sith thou hast béene indicted of the treasons comprised in the indictment, and thereupon arreigned, and hast confessed thy selfe guiltie of them; the court doth award, that thou shalt be had from hense to the place whense thou diddest come, and so drawne through the open citie of London vpon an hurdle to the place of execution, and there to be hanged and let downe alme, alive, and thy priuie parts cut off, and thy entrals taken out and burnt in thy sight, then thy head to be cut off, and thy bodie to be diuided in foure parts, and to be disposed at hir maiesties pleasure: and God haue mercie on thy soule.

The forme of iudgement against the traitor pronounced by the lord cheefe iustice.

Parrie rageth at the iustice bar without all reuerence.

Parrie neuertheles persisted still in his rage and fond speach, and raginglie there said, he there summoned quéene Elisabeth to answer for his bloud before God: wherewith the lieutenant of the Tower was commanded to take him from the barre: and so he did. And vpon his departure, the people striken as it were at heart with the horror of his intended enterprise, ceased not, but pursued him with outcries, as; Awaie with the traitor, awaie with him, & such like: whereupon he was conueied to the barge, to passe to the Tower againe by water: & the court was adiorned. After which, vpon the second daie of this instant March, William Parrie was by vertue of processe in that behalfe awarded from the same commissioners of oier and terminer, deliuered by the lieutenant of the Tower erlie in the morning vnto the shiriffes of London and Middlesex, who receiued him at the Tower hill, and thereupon, according to the iudgement, caused him there to be forthwith set on the hurdle: from whense he was drawne therevpon through the middest of the citie of London, vnto the place for his execution in the palace at Westminster: where, hauing long time of stale admitted vnto him before his execution, he most maliciouslie and impudentlie, after some other vaine discourses excusons & often deliuered in speach, that he was neuer guiltie of anie intention to kill quéene Elisabeth, and so (without anie request made by him to the people to pray to God for him, or praier publikelie vsed by himselfe for ought that appeared: but such as he vsed, if he vsed anie, was priuat to himselfe) he was executed according to the iudgement. And now for his intent, how soeuer he pretended the contrarie in words, yet by these his owne writings, confessions, letters, & manie other proues afore here expressed, it is most manifest to all persons, how horrible his intentions and treasons were, and how iustlie he suffered for the same: and thereby greatlie to be doubted, that as he had liued a long time vainelie and vngodlie, and like an atheist and godlesse man, so he continued the same course till his death to the outward sight of men. ¶ Here endeth the true and plaine course and processe of the treasons, arrest, arreignement, and execution of William Parrie the traitor.

William Parrie the traitor executed.

Parrie (euen at the time of his death) séeketh to cleare and purge himselfe as innocent of the treasons for the which he was condemned.

An addition not vnnecessarie for this purpose.

FOrsomuch as Parrie in the aboundance of his proud and arrogant humour, hath often both in his confession, and letters, pretended sums great and grieuous causes of discontentment against hir maiestie, and the present state: it shall not be impertinent, for better satisfaction of all persons, to set forth simplie and trulie, the condition and qualitie of the man, what he was by birth and education, and in what course of life he had liued. This vile and traitorous wretch was one of the yonger sonnes of a poore man, called Harrie ap Dauid: he dwelled in Northwales in a little village called Northop in the countie of Flint: there he kept a common alehouse, which was the best and greatest state of his liuing. In that house was this traitor borne, his mother was the reputed daughter of one Conwaie a priest, parson of a poore parish called Halkin in the same countie of Flint: his eldest brother dwelleth at this present in the same house, and there kéepeth an alehouse as his father did before him. This traitor in his childhood so soone as he had learned a little to write and read, was put to serue a poore man dwelling in Chester, named John Fisher, who professed to haue some small skill and vnderstanding in the law. With him he continued diuerse yeares, and serued as a clerke, to writs such things as in that trade, which his master vsed, he was appointed.

A description of Parrie both by linage person, education, and qualitie, &c.

Parrie baselie borne and baselie brought vp.

During this time, he learned the English tong, and at such times of leasure as the poore man his master had no occasion otherwise to vse him, he was suffered to go to the grammar schole, where he got some litle vnderstanding in the Latine tong. In this his childhood he was noted by such as best knew him, to be of a most villainous and dangerous nature & disposition. He did often run awaie from his master, and was often taken & brought to him againe. His master, to correct his peruerse and froward conditions, did manie times shut him as prisoner in some close place of his house, and manie times caused him to be chained, locked, and clogged, to staie his running awaie. Yet all was in vaine: for about the third yeare of hir maiesties reigne, for his last farewell to his poore master, he ran awaie from him, and came to London to sèke his aduentures. He was then constreined to sèke what trade he could to liue by, and to get meat and drinke for his bellie, and clothes for his backe.

Parrie a verie runnagate and vagarant rakehell in his yong yeares.

His good hap in the end was to be interteined in place of seruice aboue his desert, where he staied not long, but shifted himselfe diuerse times from seruice to seruice, and from one master to another. Now he began to forget his old home, his birth, his education, his parents, his friends, his owne name, and what he was. He aspired to greater matters, he challenged the name and title of a great gentleman, he vanted himselfe to be of kin and alied to noble and worshipfull, he left his old name which he did beare, and was commonlie called by in his childhood, & during all the time of his abode in the countrie, which was William ap Harrie (as the maner in Wales is.) And bicause he would séeme to be in déed the man which he pretended, he toke vpon him the name of Parrie, being the surname of diuerse gentlemen of great worship and hansour. And bicause his mothers name by hir father a simple priest, was Conwaie: he pretended kinred to the familie of sir John Conwaie, and so thereby made himselfe of kin to Edmund Nevill.

Note Parries ambitiō, and how the priest forgetteth that euer he was parish clerke.

Being thus set forth with his new name and new title of gentleman, and commended by some of his good fauorers, he matched himselfe in mariage with a widow in Southwales, who brought him some reasonable portion of wealth. She liued with him but a short time, and the welth he had with hir lasted not long: it was soone consumed with his dissolute and wastfull maner of life. He was then driuen to his wonted shifts, his creditors were manie, the debt which he owed great, he had nothing wherewith to make paiment, he was continuallie pursued by sergeants and officers to arrest him, he did often by sleights and shifts escape from them. In this his nédie and poore estate, he sought to repare himselfe againe by a new match in mariage with another widow, which before was the wife of one Richard Hetwod.

Parrie matcheth himselfe in marriage with a widow in Southwales.

Parrie a shifter, in debt & danger; he marrieth a rich widow, &c.

This matter was so earnestlie followed by himselfe, and so effectuallie commended by his frends and fauourers, that the sillie woman yéelded to take him to husband: a match in euerie respect verie vnequall and vnfit. Hir wealth and yearelie liuelihood was verie great, his poore and base estate worse than nothing, he verie yong, she of such age as for yeares she might haue bene his mother. When he had thus possessed himselfe of his new wiues wealth, he omitted

Parrie deflloureth his wiues owne daughter, and sundrie waies abuseth the old mother.

ted nothing that might serue for a prodigall, dissolute, and most vngodlie course of life. His riot and excesse was vnmeasurable, he did most wickedlie deflloure his wiues owne daughter, and sundrie waies pitifullie abuse the old mother: he caried himselfe for his outward port and countenance (so long as his old wiues bags lasted) in such sort, as might well haue sufficed for a man of verie good hauiour and degrée. But this lasted not long, his proud hart & wastfull hand had sone powred out old Heiwoods wealth.

He then fell againe to his wonted shifts, borowed where he could find anie to lend, and ingaged his credit so far as anie would trust him. Amongst others, he became greatlie indebted to Hugh Hare, the gentleman before named. Who after long forbearing of his monis, sought to recouer it by law. For this cause Parrie conceiued great displeasure against him, which he pursued with all malice, euen to the seeking of his life. In this murtherous intent, he came in the night time to M. Hares chamber in the Temple, broke open the doore, assaulted him, and wounded him grieuouslie, and so left him in great danger of life. For this offense he was apprehended, committed to Newgate, indicted of burglarie, arreigned, and found guiltie by a verie substantiall iurie, and condemned to be hanged, as the law in that case requireth.

Parrie condemned for burgularie, is pardoned of the queene.

He standing thus conuicted, hir maiestie of hir most gratious clemencie, and pitifull disposition, tooke compassion vpon him, pardoned his offense, & gaue him his life, which by the law & due course of iustice he ought then to haue lost. After this he taried not long, but pretending some causes of discontentment, departed the realme, and trauelled beyond the seas. How he demeaned himselfe there from time to time, and with whome he conuersed, is partlie in his owne confession touched before. This is the man, this is his race, which he feared should be spotted if he miscaried in the execution of his traitorous enterprise, this hath béene the course of his life, these are the great causes of his discontentment.

Parrie pretended a conscience of religion, being vtterlie prophane and of no religion.

And whereas at his arreignement and execution, he pretended great care of the disobedient popish subiects of this realme, whom he called catholikes, and in verie insolent sort séemed to glorie greatlie in the profession of his pretensed catholike religion: the whole course and action of his life sheweth plainelie, how prophanelie & irreligiouslie he did alwaies beare himselfe. He vaunted, that for these two and twentie yeares past he had béene a catholike, and during all that time neuer receiued the communion: yet before he trauelled beyond the seas, at three seuerall times within the compasse of these two and twentie years, he did voluntarilie take the oth of obedience to the quænes maiestie, set downe in the statute made in the first yeare of hir highnesse reigne; by which, amongst other things, he did testifie and declare in his conscience, that no forreine prince, person, prelat, state, or potentat, hath or ought to haue anie iurisdiction, power, preeminence, or authoritie, ecclesiasticall or spirituall, within this realme; and therfore did vtterlie renounce & forsake all forren iurisdictions, powers, and authorities, and did promise to beare faith and true allegiance to the quénes highnesse, hir heires and lawfull successours.

Parries voluntarie oth (thrise taken in 22 yeares) of obedience to hir maiestie.

With what conscience or religion he tooke that oth so often, if so be he were then a papist in deed, as since the discouerie of his treasons he pretended, let his best frends the papists themselues iudge. But perhaps it may be said, that he repented those his offenses past: that since those three oths so taken by him, he was twise reconciled to the pope, and so his conscience cleared, and he become a new man, and

And this is most like, for what will not the pope dispense withall.

(which is more) that in the time of his last trauell, he cast awaie all his former lewd maners: that he changed his degrée and habit, and bought or begged the graue title of a doctor of law, for which he was well qualified with a little grammar schole Latine: that he had plenarie indulgence and remission of all his sinnes, in consideration of his vndertaking of so holie an enterprise as to kill quéene Elisabeth, a sacred annointed quæne, his naturall and souereigne ladie: that he promised to the pope, & vowed to God to performe it: that he confirmed the same by receiuing the sacrament at the Iesuits, at one altar with his two beaupéres, the cardinals of Vandosme and Narbone: and that since his last returne into England, he did take his oth vpon the bible to execut it. These reasons may séeme to beare some weight in déed amongst his friends the Iesuits, and other papists of state, who haue speciall skill in matters of such importance.

Parries two beaupéers the cardinals of Vandosme & Narbone.

But now latelie in the beginning of this parlement in Nouember last, he did eftsones solemnelie in publike place take the oth before mentioned, of obedience to hir maiestie. How that maie stand with his reconciliations to the pope, and with his promises, vowes, and oth to kill the quéene, it is a thing can hardlie be warranted, vnlesse it be by some speciall priuilege of the popes omnipotencie. But let him haue the glorie he desired, to liue and die a papist. He deserued it, it is fit for him, his death was correspondent to the course of his life, which was disloiall, periured, and traitorous towards hir maiestie; and false and perfidious towards the pope himselfe, and his catholikes, if they will beléeue his solemne protestations which he made at his arreignement and execution, that he neuer meant nor intended anie hurt to hir highnesse person. For if that be true, where are then his vowes which he said were in heauen, his letters and promises vpon earth? Why hath he stollen out of the popes shop so large an indulgence and plenarie remission of all his sinnes, and meant to performe nothing that he promised? Why was his deuotion and zele so highlie commended? Why was he so specialite praid for and remembred at the altar? All these great fauours were then bestowed vpon him without cause or desert: for he deceiued the pope, he deceiued the cardinals and Iesuits with a false semblance and pretense to do that thing which he neuer meant.

what a notable dissembler was this?

Parrie periured towards hir maiestie & perfidious to the pope, &c.

No trust nor certeine dealing vsed by Parrie to or fro.

But the matter is cleere, the conspiracie, and his traitorous intent is too plaine and euident: it is the Lord that reuealed it in time, and preuented their malice: there lacked no will or readinesse in him to execute that horrible fact. It is the Lord that hath preserued hir maiestie from all the wicked practises and conspiracies of that hellish rable: it is he that hath most gratiouslie deliuered hir from the hands of this traitorous miscreant. The Lord is hir onelie defense in whome she hath alwaies trusted, he will defend hir maiestie, and fulfill for hir sake no lesse than good king Dauid (sundrie times assalted with falsharted enimies) and all loiall subiects will hartilie praie for; namelie such vengeance and heauie measure of iudgement to be proportioned and allotted them, as is wished against the malicious wicked in the eight and fiftith psalme, effectuallie set downe by the Paraphrast in these words following:

Confringe malas (ô Deus) impudens
Os comminutis contere dentibus:
Et rictibus sæuis hiantes
Hos inhibe catulos leonum, &c.
Sensim liquescant, tardigradus velut
Limax: acerbo funere deferant
Vitale lumen, more fœtus
Ante suum pereunt in ortum, &c.

Buch. in psalm. 58.

A few

A few obseruations gathered out of the verie words and writings of William Parrie the traitor, applied to prooue his traitorous coniuration, with a resolute intent, imagination, purpose, and obstinate determination to haue killed hir maiestie, our most gratious souereigne: whom the Lord hath saued, and euer maie he saue by his mercie.

THis William Parrie the traitor, 1 confesseth to haue conceiued the treason at Venice, by conference with B. Palmio, of whome he still thinketh so well, as he can not but speake of him with reuerend mention; whereas, if he had neuer thought, or did now forethinke the treason, he would rather curse the time that euer he met with such a bloudie and treacherous ghostlie father. Well, this graue and learned frier Palmio (saith he) made the matter cleere in religion and conscience, and commended the traitors deuotion. This treason Parrie so apprehended, as he wrote presentlie to the pope, presenting the seruice. 2 Returning to Paris, he conferred with Morgan, vowed to performe it for restitution of England, &c. 3 Being dissuaded (as the credible man writeth) by Wats, he replied that he was gone so farre, as he could not go backe, but promised faithfullie to performe the enterprise, if the pope would vpon his offers and letters allow it, and grant remission, &c.

Where this by the waie is to be noted, that if the opinions of these English priests (as he will néds make vs beléeue) were differing from the pope, and our English Iesuits, varieng from Iesuit Palmio and others beyond sea Iesuits, in the question of murthering a prince: some of them at least would haue giuen totall intelligence of such a treason conceiued and nourished in that man, who had made so manie priuie both beyond and on this side the sea, as could not be dissuaded from his purpose, but euer departed with a resolution contrarie vnto these cold dissuaders. It were no good policie to trust this popish traitor, but rather to suspect all pope created priests to be of the same mind with their supreame head, and all English Iesuits to consent with forren Iesuits their fellow members. They be all of one order and vow, they haue one superior; and if they had detested this fact in déed, some of them, séeing the wretch to perish, must néeds haue bewraied it, and not to suffer him to go on headlong in such a sinne, leauing hir roiall person to the will and malice (as much as in them laie) of a murthering ruffian.

But to proue his intent with continuance and growing of the same, 4 Againe he writeth letters to the pope, in Januarie one thousand fiue hundred eightie and foure by that account, toke aduise vpon them in confession of A. Codreto, was commended, againe confessed, toke the sacrament (verelie Cruentum sacramentum, & sacrificium cruoris) at the Iesuits, at one altar, with the cardinals of Mandosini and of Narbone. Hereof he had certificat to the pope, which he sent inclosed in his letters to his holinesse, to lead him to absolue him; which he required in consideration of so great an enterprise vndertaken without reward. 5 The letter and certificat he read to Ragazzoni, and left with him to be sent to the pope, who wished him good spéed, promising he should be remembred at the altar. 6 He doubteth, least if Morgan died, and he miscarried in the execution (as he did, God be thanked, and choked in the halter, notwithstanding their remembrance at the altar) and his intent neuer trulie discouered; that is to saie, that he did it for the catholikes, it might be a spot in his race. Marke here the verie word (intent) in his owne confession. 7 Morgan assureth him, that the lord Fernehurst should go into Scotland, and be readie to enter vpon the first newes of our queenes fall. Thus much for his intent beyond the sea, and before his conturation discouered.

Upon his arriuall in England, he wrote to court, that he had a speciall seruice of discouerie vnto the quéene: but with what intent, let his owne words speake, 8 More to prepare accesse and credit, than for anie care had of hir person. Admitted vnto hir gratious audience, he discouered the conturation; yet in what maner, let himselfe sate, euen couered with all the skill he had. This intent was with déepe treason: for (as he saith) so he did, he disclosed onelie so much as he thought good and necessarie to ground in hir highnesse a setled confidence towards him, wherby he might effect his traitorous intent with better opportunitie, and his owne safetie. He bewraied himselfe so farre as he might couer his chiefe drift, manie principall things concealed, nothing of lord Fernehurst with his Scotish forces, &c. 9 Receiuing from the pope himselfe commendation and allowance of his enterprise, of incouragement, and plenarie indulgence by no meaner man than cardinall di Como, though he shewed the letter to hir maiestie; not for anie care of hir person, but for his better accesse & credit, as the rest, yet let his owne words tell what his intent was at the verie receiuing and shewing of the same letter. Forsooth (saith he) this letter confirmed his resolution to kill the quéene, making it cléere in his conscience, as a thing lawfull and meritorious.

Now is his intent grown to a resolution, not doutfull, but cléere in conscience, not alone lawfull, but meritorious. Papa dixit, a cardinall is Nuntio. What other thing is this, than for the pope and his cardinals, like an other Antoninus Commodus, to make one Inter sicarios & gladiatores? The diuell inforcing this traitors heart to execute his intent, 10 He was troubled loking vpon the quéene, and remembring hir excellencies: yet he saw no remedie, his vowes were in heauen, his letters and promises on earth. Yea, he stroue to close his eies at these excellencies, and obstinated his hart by séeking reasons to quench all sparks of humanitie and allegiance arising in his thoughts. For thus reasoneth he against his conscience; Why shouldest thou care for hir? What hath she done for thee? Hast thou not spent ten thousand marks, &c. What more diuelish intent could possesse a traitor, than to labour to suppresse a small remaine of conscience, abhorring to kill so excellent a personage, which God stirred vp in his thoughts to his suffer condemnation? 11 Doctor Allens booke redoubled his former conceipts, euerie word was a warrant to a prepared mind.

Sée how the smoth words of that catholike booke are interpreted and conceiued. One spirit occupieth the catholike reader with the catholike writer, and therefore can best expound the writers sense in his readers mouth, euen to be a booke fraught with emphaticall speaches of energeticall persuasion to kill and depose hir maiestie, and yet doth the hypocrite writer, that traitor catholike, dissemble and protest otherwise. 12 Parrie suffering repulse in a suite for S. Katharins, communeth with maister Neuill, recommendeth the enterprise as honorable & profitable to the catholike common-weale. Being preiudiced in opinion of Allens booke (as before) he commendeth it, and deliuereth it to Neuill, thereby to worke the same vile intent in him which it had alreadie confirmed in himselfe. He toke now an other oth vpon the bible, after the maner of a protestant, to pursue the enterprise, and ment (he saith) to performe it, so far forth as the place and maner of doing was appointed. This second conturation he neuer bewraied Benedicto Palmio a Iesuit, mentioned before, pag. 1385.

Thomas Morgan and Wats the one termed a catholike gentleman, pag. 1385.

Anball a Iesuit in Paris, of whome before, pag. 1385.

Ragazzoni the Nuntio: sée before, pag. 1385.

Sée before pag. 1386.

They cannot be found in loialtie that are vnsound in religion: Ergo how can they giue Caesar his right, that deme God his due and true seruice?

Sée before, pag. 1386.

Sée before, pag. 1386.

Cardinall di Como, of whom sée before, pag. 1385. and his letter to Parrie, pag. 1388.

Sée before, pag. 1386.

Sée before, pag. 1386. part of Parries voluntarie confession.

Note the pernicious dealing of Parrie euerie waie vnfaithfull, Tam principi quàm populo, deinceps sibimet ut proditori summo, pag. 1386.

waied in six moneths, till accused by Peuill, and then at first denied it.

13 Finallie, to declare his height of malice, he saith, if the quéene had preferred him neuer so greatlie, yet must this bloudie enterprise haue holden, except she had releeued the catholikes. Was this no intent, which neither benefit nor bountie could staie? Which neither feare of God, nor reuerence of excellencie could repell? Which neither dread of punishment, nor tract of time could remoue? Did he conceiue it, conferre and aduise of it, vow himselfe to the execrable seruice, present and offer it, harden his heart against others dissuasions, beat backe contrarie motions of his owne conscience, go so farre as he could not go backe, promise it faithfullie, receiue a church sacrament therevpon, make certificat thereof, propound himselfe the end and reason of his intent, discourse vpon the contingent sequele, preuenting the spot of his race, receiue letters of allowance, commendation, incouragement, and absolution, could he vow in heauen, and promise on earth, could he do all this in a thing which he meant not?

All these circumstances proue that Parrie was resolute, and prepared both in hart and by hand to put in practise his conceiued vnnaturall treason.

Could he resolue and confirme his resolution of a thing which he intended not; yea, could he intend & meane (for all these be his owne words) that which he neuer meant nor intended? could he redouble his conceits, and haue a prepared mind for that he intended not? Would such a craftie traitor practise with others by persuasiue speach, & traitorous booke in such a matter, as the onelie broching thereof must capitallie indamage his kinsman and friend, and withall laie his owne head in his friends hand? And yet notwithstanding, either he meant this treason, either else he little loued his friend, to tempt him so dangerouslie; whom yet, he saith, he loued so, as to suffer his finger in his dish, & his hand in his purse. But which is aboue all, would anie man sweare againe on the bible, appoint time and place, conceals it with as much perill as if he had done it; would he denie it, would so ambitious a man discontent himselfe with all preferment, for the atchiuing of that which he meant not? Was this mischeuous course, begun and continued, a long time, at home and abroad, in manie kingdomes, communicated with manie persons, of seuerall nation and qualitie, as pope, cardinall, Nuntio, frier, priest, kings secretarie and ambassadors, all this while not meant? Was it frankelie and voluntarilie confessed meant, finallie, recorded by pleading guiltie in maner & forme with all circumstance, and yet could he die an innocent for intent?

How could this hellhound die an innocent for intent; the premisses considered.

All this falling vpon no simple man, but vpon one, not now the first time holding vp his hand at barre, & vpon a doctor of law, the verie hood whereof is able to giue a man more iudgement, than to slip without light in all these things: I know not how he maie be excused without strong suspicion of the excuser. And if a prince may not iudge a wicked seruant out of his owne mouth, nor determine an offense by two or three mouthes, it were a notable world for traitors and murtherers, thus to haue all proceedings set lose, as well of our common lawes, which condemne vpon all euidences, as of the ciuill lawes, which giue capitall sentence vpon confession onelie: yea, Moses wisedome is ouerreached, and Christes equitie in his euangelicall parable against the lewd seruant not vsing his talent is eluded. All this is also ratified by voluntarie letters of his to hir maiestie apart, and to hir honorable councell. And if anie Italianat papist neuertheless will néeds beleeue this repugnancie of his last speaches, let him yet take this one note of him, whereby to consider how credible a man he creditеth.

Either Parrie meant this monstrous murther according to his vowes in heauen, and sworne promises in earth, and so died a desperat traitor, protesting the contrarie in his last words vpon his soule and damnation: or else was he periured, to the foule abuse of pope & all poperie, most execrablie prophaning Gods name by promising, swearing, vowing, &c: that which he meant not. Necessarilie therefore must he perish vpon periured treason, or wreck vpon desperat deieration. Nothing auoideth this dilemma, but a popish bull of dispensation, which if he had, I know not how princes may not as safelie suffer woolues and beares come to their presence, as such papists. And verie like it is that Parrie had a speciall bull, either else was it comprehended in his indulgence, that he might take othes contrarie to his catholike conscience, as he did the oth of supremasie in the beginning of the last parlement. Which if his conjuratours had not béene prinie with what intention he did sweare, he neuer durst haue taken it, least they should haue now bewraied him as a man sworne against the pope, therefore not to be trusted. But the truth is, this papist Parrie was both a traitor, and a manifold periured traitor, whome (with all other of the like stampe) we leaue to the finall iudgement of God at the last and dreadfull dome: registring (in the meane time) a proper epigram, and of no lesse fit than true deuise, in memorie of the said capitall traitor, requiting that prophetical posie concerning Darnell Gatheren and frier Forrest, of whome you shall read in the thirtéenth yeare of king Henrie the eight; this of Parrie being as followeth:

A dilemma of reason of aduantage, concluding that Parrie died a periured traitor.

William Parrie
Was ap Harrie
By his name:
From the alehouse
To the gallows
Grew his fame.

Gotten westward
On a bastard
As is thought:
Wherefore one waie
Kin to Conwaie
Hath he sought.

Like a beast
With incest
He begon:
Mother maried
Daughter caried
Him a sonne.

Much he borrowed
Which he sorrowed
To repaie:
Hare his good
Bought with blood
As they saie.

Yet for paiment
Had arrainment
Of his detter:
Shee that gaue him
Life to saue him
Hangd a better.

Parrie his pardon
Thought no guardon
For his woorth:
Wherefore sought
That he mought
Trauell foorth.

Which obtained
He remained
As before:
And with rashnes
Shewd his bashnes
More and more.

He did enter
To aduenter
Euen hir death:
By whose fauor
He did euer
Draw his breath.

It was pittie
One so wittie
Malcontent:
Leauing reason
Should to treason
So be bent.

But his gifts
Were but shifts
Void of grace:
And his brauerie
Was but knauerie
Vile and base.

Wales did beare him
France did sweare him
To the pope:
Venice wrought him
London brought him
To the rope.

Wherewith strangled
And then mangled
Being dead:
Poles supporters
Of his quarters
And his head.

In this yeare one thousand fiue hundred eightie & foure, sir Walter Mildmaie knight, one of hir maiesties most honorable priuie councell, founded a college in the vniuersitie of Cambridge, and named it Emmanuell college. ¶ The same was sometimes a house of friers, and came to king Henrie the eight by dissolution, as appeareth by the sequeale, being an extract out of a substantiall and large booke written in parchment (which I haue seene, and whense I had this transcript) conteining the entrie or inrolment of certeine letters patents, writings and euidences touching the said college. First the premisses came vnto king Henrie the eight by act of parlement touching the dissolution of monasteries; & afterwards the said king by letters patents vnder the great seale of England, dated Decimo sexto Aprilis, anno tricesimo quinto regni sui, did grant the same to Edward Elrington and Humfrete Metcalfe, and to the heires of the said Edward for euer. After that, the said Edward Elrington and Humfrete Metcalfe by their deed pold dated Quarto Martij, anno tricesimo sexto Henrici octaui, did grant the premisses to William Sherwood gentleman & his heires for euer. Then George Sherewood gentleman, sonne and heire to William Sherwood by deed pold dated Vicesimo nono Septembris, anno vicesimo tertio Elisabethæ reginæ, did grant the premisses to Robert Tailor esquier and to his heires for euer.

Abr. Fl. ex lib. manuscripto.

Situs nuper domus fratrum prædicatorũ vocata le Blackefriers in villa Cantabrigiæ.

And afterwards, the said Robert Tailor by deed pold dated Duodecimo Iunij, anno vicesimo quinto Elisabethæ reginæ, did grant the premisses to Richard Culuerwell citizen & mercer of London and Laurence Chaderton of Cambridge bachelor of diuinitie, and their heires for euer. And after that, the premisses were conueied to sir Walter Mildmaie, who hath conuerted the same into a seedplot of learning, for the benefit of the church & common-wealth: so that the students maie verie trulie saie this, and more to, of so good, so honorable, and vertuous a founder:

——fluuijs dum creuerit æquor,
Dúmque vagas stellas pascet vterque polus,
Dum steriles altis lustrabunt montibus vmbræ,
Virtutis stabit fama decúsque tuæ.

1585 The parlement dissolued.

On the nine and twentith daie of March, which was in the yeare of Christ 1585, the parlement was dissolued: at the breaking vp whereof, the quéenes maiestie in the parlement house made an oration, to such effect as followeth.

The queenes maiesties oration in the parlement house.

The quéenes maiesties oration in the parlement house.

My Lords and ye of the lower house, my silence must not iniurie the owner so much, as to suppose a substitute sufficient to render you the thanks that my heart yéeldeth you: not so much for the safe keeping of my life (for which your care appeareth so manifest) as for the neglecting your priuat future perill, not regarding other waie than my présent state. No prince herein (I confesse) can be surer tied, or faster bound than I am, with the linke of your good will; and can for that, but yeeld a hart & head to séeke for euer all your best. Yet one matter toucheth me so neere, as I may not ouerskip: religion, the ground on which all other matters ought to take rote, and being corrupted may marre all the tree: and that there be some faultfinders with the order of the cleargie, which so may make a slander to my selfe & the church, whose ouer ruler God hath made me; whose negligence can not be excused, if anie schismes or errors hereticall were suffered.

O the care that hir maiestie hath of true religion, the lord of life lengthen hir graces life.

Thus much I must saie, that some faults and negligences may grow and bee (as in all other great charges it happeneth) and what vocation without? All which if you my lords of the cleargie do not amend, I meane to depose you: looke you therfore well to your charges; this may be amended without heedlesse or open exclamation. I am supposed to haue manie studies, but most philosophicall: I must yeeld this to be true, that I suppose few (that be no professors) haue read more. And I néed not tell you, that I am so simple that I vnderstand not, nor so forgetfull that I remember not; & yet amongst my manie volumes, I hope Gods booke hath not beene my sildomest lectures, in which we find that, which by reson (for my part) we ought to beleeue, that séeing so great wickednes & griefs in the world, in which we liue but as waie-faring pilgrims, we must suppose that God would neuer haue made vs but for a better place, and of more comfort than we find here. I know no creature that breatheth, whose life standeth hourelie in more perill for it than mine owne, who entered not into my state without sight of manifold dangers of life and crowne, as one that had the mightiest and greatest to wrestle with. Then it followeth, that I regarded it so much as I left my selfe behind my care.

Hir maiesties reuerend estimation of Gods word and sacred scriptures.

And so you sée that you wrong me too much (if anie such there be) as doubt my coldnesse in that behalfe. For if I were not persuaded that mine were the true waie of Gods will, God forbid I should liue to prescribe it to you. Take héed, lest Ecclesiastes saie not too true; They that feare the horie frost, the snow shall fall vpon them. I sée manie ouer bold with God almightie, making too manie subtill scannings of his blessed will, as lawiers do with humane testaments: the presumption is so great as I may not suffer it (yet mind I not hereby to animate * Romanists, which what aduersaries they be to mine estate is sufficientlie knowne) nor tolerate new fanglednesse. I meane to guide them both by Gods true rule: in both parts be perils, and of the latter I must pronounce them dangerous to a kinglie rule, to haue euerie man according to his owne censure to make a dome of the validitie and priuitie of his princes gouernement, with a common beile and couer of Gods word, whose followers must not be iudged but by priuat mens exposition, God defend you from such a ruler that so euill will guide you. Now I conclude, that your loue and care neither is nor shall be bestowed vpon a careless prince, but such as for your good will passeth as litle for this world as who careth least; with thanks for your free subsidie: a manifest shew of the aboundance of your good wils, the which I assure you, but to be imploid to your weale, I could be better pleased to returne than receiue.

O most princelie resolution and persuasion!

* The God of vengeance and iustice rote them out, that the Lords annointed maie be free from all feare of hurt.

what subiect would thinke life and lands too dere to lose (if néed were) for so gratious a quéene.

This is the summe of hir maiesties oration vttered in a solemne assemblie, and well worthie the recording, as testifieng no lesse in sinceritie and truth, than euerie good subiect may seale vnto himselfe, and laie his hand vpon his hart to be faithfullie meant for his securitie. Wherein is speciallie to be noted the religious care which hir maiestie hath vowed to haue of the propagation and supportation of the gospell; according to that which is reported of hir by waie of prophesie in the vision of quéene Anne in a dreame; where (after a repetition of miseries foretold to befall in quéene Maries daies) these words are inferred:

Ecce malis tantis tua parua medebitur infans,
Iámque tenella geret post sceptrum patris adulta,
Solamen magnum patriæ, solamen amicis:
Qua regnante diu, cœlis ea fata feruntur,
Britanni populus fœlix, erit Anglia fœlix,
Et longa tali sub principe pace fruetur.

C. O. in sua Elisabetha.

Papa

Papa relegatus fallax ad littora Tybris
Ausony, propria ditione iubebitur esse
Contentus, vanúmque domi protrudere merces.
Hic iuris papalis erit tum terminus Anglis.
Vestra dabit proles papæ immedicabile vulnus,
Non post idolis genua incuruare licebit
Amplius, aut statuis bene olentia thura cremare.
Hinc papæ incassum furibunda monebitur ira,
Dentibus infrendens & quæret tollere prolem
Παρ᾽ Ἰεχοvον insidijs structis, quæ numine cæli
Protectore suo semotis hostibus æuum
Pace colet, seros ornabit honoribus annos,
Pace suos placida ciues: sua regna beabit.
Non tamen in claram bacchari desinet atrox
Reginam, pus ore vomens & virus vt aspis,
Promittet cœlum verbis (quis crederet illud?)
Principis obsequium quicunque reliquerit vltrò,
Cum pacto hoc miseros reuera in Tartara mittat, &c.

Abr. Flem. The death of pope Gregorie the thirteenth: read of this popes practises against England in Parries treasons, pag. 1382, &c.

¶ In this yeare of Grace, on the eleuenth of Aprill died pope Gregorie the thirteenth, termed the last & lewd pope of that name; one that wanted not the waies to aplie his vsurped supremasie to the common abuse of all christendome, according to the receiued custome of his predecessors; who rather than they would abide ante be it neuer so small an eclipse of their worldlie pompe, all the world shalbe set togither by the ears, in so much that heauen & earth shall ring with the noise of the tumults. This is he that (among other acts by him vndertaken & done) after the old Romane or Julian kalendar was by popish arguments accused & charged with manifold imperfections, whereinto by continuance of time it fortuned to fall, thrust forth into the world a reformed kalendar, exhibited to his holinesse by one Antonie Lillie doctor of arts & physicke, wherein (by a certeine new cycle of epacts by one Aloisius the said Antonies brother germane deuised, and to an vndoubted rule of the golden number directed, as also to whatsoeuer magnitude or greatnesse of the yeare of the sunne applied) all things that in the old kalendar were faultie, may by constant reason and for euer to last be so restored; that the kalendar once reformed according to this plot, need neuer hereafter either to be altered or amended. Howbeit, in commending the perfect reformation of this new kalendar, whereby not onelie all things erronious are abolished; but also such foresight is had of the time to come, that the calculation of this kalendar shall neuer hereafter seeme subiect vnto change: an occasion of some demands may hereof arise, touching christian libertie; namlie; Whether the church be tied to a certeine time according to the reformed calculation astronomicall, in the celebration of yearelie festiuals: Whether it be lawfull for the bishop of Rome to reforme the time and the kalendar: Whether the church of Christ be bound by necessitie of religion to receiue that kalendar, at the first originall beginning proceeding from the pope, though the same afterwards were set forth vnder another title: Whether it profiteth or be requisit that for the keeping of peace and concord, in contracts, bargainings, and intercourse of traffike and merchandize; the one partie should submit himselfe to that kalendar, wherevnto the pope hath yoked his popelings; and persuaded manie more to doo the same, &c. Although these and the like interrogatories may be made against the papists; yet bicause to giue an inkance is not to answer a doubt, it is to be wished that this kalendar were throughlie sifted by some sound and sober mathematician, and the three heads, whereof this new reformed kalendar of Gregorie doth consist, disproued: which three heads, repeated by Gregorie in his bull before the said kalendar, are these.

The pope is verie busie by his owne presumptuous & proud enterprises to impeach christian libertie.

This hath bene done in such sort by a mathematician stranger, that he is bold to chalenge anie holding the contrarie opinion to a reproofe of his examination.

1 The restoring and coupling of the equinoctiall in the spring to the one and twentith date of March, with such a caueat giuen, that from thense, as from the proper and fixed seat, it may not possiblie hereafter at anie time remoue. 2 The correction of the golden number by the cycle of epacts, in such sort, that the numbers of epacts may shew not onelie the date of the new mone in euerie moneth of all years; but also, and that principallie the terme of Easter: that is, the certeine & iust date of the verie next full mone following after the equinoctiall of the spring; and that euerie yeare without error or deceipt. 3 The verie iust and certeine sundaie of Easter, that ought to be celebrated and kept on the verie next sundaie after the full mone, which doth follow first after the iust equinoctiall of the spring. These three heads being so anatomized and opened by mathematicians as were meet, it should be found in the end, that this new kalendar, in all and euerie part thereof, euen wherin it is best reformed, or so thought to be, is manie waies faultie, & erronious in the verie grounds: in which qualitie leauing it, as not to be put to the touch in a publike chronicle, but otherwise to be had in triall, Gregorie the preferrer thereof is now to be handled by description, which is no fiction or imagined fable, but dertued out of an oration or funerall sermon in Rome, at the burtall of his holinesse, conteining his maners, like, deeds, and last words at his death: togither with the lamentations of the cardinals and whole Romish clergie: otherwise to be intituled as followeth:

Vide M. Michaelem Mæstlinum Gœppingensem in Tubingensi academia mathematicum, &c.

A sermon full of papisticall adulation, and matter sufficient to procure the wise and vertuous minded to contemne such grosse and palpable blindnesse, and all persons to laugh at the Romanists absurd and erronious follies.

A good and plausible beginning, if the proceeding were agreeable.

THere is nothing so certeine as death, either vncerteine as the moment thereof. Wherefore the holie doctor saith: Keepe thy selfe continuallie in that estate wherin thou desirest to die. And the prouerbe goeth, that manie a one thinketh himselfe in perfect helth, when he beareth death in his bosome. To saie the truth, we doo continuallie carrie death about with vs, it is in vs immediatlie after we take life and mouing in our mothers wombe; and whersoeuer we walke, it is still at our heeles: if we take horsse, it is with vs: if we be on the water, it is the guide of our ship: so as we can neuer saie death to be absent from vs: for our selues are verie death, and no part of our bodie immortall. Wherefore those that suppose themselues to liue in this world, are far deceiued in their owne opinions, and the pilgrimage of man in this world is but a shadow of life, which vnto vs seemeth life, but in deed is none. The better therefore to describe the said shadow, I will make an abstraction of the dead time of mans age, from the full and greatest age that a creature can liue in the world.

Popish diuines doo rather imitate anie duns than the prophet Dauid, who setteth downe the age of man to consist of 70. yeares.

First, the longest age that man can liue is but sixtie years. From sixtie years we must deduct the nights, for man when he sleepeth liueth not. Beside that, sleepe is termed the image of death: so that deducting the nights, which comprehend one halfe of the time, man liueth but three score yeares in the world. Whiles man liueth these sixtie yeares, he liueth but the one halfe of them, for if he haue one date of mirth and quiet, he hath another of sorrow and care, bicause griefe doth still secretlie creepe into mirth. And anie person troubled with cares and vered in mind, doth rather die than liue. We must therfore take from the sixtie yeares aforesaid the one halfe, and so there remaine but thirtie. Now, let vs see whether in the space of six score yeares a man may not passe awaie ten at the least in sickenesse, mischances, or other infirmities? I may tell you there is no man that liueth six score yeares in the world, but at seuerall times and during the said age he hath aboue ten yeares infirmitie: and therefore we must take from the thirtie yeares which are the remainder of mans life yet ten yeares, & then there are but twentie left, which are now the twentie yeares of his life. We must take them at his infancie & in his oldest age: that is, ten yeares from his verie childhood, & the other ten from his extreame old age. But sith aswell in infancie as in extremitie of age there is no life, but rather a liuing death; I conclude, that man hath not one onelie houre of life in this world, also that whosoeuer seeketh life in this world doth much deceiue himselfe. In heauen therefore it is that we must assure our selues to liue, and seeke for life; but not vpon earth where death doth continuallie haunt vs. For we ought to die to the world, to the end to be borne in Jesus Christ; according to the souereigne sentence and decree, O ye inhabitants of Rome we see your great bishop and mine is dead: behold our crowne is fallen: our lodestar vanished awaie, and our lighter extinguished.

And for mine owne part, O miserable man, who am depriued of him, of two things I wish for one, that is, either neuer to remember the good that we haue lost; either else calling the same to mind, to find some one that were able to giue me comfort correspondent to the greatnesse of the heauinesse wherinto I am fallen. And indeed my selfe do now come into the pulpit vpon two seuerall occasions meere contrarie ech to other, to wit, to reherse the gretnes of the good that is taken from vs, & to comfort those that sustaine the losse: naie rather, to do two things which seeme to repugne ech other. For if it be true that nothing doth more aggrauate the griefe of the losse, than the remembrance of the value of the thing lost; then doth nothing seeme more contrarie to the comfort of the liuing, than the praises of him that is dead, as in this case, wherein so far do the merits of the deceased exceed, that the arrowes which pearse his hart that is depriued of him are the more sharpe and grieuous. Howbeit some man would answer, that contrariwise by the commendations of him that is departed, we do declare that he is not dead, but liueth, and thus we may by litle and litle asswage the sorrow of our losse and damage in whatsoeuer maner.

But as it were hard for a painter in the face of a sorrowfull person to represent a smiling countenance, so doth it seeme to me a difficult enterprise to vndertake to comfort a man by rehearsing the vertues of him that is taken awaie from vs: and that the more, if we should enter into consideration of him that is spoken of: of your selues that are the hearers: and of me that do make the discourse: for in each of these three, the same circumstances that seeme to make mine enterprise easie, are those that indeed do yeeld it most difficult and troublesome. As if a man should in respect of him saie, that if the multitude of his great vertues do seeme to abridge my labour, in seeking some argument whereupon to ground his praises: so contrariwise the aboundance of so great vertues do hold me so short, that I can not certeinelie resolue vpon the choice of one onlie whereupon worthilie to commend him. For you, if a man should saie, in that you all knew him and vsed him to your great profit, it should seeme sufficient for me onelie to decipher matters: so contrariwise your own perfect knowlege, togither with your dealings with him, would sufficientlie open vnto you all my defaults in displaieng of him. And for mine owne part, if infinit courtesies and great fauors, therewith he hath alwaies gratified me, do scarse without seeking anie cuning to breed in me as much affection as is requisit: so by contrarie reason, the great fauours and benefits, wherewith he hath alwaies gratified me, do not leaue me anie cunning meanes to hinder me from hauing greater affection than is heere to be required of me. And this was the principall reason that moued me somewhat to refuse this so honorable a commission, and vnto me in manie other respects most welcome, and to request you to apoint and commit to some other the charge to discourse herevpon, and to leaue vnto me teares and lamentations onelie.

But now vnto thee, Oh my good maister and father (for so will I alwaies call thee) do I turne my selfe. Maie it be possible that this my oration, which latelie in thy life thou diddest harken vnto, should now be imploied in praising of thee being dead, either that this my tong, which imploieng me to the seruice of this countrie, thou diddest too greatlie honor, should now be occupied, alas, in lamentations for thy so hurtfull death to all christendome? And what? Hast thou then brought me so toilfullie to Rome, to the end here to celebrate thy funerals? Oh how that commission to read Hieremie might well forshew vnto me (but I perceiued it not) that my lecture thereof should end in lamentations, and now behold that diuination accomplished! See Quomodo sedet sola ciuitas, how the citie sitteth desolat, notwithstanding it be Plena populo, full of people: also how this spouse, the church of Rome, who by great brightnes seemed to be Domina gentium, ladie of nations, now hauing lost thee, Est facta quasi vidua, is made as it were a widow: and as a widow all dipped in teares and lamentations, willeth me to celebrate the praises of hir deere spouse, which she all wholie togither can not celebrate: wherein although I can not (as in truth I am not able) atteine to the least parcell of thy deserts, which are not well to be expressed, yet at all aduentures I assure my selfe, O happie soule, that as in thy life time thou diddest pardon me a number of other imperfections, so now thou wilt likewise forgiue me this: I know that as thou wert accustomed, thou wilt make better accompt of the good will than of the glose and pompe of words, and as discreet shalt well see, that not onelie I, but also that no orator is able to atteine to the type of thy commendations.

Among the which my lords, and ye my hearers, I do freelie confesse, that I haue greatlie doubted whether I were best to begin, as I take the maner to be, at the greatnesse and eminencie of the familie from whense he is extract: and at the first I was purposed so to do, and that the rather bicause it is not yet scarse two months since that my selfe heard him in this temple, discourse how our sauiour Jesus Christ was content to be borne of a mother though poore, yet noble, and descended of a noble race; also that nobilitie was verie effectuall euen to spirituall life, as it may be said of him that is noble, that whether it be through conformitie or resemblance of mind with his predecessors, either thorough the remembrance of such things as they haue done, either else through the effect of good bringing vp, or for what other reason he is better disposed to do well; that nobilitie serueth him as a spur to goodnesse and a bridle to euill: also that as the pretious stone being set in gold maketh a greater shew than in iron, euen so the same vertuous deeds do giue a more effectuall example, when they proceed from noble personages than from men of base estat, with other things which he spake to the same purpose.

Howbeit I will not speake thereof, in that it might

A further examination of mans age by popish learning.

Happie newes to the true church, when the members of antichrist decrease.

This is no adulation to a dead carrion, what did this fellow (thinke you) to the beast when he was aliue?

A comparison abused to the commendation of lewd pope Gregorie.

Childish reasons and worse diuinitie.

How did this fellow flatter Gregorie aliue, whom he so magnified being dead?

A fit child and scholer for so bad a father and maister.

No spouse but a strumpet spotted with spirituall fornication.

Beastlie and blasphemous diuinitie, fit for so lewd a bishop, and so vnlearned a chapleine.

Noblie borne (no doubt) was this Gregorie, otherwise called Hugh the good fellow.

A similitude of a pretious stone set in gold, and vertues in personages noblie descended.

might be accompted rashnesse in me, euen in Rome to seeke to make his holinesse familie more famous than it is. It may be that some may saie that this familie doth want glorious titles, preeminence, riches, possessions, iurisdictions, pretentions of rights, patronages, ancient petidegrees of their predecessors, commendations of learning, praise of armes, noble and famous aliances either in Italie or without, and to be briefe, all such things collected into one, as being seuerallie taken are sufficient to set a faire shew vpon a whole progenie. Notwithstanding all these things which are terrestriall & common with others, and for the causes aforesaid his holinesse perceiuing (as he perceiued all things) that it is not inough for a horsse to be of a good race, except himselfe be also good, and that they are happie and wise, who as the sea, do not receiue the swetnesse of this vaine glorie of the riuers of their predecessours, but returning their course and swelling ouer the mouths of the riuers themselues, can yeeld to their forerunners the reward of firme and permanent commendation; so of that great nobilitie which he had brought forth of his mothers wombe with him, he did therin onelie yeeld thankes to God, for that his actions with their circumstances, thereby, and in respect thereof, were more notable and exemplarie.

Gregorie perceiued all things: but it would be knowen how.

A long similitude most fondlie and most ridiculouslie applied.

Oh most happie person, who in the middest of so great eminencie of birth, could so well subdue pride, and in himselfe giue example vnto other! Euen like vnto the pearle, which although it lieth in the bottome of the sea, yet keeping it selfe close in the shell, and neuer opening vntill it ascendeth to receiue the dew of heauen, we find therein no smell, no sauour, or drop that tasteth of hir sea; but being pure, cleare and white, it seemeth to be formed euen in heauen. We must not therfore take commendations of this people at the transitorie things of the sea of this world, and although he be therein extract of a most noble birth, yet will I not saie anie more thereof as of that which is none of his.

Marke this principallie, that Gregorie was mortified if the text lie not.

But discoursing and speaking of that which properlie apperteineth to himselfe, I would aske whether his mind commanded not his bodie? Also whether it were possible to find a bodie more withered, afflicted, macerated, dried vp, or pale through the effect of austere and hard penance? Other mens bodies (O christian hearers) are for the most part wished to be of this or that forme, bicause they yeeld such or such inclination to the mind. But in this I will shew you a matter worth the noting; that is, that here the case was altered, for it was the mind that ministred inclination to the bodie: so that being waren altogither spirituall, had not extreame need forced him, he neuer desired meat, drinke, or bodilie rest: and he liued in such sort as it was a miracle (whereof, alas, we haue but too soone seene the issue) how he could liue so manie yeeres, but rather liuing was dead. And for my part I assure you, I neuer, euen in the hart of summer, hilling his holie hands (good God shall I neuer do so more?) found them other than cold, wherein there was no heat, except the same proceeded of some excesse or immoderate labor, or of some motion of a sudden feuer. O most deere bodie! O most holie members! But looke yet once againe vpon them, O ye Romane people, and saie: Are not these the verie hands which so often haue bin ioined togither, and lifted vp to praie and offer sacrifice for vs? Be not these the feet that haue trauelled so far for our sakes? Is not this the head that neuer imagined anie thing but for our benefit? Is not this the heart that burned in loue of vs? O deere members! O members so deere! What? Shall you then go vnder the earth? And what? Must you be buried? Alas my God! who is that thou hast taken awaie from vs? And therefore do ye hide your selues? For my part, none but onlie death shall euer plucke out of my heart the liuelie image of that so well beloued countenance: especiallie in this act, wherein with your eies toward heauen as it were smiling, and with an angelicall countenance I see you depart and remaine dead.

Jesu! what a wonder is this? and well worthie to be placed in Legenda aurea.

The head which sought to ouerthrow y true church, to dissuade subiects from their allegiance to their prince, and to maintaine his owne pompe and glorie.

But it is time for vs (O christian hearers) to proceed to matters of greater importance, which are so manie & withall so intangled one within an other, that I could not find anie more fit meane to part and diuide them; neither do I thinke that we can take anie better course, than the verie course of his holie life: and there to begin. When he was a little child he was verie deuout, and it is well knowne that God, euen in his first youth, wrought in him maruellous signes of singular goodnesse. The like is read of saint Basill, saint Gregorie, saint Dominike, saint Francis, and manie others, as was to be seene in this yong child (saie they that do remember it) namelie, that at his returne from the college, all the delite that that age vsed to take in anie other thing, he toke onelie in framing of little altars, adorning of small chapels, and counterfeiting of holie things. Matters, which although the wisest maie thinke too base for this place, and for the occasion now ministred, yet would I not onelie not disdaine, but also take great and singular pleasure in the same.

For all that is hitherto spoken is verie ridiculous, idle and mere lyes labour.

Note that he would in time proue a strong piller of idolatrie.

And although some do saie, that among such serious affaires such small trifles should haue no place: yet do I delite to shew how commendable, not onelie graue matters, but euen such small things were in him. Concerning the rest, according to the proportion of his age, or rather beyond the reach of that age (as occasions do increase so must my stile arise) his holinesse being past the inferiour schooles, and comming to studie the law, it is not possible to make an end of writing with what modestie and grauitie he there passed the yeares of his studie: he was apparelled in clerks attire, but, which was of greater importance, he obserued clergie maners, much continencie, & (as is supposed) perpetuall virginitie, with modest behauiour, no vanitie, continuall studie: these were his exercises. And to be briefe, although thorough our mishaps, the vniuersitie wherin he studied were not vsuallie either the quietest or the holiest in the world, yet might the writing of Nazianzen concerning the great Basill and the towne of Athens be aplied to him. Like as there is one riuer, which flowing thorough the sea, taketh no bitternesse thereof; also a certeine beast that liueth in the fire and consumeth not: euen so he with great quietnesse passing these troubles, and with soueraigne vertues such vices, did first and most worthilie atteine to the doctorall degree, & afterward was called to Rome, and made cardinall, onelie thorough desert, for his learned studies, and not by fauour, as the most part do now vsuallie practise.

The continencie and virginitie of the popish clergie doth consist in keeping of concubines.

Note how Gregorie is extolled by waie of comparison.

A happie departure, a blessed iournie for all the holie church, but especiallie for this great citie of Rome, which haue receiued so great benefits and so much comfort at his hands. Notwithstanding, whatsoeuer affaires he had in hand, yet did he dailie aplie his studie at a certeine houre, & so continued his studie euen to his death, with so deepe iudgement and good successe, that although his intellectuall habitudes had not beene verie farre surmounted & darkened thorough the maruellous brightnesse of his morall and theologicall vertues: yet in respect of his learning and studie onelie, he deserued great praise, and in truth he was neuer other than most learned and a great fauourer of learned men. Who did euer shew them more pleasure, or receiue them more

A great studet was Gregorie, but in no good facultie.

Better had that liberalitie bene exhibited to theeues than to sacrilegious beasts &c.

courteoustie? Besides the seminaries and colleges, as well at Paule as here, the lectures, the stipends, with such & so manie things done to the behoofe of learning, and besides the bookes which he hath of himselfe written: and now that the bridle of his modestie doth no longer deteine, I hope, as my selfe haue seene them, so comming to light, all the world shall behold them, and in them perceiue as in himselfe whether were more his holie writings or good maners. This loue of learning and holinesse of life he practised so diligentlie in himselfe, that thorough Gods grace, and the inspiration of the holie ghost, he was in respect of his vertues, knowledge, and holie life, elected pope, and his name from Hugh good Companion, was changed and called Gregorie the thirteenth. During his papasie he liued so religiouslie and deuoutlie, that the whole life of a man were little enough to rehearse the same. But herein I repose my selfe vpon that zeale which I perceiue in euerie one to commend him, whereby I maie shortlie see so manie poesies, verses, and rimes, with such histories, so manie orations, and volumes to his honor, that all these things, as well such as I can not touch, as the rest which I mention and speake of, shall brieflie be deciphered and liuelie set forth.

Gregorie a good companion to traitors, but an ill companion to the godlie.

It is vnpossible (if you will beleeue this flattering parasite) to rehearse Gregories workes &c.

For to rehearse all the holie workes of our good shéepheard, or to indeuour to set forth that verie patterne of a bishop which he hath expressed in himselfe, to saie truth, I thinke vnpossible, and much lesse to beleeue that the verie summarie of those things that he hath done maie be drawne into anie annals or chronicle. Neither can I conceiue anie means to atteine thereto, vnlesse some one haue in forme of remembrances béene dailie collecting the course of his déeds and workes. For my part in this short discourse that I haue to prosecute, as one not able to restreine the whole sea, I will go sée if I maie gather the water at the riuers and brooks from whense this sea doth arise, that is, from his vertues, which in him haue wrought so manie holie workes. Notwithstanding I might at once in generall words saie, that all vertues beseeming a bishop, which saint Paule & others do speake of, were to be found in him.

The worlde is dead, and the shéepe want a good shéepheard.

Alas how this holie pastor burning in loue, made himselfe leane for you, O ye poore artificers, ladies, yong infants, and poore beggers! Alas ye all haue lost your father, the shéepheard is dead, & the shéepe remaine a preie to the wolues. How soeuer it is, hereof maie we plainelie sée O Rome, that he bare thée singular good will: and in déed (for I will not conceale thy commendation) it is euident that thou diddest answer his good will with reciprocall amitie, witnesse this thy assemblie: these sobs & these teares do testifie thy acknowledging thereof, besides all other things, alas, too bitter and too swéet togither; euen the night of his departure was to you and to me infortunate. O great, O great pitie, what could be séene more worthie compassion and teares, than the fearefull stirre of the people? It seemed, when the most horrible sound of the bell called Aue Maria, that gaue notice of his death, to the end to praie to God for him, sent furies to all both men and women.

How could the pope néed the praiers of men, sith himselfe can forgiue sinnes?

One ran here, an other there, some two togither, others without order or reason: all wept, all cried, all howled out, saieng: Ah, good God whereto are we brought? What shall become of vs? If the infection doth afflict vs, who shall praie for vs? Ah that we had not deserued it! Oh how God is wroth with vs! With manie other exclamations sufficient to haue rent the marble stones, and clouen the wals in sunder. He was a man of much praier and reading, as euer was anie, and in priuat behauior had not his like. Two things there were that made him wonderfull wise. The one, he would in all affaires beare

Two things made Grego-

counsell. The other, he had still recourse vnto praier. Truelie he was as wise as holie. I confesse that in respect of his example onelie, I learned to vnderstand this place of saint Paule concerning his care of all the churches: Quis infirmatur & ego non infirmor? Quis scandalizatur & ego non vror? Who is weake and I am not sicke? Or who is offended and I burne not? And that which followeth.

rie wise if you will beleeue the reporter.

To be briefe, toward the end of his daies, and being hore haired, he conceiued two excellent imaginations. The one, concerning that great and wonderfull college that is now at building in your Rome, for the teaching (a wonderfull matter) of all languages in the world. The other, the same which he propounded and began to put in execution touching the recouerie of the goods of the catholike apostolike Romish church. The same was it which he did so highlie commend to the clergie, yea to the christian princes, and vnto his successor, to the end that the Romane see might recouer the full brightnesse of hir glorie, and to depriue the enimie of mankind of that innumerable gaine of soules, that through his subtiltie he doth dailie make. These were his last words when he left vs with the water in our eies, and sorrow in our harts, for the losse of a thing of so great value. Neuertheless, sith it is to no purpose to weepe, it resteth that we do two things. The one, that so much as in vs lieth, we indeuour to reteine those notable institutions, and walke in that path which he hath prescribed for vs. The other, that we haue recourse to God with praier, that he will send vs a successor worthie him: and that as Simplician succéeded saint Ambrose, so to this Ambrose an other Simplician in vertue and holinesse maie succéed.

Two imaginations in Gregories head toward his death.

Some traitorous deuise for the persecution of the gospell.

God rot out all of that succession, & giue his truth free passage against poperie.

This is that small matter, Oh blessed soule, which my foolish and vnméete tong is able this day to vtter of thée in middest of these sighs and lamentations. Now shall it cease: howbeit, at time conuenient, both this daie and euer, my heart shall discourse of thée. Oh wretch that I am! O ye Romane people, to whome happeneth still the contrarie of that which happened to the Romane souldior, that was wounded and maimed vpon one of his legs, at a certeine victorie that he obteined. For he said, that at euerie step that he set, and vpon the least paine that he felt of his leg, he called to mind the most honorable blason of his glorie: but I contrariwise, in the least commendations that I may obteine, shall thinke vpon my losses. For when soeuer I shall boast, that I haue béene seruant to such a holinesse, and so great a personage, I must necessarilie withall remember what a good I am depriued of. Let vs therefore praie to our good God, that it may please him of his grace with his holie spirit to inspire the most reuerend cardinals, the electors of the holie apostolike and Romish see, to the end his holinesse successor, succéeding in the holie see, may likewise succéed in those vertues and holinesse, wherewith he was indued and replenished.

Placke good soule that hast lost thy solace and comfort.

¶ This is the parasiticall and flattering* sermon of a popeling, patched togither like a beggers mantle of sundrie rotten rags diuerslie colored: wherein there is as much learning as wit; and as much of both as of truth and goodnesse in this praiser and the praised: of whome (because it is sinne against the holie ghost to speake otherwise than according to the motion of a good and sound conscience) an epitaph imprecatorie (as fit for him as a pudding for a friers mouth) is here placed as a conclusion of this his memoriall, and appliable vnto all and euerie one of that antichristian and diabolicall succession:

Albus an ater (lector) cognoscere si vis
Papa, tibi dicam qua ratione licet;
Tu metamorphôsin lepidam spectabis: olorem

* Faithfullie translated out of the French copie printed at Paris for Peter Jabert dwelling in Harpe Street, with the kings priuilege. 1585

Fac papam, corvus protinus ater erit.
Vt quocunque meat sordes testudo relinquit,
Sic immundiciem linquit vbique suam.
Monstrum tale vorax absorbeat ergo barathrum,
Atque Deo pœnas tempus in omne luat.

When this Gregorie was deceased, shortlie after (least the ouerlong vacancie of the sacred and apostolike sée should preiudice the Romish prelasie and cleargie) the succession came to Sixtus Quintus, who according to the disposition of his predecessors) indeuoring to maintein the title of his supremasie, and to beare rule ouer mens consciences, as though peremptorie authoritie had by priuilege passed vnto the bishops of that sée to controll and giue the checke to all christendome; one iot or minute whereof the beast now residing at Rome not meaning to relinquish, but rather to fortifie and aduance, vndertooke to intermedle with princes of renowme, as proffering to bring them within the compasse of his iurisdiction: insomuch that falling to the extreame point of his antichristian power, he let flie (but as paper-shot) his excommunications, thinking that if anie thing were able to daunt and appall the courages of mightie men, this were the waie. But herein Sixtus Quintus was foiled, for proofe whereof behold an answer to the excommunication latelie denounced and published by the said Sixtus Quintus, pope of Rome so called, against two christian princes vndernamed, and sent to Rome as followeth.

Sixtus quintus pope of Rome next after Gregorie the good fellow or boun companion.

Excommunication a perilous bolt to shoot at princes.

The answer of Henrie king of Nauarre, and Henrie prince of Conde, to the excommunication of Sixtus Quintus, now pope, &c.

HEnrie by the grace of God king of Nauarre, prince of Bearne, chiefe péere and prince of France, opposeth himselfe against the excommunication of Sixtus Quintus, terming himselfe pope of Rome, auouching the same to be false, and apealeth to the court of péeres of France, of whome he hath the reputation to be the first in degrée. And as concerning the crime of heresie, whereof he is falslie accused by the said excommunication, he auoweth and affirmeth, that my lord the pope, sauing his holinesse and reuerence, hath therein most falselie and wickedlie lied: and that the pope himselfe is an heretike, which he offereth to proue publikelie in a generall or common councell lawfullie assembled. Where if he shall refuse to appeare and submit himselfe, as by his owne canons and decrées he is speciallie bound, the said king doth and will hold and repute him a verie antichrist, and in that qualitie of antichrist denounceth perpetuall warre against him: protesting in the meane time, the popes wicked sentence to be vnlawfull and insufficient, and to prosecute against him and his successors (for reparation of honor) reuenge of the iniurie thereby offered to him and all the princes of his blood, as the lewdnesse of the act and the present necessitie do require. For if in times past, the princes and kings his progenitors haue béene able to chastise the insolencie and arrogancie of such companions as the pope is, when they forgat their duties, and exceeded the limits of their vocation and place, confounding and intermixing their spirituall iurisdiction with the temporall: the said king of Nauarre being in state nothing inferior to them, doth hope, that God will giue him the grace to reuenge the wrong and iniurie hereby done to his souereigne, his familie and blood, and to the supreame courts and seats of iustice and parlement in France, vpon the said pope and his successors: and to that end and purpose he implores the aid, succour, and assistance of all true christian kings, princes & common-weales, whome this case doth concerne, together with the allies and confederats of the crowne of France, against the tyrannie and vsurpation of the said pope, and of the associated conspirators against the state of their souereigne, enimies to God, France, and the common peace and quiet of christendome. The like protestation is also made by Henrie of Burbon prince of Conde, vnto whome the excommunication likewise reacheth. ¶ Fired and set vp vpon the Pasquile at Rome to the view of all men.

The popes excommunicatiõs against forren princes are to be esteemed but as paper shot.

The king of Nauarre giueth the pope the lie.

The king of Nauarre denounceth perpetuall warre against the pope.

This their forgetfulnesse is wilfull, as agreeable to their ambitious humor.

The king of Nauarre implores the aid of all christian kings, &c: against the tyrannie and vsurpation of the pope.

¶ Thus farre of two popes, who though they be but prophane priests, & méere forreners to England both by birth and beléefe; yet sith they haue béene ouerbold to busie themselues with the affaires not onelie of other christian princes, but also with the state of our nation, wherinto they haue had too far an insight, by the aid of certeine vnnaturall and degenerat people; manie of them being fugitiues, and carieng about them euen in their bosome a conscience bespotted with sinnes of exceeding horror and heinousnesse: in consideration hereof, as also of other practises tending to an vniuersall desolation of truth and louers of truth, as also to the dissolution of ciuill policie and destruction of our most gratious souereigne ladie quéene Elisabeth, the lords annointed and lieutenant, principall within hir owne dominions: what faithfull subiect can but note them; howbeit, none otherwise than the reports of them haue passed vnder manie eies and through manie hands, printed euen in forren speach, before the same were published in English. At which popes, meaning now to make a stop, we will come againe to matters of our owne.

¶ In this yeare 1585, euen in April, at the pleasant prime, sir Walter Raleigh knight, being incouraged by the reports of his men of the goodnesse of the soile and the fertilitie of the countrie, which they had discouered this yeare last past, and now by hir maiestie called Virginia, with knightlie courage counteruaileable to his double desire of honour, by vndertaking hard aduentures, furnished to his great charges eight sailes of all sortes, and immediatlie set them to the sea, ordeining sir Richard Grænfield his kinsman (a gentleman of verie good estimation both for his parentage and sundrie good vertues, who for loue he bare vnto sir Walter Raleigh, together with a disposition that he had to attempt honorable actions worthie of honour, was willing to hazard himselfe in this voiage) his lieutenant, inioining him either to tarrie himselfe, or to leaue some gentleman of good worth with a competent number of soldiers in the countrie of Virginia, to begin an English colonie there. Who with the ships aforesaid, hauing in his companie sir John Arundell, Thomas Candish, Rafe Lane, Edward Gorges, John Stukle, Edward Stafford, Philip Amadis, Arthur Barlow, Thomas Heriot, and diuerse other gentlemen with a competent number of souldiers, departed from London in April aforesaid. But after they had sailed certeine numbers of leagues at the sea, by force and violence of fowle weather they were separated one from another; so that sir Richard Grænefield being singled from his fleet, all alone arriued in the Iland of Hispaniola in the west Indies, about the middest of June following, where he determined resolutelie to remaine, vntill he had built a bote (for he had lost his owne bote in the tempests aforesaid.)

Abr. Flex chirographo D. G. militis.

Sir walter Raleighs chargeable voiage to the foresaid land latelie discouered, and by the quæenes maiestie named Virginia.

Sir Richard Grænefield lieutenant to sir walter Raleigh for this voiage.

Gentlemen that associated sir Richard Grænefield.

Sir Richard Grænefield singled from his companie by fowle weather arriueth in Hispaniola.

Whereupon immediatlie after his landing, finding a place to his liking, he entrenched himselfe in despite of the Spaniards, who by all possible meanes did there best indeuour by proffering of sundrie skirmishes, shes, to inforce him to retire to his ship: but he nothing appalled with their brags kept his ground. Twelue daies after his arriuall there, after Thomas Candish arriued at the same place, where sir Richard Grænfield was ensconsing of himselfe, to the great reioising both of themselues & their companies. The Spaniards finding it too hard for them (notwithstanding their multitudes) to remoue these few resolute Englishmen by violence, came to a parlée, and in the same concluded an amitie, that the one nation might in safetie traffike with the other. Now when sir Richard Grænefield had taried in that Iland almost a moneth, and had built his bote, remitted himselfe, and laden his ships with horsses, mares, kine, sheep, swine, &c: to transport with him to Virginia (because these sorts of cattell heretofore were not to be found in that countrie) he departed thense; and in his waie he made discouerie of manie Ilands and hauens vpon the continent adioining, and arriued safelie in the new discouered countrie (where he met with the rest of his fleet that attended his comming thither) about the middest of Julie next insuing, not without great danger of shipwracke. For at the verie entrance into the harborough, his ship strake on the ground, and did beat so manie strokes vpon the sands, that if God had not miraculouslie deliuered him, there had bene no waie to auoid present death. In this danger his ship was so bruised, that the saltwater came so aboundantlie into hir, that the most part of his corne, salt, meale, rice, bisket, & other prouisions that he should haue left with them that remained behind him in the countrie was spoiled.

The valiantnesse of sir Richard Grænefield against the Spaniards.

A parlée tending to the concluding of an amitie betweene the English and Spanish.

What kind of cattell for vittelling sir Richard Grænefield transported to Virginia.

Sir Richard Grænefield meeteth with the rest of his fleet and is in danger of shipwracke.

Sir Richard Grænefield establisheth an English colonie in Virginia by commission.

After he had remained there certeine daies, according to his commission from sir Walter Raleigh, he began to establish a colonie, appointing maister Rafe Lane (a gentleman of good account) generall of those English which were to remaine there, being in all to the number of an hundred and seauen persons, amongst whom diuerse gentlemen remained; namelie, Philip Amadis, Edward Stafford, Peruin, Kendall, Prideaux, Acton, Heriot, and others. When he had taken sufficient order for the establishing of maister Lane and his companie aforesaid, leauing with them as much of all prouisions as his plentie would giue him leaue, he weighed anchor for England. But in his returne, not hauing sailed manie leagues from the coast of Virginia, he descried a tall ship of foure hundred tuns or thereabouts, making the same course that he did, vnto whom he gaue chase, and in few houres by goodnesse of saile ouertooke, and by violence wan, richlie laden with sugar, hides, spices, and some quantitie of gold, siluer, and pearle: she was the viceadmerall of the fleet of sancto Domingo that were for Spaine. After this good fortune, hauing a merie gale, not manie daies after he arriued at Plimmouth in October next insuing; where sir Walter Raleigh meeting with him, did presentlie resolue vpon another voiage, to supplie Rafe Lane, and his companie that were left with him in Virginia, the next spring following: which accordinglie was performed with all expedition.]

Sir Richard Grænefield descrieth a Spanish ship, chaseth and surpriseth hir.

An other voiage resolued vpon by sir Walter Raleigh for the supplie of those that were left in Virginia.

In Aprill about the fourteenth date, by commandement of hir maiesties most honorable priuie councell, the citizens of London appointed out of the companies of the same citie to the number of foure thousand men, with armour, ensignes, drums, fifes, and other furniture for the warres, the greater part whereof (or almost all of them) were shot, the other were pikes and halberds in faire corslets: all those to be trained vp vnder expert capteins, with sergeants of the bands, wiflers, and other necessarie officers, mustered and skirmished dailie at the Miles end, and in saint Georges field, and on the eightéenth daie of Maie (hauing ouernight set forward out of saint Georges field) mustered in the parke at Grænwich, and skirmished before the quænes maiestie, who gaue to them great thankes for their actiuenesse and paines: sith hir maiestie might perceiue the appliablenesse of those hir people, euen in pastime not void of perill, to delight hir eies and reioise hir hart; estéeming nothing too déere to part withall, so it might anie waies concerne dutie to hir highnesse. In discharge whereof as she hath no forwarder subiects in hir land, so to discouer, inquire, and persecute the disloiall none readier, euen to the hazzard of their liues, for the safetie of hir life, which is the life of the whole land, and the prop of true religion: in respect whereof we saie and praie with the well wishing subiect, that vpon seeing & hearing of hir highnesse, fell into such an admiration of hir excellencie, that he left these verses among manie after his godlie death:

Inclyte da longum dici, Deus, Elisabetha Est,
Elisabetha tua Est, relligióque tua Est:
Da Deus haud vnquam dici, Fuit Elisabetha,
Elisabetha Fuit, relligióque Fuit.

The Londoners' commended.

¶ On the nineteenth of Maie being Ascension eeue, Edward Wotton esquier, descended of a worthie parentage, was ambassador into Scotland, to establish a league of amitie betweene the two nations of England and Scotland: whome I will now leaue in that countrie executing his commission, and turne my pen to some persons of that surname, who for their singularitie of wit & lerning, for their honour and gouernement in and of the realme about the prince, and elsewhere at home and abroad, deserue such commendations, that they merit Niueo signari lapillo. In treating of whome I will neither make mention of the antiquitie of that worshipfull familie from the first originall, nor yet treat of Richard Wotton, liuing in the time of Edward the first, the father of John Wotton coroner of Dunstable an officer of great account in those daies and father to an other John Wotton, &c: nor of Richard Wotton or Wocton, an officer of the exchéker in the time of Edward the second, nor of sir Nicholas Wotton knight, liuing about the daies of Richard the second, nor of anie other Wottons whereof this Edward Wotton is descended: but onelie of such Wottons his ancestors, who of late time liued within the compasse of my memorie, and were the sonnes of sir Robert Wotton of Boctor Walherbe in Kent knight, deseruing not to be forgotten, in that he was father to two such worthie sonnes, as I do not remember that euer England nourished at one time for like honour, disposition of mind, fauour and seruice to their countrie.

Fr. Thin.

A league of amitie betweene England and Scotland established: Edward Wotton esquier ambassador.

The Wottons an ancient familie, and of special name in diuerse kings reignes.

Sir Robert Wotton of Boctor Walherbe in Kent, a man of singular note.

The sonnes of this sir Robert Wotton, whereof we intend to intreat, were sir Edward Wotton knight the eldest, and Nicholas Wotton doctor of both lawes the yonger sonne. Whereof the first being a man of great estimation in the countrie for his orderlie and wise managing of the priuat affaires of his countrie of Kent, was for his fidelitie and good carriage in small things made lord and ruler of great things. For king Henrie the eight, vnderstanding the grauitie of the man, his rare wit, deepe iudgement, great experience, and other parts required in a sound councellor, did admit this sir Edward into his owne bosome, and made him of his priuie councell: whose modest mind being so farre estranged from desire of honour, as that he would not accept it by great inforcement (a vertue verie rare, and such as declareth a noble mind iudiciallie grounded vpon the truth of diuine philosophie) refused the honorable place of the chancellorship of England, accounting that the vertue of the mind made a man honorable, and not the honorable place. For Sir Edward Wotton and Nicholas Wotton doctor of both lawes, the rare sonnes of a rare father.

Sir Edward Wotton one of king Henrie the eights priuie councell.

Sir Edward Wotton refuseth to be lord chancellor of England.

Chrysost. de reparatione lapsi.

is saith saint Chrysostome; Honor verus virtus animi est, hic honor nec à Cæsaribus præstatur, neque adulatione conquiritur, neque pecunia præparatur; nihil fucati in se habet, nihil simulati, nihil occulti huius honoris successor est, nullus est accusator: nullus ingratus.

Barnard in ser. quadrages.

Wherefore not being ambitious of honour (after which the best do often hunt, although such greedie desire of honour and ambition be, as saith Barnard, Futile malum, secretum virus, pestis occulta, doli artifex, mater hypocrisis, liuoris parens, vitiorum origo, tinea sanctitatis, excæcatrix cordium, ex remedijs morbos creans, ex medicina languorem generans) did further increase his honour and aduance him to greater credit; as appeareth by this, that king Henrie the eight, whom this man had long and faithfullie serued in his life time, made him one of his executors, and the disposer of his testament at the time of his death; with whom also in the same authoritie he ioined his brother doctor Nicholas Wotton, a man of no lesse merit than the other, and rightlie deseruing to be here ioined in remembrance with his brother after their deaths, since almost equall honor, like loue, the same authoritie in the common-weale, one blood, and one Christ did ioine them togither in perfect amitie during their liues: of which Nicholas Wotton I will not speake anie more (except that as his brother refused the chancellorship, so he in the beginning of the reigne of this queene refused the bishoprike of Canturburie) but that which the worthie gentleman Thomas Wotton of Boton Malherbe esquire now liuing (sonne to the said sir Edward, and nephew to the said Nicholas, this Thomas being a great and fast fauorer of his countrie, not vnthankefull vnto him therefore) hath set downe in a statelie and rich tome of curious workemanship, formed after the order of a pyramis, and placed in the church of Canturburie, on which is ingraued in a faire stone of marble this epitaph following: wherin his birth, his parents, his honors at home, his ambassages abroad, and other things necessarie the knowledge are faithfullie set downe.

Nicholas Wotton doctor of both lawes refuseth to be archbishop of Canturburie: a rare note in him (as also in his brother) of contentation with their estates.

Thomas Wotton of Boton Malherbe (sonne to the said sir Edward) a great regarder of his progenitors estimatiõ.

Epitaphium celebre Nicholai Wottoni primi post monasteriorũ dissolutionem Cantuar. decani.

Nicholaus Wottonus Roberti Wottoni equitis aurati ex Anna Belknappa filius, vtriusq; iuris doctor, ecclesiæ huius primus itémq; metropolitanæ ecclesiæ diui Petri Eboracensis decanus, Henrico 8. Eduardo 6. Mariæ & Elisabethæ Angliæ regibus à secretis concilijs; ad Carolum 5. Cæsarem bis, ad Philippum Hispaniarum regem semel, ad Franciscum primũ Francorum regem semel, ad Henricum secundum eius filium ter, ad Mariæ Hungariæ reginam Belgarum præsidem semel, ad Gulielmum Cleuensem ducem bis, legatione functus. Renouatæ pacis inter Anglos, Francos, & Scotos, inter Guinas & Arderam anno 1540. similiter, & ad castrum Cameracense anno 1559. Deniq; Edinburgi Scotiæ anno 1560. oratorum vnus, hic tandem ferè septuagenarius requiescit. Hæc ille ante mortem & ante morbum quasi fatalem diem præsentiens, & cygneam cantionem propheticè canens, sua manu in museo scripta reliquit.

Annus ætatis eius è vita excessisset.

Qui apud tales principes (diuina prouidentia gubernante) laudabiliter, & in tot ac tantis causis (quarum magnitudo grauissima, vtilitas publica fuit) feliciter bonam vitæ suæ partem consumpsit; eum virum sapientem & experientissimum ipsa inuidia iudicare debet. Quàm semper ab omni contentione honorum fuerit alienus, illud declarat, quòd ad hanc ecclesiasticam dignitatem non ambitione vlla sua inflammatus, nec amicorum opera vsus, aspirauit: sed eam vtramq; Henricus octauus (hominis merito & virtute prouocatus) vltro detulit. Cùmq; idem rex illustrissimus morbum læthalem ingrauescere persentiret, & Eduardi principis sanè excellentissimi, adhuc tandem pueri & reipublicæ administrandæ imparis, imbecillam ætatem senili prudentia secretioris concilij sui, regendam existimaret, ille instituit, hunc Nicholaum (absentem tunc in Francia legatum) & vnum esse voluit. Eduardi regi iam medio regni curriculo propè confecto, vnus è primarijs secretarijs fuit, quem locum tenere potuisset, nisi & suis & assiduis amicorum precibus abdicandi veniam impetrasset. Corpus illi erat gracile quidem & parum sed erectum, habitudo sana, vultus liberalis, victus exquisitus, quem semel tantùm in die capere consueuerat: valitudo adeo firma vt rarò morbum aliquem sentiret: animus verò totus libris ac literis dicatus: artium medicinæ, iurisprudentiæ, & theologiæ studio intentus: linguarum Romanæ, Italicæ, Gallicæ, & Germanicæ inferioris cognitione pulchrè exornatus. Ita vir iste genere clarus, legationibus clarior, domi ac foris clarissimus, honore florens, labore fractus, ætate confectus; postquam decanus huius ecclesiæ annis 25. dies 293. præfuisset, Londini Januarij 26. anno nostræ salutis 1566. piè & suauiter in Domino obdormiuit. Thoma Woottono nepote hærede relicto, qui ei hoc monumentum non honoris ergò quo abundauit viuus & floruit mortuus, sed amoris causa quem memoria colet vt debet sempiterna, consecrauit.

Rerum quarumdam in isto Wottono memorabilium luculenta descriptio.

Videlicet ecclesiæ Christi Cantuarien sis.

Monumentum in demortui memoriam amoris ergò extructũ

In which epitaph it appeareth what he was, & how greatlie learned and reuerenced for the same. Wherfore néeding not to speake anie more of him, sith I shall not be able with due maiestie of stile to expresse his worthinesse; I will yet, leauing what otherwise his merit might challenge to be spoken, note one strange and rare thing, which to my remembrance neuer happened to anie one man before the same; being this, that he had not onelie bëene councellor to foure kings and quëenes of England following in succession of time, but also that he had bëen thirtëene seuerall times ambassador and orator to diuerse princes for the affaires of the publike wealth, and the princes honor. Thus leauing this worthie doctor with his nephue Thomas Wotton, father to Edward Wotton sent ambassador to Scotland, which occasioned me to treat thus much of the Wottons, I conclude, that it is a singular blessing of God, not commonlie giuen to euerie race, to be beautified with such great and succeeding honor in the descents of the familie. Whereof this Edward Wotton now liuing, hath in the life of his father giuen great proofe of continuance to descend to their posteritie, in that he in these his yoong yeares, hath bëene (after his trauell ouer the most part of Europe) twise imploied in ambassages for the seruice of his countrie; first to the king of Portingall, & now to the king of Scots: with whome I will at this time set end to this discourse of the Wottons.]

This is touched in the former epitaph among other his preferments.

Commendation of Edward Wotton, in respect of his great trauelling ouer the most part of Europe and his imploiments in ambassages &c.

On the one and twentith daie of June, Henrie Persie earle of Northumberland, prisoner in the Tower of London vpon vehement suspicion of high treason, was there found dead, and also of his owne diuelish intent, and of his malice before pretended to haue murthered himselfe, as more manifestlie and at large may appeare, by an inquisition made by a substantiall iurie, taken before the coroner as followeth verbatim with the record.

Earle of Northumberland found to haue murthered himselfe in the tower of London.

¶ A copie of the said inquisition.

An inquisition taken at the citie of London, that is within the tower of London, in the parish of Alhallowes Barking, in the ward of the Tower of London, on Mondaie being the one and twentith daie of June, in the yeare of the reigne of our souereigne ladie Elisabeth by the grace of God quëene of England, France, and Ireland, defendor of the faith &c, the seuen and twentith: before William Squier gentleman coroner to our said souereigne ladie the quëene within the citie of London and the liberties of the same, vpon the view of the bodie of Henrie Persie knight, late earle of Northumberland, late prisoner there within the Tower of London aforesaid, for suspicion of high treason by him supposed to be done, there lieng dead, and slaine: by the othes of Nicholas Wheler, Simon Horsepole, Thomas Gardener, William Leueson, Owen Morgan, Henrie Lodge, William Abraham, William Horne, Thomas Russell, John Porter, Robert Dowe,

A quest of inquirie vpon his violent & voluntarie death.

Dowe, Anthonie Hall, William Curtis, Thomas Wood, Matthew Dolman, Thomas Martin, Richard Sleford, John Trot, Philip Smith, Thomas Tailor, and Henrie Bowdler, of good and lawfull men of the same ward, and of three other wards to the same ward next adioining, as the maner and custome is in the citie aforesaid, to inquire how, in what maner, and when the said Henrie Persie late earle of Northumberland came to his death.

The verdict of the iurie deliuered vpon their oths.

Which iurie do saie vpon their oths, that on the one & twentith daie of this instant moneth of June, in the yeare of the reigne of our souereigne ladie Elisabeth by the grace of God quéene of England, France, and Ireland, defendor of the faith, &c: the seuen and twentith aforesaid, and long before the foresaid Henrie late earle of Northumberland prisoner in the Tower of London situat in the parish of Alhallows Barking aforesaid, in the ward of the Tower of London aforesaid, for suspicion of high treason aforesaid, by him against our souereigne ladie the quéene supposed to be committed; and the foresaid earle so remaining prisoner, and being placed in a certeine chamber within the Tower of London aforesaid, there prisoner remaining, imagining and intending himselfe diuelishlie and feloniouslie to kill and murther before the foresaid one & twentith daie of June: that is to saie, the sixteenth daie of June in the seuen and twentith yeare aforesaid, did prepare a certeine dag of iron and steele of the value of ten shillings: and also certeine bullets of lead, and a certeine quantitie of gunpowder, conteined in a certeine small box, and caused the foresaid gun, the bullets of lead and the gunpowder to be brought into the foresaid chamber vnto him the same earle of Northumberland, and to be deliuered to the same earle then and there by the hands of James a Price yeoman, to execute his diuelish and felonious purpose and intention.

The meanes that the earle made and prepared to destroie himselfe.

Which dag aforesaid, the foresaid earle caused secretlie to be hidden in a certeine mattris vnder the bolster of his bed in the chamber aforesaid, and then and there, the foresaid one and twentith daie of June in the seuen and twentith yeare aforesaid, betweene the houres of twelue and one in the night of the foresaid one and twentith daie of June, thinking and intending to prosecute and follow his diuelish intention and purpose aforesaid, did bolt the doore of the foresaid chamber, and the inner part of his said chamber towards himselfe, least anie man should foresée or withstand his diuelish, felonious, and malicious intent: and the said doore of his foresaid chamber, being so bolted; the same earle then and there into his bed himselfe did laie; and vpon this afterward, that is to saie, the foresaid one and twentith daie of June, in the seuen & twentith yeare aforesaid, about the houres aforesaid, within the Tower of London aforesaid, situat and being in the parish of Alhallows Barking aforesaid, in the ward of the Tower of London aforesaid, not hauing the almightie God or his feare before his eies, but being moued and seduced by the instigation of the diuell, of his malice afore pretended; did take vp into his hands the foresaid dag of iron and steele, then and there made readie, charged with gunpowder, and three bullets of lead, and the foresaid dag to the left part of his breast nere vnto the pappe of the same part of his brest, then and there feloniouslie and diuelishlie did put, and vpon the same part of his brest the foresaid dag did discharge.

This consenteth with the discourse following, wherin the same matter is more largelie handled.

The order of the action that was the earls destruction.

By reason of the violence of which gunpowder, and of the foresaid three bullets of lead, the foresaid earle into his bodie and heart, and through his chinebone, euen into his right shoulder, himselfe then and there with the foresaid bullets of lead feloniouslie and voluntarilie did strike; giuing vnto himselfe then and there one mortall wound, of the depth of twelue inches, and of the bredth of two inches: of which mortall wound aforesaid, the foresaid earle within the Tower of London aforesaid, the date, yeare, parish, and ward aforesaid, instantlie died. And so the iurie doth saie vpon their oths aforesaid, that the foresaid earle, the daie, yeare, and place aboue written, of his diuelish intent aforesaid, and of his malice before pretended, feloniouslie and voluntarilie himselfe did kill and murther in manner and forme aforesaid, against the peace of our souereigne ladie the quéene, hir crowne and dignitie. But what goods and cattels the foresaid earle in the time of the felonie and murther to himselfe aforesaid committed, had, or as yet hath, the iurie knew not, &c: in witnesse whereof, &c.

The bredth and depth of his wound.

¶ This was the verdict of the iurors, wherby the manner how, and the matter whereby the earle dispatched himselfe is trulie declared: which being taken for truth (as deseruing no lesse, the parties welworthie of credit) it remained to prouide for the bestowing of his wretched carcase, which on the three and twentith daie of June was buried in saint Peters church within the said Tower of London. This was the end of that graceless earle, the manner of whose murther, and part of his treasons are here dilated, as the same was publikelie deliuered in the Starchamber, and after published in a booke intituled:

Henrie earle of Northumberland buried in the Tower.

A true and summarie report of the declaration of some part of the earle of Northumberlands treasons, deliuered publikelie in the court at the Starchamber by the lord Chancellor and others of hir maiesties most honorable priuie councell, & councell learned, by hir maiesties speciall commandement, togither with the examinations & depositions of sundrie persons touching the maner of his most wicked and violent murther committed vpon himselfe with his owne hand, in the Tower of London, the 20 daie of Iune, 1585.

MAlice, among other essentiall properties perteining to hir ouglie nature, hath this one not inferior to the rest and the worst, incredulitie, wherewith she commonlie possesseth the minds and affections of all those that are infected with hir, so blinding the eies & iudgement of the best and cleerest sighted, that they cannot see or perceiue the bright beames of the truth, although the same be deliuered with neuer so great puritie, prose, circumstance and probabilitie. It is said that no truth passeth abroad vnaccompanied with hir contrarie; and as they go, truth is euer constreined to yeld the precedence and preheminence to hir pokefellow falshod, whose lodging is alwaies first made and prepared without a harbenger in the corrupt nature of mankind, by whome she is first receiued, interteined and harbored at all times: wherof in our dailie experience there happen manie and dangerous demonstrations, especiallie in matters of the highest moment, tending to excuse or accuse the actions of the greatest personages.

Incredulitie an essentiall propertie of malice.

Truth and falshod commonlie concur & are opposite.

There was of late deliuered in publike by persons of honour, credit, and reputation, a large declaration of certeine treasons practised by the late earle of Northumberland, of the maner of his vntimelie death, being with his owne hand murthered in the Tower, and of the causes that wrought him therevnto. The particularities whereof are such and so manie, as for the helpe of my memorie (comming then to the Starchamber by occasion, and not looking for anie such presence of the nobilitie and priuie councell as I found there at that time, and not looking for anie such cause of that nature to haue béene handled there that daie) I toke notes of the seuerall matters

In ingredience into the historie of Northumberland.

ters declared by the lord chancellor, maister attourneie, and solicitor generall, the lord chiefe baron, and maister vicechamberlaine: for (as I remember) they spake in order as they are here marshalled, and therefore I place them in this sort, and not according to their precedence in dignitie.

Upon the hearing of the treasons with their proofs and circumstances, and the desperat maner of the earles destruction deliuered in that place, and by persons of that qualitie, I supposed no man to haue bene so void of iudgement or the vse of common reason, that would haue doubted of anie one point or particle thereof, vntill it was my chance (falling in companie with diuerse persons at sundrie times, as well about the citie of London as abroad) to heare manie men report variablie and corruptlie of the maner and matter of this publike declaration, possessing the minds and opinions of the people with manifest vntruths: as, that the earle had bene vniustlie deteined in prison without proofe or iust cause of suspicion of treason: and that he had bene murthered by deuise and practise of some great enimies, and not destroied by himselfe. These slanderous reports haue ministred vnto me this occasion to set forth vnto thy view and consideration (gentle reader) this short collection of the said treasons and murther, as neere vnto the truth as my notes taken may lead and permit me, with the view of some of the examinations them selues concerning this cause for my better satisfaction since obteined. Which I haue vndertaken for two respects: the one, to conuince the false and malicious impressions and constructions receiued and made of these actions, by such as are in heart enimies to the happie estate of hir maiesties present gouernement: the other, because it may be thought necessarie for the preuenting of a further contagion like to grow (by this creeping infection) in the minds of such as are apt (though otherwise indifferent) in these and the like rumors, to receiue the bad as the good, and they the most in number. Wherein if I haue seemed more bold than wise, or intermedled my selfe in matters aboue my reach, and not apperteining vnto me, I craue pardon where it is to be asked, and commit my selfe to thy friendlie interpretation to be made of my simple trauell and dutifull meaning herein.

The maner of the earles making awaie of himselfe not generallie beleeued.

The cause why the collection of Northumberlands treasons and selfe-murther was published.

Upon the three and twentith daie of June last, assembled in the court of Starchamber, sir Thomas Bromleie knight lord chancellor of England, William lord Burleigh lord treasuror of England, George earle of Shrewsburie lord marshall of England, Henrie earle of Derbie, Robert earle of Leicester, Charles lord Howard of Effingham lord chamberlaine, Henrie lord Hunsdon lord gouernor of Berwike, sir Francis Knollis knight treasuror, sir James Croft knight comptrollor of hir maiesties houshold, sir Christopher Hatton knight vicechamberlaine to the queenes maiestie, the lord chiefe iustice of hir maiesties bench, the maister of the rolles, and the lord chiefe baron of the excheker, and others. The audience verie great of knights, esquiers, and men of other qualitie, the lord chancellor began briefelie and summarilie to declare, that whereas Henrie late earle of Northumberland, for diuerse notable treasons and practises by him taken in hand, to the danger not onelie of hir maiesties roiall person, but to the perill of the whole realme, had bene long deteined in prison, and looking into the guilt of his owne conscience, and perceiuing by such meanes of intelligence, as he by corrupting of his keepers and other like deuises had obteined, that his treasons were by sundrie examinations and confessions discouered, grew thereby into such a desperat estate, as that thereupon he had most wickedlie destroied & murthered himselfe. Which being made knowen to the lords of hir maiesties priuie councell, order was thereupon taken, and direction giuen to the lord chiefe iustice of England, the maister of the rolles, and the lord chiefe baron of the exchequer, to examine the maner and circumstances of his death, which they with all good indeuor and diligence had accordinglie performed. And least through the sinister meanes of such persons as be euill affected to the present estate of hir maiesties gouernement, some bad and vntrue conceipts might be had as well of the cause of the earles deteinement, as of the maner of his death: it was therefore thought necessarie to haue the truth thereof made knowen in that presence: and then he required hir maiesties learned councell there present to deliuer at large the particularities both of the treasons, and in what sort the earle had murthered himselfe. Then began John Popham esquier, hir maiesties attourneie generall, as followeth.

Persons of honour and worship assembled in the Starchamber, in whose audience Northumberlands cause was canuassed.

Examinants appointed for and about the manner of Northumberlands selfe murther.

Maister attornie, namelie John Popham discouereth the earles treasonable practises.

The earle of Northumberland about the time of the last rebellion in the north, in the eleuenth yeare of hir maiesties reigne (then called by the title of Henrie Persie knight) had vndertaken the conueieng awaie of the Scotish queene: for the which (as appeareth by a record of the fourteenth yeare of hir maiesties reigne) in the court of hir maiesties bench he was indicted, he confessed the offense, and put himselfe to hir maiesties mercies. At which time, vpon his said confession, submission, and faithfull promise of his dutie and allegiance to hir highnesse from thenceforth, the queenes maiestie of hir mercifull nature was pleased, not to loke into his offense with the extremitie of hir lawes; but dealt therein as by waie of contempt onelie, as may appeare by the record: the effect whereof was then shewed in the court, vnder the hand of one of the clerkes of hir maiesties said bench, In hæc verba.

An extract of the said record conteining the said earles indictment.

Middlesex.

MEmorandum, that Henrie Persie late of Tinmouth in the countie of Northumberland knight, was indicted in the terme of Easter, in the fourteenth yeere of hir maiesties reigne, for that hee with diuers others did conspire for the deliuering of the queene of Scots out of the custodie of the erle of Shrewsburie. Upon which indictment the same Henrie Persie did confesse the offense, and did put himselfe to the queenes mercie: and thereupon iudgement was after giuen by the court, that the said Henrie should paie to the queene for a fine for his said offense, fiue thousand marks, as appeareth by the record thereof in court.

The erle confesseth his offense, and is put to 5000 marks fine.

Per Micha. 14. & 15. Elisabethæ reginæ, rotulo quinto inter placita reginæ. Concordat cum recordo.

Per Io. Iue.

By this record it maie apeare that the earle had his hand in that rebellion. But for a further proofe thereof, it is most manifestlie discouered in a certeine tract written by the bishop of Rosse (wherein he sheweth how faithfullie he behaued himselfe in the managing of those treasons, at and about the time of that rebellion) that the said earle was in effect as farre plunged into the same, as the late earle his brother, howsoeuer he wound himselfe out of the danger thereof at that time. Notwithstanding these traitorous practises, the queenes maiestie was contented to remit all within a short time, and then accepted

The earle a dealer in rebellion as his brother (therfore executed) was.

cepted moſt graciouſlie of him both in honor and fauor, though vnworthilie beſtowed vpon him, for that he vtterlie forgetting thoſe graces and fauors receiued at hir maieſties mercifull hands, with a graceleſſe reſolution was contented to enter into a new plot now latelie contriued, not onelie for the deliuering of the Scotiſh queene, but for the inuading of the whole realme, the ouerthrow of the gouernment, aſwell concerning the ſtate of religion, as otherwiſe, the danger of hir maieſties ſacred perſon, and aduancing of the ſaid Scotiſh queene to the regall crowne and ſcepter of this realme, whereunto hir maieſtie is lineallie and lawfullie borne and deſcended, and wherein God of his mercie continue hir long in happie ſtate of gouernement, to the increaſe of hir owne glorie, and the comfort of hir louing and obedient ſubiects.

A ſumme of the traitorous purpoſes whereunto the earle was entered with a graceleſſe reſolution.

Then did maiſter Atturneie enter into the particularities of the treaſons, leauing manie parts thereof vntouched, becauſe the caſe ſtood ſo as it was not then conuenient to reueale them (as he ſaid) in reſpect that they touched ſome other perſons vndealt withall at that time, ſhewing that Throckemortons treaſons were not old, but freſh in euerie mans memorie, and how far forth they reached vnto the earle, he declared. And for that the treaſons of Throckemorton tended eſpeciallie to the inuading of the realme with forren forces, the purpoſe of that inuaſion long before intended, is proued by ſundrie examinations and confeſſions taken here within the realme, aſwell of hir maieſties owne ſubiects as others, by letters intercepted, written from and to the conſpirators abroad and at home, and by other good aduertiſements and intelligences had from forren parts diſcouering the ſame. He declared that in a letter written from doctor Sanders to doctor Allen out of Spaine, in the yeare 1577, it is ſet downe among other things, that the ſtate of Chriſtendome ſtood vpon the ſtout aſſailing of England.

The treaſons of Throckmorton communicable with the earle.

That in a letter ſent to the ſaid Allen from Rome, touching audience giuen by the pope to the ambaſſadors of certeine forren princes, betweene the pope & whom a league was agreed on againſt the queenes maieſtie, there were incloſed certeine articles conteining in effect, that the realme ſhould be inuaded with twentie thouſand men at the charge of the ſaid pope and princes, that hir maieſtie ſhould be depoſed, and ſome Engliſh catholike elected king. That it was confeſſed that the comming ouer of ſo manie prieſts into the realme, was to win great numbers to the catholike partie, to ioine (if opportunitie ſerued) either with forren inuaſion, or with tumult at home. That at Narbonne in Prouince, there was met an Engliſhman, being the head preacher there, who gaue intelligence to one of hir maieſties ſubiects, that the realme ſhould ſhortlie be inuaded by a forren king, and the popiſh religion reſtored: and ſaid further, that prieſts came into England and diſperſed themſelues in countries, to make their partie ſtrong. A meſſage was ſent in Nouember 1581, to doctor Allen from a ſubiect of this realme, by a ſeminarie prieſt then returning beyond the ſeas: that whereas he had receiued word from Allen at Alhallontide before, that men and all things were in a readineſſe, if the place of landing might be knowne: that Allen ſhould forthwith ſend word whether things were in ſuch readineſſe or not: and if they were, he would then ſend him ſuch perfect inſtructions as he could. One Paine executed for treaſon, confeſſed that this realme could not continue in the ſtate wherein it was, for that the pope had a ſpeciall care thereof, and would in ſhort time either by forren princes, or by ſome other meanes worke a change of things here.

An inuaſion of this land by twentie thouſand men concluded vpon.

Paine with all of his accurſſed ſtampe ſhall (I hope in God) be found falſe prophets.

From hence, maiſter Atturneie fell into the treaſons confeſſed by Francis Throckemorton, ſhewing that the ſtate of this realme had beene often preſented to the conſideration of a forren prince, who after long hearkening to the motion, had reſolued to yeld what furtherance he might, and to giue all aids neceſſarie for the reforming of religion, ſo they might be backed by ſuch as were well affected within this countrie. That the duke of Guiſe had ſolicited for two yeares together the pope and other princes, to ſupplie him with forces: but being croſſed by the death of a great perſonage, it was now growne to this paſſe, if there could be a partie found in England to ioine in that action, and conuenient places and meanes for landing, and other things neceſſarie, there ſhould be a ſupplie for Guiſe of forren ſtrength. Francis Throckemorton was recommended from beyond the ſea to Don Barnardino de Mendoza, ambaſſador reſident for the Spaniſh king here in England, who acquainted Throckemorton what plot was laid for the enterprize of the duke of Guiſe, and that he was willed to conferre with Throckemorton in the matter, who thereupon acquainted the ſaid ambaſſador with the plot of the hauens, and with the noble men and gentlemen that he had ſet downe as fit to be dealt withall in that cauſe. Throckemorton ſaid, that the bottome of this enterprize (which was not to be knowne to manie) was, that if a toleration of religion might not be obteined without alteration of the gouernement, that then the gouernment ſhould be altered, & the queene remoued. That the Scotiſh queene was made acquainted from the duke of Guiſe with the intention to relieue hir by theſe forces.

Francis Throckmorton recommended to Don Barnardino de Mendoza & made acquainted with that which coſt him his life.

It was in debate betweene Throckemorton and the Spaniſh ambaſſador, how the Scotiſh queene might be deliuered, as by an enterprize to be made with a certeine number of horſſes: and it was told Francis Throckemorton by his brother Thomas Throckemorton, that it was a principall matter in debate beyond the ſeas, how ſhe might be deliuered with ſafetie: the lacke of reſolution wherin, was the principall ſtaie of the execution of the attempt of inuaſion. Mendoza told Francis Throckemorton about Bartholomewtide 1583, that one Pope was come into England to ſound the earle of Northumberland, and other principall men in Suſſex: and about the end of September following, the ſame Mendoza told him, that Pope was Charles Paget, and that he came not onelie to ſound the men, but to view the places, the hauens, the prouiſions and meanes, and neerneſſe and commoditie of mens abidings that ſhould ioine with the forren forces. It was deuiſed, that ſuch noble men and others, as would be contented to aſſiſt the forren forces (being iuſtices of peace & of credit in their countries) might by colour of their authoritie leuie men as for hir maieſties defenſe, and yet emploie them to aſſiſt the forren forces. The lord Paget was made acquainted with this deuiſe, and anſwered, that it was a good courſe, and that he had thought vpon it before. Mendoza told Throckemorton, that Charles Paget had beene in Suſſex, and had ſpoken with thoſe that were there, and that he came to moue the earle of Northumberland and others. The night before Throckemorton was apprehended, he came to the lord Paget, and deſired him that he would not acquaint the earle of Northumberland and certeine others (whome he named) with ſuch matters as had paſſed betweene them two, touching the practiſe of this inuaſion: and the lord Paget willed him to deale as wiſelie for his part as he would do for himſelfe, and all ſhould be well: but (quoth the lord Paget) the earle of Northumberland knoweth

Francis Throckmorton owne confeſſions do confirme the report of theſe practiſes, ſee pa. 1374, 1375.

Francis Throckmorton deſireth the lord Paget not to make the earle priuie to the conſultations of them two.

knoweth you well enough. It was once agreed among the confederats, that the duke of Guise should land in Sussex, being over against Dieppe and Normandie: which after was misliked, because those parts laie too neere to hir maiesties greatest force and store, and that the people thereabout for the most part were protestants.

Maister attourneie shewed further, that in summer last, there was taken vpon the seas, sailing towards Scotland, a Scotish Jesuit, about whome there was found a discourse written in Italian of a like enterprise to be attempted against England, which should haue beene executed in September or October then last past: wherein assurance is made that the earles of Northumberland and Westmerland, Dacres that is dead, whom they termed lord Dacres, and of all the catholike lords and gentlemen in the north parts (where the invasion should haue beene attempted) setting it downe, that it is not said by coniecture that these men are assured, but that it is certeinlie knowne that they will ioine with the forren forces. In the said discourse it is also affirmed that the priests dispersed in the realme, can dispose of the other catholikes of the realme, as they shall be ordered: and that the popes excommunication should be renewed and pronounced against hir maiestie, and all those that shall take hir part: and that all such should be holden traitors that did not ioine with that armie by a date.

In the North parts should the purposed invasion of this land haue beene made.

When maister attourneie had thus proued the purpose of invasion, he proceeded to the proofe of Charles Pagets comming over about the practise and prosecution of that enterprise. And first, that Paget came to Petworth in September 1583, was secretlie received, and brought in the night late to the earle of Northumberland into his gallerie at Petworth, by one of the earles seruants: where the earle and he had secret conference together by the space of a large houre: from thense Paget was likewise conueied backe into the towne by the same seruant, and there lodged all that night, and the nert night following was conueied secretlie to a lodge in the earles parke at Petworth, called Conigar lodge, where he was kept with like secrecie by the space of eight daies or thereabouts: and the seruant by whome Paget was thus conueied, was by the said earle inioined and commanded in no wise to discouer Pagets being there. The earle of Northumberland, vpon the arriuall of Charles Paget, sent for the lord Paget with the priuitie of this seruant, who was made beleeue that Charles came over to set things in order, and to passe certeine deeds and conueiances betweene the lord Paget and him. The lord Paget came to Petworth, staied there two nights, lodged in the earles house, conferred with Charles Paget, and with the earle togither sundrie times.

Charles Pagets comming over about the prosecution & practise of the foresaid enterprise proued.

The earle examined and found therein to falter and double.

The earle after his apprehension, being at seuerall times examined what causes or affaires had passed betweene the lord Paget and Charles his brother, when they were together at Petworth, answered one while, that they passed certeine deeds and conueiances; and another while, that there was onelie a will or testament signed and sealed betweene them: he confessed that he set his hand vnto the will, but knew not what the same conteined. All which appeared to be false, for that it hath fallen out by occasion of seizure of the lands and goods of the lord Paget (after his departure out of the realme) that he had disposed of his lands and goods by an other course of assurance executed at London: and therefore their pretense of the passing of deeds & will at Petworth, was but a deuise, to shadow their traitorous conspiracies.

And for better proofe thereof, it was alleaged by maister attorneie, that Charles Paget returning from Petworth to the house of one William Danies, neere to the place where Paget had landed in Sussex, and toke shipping againe at his departure beyond the seas, sent to William Shelleie esquire, residing then at his house at Michelgroue, distant about a mile from the house of William Danies, to come vnto him (who within few daies before had beene at the lodge at Petworth with the said Paget) and now at their meeting in a coppice neere to Danies house, Paget entred into speech and discourse with him of diuers matters, and at the last among other things, he began to be inquisitiue of the strength and fortification of Portesmouth, and what forces and strength hir maiestie had in the other parts westward.

William Shelleie an actor in this purposed tragedie, & what consultations passed betweene him and Charles Paget.

Paget brake out and declared vnto him that forraine princes would seeke reuenge against hir maiestie of the wrongs by hir done vnto them, & would take such time and opportunitie as might best serue them for that purpose, and said that those princes disdeined to see the Scotish queene so kept & vsed here as she was, and would vse all their forces for hir deliuerie: that the duke of Guise would be a dealer therin, and that the earle of Northumberland would be an assistant vnto them, willing Shelleie what soeuer should happen, to follow the earle of Northumberland, affirming that there was not a noble man in England of conduct and gouernment like to the said earle; saieng further, that the earle of Northumberland was affected to the Scotish queene, & would do what he could for hir aduancement: that the duke of Guise had forces in a readinesse to be employed for the altering of the state of religion here in England, and to set the forenamed Scotish queene at libertie.

God preuented this plot by the fatall end of the earle as he will in time disappoint all the complices.

Shelleie gathered by these and other speeches which passed betweene him & Paget, that Paget had dealt with the earle as a chiefe partie, and a man forward in these actions: and Paget confessed that he came ouer to breake and deale in these matters. Paget deliuered further, that the catholikes would all ioine for so good a purpose, for that it would be a meanes to reforme religion. He said, the stir should be in the North parts, because Sussex was not conuenient, as well for that there were no safe landing places, as for that it was so neere London, where the quéenes maiestie would be readie to resist them, and that whensoeuer anie stir should be, the earle of Northumberland would not stale in Sussex, but would into the North parts.

The north parts appointed to be the receptacle of all the intended broile.

When maister attorneie generall had in this sort laid downe the particularities of the treasons and traitorous practises of the confederates for this purposed inuasion; then Thomas Edgerton esquire, hir maiesties sollicitor, to proue the earle guiltie of these treasons by the circumstances of his own proceedings, shewed that the erle knowing how far him selfe was touched with the said treasons, & in what degrée of danger he stood if they should haue bin reueled, found his onelie hope of safetie to consist in the cunning concealing of them, & therfore he indeuored to couer them by all the possible meanes he could deuise. And first by conueieng awaie of the lord Paget, a man not onelie priuie to the practises and treasons handled by Francis Throckmorton, but also to the treasons of his brother Charles, wherein the earle and the lord Paget were doubtlesse both confederats with Charles, made acquainted by him with the causes of his comming ouer, as principall men with whome he dealt in those matters at Petworth.

Maister sollicitor, namelie Thomas Edgerton, proueth the earle guiltie, &c.

The lord Paget conueied ouer sea by the earles meanes & vpon what occasion.

The occasion that prouoked the earle to conueie alwaie the lord Paget, grew vpon the apprehension of Throckmorton, who being committed to the Tower, and charged with high matters, was in case to be delt withall by waie of extremitie to be made to confesse the treasons charged vpon him; in reuealing whereof, Charles Pagets comming to Petworth, and the cause of his repaire thither could not be conceled. No man at this time within the realme could accuse the earle of these confederacies, but the lord Paget onlie, who stood in danger to be discouered by Francis Throckmorton: the safetie therefore of the earle rested altogither vpon the lord Pagets departing out of the realme. Which was procured by the earle with so great expedition, as that Throckmorton being committed to the Tower about the seuenth daie of November 1583, the earle made meanes the twelfe daie to haue the lord Paget prouided of shipping in all hast by William Shellete, wherin the earle vsed such importunat intreatie, & sent so often to hasten the preparation of the ship, that the same was prouided, and the lord Paget imbarked by the 14. of the same moneth following, or thereabout.

This was a shift but yet inccourtesie, as appeareth by the sequele.

The departure of the lord Paget sone after discouered, and how, and by whom he was conueied awaie: hir maiestie vpon good cause taking offense thereat, the earle being then at London had notice thereof, and of the confessions of Throckmorton (who began to discouer the treasons) came presentlie down to Petworth, sent immediatlie for William Shelleie, who comming to him to Petworth the next morning about dinner time, met the earle in a dining parlour readie to go to his dinner. The earle toke Shelleie aside into a chamber, and as a man greatlie distracted and troubled in mind, entred into these speeches: Alas I am a man cast awaie! And Shelleie demanding what he ment by those speeches, the earle answered: The actions I haue entred into, I feare will be my vtter vndoing, and therupon desired Shelleie to kéepe his counsell, and to discouer no more of him than he must néeds. The earle moreouer at this méeting intreated William Shelleie to conueie away all such as he knew to haue bene employed and were priuie of the lord Pagets going awaie, and of Charles Pagets comming ouer, which was accordinglie performed by Shelleie: and the earle for his part conueied awaie a principall man of his own, whom he had often vsed in messages into France, and had bene of trust appointed by the earle, to attend on Charles Paget, all the time of his staie at Connigar lodge.

The earle and Shelleie conferre, and as men dismaied for the discouerie of their dealings are extreame pensife.

Maister solicitor pursuing the matters that made the earles practises and deuises for the concealing of his treasons manifest, declared further: that after the earle and Shelleie had obteined some libertie in the Tower after their first restreint: the earle found meanes to haue intelligence with Shelleie, & was aduertised from him of all that he had confessed in his first examinations, taken before they were last restreined: since which time, the earle by corrupting of his kéeper hath practised to haue continuall aduertisements as before, as well of things done within the Tower as abroad: in so much as by his said kéeper he had sent and conueied twelue seuerall letters out of the Tower within the space of nine or ten wéekes, and one of those on sundaie the twentith daie of June in the morning, when he murthered himselfe the night following.

what deserued the kéeper that would be corrupted by an offendor so malicious?

The earle and Shelleie communicat their minds by message.

By the same corruption of his kéepers he sent also a message to William Shelleie by a maidseruant in the Tower, by the which he required him to stand to his first confessions, and to go no further; for so it would be best for him, and he should kéepe himselfe out of danger. Whereunto Shelleie returned answer by the same messenger, that he could hold out no longer, that he had concealed the matters as long as he could, and willed the earle to consider that there was a great difference betwéene the earles estate and his: for that the earle in respect of his nobilitie was not in danger to be dealt withall in such sort as he the said Shelleie was like to be, being but a priuat gentleman, and therefore to be vsed with all extremitie to be made confesse the truth: wherefore he aduised the earle to deale plainlie, and to remember what speeches had passed at his house at Petworth, when Charles Paget came last thither.

James Price a messenger to and fro betwéene the earle & Shelleie.

James Price by the same corruption of the earls kéeper came to William Shelleie on the fridaie or saturdaie before Trinitie sundaie last, and told him that the erle was verie desirous to vnderstand how farre he had gone in his confessions: and at Prices instance, Shelleie did set downe in writing the effect of the said confessions, and sent the same to the said earle: who vpon the sight therof, perceiuing the treasons reuealed and discouered, and knowing thereby how heinous his offenses were, fearing the iustice and seueritie of the lawes, and so the ruine and ouerthrow of his house, fell into desperation, & so to the destruction of himselfe. For confirmation whereof, it was confessed by one Jaques Pantins, a groome of the earles chamber, who had attended on the earle in the Tower by the space of ten wéeks before his death, that he had heard the earle often saie, that maister Shellete was no faithfull frend vnto him, and that he had confessed such things as were sufficient to ouerthrow them both: that he was vndone by Shelleies accusations, affirming that the earle began to despaire of himselfe, often with teares lamenting his cause, which the earle said to proceed onlie of the remembrance of his wife and children, saieng further, that such matters were laid vnto his charge, that he expected no fauour, but to be brought to his triall, and then he was but a lost man: repeating often that Shelleie had vndone him, and still mistrusting his cause, wished for death.

The earle bemmeth desperat and forceth not to destroie himselfe.

Herewith maister solicitor concluded, and then sir Roger Manwood knight, lord chiefe baron of hir maiesties exchéker, entered into the description of the earles death, and in what sort he had murthered himselfe: shewing first how the same had bene found by a verie substantiall iurie chosen among the best commoners of the citie, impanelled by the coroner vpon the view of the bodie, and diligent inquirie by all due meanes had according to the law, and declared, that vpon the discouerie of the intelligence conueied betwéene the earle and Shelleie, it was thought necessarie for the benefit of hir maiesties seruice, by such of hir highnesse most honourable priuie councell, as were appointed commissioners to examine the course of these treasons, that Jaques Pantins attending vpon the earls, and the earles corrupt kéepers should be remoued.

Sir Roger Manwood describeth the maner how the earle murthered himselfe.

Whereupon Thomas Bailiffe gentleman, sent to attend on the earle of Northumberland, vpon the remouing of Palmer and Jaques Pantins from about the said earle (who from the beginning of his last restreint attended on him) for the reasons last mentioned, was by the lieutenant of the Tower on the sunday about two of the clocke in the after none (being the twentith of June) shut vp with the earle, as appointed to remaine with him, and serue him in the prison for a time, vntill Palmer, Pantins, and * Price, then committed close prisoners, might be examined, how the earle came by such intelligences as were discouered to haue passed betwéene the earle and Shelleie, and betwéene the earle and others. Bailiffe serued the earle at his supper, brought him to his bed about nine of the clocke, and after some seruices done by the earles commandement, Thomas Bailiffe the one & twentith of June 1585. deposed.

Palmer, Pantins and Price committed close prisoners.

* This Price is supposed to be mistaken for Edward Price.

mandement, departed from the earle to an vtter chamber, where he laie part of that night: and being come into his chamber, the earle rose out of his bed and came to his chamber doore, and bolted the same vnto him in the inner side, saieng to Bailiffe, he could not sleepe vnlesse his doore were fast.

O desperat dissimulation!

About twelue of the clocke at midnight, Bailiffe being in a slumber, heard a great noise, seeming vnto him to be the falling of some doore, or rather a peece of the house: the noise was so sudden and so great, that he started out of his bed, and crieng vnto the earle with a lowd voice, said: My lord, know you what this is? The earle not answering, Bailiffe cried and knocked still at the earles doore, saieng, My lord, how do you? But finding that the earle made no answer, continued his crieng and calling, vntill an old man that laie without, spake vnto him, saieng, Gentleman, shall I call the watch, seeing he will not speake? Yea (quoth Bailiffe) for Gods sake. Then did the old man rise, & called one of the watch, whome Bailiffe intreated with all possible speed to call maister lieutenant vnto him. In the meane time Bailiffe heard the earle giue a long and most greeuous grone, and after that, gaue a second grone: and then the lieutenant (being come) called vnto the earle, who not answering, Bailiffe cried vnto the lieutenant to breake open the earles chamber doore bolted vnto him in the inner side, which was done, and then they found the earle dead in his bed, and by his bed side a dag, wherewith he had killed himselfe.

He could not answer hauing discharged the dag into his bodie.

Sir Owen Hopton knight, examined vpon his oth, affirmed that on sundaie last at night, lesse than a quarter of an houre before one of the clocke after midnight, he was called vp by the watch to come to the earle of Northumberland, who had beene called vnto by maister Bailiffe his keeper, and would not speake as the watch told him. Whereupon the said sir Owen went presentlie to the earles lodging, opened the vtter doores, till he came vnto the chamber where maister Bailiffe laie, which was next to the earles bedchamber. Bailiffe said to this examinat as he came in, that he was wakened with a noise as it were of a doore or some great thing falling, & that he had called on the earle, and could haue no answer. And this examinat going to the earls chamber doore, finding the same bolted fast on the other side within the earles lodging, so as he could not go into the earle, this examinat called on the earle, telling him the lieutenant was there, and praied his lordship to open the doore.

Sir Owen Hopton knight, lieutenant of the Tower, 1585.

The warders with their halberds wrest and wring at the earles chamber doore.

But this examinat hauing no answer made vnto him, and finding the doore fast bolted in the inner side of the earles chamber with a strong iron bolt, so as they could not enter into the same out of the lodging where the said Bailiffe laie, without breaking vp the chamber doore, caused the warders which were with this examinat, to thrust in their halberds, and to wrest the doore thereby, as much as they could, and withall to run at the doore with their feet, & with violence to thrust it open, which they did accordinglie. And when this examinat came into the chamber, in turning vp the sheets, he perceiued them to be bloudied: and then searching further, found the wound, which was verie neere the pap, not thinking at the first sight, but that it had beene done with a knife.

The place of the bodie where the earle had wounded himselfe.

This examinat went thereupon presentlie to write to the court, and toke the warders into the vtter chamber, & left them there vntill he returned, bolting the doore of the earles bedchamber on the outside. And as soone as this examinat returned from writing of his letter to the court, he searched about the chamber, and found the dag in the floore, about three foot from the bed, neere vnto a table that had a greene cloth on it, which did somewhat shadow the dag: and after, turning downe the bedcloths, found the box in the which the powder and pellets were, on the bed vnder the couerlet; and saith, that the chamber where the earle laie, hath no other doore but that one doore which was broken open as aforesaid, saue one doore that went into a priuie, which hath no maner of passage out of it: sith that the earles lodging chamber, and the entering to the priuie, are both walled round about with a stone wall, and a bricke wall, and that there is no doore or passage out of or from the said earles bedchamber or priuie, but that onelie doore which was broken open by the appointment of this examinat. The warders that were with this examinat at the entrie into the prison, and the breaking vp of the earles chamber doore, and the doing of the other things aforesaid, were Michaell Sibleie, Anthonie Danies, William Riland, and John Potter, and one John Pinner this examinats seruant was there also.

The dag found in the floore, and the box and pellets in the bed.

This is a manifest proofe and full of sufficient credit, that none could come at him to do him violence.

For the proofe and confirmation of the seuerall parts and points of this deposition, Sibleie, Danies, Riland, Potter and Pinner were deposed, and they viua voce affirmed so much thereof to be true, as was reported by the examination of the lieutenant, concerning the comming of the lieutenant vnto the earles chamber, the breaking vp of the doore being bolted with a strong bolt on the inner side, the finding of the earle dead vpon his bed, the dag lieng on the ground, the powder and pellets in a box on the bed vnder the couerlet, with the rest of the circumstances thereunto apperteining. They affirmed also, that there was but one doore in the earles chamber, sauing the doore of the priuie, which togither with the chamber was stronglie walled about with stone and bricke: and further (as I remember) the lord chiefe baron confirmed the same, hauing viewed the chamber himselfe where the earle lodged, and was found dead.

Deponents Viua voce, confirming the lieutenants deposition vpon his examination.

Jaques Pantins in his examination of the one and twentith of June confesseth, that James Price deliuered the dag to the earle his maister in this examinats presence: whereupon he presentlie suspected that the earle meant mischiefe to himselfe, and therefore did his indeuour to persuade the earle to send awaie the dag, and told the earle that he knew not how the diuell might tempt his lordship, & that the diuell was great; but could by no meanes preuaile with the earle in that behalfe: and saith moreouer, that the earle required him to hide the dag, and he thereupon hanged the same on a naile within the chimnete in the earles bedchamber, where the earle thinking the same not to be sufficientlie safe in that place, it was by the earles appointment taken from thense, and put into a slit in the side of a mattresse that laie vnder the earles bed, neere to the beds head, and that the same sundaie morning that the earle murthered himselfe at night, he saw the dag lieng vnder the earles beds head. The dag was bought not manie daies before of one Adrian Pulan a dagmaker, dwelling in east Smithfield, as by the said Pulan was testified viua voce vpon his oth, in the open court, at the time of the publike declaration made of these matters in the Starchamber.

Of whom the dag was bought.

All these particularities considered, with the depositions and proofs of the witnesse concerning the earles death; first, how he came by the dag; secondlie, how long he had kept the same, and in what secret maner; thirdlie, the earles bolting of his chamber doore in the inside; fourthlie, the blow of the dag; fiftlie, the breaking vp of the earles chamber doore by the lieutenant of the Tower; and lastlie, the finding of the earle dead as aforesaid: what is he so simple that will think or imagine, or so impudent and malicious that will auouch and report, that the earle of Northumberland should haue béene murthered of purpose, by practise or deuise of anie person, affecting his destruction in that manner? If men consider the inconuenience happened thereby, as well in matter of state, as commoditie to the quénes maiestie, lost by the preuention of his triall, who can in reason coniecture the earle to haue béene murthered of policie or set purpose, as the euill affected séeme to conceiue?

If the earle had liued to haue receiued the censure of the law for his offenses, all lewd and friuolous obiections had then béene answered, and all his goods, cattels and lands by his atteindor had come vnto hir maiestie, and the honour and state of his house and posteritie vtterlie ouerthrowne: the consideration and feare whereof appeareth without all doubt to haue béene the principall and onelie cause that made him laie violent hands vpon himselfe. If obiections be made, that to murther him in that sort might be a satisfaction to his enimies, who could be pacified by no meanes but with his bloud: that séemeth to be as improbable, for that it is commonlie discerned in the corrupt nature of man, that when we are possessed with so profound a hatred, as to seeke the death of our enimie, we imagine and wish his destruction to be had with the greatest shame and infamie that can be deuised: thinke you not then, that if the earle of Northumberland had anie such enimie that knew the danger wherein he stood, and that his triall and conuiction by law would draw vpon him the losse of his life, lands and goods, fame, honor, and the vtter subuersion of his house, would be so kindhearted vnto him, as to helpe to take awaie his life onelie, & saue him all the rest? I suppose there is no man of iudgement will beléeue it.

The principall cause that made the earle laie hands vpon himselfe.

But to returne to the maner of the earles death. It was declared by the lord Hunsdon, and the lord chiefe baron, that the dag wherewith the earle murthered himselfe, was charged with three bullets, and so of necessitie with more than an ordinarie charge of powder, to force that weight of bullets to worke their effect. The earle lieng vpon his backe on the left side of his bed, toke the dag charged in his left hand (by all likelihood) laid the mouth of the dag vpon his left pap (hauing first put aside his wastecote) and his shirt being onelie betwéene the dag and his bodie (which was burnt awaie the breadth of a large hand) discharged the same, wherewith was made a large wound in his said pap, his heart pearsed and torne in diuerse lobes or péeces, three of his ribs broken, the chinebone of his backe cut almost in sunder, and vnder the point of the shoulder blade on the right side within the skin, the three bullets were found by the lord Hunsdon, which he caused the surgion in his presence to cut out, lieng all three close togither within the breadth and compasse of an inch or thereabout: the bullets were shewed by his lordship at the time of the publication made in the court at the Starchamber.

The lord of Hunsdon declareth how the dag was more than ordinarilie charged: and how the earle dispatched himselfe.

Three bullets found vnder the point of the earls shoulder blade.

And whereas it hath béene slanderouslie giuen out to the aduantage of the earle, as the reporters suppose, that he was imprisoned & kept in so streict, narrow and close rome, with such penurie of aire and breath, that thereby he grew sickelie and wearie of his life, and that to haue béene the cause chieflie why he murthered himselfe; if it were so that he died by the violence of his owne hand which they hardlie beléeue. To answer that péeuish and senseless slander, there was much spoken by the lord chiefe baron, who had viewed and caused verie exactlie to be measured the chambers and romes within the prison where the earle laie, being part of hir maiesties owne lodging in the Tower. The particular length and breadth of the said chambers & roms, and the qualitie of the lights and windows, expressed by the said lord chiefe baron, I can not repeat: but well I do remember it was declared, that all the date time, the earle had the libertie of fiue large chambers, and two long entries within the vtter dore of his prison: three of which chambers, and one of the entries laie vpon two faire gardens within the Tower wall, and vpon the Tower wharfe, with a pleasant prospect to the Thames, and to the countrie, more than fiue miles beyond. The windowes were of a verie large proportion, yelding so much aire and light, as more cannot be desired in anie house. Note therefore how maliciouslie those that fauour traitors and treasons, can deliuer out these and the like slanderous speéches, to the dishonor of hir maiestie, noting hir councellors and ministers with inhumanitie and vncharitable seueritie, contrarie to all truth and honestie.

A slanderous report of the quénes enimies and the earles fauourers answered.

The earle wanted no prospects for pleasure nor walks of conuenient libertie.

When the lord chiefe baron had finished this discourse of the manner of the earles death, with the circumstances, and had satisfied the court and auditorie concerning the qualitie of the prison where the earle had remained, sir Christopher Hatton knight hir maiesties vicechamberlaine, who (as it séemed) had béene speciallie imploied by hir maiestie among others of hir priuie councell in the looking into and examining of the treasons afore said, aswell in the person of the earle as of others, and at the time of the earles commitment from his house in S. Martins to the Tower of London, sent vnto him from hir maiestie to put the earle in mind of hir maiesties manifold graces and fauors in former times conferred vpon him, proceéding from the spring of hir maiesties princelie and bountifull nature, and not of his deseruings, and to aduise him to deliuer the truth of the matters so cléerelie appearing against him, either by his letters priuatlie to hir maiestie, or by speéch to maister vicechamberlaine, who signified also vnto him, that if he would determine to take that course, he should not onlie not be committed to the Tower, but should find grace & fauor at hir maiesties hands, in the mitigation of such punishment as the law might laie vpon him.

Sir Christopher Hatton reuealeth to the court and auditorie the gratious dealing of hir maiestie with the said earle, no such fauour deseruing.

And here M. vicechamberlaine repeated at length the effect of hir maiesties message at that time sent to the earle, begining first with the remembrance of his practise vndertaken for the conueieng awaie of the Scotish quéene about the time of the last rebellion (as hath béene declared in the beginning of this tract) and that he confessing the offense being capitall, hir maiestie neuertheless was pleased to alter the course of his triall by the iustice of hir lawes, and suffered the same to receiue a slight and easie punishment by waie of mulct or fine of fiue thousand marks, whereof before this his imprisonment (as it is crediblie reported) there was not one penie paid, or his land touched with anie extent for the paiment thereof, which offense was by hir maiestie not onelie most gratiouslie forgiuen, but also most christianlie forgotten, receiuing him not long after to the place of honor that his ancestours had inioied for manie yeares before him, and gaue him such entrance into hir princelie fauour and good opinion, that no man of his qualitie receiued greater countenance and comfort at hir maiesties hands than he; insomuch that in all exercises of recreation, vsed by hir maiestie, the earle was alwaies called to be one: and whensoeuer hir maiestie shewed hir selfe abroad in publike, she gaue to him the honor of the best and highest seruices about hir person, more often than to all the noble men of the court.

The quénes maiestie mitigateth the punishmēt which the law would haue awarded against the earle.

The quénes maiesties nature is to ioue hir enimies. O that they could change their nature, and ioue hir highnesse againe!

But the remembrance of these most gratious and more more than extraordinarie fauours and benefits receiued, nor the hope giuen vnto him by maister vicechamberlaine of hir maiesties disposition of mercie towards him, nor the consideration of the depth and weight of his treasons against hir maiestie, hir estate, hir crowne and dignitie, with the danger thereby like to fall vpon him by the course of hir highnes lawes, to the vtter ruine and subuersion of him and his house (standing now at hir maiesties mercie) could once moue his heart to that naturall and dutifull care of hir maiesties safetie that he ought to haue borne towards hir, and the most worthilie had merited at his hands, or anie remorse or compassion of himselfe and his posteritie: but resting vpon termes of his innocencie, hauing (as you maie perceiue) conueied awaie all those that he thought could or would anie waie accuse him, he made choise rather to go to the Tower, abide the hazard of hir maiesties high indignation, and the extremitie of the law for his offenses.

The earle standeth vpon termes of his innocencie, all the world seeing cause to the contrarie.

All which was a notable augur of his fall, and that God by his iust iudgement had for his sinnes and ingratitude taken from him his spirit of grace, and deliuered him ouer to the enimie of his soule, who brought him to that most dreadfull & horrible end, wherevnto he is come: * from the which, God of his mercie defend all christian people, and preserue the quéenes maiestie from the treasons of hir subiects, that she maie liue in all happinesse, to sée the ruine of hir enimies abroad and at home, and that she, and we hir true and louing subiects, maie be alwaies thankfull to God for all his blessings bestowed vpon vs by hir, the onlie mainteiner of his holie gospell among vs.

* To this petition let all true harted Englishmen saie, Amen.

On the six & twentith of June arriued at London deputies for the estates of the netherlands, or low countries, who were lodged about the Tower street, & had their diet for the time of their abode here, verie worshipfullie appointed (all at the charges of hir maiestie) in the Clothworkers hall in Pinchenlane, neere to the said Tower street. These on the nine & twentith of June, being the feast of the apostles Peter & Paule repaired to the court, then at Grœnewich, where by vertue of their commissions from the vnited countries, they presented to hir maiestie the souereingtie of those countries, to wit of Brabant, but the commission (for the siege) of Antuerpe not full authorised, of Guelder, of Flanders, of Holland, of Zeland, of Vtrecht, and of Friseland. For Brabant, Jaques de Grise great baillie of Bridges councellour of the Franks. For Guelder, Rutger of Barsold, gentleman. For Flanders, Noell de Garsie lord of Schonewalle. For Holland, John Wanderdoest, lord of Nortwicke, Josse de Menin pensionarie of Dordreght, John of old Barneuelt pensionarie of Rotradame, and D. Francis Maolso. For Zeland, Jacob Dales councellor and pensionarie of Tergoest. For Vtrecht, Paulus Buis doctor of the lawes. For Friseland, J. Fritzma, gentleman: H. Ansona president of Friseland: and Lads Jangema, gentleman. All these falling on their knées before hir maiestie, and so remaining for a long space, one of them, to wit, Josse de Menin councellor and pensionarie of Dordreght, one of the commissioners for Holland, made to hir maiestie this oration in French as followeth.

The arriuall and interteinment of the deputies for the estates of the low countries.

The names of the said deputies for the estates.

The said deputies oration in French to hir maiestie at Greenwich.

MAdame, les estats des prouinces vnies des pais bas, remercient treshumblement vostre maiesté de la bonné affection & faueur, quel à pleu de monstrer audits pais en leur necessites, & confermer per tant de tesmoignaiges euidens; & encores dernierement, quand apres l'execrable assasinat comme en la personne de feu monsir le prince d'Orenges, il à pleu a vostre maiesté faire entendre audits estats per son ambassadeur le sire Dauison, le soing qu'icelle auoit a nostre defense & obseruation, & aussy par le sire de Grise, le grand desplaisir que vostre maiesté auoit conceu, de voir l'esdits estats frustres de l'esperance quelle auoient fondeé sur le traicte de France. Mais que le soin que vostre maiesté a touiours en de nostre bien & conseruation n'estoit pour cela en rien diminué, aine quel s'augmentoit, plustost a mesure quel la necessité de nos affaires le requiert, dont ledits pais en general, & chacun d'eulx en particulier demeurerent perpetuellement trefobliges a vostre maiesté, pour le recognoistre auec tout fidelité & obeisance.

Et comme ledits estats considerent Madame, que depues le deces endit sire prince d'Orenges, ils ont faict perte de plusieurs de leurs places & bonne villes; & que pour la conseruation desdits pais il leur est besoing d'vng prince & sire souuerain, qui les puisse garentir & defendre contre la tyranné & inique oppression des Espaignols & leurs adherés, qui s'efforcent de plus en plus par leurs sinistres armes & tous aultres moyens, de destruire & ruiner lesdits pais, de fonds en comble & reduire ce pouure peuple en vne seruitude perpetuellé, pire que des Indiés souls l'insuportable ioug de la deteestable inquisition d'Espaigne. Considerans aussy que les corps des villes & communaultes desdits pais ont vne fermé afience, que vostre maiesté ne les vouldra veoir perir au gre de leurs ennemys, qui leur font ceste lõgue & cruelle guerre, a toute oultrance laquelle les estats desdits pais bas (ensuiuant leur deuoir & obligation quels ont a leurs bourgois & ycitogens) ont estes contraincts de soustenir, repoulser, & destourner, pour la tyranné & seruitude manifest qu'on taschat d'introduire & imposer au pouure peuple, & pour conseruer leur liberté, droits, priuileges, & franchises, auec l'exercise de la vray religion chrestienné, dont vostre maiesté porte a bon droit le tiltre de protectrice & defenderesse, contre laquelle lesdits ennemys & leurs associes, ont & faict tant de ligues, dresse tant de cauteleuzes, embushes, & trahisons, & ne cessent encore tout les iours de praticquer & machiner contre la personne de vostre maiesté, & au preiudice du reque & transquillite de ses royaulmes & estats, laquelle le bon Dieu a preserue iusques a present, pour le bien de la chrestienté, & sustentation de ses eglises.

Sy est ce Madame, que pour ces causes, & raisons, & aultres bonnes considerations, lesdits estats ont prins par ensemble vne bonné & fermé resolution, de prendre leurs recours a vostre maiesté, veu que cest vne chose ordinaire a tous peuples & nations oppressées, de recourir en leurs calamites & oppressions, pour support & faueur contre leurs ennemys, aulx roys & princes voisme, & singulierement a ceulx qui sont douez a magnanimité, pieté, iustice, & aultres vertus royalles, & a cest effect nous ont lesdits estats deputé vers vostre maiesté, pour presenter a icelle la principaulté, souuerainté, & iuste dominatiõ desdits prouinces, soubs certaines bonnes & equitables condicions, concernantes principallement la conseruation de l'exercise de la religion reformée, & de leurs ancienne priuileges, libertes, franchises & vsances, & l'administration du faict de la guerre, police, & iustice esdits pais.

Et combien que lesdits pais ayent beaucoup souffert par ces longues & continuelles guerres, & que l'ennemy se soit empare de plusieurs villes & places fortes esdits pais, toutes fois, oultre ce qu'es pais de Brabant, Gueldre, Flandre, Malins, & Oueriſſel, ſe mainteinent encores maintes bonnes villes & places contre l'effort de l'ennemy, ſy eſt ce que les pais d'Holland, Zeeland, Vtrecht, & Friſe ſont encores, graces a Dieu, en leur entier, ou il y a beaucoup de grandes & fortes villes, & places belles, riuieres, profondes, ports & haures de mer, deſquelles voſtre maieſté & ſes ſucceſſeurs pourront tirer pluſieurs bons ſeruices, fruicts, & commodites dont il n'eſt de faire yci plus long recit. Seulement que ceſte cy entre aultres merite bien vne conſideration ſpeciale que la coniunction deſdits pais d'Holland, Zeeland, Friſe, & des villes de l'Eſcluze, & Oſteynd en Flādres auec les royaulmes de voſtre maieſté, emporte quant & ſoy l'empire abſolut de la grand mer occeane, & par conſequence vne aſſeurance & felicité perpetuelle pour les ſubiects de voſtre ſereniſſime maieſté. La quelle nous ſupplions treſhūblemēt que ſon bon plaiſir ſoit de nous accorder leſdits points ou conditions, & ce en ſuiuant, vouloir accepter pour ſoy & ſes ſucceſſeurs legittimes en la couronne d'Angleterre protecteurs de la religion reformée, la iuſtice principaute & ſeigneurie ſouueraine deſdits pais & conſequemment du recepuoir les peuples deſdits pais, comme vous treſhumbles & treſobeiſſants ſubiects ſoubs la protection & ſauuegarde perpetuelle de voſtre maieſté, peuples certeinement autant fidelles, aymant leurs princes & ſeigneurs (a parler & ſans iactance) que nul aultre de la chreſtienté.

Ce faiſant Madame, vous conſerueres tant de belles egliſes, qu'il a pleu a Dieu en ce dernier temps aſſembler eſdits pais a preſent en beaucoup de lieux fort affliges, & eſbranles & deliureres leſdits pais & peuples (nagueres auant l'inique maiſon des Eſpaignols) tant riches & floriſſans, pour la grande commodité de la mer, ports, haures, riuieres, traffiqs, & manifactures dont ils ſont doues de nature. Vous les deliureres (dis ie Madame) de ruine & perpetuelle ſeruitude de corps & ame, qui ſera vng œuure vrayement roial & treſexcellent, agreable a Dieu, profitable a toute chreſtienté, digne de louange immortelle, coreſpondant a la magnanimité & vertus heroicques de voſtre maieſté, & conioinct auec l'aſſeurance & proſperites des royalmes & ſubiects d'icelle. Et ſurce preſentons a voſtre maieſté leſdits articles ou conditions, en reuerence, prians le grand Roy des roys de preſeruer voſtre maieſté de ſes ennemys, l'accroiſtre en gloire & felicité, & l'auoir en ſa ſeinte garde à perpetuité.

Faict par Ioſſe de Menin, concelier & penſionaire de Derdreght. An. 1585. 29 de Iune, A Greenwich.

The foreſaid oration in Engliſh.

MAdam, the ſtates of the vnited prouinces of the low countries moſt humblie thanke your maieſtie for the good affection & fauor, which it pleaſed you to ſhew to the ſaid countries in their neceſſitie, & to confirme the ſame with ſo manie euident teſtimonies; & that laſtlie, after the execrable aſſault committed vpon the perſon of the late prince of Orange, at what time it pleaſed your maieſtie to let the ſaid ſtates vnderſtand by your ambaſſador maiſter Dauiſon, what care you had of our defenſe and preſeruation, and alſo by ſegneur de Criſt, the great diſpleaſure which your maieſtie conceiued, to ſée the ſtates fruſtrated of the hope which they had founded vpon the treatie of France. But ſince the care which your maieſtie hath alwaies had ouer our good and conſeruation is not thereby anie whit diminiſhed, but hath more plentifullie increaſed, according as the neceſſitie of our affaires required; for which the ſaid countrie in generall, and eueric of vs in particular remaine perpetuallie bound to your maieſtie, and acknowledge the ſame with all fidelitie and obeiſance.

The quéenes maieſties moſt gratious fauor acknowledged.

And as the ſaid ſtates (Madam) do conſider that ſince the deceaſe of the prince of Orange they haue ſuſteined the loſſe of diuerſe of their holds and good townes; and that for the preſeruation of the ſaid countrie it is néedfull for them to haue a prince and ſouereigne ruler, which may warrant and defend them againſt the tyrannie and vniuſt oppreſſion of the Spaniards and their adherents, which dailie more and more inforce themſelues by their ſiniſter power and all other meanes to deſtroie and ouerthrow the ſaid countries, and reduce this poore people in perpetuall ſeruitude, worſe than that of the Indians vnder the importable yoke of the deteſtable inquiſition of Spaine. Conſidering alſo that the bodie of the townes and communalties of the aforeſaid countries haue a firme hope, that your maieſtie will not ſée them periſh according to the deſire of their enimies, which make this long and cruell warre, all which outrages the ſtates of the ſaid low countries (following the diligence and band which they owe to their burgeſſes and citizens) are to ſuſteine, repell, and to turne from them, by reaſon of the manifeſt tyrannie & ſeruitude which the Spaniards attempt to bring in & to laie vpon the poore people) thereby to preſerue their liberties, rights, priuileges, and franchiſes, with the exerciſe of the true chriſtian religion, whereof your maieſtie by good right carrieth the title of protectrice and defendreſſe, againſt which the ſaid enimies and their aſſociats alreadie haue and ſtill do make manie leagues, deuiſe manie ſubtilties, treaſons, and ambuſhes, not ceaſing dailie to practiſe and imagine them againſt the perſon of your maieſtie, and to the preiudice of the reſt of your realme and ſtates, whome the good God hath preſerued vntill this preſent, for the wealth of the chriſtians, and ſuſtentation of their churches.

The diſtreſſed ſtate of the low countries after the death of the prince of Orange.

Spaniſh ſeruitude importable.

Wherefore (Madam) it is ſo, that for theſe cauſes, reaſons, & other conſiderations, the ſaid ſtates haue aſſembled and concluded vpon a good and firme reſolution to haue recourſe vnto your maieſtie, ſith it is an ordinarie matter amongſt all people and oppreſſed nations, in their calamities and oppreſſions to craue ſupport and fauour againſt their enimies, of kings and princes nære vnto them, but eſpeciallie of thoſe who be indued with magnanimitie, pietie, iuſtice, and other princelie vertues, to which effect the ſtates haue appointed vs to come vnto your maieſtie to preſent vnto the ſame the principalitie, ſouereignitie, and iuſt gouernment of the ſaid prouinces vnder certeine good and equall conditions, chieflie concerning the preſeruation of the exerciſe of the reformed religion, and of the ancient priuileges, liberties, franchiſes, and cuſtoms, and next of the adminiſtration of the affaires, policie, and iuſtice of the warres in the ſaid countrie.

The cauſe whie the deputies for the ſtates came into England, and their ſute vnto hir highneſſe expreſſed.

The gouernment & principalitie of the low countries preſented to the quéenes maieſtie.

And although that theſe countries haue ſuſteined much hurt by theſe long and continuall warres, and that the enimie hath taken diuers ſtrong places and forts in the ſame countries: yet there is beſides the ſame in the countries of Brabant, Gelderland, Flanders, Malmes, & Overſet, manie good townes and places, which defend themſelues againſt the force of the enimie, and the countries of Holland, Zeland, Vtricht, and Friſe be yet (thanks be to God) entire and whole: in which there be manie great and ſtrong townes and places, faire riuers, and déepe ports and hauens of the ſea, out of which your maieſtie and your ſucceſſors may receiue diuers good ſeruices, fruits, and commodities, whereof it is nédleſſe here to make anie long recitall. Vnelle this Manie good townes and places yet remaining in the low countries defenſible againſt the enimie.

The vniting of the low countries to the realmes of England, &c: how beneficiall.

this amongst other matters deserueth good and especiall consideration, that the vniting of those countries of Holland, Zeland, Frise, and the townes of Sluze and Ostend in Flanders, vnto the realmes of your maiestie importeth so much as the absolute gouernement of the great ocean sea, and by consequence, an assurance and perpetuall felicitie for the subiects of your worthie maiestie. Which we most humblie beseech, that it will please the same to condescend vnto vs in the said points and conditions, and in that which followeth, which is, that you will for you and your lawfull successors in the crowne of England be protectors of the reformed religion, as the principall sufficer and soueraigne gouernor of the said countries: and consequentlie to receiue the people of the same, as your most humble and most obedient subiects vnder the protection and continuall safegard of your maiestie; they being a people assuredlie so faithfull and louing to their princes and lords (be it spoken without vaunting) as anie other nation is throughout christendome.

Protection of the reformed religion a part of their suite.

The loialtie and faithfulnesse of the low countrie people commended.

In doing whereof (Madam) you shall preserue manie goodlie churches, which it hath pleased God to assemble in these latter times in the same countries, at this present in manie places grieuouslie afflicted, and you shall deliuer the same countrie and people (of late before the vniust deeds of the house of Spaine) verie rich and flourishing, through the great commoditie of the sea, ports, hauens, riuers, traffike, and merchandize, whereof they be naturallie indued. You shall I saie (Madam) deliuer them from ruine and perpetuall bondage of bodie and soule, being a worke right royall and most magnificent, acceptable to God, profitable to all christianitie, worthie immortall commendation, answerable to the magnanimitie, and heroicall vertues of your maiestie, and ioined with the assurance and prosperitie of your dominions and subiects. Whereupon we present vnto your maiestie the said articles and conditions, reuerentlie praieng the King of kings to preserue your maiestie from your enimies, to increase your glorie and felicitie, and for euer to keepe you in his holie protection.

Benefits like to insue vpon the said protection vndertaken of hir highnesse.

The said deputies do present certeine articles and conditions to hir maiestie concerning their suite.

¶ This oration ended and the summe thereof considered, it pleased the queenes maiestie, by direction of hir wise and politike councell, to incline hir hart (alwaies pitifull and replenished with commiseration) to the ease and releefe of the said oppressed people. And bicause hir owne subiects should not be vtterlie vnacquainted with hir highnesse doings in that case, there was published by authoritie a booke thereof as in due place hereafter followeth.

On sundaie the fourth of Julie, Charles lord Howard, late lord chamberleine was made lord admerall, and Henrie lord Hunsdon was made lord chamberleine of houshold. On the fift daie of Julie Thomas Alfeld a seminarie priest, and Thomas Weblie diar, were arreigned at the sessions hall in the Old bailie, found guiltie, condemned, and had iudgement as fellons to be hanged: for publishing of bookes conteining false, seditious, and slanderous matter, to the defamation of our souereigne ladie the queene, and to the excitation of insurrection and rebellion, as more at large appeareth in their indictments. These were on the next morrow, to wit, the sixt of Julie, executed at Tiborne accordinglie. On thursdaie the sixteenth of Julie, by the sudden fall of a bricke wall in Thames street of London, neere vnto Dounegate, fiue persons were ouerwhelmed and slaine, to wit, a man & his wife (the wife being great with child) and two children, the one their own, the other a nurse child, and a poore man that liued by charitie, hauing no knowne dwelling place. On the same sixteenth of Julie was sir Francis Russell knight, lord Russell, third sonne to Francis Russell earle of Bedford, slaine with a dag in the borders of Scotland beside Berwike, by a Scot borne in those parts, as they met vpon a true daie, as more at large appeareth in the historie of Scotland. On the nert morrow, to wit, the seuentéenth of Julie, Francis Russell earle of Bedford, knight of the garter, and one of hir maiesties priuie councell, father to the late named sir Francis, lord Russell slaine on the borders of Scotland, deceassed, and was honorablie buried at Cheinies in Bedfordshire on the eight of September nert following.

Earle of Bedford and the lord Russell his sonne deceased.

Inkeld and Weblie hanged for publishing of seditious bookes.

Fiue or rather six people slain by the fall of a wall in London neere vnto Down gate.

On the three and twentith of Julie certeine souldiers were pressed in the seuerall wards of the citie of London, which souldiers being furnished for the warres, and clothed in red cotes, all at the charges of the companies and citizens, set forth toward the seas on the thirteenth of August, and were transported ouer into Holland, Zeland, &c: as other the like souldiers out of other parts of the realme before had béene, to serue for the defense of the low countries vnder generall Norris, and other approued captéins. On the fourth daie of August, betwixt the hours of foure and fiue of the clocke in the morning, at the end of the towne called Notingham in Kent, eight miles from London, in a lane not farre from the houses, the ground began to sinke, three great elmes being swallowed vp, the tops falling downward into a hole with the rotes vpward, turning round in the falling, and driuen into the earth past mans sight, to the wonderfull amazement of manie honest men of the same towne, being beholders of this strange sight: and before ten of the clocke that present day, the ground & trees were sonke so low, that neither the one or other might be discerned, the hole or vaut being sometimes filled with water, and otherwhiles neither bottome, trées, or water maie be perceiued: the compasse of this hole is about foure score yards, and being sounded with a lead and line of fiftie fadams, cannot therewith find or féele anie bottome. Ten yards distant from this place, there is another péece of ground sonke in like maner, which parcell of ground falleth still into the high waie to the great feare of that whole towne, but especiallie to the inhabitants of a house not far distant from the aforesaid places.

Souldiers sent to aid the low countries of Holland, Zeland, &c.

Ground and trées sonke and swallowed vp in Kent eight miles from London.

On the fiftéenth daie of September, to the number of two & thirtie seminaries, massing priests and others, late prisoners in the tower of London, Marshalsée, Kings bench, and other places, were imbarked in the Marie Martine of Colchester, on the southside of the Thames right ouer against S. Katharines, to be transported ouer into the coasts of Normandie, to be banished this realme for euer, by vertue of a commission from hir maiestie, before specified in pag. 1379.

Seminaries and massing priests banished.

A copie of the certificat written and directed into England by the said banished men.

Note in this certificat an acknowledgment of verie great English courtesie to the seminaries in their transportation.

Whereas vpon your honors commission directed vnto Anthonie Hall, and Thomas Stockar, for the transporting of vs whose names are vnder written, into the coasts of Normandie, who accordinglie tooke vs into a barke called the Marie Martine of Colchester, on the south side of the Thames, right ouer that part of saint Katharines next to London bridge, the fiftéenth day of September 1585, according to the computation of England: our will is to testifie vnto your good honors, that they the said Anthonie Hall & Thomas Stockar haue generallie so well vsed vs in all respects, respects, that we can not but acknowledge our selues much beholding (as much as in them laie) to so courteous & louing officers. Neuertheless comming along the sea, and meeting with hir maiesties admerall in the downes, who promising that we should not be disturbed in our course into the prouince of Normandie, according your honors said commission, we had not from him departed two leagues, when as a Flushinger with his people suddenlie entred vpon vs, being peaceablie stowed vnder the hatches, and in our quiet rest, with their swords drawne, their calleiuers and their matches fired in their hands, to our great terror & discomfort, the most of vs being verie sore sea sicke, expecting at that instant nothing but either the rigorous dint of sword, or bullet of calleiuer. Howbeit parlee being had by our said commissioners with them, they departed, after which time we considering the generall danger on the seas, besought with one consent your honors commissioners to set vs on land at Calice: but they in no wise yeelding thereunto, at last by reason of our importunitie in such danger & weakenesse, yeelded to set vs on shore at Bullogne, partlie by reason of the feare we were then put in, & partlie for that we feared afterward more vnreasonable measure; but speciallie the greatest number of vs so sore sicke, that verie tedious vnto vs it seemed to beare so long and dangerous a passage. In witnes whereof to this our certificat we haue all subscribed our names the nineteenth of September 1585. W. Gimlets, R. Fen: Jo. Pele: Christopher Small, &c.

The seminaries suddenlie assaulted and in danger of death by a Flushinger as they were passing ouer sea.

The seminaries are set on shore at Bullogne through their owne importunitie.

We haue heard before that certeine souldiers out of diuers parts of this realme were transported ouer the seas into Holland and Zeland, &c: with such conuenient and seruiceable furniture, as might be presupposed necessarie for defense: whom we will leaue vpon their gard, and more clearelie to set forth the reasons of their transportation, we do meane heere, as we promised before page 1413. when we came to due place, to deliuer a booke published by authoritie concerning that argument, the title and substance whereof in all points agreeable with the printed copie first extant, doth orderlie follow.

A declaration of the causes mooving the queene of England to giue aid to the defense of the people afflicted and oppressed in the low countries.

Kings and princes soueregnes, are to yeeld account of their actions onelie to almightie God, the king of kings.

ALthough kings and princes soueregnes, owing their homage and seruice onelie vnto the almightie God the King of all kings, are in that respect not bound to yeeld account or render the reasons of their actions to anie others but to God their onelie soueregne Lord: yet (though amongst the most ancient and christian monarchs the same Lord God hauing committed to vs the soueregntie of this realme of England and other our dominions, which we hold immediatlie of the same almightie Lord, and so thereby accountable onelie to his diuine Maiestie) we are notwithstanding this our prerogatiue at this time speciallie moued, for diuerse reasons hereafter briefle remembred, to publish not onelie vnto our owne naturall louing subiects, but also to all others our neighbors, speciallie to such princes & states as are our confederats, or haue for their subiects cause of commerce with our countries and people, what our intention is at this time, and vpon what iust and reasonable grounds we are moued to giue aid vnto our nert neighbours the naturall people of the low countries, being by long warres and persecutions of strange nations there, lamentablie afflicted, and in present danger to be brought into a perpetuall seruitude.

Naturall causes of the ancient continuall traffike betwixt the people of England & them of the low countries.

First, it is to be vnderstood (which perease is not perfectlie knowne to a great number of persons) that there hath beene, time out of mind, euen by the naturall situation of those low countries and our realme of England, one directlie opposit to the other, and by reason of the readie crossing of the seas, and multitude of large and commodious hauens respectiuelie on both sides, a continuall traffike and commerce betwixt the people of England, and the naturall people of those low countries, and so continued in all ancient times, when the seuerall prouinces thereof, as Flanders, Holland, and Zeland, and other countries to them adioining, were ruled and possessed by seuerall lords, and not united togither, as of late yeares they haue beene by intermarriages, and at length by concurrences of manie and sundrie titles haue also beene reduced to be vnder the gouernement of their lords that succeeded to the dukedome of Burgundie: whereby there hath beene in former ages manie speciall alliances and confederations, not onelie betwixt the kings of England our progenitors and the lords of the said countries of Flanders, Holland, Zeland, and their adherents: but also betwixt the verie naturall subiects of both countries, as the prelats, noblemen, citizens, burgesses, and other communalties of the great cities and port townes of either countrie reciprocallie, by speciall obligations and stipulations vnder their seales interchangeablie, for maintenance both of commerce and intercourse of merchants, & also of speciall mutuall amitie to be obserued betwixt the people and inhabitants of both parties as well ecclesiasticall as secular: and verie expresse prouision in such treaties conteined for mutuall fauours, affections, and all other friendlie offices to be vsed and prosecuted by the people of the one nation towards the other. By which mutuall bonds, there hath continued perpetuall vnions of the peoples hearts togither, and so by waie of continuall intercourses, from age to age the same mutuall loue hath beene inuiolablie kept and exercised, as it had beene by the worke of nature, and neuer vtterlie dissolued, nor yet for anie long time discontinued, howsoeuer the kings, and the lords of the countries sometimes (though verie rarelie) haue beene at difference by sinister meanes of some other princes their neighbours, enuieng the felicitie of these two countries.

Confederatitions both betwixt the kings of England and lords of the low countries, and also the subiects of both countries.

The people of both the countries bound by speciall obligations interchangeablie, for mutuall fauours; and friendlie offices.

And for maintenance and testimonie of these naturall vnions of the peoples of these kingdoms and countries in perpetuall amitie, there are extant sundrie authentike treaties and transactions for mutuall commerce, intercourse and streict amitie of ancient times: as for example, some verie solemnelie accorded in the times of king Henrie the first our progenitor, and Philip the second duke of Burgundie, and inheritour to the countie of Flanders by the ladie Margaret his grandmother, which was aboue one hundred & fortie yeares past, & the same also renewed by the noble duke Charles his son, father to the king of Spaines grandmother, and husband to the ladie Margaret sister to our great grandfather king Edward the fourth: and after that, of new oftimes renewed by our most noble & sage grandfather king Henrie the seuenth, and the archduke Philip grandfather to the king of Spaine now being: and in latter times, often renewed betwixt our father of noble memorie king Henrie the eight, and Charles the fift emperor of Almaine, father also to the present king of Spaine.

Treaties extant of ancient time, betwixt the kings of England and the dukes of Burgundie, for the commerce betwixt their countries.

In all which treaties, transactions, and confederations of amitie and mutuall commerce, it was also at all times speciallie and principallie conteined

Conuentions for the subiects of either side, to shew mutuall fauors one to the other.

in

in expresse words, by conuentions, concords, and conclusions, that the naturall people, and subiects of either side, should shew mutuall fauours and duties one to the other, and should safelie, freelie and securelie commerce togither in euerie their countries; and so hath the same mutuall and naturall concourse and commerce beene without interruption continued in manie ages, farre aboue the like example of anie other countries in christendome, to the honour and strength of the princes, and to the singular great benefit and inriching of their people: vntill of late yeares that the king of Spaine departing out of his low countries into Spaine, hath beene (as it is to be thought) counselled by his councellors of Spaine, to appoint Spaniards, forreners and strangers of strange bloud, men more exercised in warres than in peaceable gouernement, and some of them notablie delighted in bloud, as hath appeared by their actions, to be the chiefest gouernours of all his said low countries, contrarie to the ancient lawes and customes thereof, hauing great plentie of noble, valiant and faithfull persons naturallie borne, and such as the emperour Charles, and the king himselfe had to their great honours vsed in their seruice, able to haue beene imploied in the rule of those countries.

Spaniards and strangers latelie appointed gouernors in the low countries, to the violation of the liberties of the countrie.

But these Spaniards, being meere strangers, hauing no naturall regard in their gouernement to the maintenance of those countries and people in their ancient and naturall maner of peaceable liuing, as the most noble and wise emperor Charles; yea and as his sonne king Philip himselfe had, whilest he remained in those countries, and vsed the counsels of the states and naturall of the countries, not violating the ancient liberties of the countries: but contrariwise, these Spaniards being exalted to absolute gouernement, by ambition, and for priuat lucre haue violentlie broken the ancient lawes and liberties of all the countries, and in a tyrannous sort haue banished, killed and destroied without order of law, within the space of few moneths, manie of the most ancient and principall persons of the naturall nobilitie that were most worthie of gouernement. And howsoeuer in the beginning of these cruell persecutions, the pretense therof was for maintenance of the Romish religion: yet they spared not to depriue verie manie catholikes and ecclesiasticall persons of their franchises and priuileges: and of the chiefest that were executed of the nobilitie, none was in the whole countrie more affected to that religion than was the noble and valiant countie of Egmond, the verie glorie of that countrie, who nether for his singular victories in the seruice of the king of Spaine can be forgotten in the true histories, nor yet for the crueltie vsed for his destruction, to be but for euer lamented in the harts of the naturall people of that countrie.

The destruction of the nobilitie, and the people of the countries by the Spanish gouernement.

The lamentable violent death of the countie of Egmond, the glorie of those countries.

And furthermore, to bring these whole countries in seruitude to Spaine, these forren gouernours haue by long intestine warre, with multitude of Spaniards, and with some few Italians and Almains, made the greater part of the said countries (which with their riches by common estimation answered the emperour Charles equallie to his Indies) in a maner desolat, and haue also lamentablie destroied by sword, famine, and other cruell maners of death, a great part of the naturall people, & now the rich townes and strong places being desolate of their naturall inhabitants, are held and kept chieflie with force by the Spaniards. All which pitifull miseries and horrible calamities of these most rich countries and people, are of all their neighbours at this daie, euen of such as in ancient time haue beene at frequent discord with them through naturall compassion verie greatlie pitied, which appeared spetiallie this present yeare, when the French king pretended to haue receiued them to his protection, had not (as the states of the countrie & their deputies were answered) that certeine vntimelie and vnlooked for complots of the house of Guise, stirred and maintened by monie out of Spaine, disturbed the good and generall peace of France, and thereby urged the king to forbeare from the resolution he had made; not onlie to aid the oppressed people of the low countries against the Spaniards, but also to haue accepted them as his owne subiects. But in verie truth, howsoeuer they were pitied, and in a sort for a time comforted & kept in hope in France by the French king, who also hath oftentimes earnestlie solicited vs as queene of England, both by message and writing to be carefull of their defense: yet in respect that they were otherwise more streictlie knit in ancient friendship to this realme than to anie other countrie, we are sure that they could be pitied of none for this long time with more cause and griefe generallie, than of our subiects of this our realme of England, being their most ancient allies and familiar neighbours: and that in such manner, as this our realme of England and those countries haue beene by common language of long time resembled and termed as man and wife.

The French kings offers to haue aided and receiued to his subiection the oppressed people of the low countries.

And for these vrgent causes and manie others, we haue by manie frendlie messages and ambassadors, by manie letters and writings to the said king of Spaine our brother and alie, declared our compassion of this so euill and cruell vsage of his naturall and loiall people by sundrie his martiall gouernors and other his men of warre, all strangers to these his countries. And furthermore, as a good louing sister to him, and a naturall good neighbour to his lowe countries and people, we haue often, and often againe most friendlie warned him, that if he did not otherwise by his wisedome and princelie clemencie restreine the tyrannie of his gouernours and crueltie of his men of warre, we feared that the people of his countries should be forced for safetie of their liues, and for continuance of their natiue countrie in the former state of their liberties, to seeke the protection of some other forreine lord, or rather to yeeld themselues wholie to the souereignetie of some mightie prince, as by the ancient lawes of their countries, and by spetiall priuileges granted by some of the lords and dukes of the countries to the people, they do pretend and affirme, that in such cases of generall iniustice, and vpon such violent breaking of their priuileges they are free from their former homages, and at libertie to make choise of anie other prince to be their prince and head.

The queene of Englands continuall frendlie aduises to the king of Spaine for restreining of the tyrannie of his gouernors.

The proofe whereof by examples past is to be seene & read in the ancient histories of diuerse alterations, of the lords and ladies of the countries of Brabant, Flanders, Holland, and Zeland, and other countries to them vnited by the states and people of the countries; and that by some such alterations, as the stories do testifie, Philip the duke of Burgundie came to his title, from which the king of Spaines interest is deriued: but the further discussion hereof, we leaue to the view of the monuments and records of the countries. And now, for the purposes to staie them from yeelding themselues in anie like sort to the souereignetie of anie other strange prince, certeine yeares past, vpon the earnest request of sundrie of the greatest persons of degree in those countries, and most obedient subiects to the king, such as were the duke of Ascot, and the marquesse of Hauerie yet liuing, and of such others as had principall offices in those countries in the time of the emperour Charles, we yeelded at their importunat requests, to grant them

The queene of Englands meanes vsed to staie the states of the lowe countries frō yeelding their subiection to anie other forreine prince.

The rich townes and strengths with the wealth therof possessed by the Spaniards.

them preſts of monie, onelie to continue them as his ſubiects, and to mainteine themſelues in their full defenſe againſt the violence and cruelties of the Spaniards their oppreſſours, thereby ſtaieng them from yeelding their ſubiection to anie other prince from the ſaid king of Spaine: and during the time of that our aid giuen to them, and their ſtaie in their obedience to the king of Spaine, we did freelie acquaint the ſame king with our actions, and did ſtill continue our freendlie aduiſes to him, to moue him to command his gouernours and men of warre, not to vſe ſuch inſolent cruelties againſt his people, as might make them to deſpaire of his fauours, and ſeeke ſome other lord.

And in theſe kind of perſuaſions and actions we continued manie yeares, not onelie for compaſſion of the miſerable ſtate of the countries, but of a naturall diſpoſition to haue the ancient conditions of ſtreict amitie and commerce for our kingdoms and people to continue with the ſtates and the people of the ſaid dukedome of Burgundie and the appendents, and namelie with our next neighbours the countries of Flanders, Holland and Zeland. For we did manifeſtlie ſee, if the nation of Spaine ſhould make a conqueſt of thoſe countries, as was and yet is apparantlie intended, and plant themſelues there as they haue done in Naples and other countries, adding thereto the late examples of the violent hoſtile enterpriſe of a power of Spaniards, being ſent within theſe few yeares by the king of Spaine and the pope into our realme of Ireland, with an intent manifeſtlie confeſſed by the capteins, that thoſe numbers were ſent afore hand to ſeize vpon ſome ſtrength there, to the intent with other great forces to purſue a conqueſt thereof: we did (we ſaie againe) manifeſtlie ſee in what danger our ſelfe, our countries and people might ſhortlie be, if in conuenient time we did not ſpeedilie otherwiſe regard to preuent or ſtaie the ſame. And yet notwithſtanding our ſaid often requeſts and aduiſes giuen to the king of Spaine, manifeſtlie for his owne weale and honor, we found him by his councell of Spaine ſo vnwilling in anie ſort to incline to our freendlie counſell, that his gouernours and chæfeteins in his low countries increaſed their cruelties towards his owne afflicted people, and his officers in Spaine offered dailie greater iniuries to ours, reſorting thither for traffike: yea, they of his councell in Spaine would not permit our expreſſe meſſenger with our letters to come to the king their maſters preſence: a matter verie ſtrange, and againſt the law of nations.

And the cauſe of this our writing and ſending to the king, proceeded of matter that was worthie to be knowne to the king, and not vnmeet now alſo to be declared to the world, to ſhew both our good diſpoſition towards the king in imparting to him our greefes, and to let it appeare how euill we haue beene vſed by his miniſters, as in ſome part may appeare by this that followeth. Although we could not haue theſe manie yeares paſt anie of our ſeruants, whom we ſent at ſundrie times as our ambaſſadours to the king our good brother (as was meet) ſuffered to continue there without manie iniuries and indignities offered to their families, and diuerſe times to their owne perſons by the greateſt of his councellours, ſo as they were conſtreined to leaue their places, and ſome expelled and in a ſort baniſhed the countrie, without cauſe giuen by them, or notified to vs: yet we, minding to continue verie good freendſhip with the king, as his good ſiſter, did of long time and manie yeares giue fauourable allowance to all that came as his ambaſſadours to vs, ſauing onelie vpon manifeſt dangerous practiſes attempted by two of them to trouble our eſtate, whereof the one was Girald Deſpes, a verie turbulent ſpirited perſon, and altogither vnskilfull and vnapt to deale in princes affaires being in amitie, as at his returne into Spaine he was ſo there alſo reputed; the other and laſt was Bernardin de Mendoza, one whome we did accept and vſe with great fauour a long time, as was manifeſtlie ſeene in our court, and we thinke cannot be denied by himſelfe: but yet of late yeares (we know not by what direction) we found him to be a ſecret great fauourer to ſundrie our euill diſpoſed and ſeditious ſubiects, not onelie to ſuch as lurked in our realme, but alſo to ſuch as fled the ſame, being notoriouſlie condemned as open rebels & traitours, with whome by his letters, meſſages, and ſecret counſels he did in the end deuiſe how with a power of men, partlie to come out of Spaine, partlie out of the low countries, whereof he gaue them great comfort in the kings name, an inuaſion might be made into our realme, ſetting downe in writing the manner how the ſame ſhould be done, with what numbers of men and ſhips, and vpon what coaſts, ports, and places of our realme by ſpeciall name, and who the perſons ſhould be in our realme of no ſmall account, that ſhould fauour this inuaſion, and take part with the inuadours, with manie other circumſtances declaring his full ſet purpoſe and labours taken, to trouble vs and our realme verie dangerouſlie, as hath beene moſt cleerelie proued and confeſſed by ſuch as were in that confederacie with him, whereof ſome are fled and now do frequent his companie in France, and ſome were taken, who confeſſed at great length by writing the whole courſe herein held by the ſaid ambaſſadour, as was manifeſtlie of late time publiſhed to the world vpon Francis Throgmortons a principall traitours examination.

And when we found manifeſtlie this ambaſſadour ſo dangerous an inſtrument, or rather a head to a rebellion and inuaſion; and that for a yeare or more togither he neuer brought to vs anie letter from the king his maſter, notwithſtanding our often requeſt made to him that he would by ſome letter from the king to vs, let it appeare that it was the kings will that he ſhould deale with vs in his maſters name in ſundrie things that he propounded to vs as his ambaſſadour, which we did iudge to be contrarie to the king his maſters will: we did finallie cauſe him to be charged with theſe dangerous practiſes, and made it patent to him how, and by whome, with manie other circumſtances we knew it, and therefore cauſed him in verie gentle ſort to be content within ſome reaſonable time to depart out of our realme, the rather for his owne ſafetie, as one in verie deed mortallie hated of our people: for the which we granted him fauourable conduct, both to the ſea and ouer the ſea: and thereupon we did ſpeedilie ſend a ſeruant of ours into Spaine with our letters to the king, onelie to certifie him of this accident, and to make the whole matter aparant vnto him: and this was the meſſenger afore mentioned, that might not be ſuffered to deliuer our meſſage or our letters to the king.

And beſide theſe indignities, it is moſt manifeſt how his miniſters alſo haue both heretofore manie times, and now latelie practiſed here in England by meanes of certeine rebels, to haue procured ſundrie inuaſions of our realme, by their forces out of Spaine and the low countries: verie hard recompenſes (we may ſaie) for ſo manie our good offices. Hereupon we hope no reaſonable perſon can blame vs, if we haue diſpoſed our ſelues to change this our former courſe, and more carefullie to looke to the ſafetie of our ſelfe and our people: and finding our owne dangers in deed verie great and imminent, we haue beene

Two turbulent ſpirited perſons (Spaniards) doing what they could to ſet all England in a tumult.

The enterpriſe of the Spaniards in Ireland ſent by the king of Spaine and the pope.

See the voluntarie confeſſion of F. Throgmorton in pages 1370, 1373.

The refuſall of the queenes meſſenger, and hir letters to the king of Spaine.

The iuſt cauſes of diſmiſſing of Barnardin Mendoza out of England.

The courteous dealing of hir maieſtie with Mendoza (a man mortallie hated) departing out of England.

bæne the more vrgentlie prouoked to attempt and accelerat some god remedie, for that besides manie other aduises giuen vs both at home & from abrode, in due time to withstand these dangers, we haue found the generall disposition of all our owne faithfull people verie readie in this case, and earnest in offering to vs both in parlements and otherwise, their seruices with their bodies and bloud, and their aids with their lands and goods, to withstand and preuent this present common danger to our realme and themselues, euidentlie seene and feared by the subuerting and roting vp of the ancient nation of these low countries, and by planting the Spanish nation and men of war, enimies to our countries, there so neere vnto vs.

The quéne of Englads proceeding for the deliuerie of Scotland from the seruitude wherein the house of Guise meant to haue brought it.

And besides these occasions and considerations, we did also call to our remembrance our former fortunat procéeding by Gods spectall fauor, in the beginning of our reigne, in remedieng of a like mischéefe that was intended against vs in Scotland by certeine Frenchmen, who then were directed onelie by the house of Guise, by colour of the marriage of their néece the quéene of Scots with the Dolphin of France, in like maner as the offsprings of the said house haue euen now latelie sought to atteine to the like inordinate power in France: a matter of some consequence for our selues to consider; although we hope the king our god brother professing sincere friendship towards vs, as we professe the like to him, will moderate this aspiring greatnesse of that house, that neither himselfe, nor the princes of his bloud be ouerruled, nor we (minding to continue perfect friendship with the king & his bloud) be by the said house of Guise & their faction disquieted or disturbed in our countries. But now to returne to this like example of Scotland aforesaid. When the French had in like maner (as the Spaniards haue now of long time attempted in the low countries) sought by force to haue subdued the people there, and brought them into a seruitude to the crowne of France, and also by the ambitious desires of the said house of Guise, to haue procéeded to a warre by waie of Scotland, for the conquest of our crowne for their néece the quæne of Scots (a matter most manifest to the common knowledge of the world) it pleased almightie God, as it remaineth in god memorie to our honor and comfort, to further our tention and honorable and iust actions at that time in such sort, as by our aiding then of the nation of Scotland being sore oppressed with the French, and vniuersallie requiring our aid, we procured to that realme (though to our great cost) a full deliuerance of the force of strangers and danger of seruitude, and restored peace to the whole countrie, which hath continued there euer since manie yeres, sauing that at some time of parcialities of certeine of the noble men, as hath bæne vsuall in that countrie, in the minoritie of the yong king, there haue risen some inward troubles, which for the most part we haue in fauor of the king and his gouernors vsed meanes to pacifie: so as at this daie such is the quietnesse in Scotland, as the king our deare brother & cousine, by name James the first, a prince of great hope for manie god princelie respects, reigneth there in honor and loue of his people, and in verie god and perfect amitie with vs and our countrie. And so our actions at that time came to so god successe by the goodnesse of God, as both our owne realme, and that of Scotland, hath euer since remained in better amitie and peace than can be remembred these manie hundred yeares before; and yet nothing hereby done by vs, nor anie cause iustlie giuen: but that also the French kings that haue since succéeded, which haue bæne three in number, and all brethren, haue made and concluded diuerse treaties for god peace with vs, which presentlie continue in force on both parties, notwithstanding our foresaid actions attempted, for removing out of Scotland of the said French forces, so transported by the onelie direction of the house of Guise.

The realme of Scotland restored to the ancient frédome, and so possessed by the present king by the meanes onelie of the quéene of England.

The conclusion of the causes of sending of certeine cõpanies of English souldiors to the defense of the oppressed people of the low countries, and to withstand the attempts against this realme.

And therefore, to conclude for the declaration of our present intention at this time, we hope it shall of all persons abroad be well interpreted, as we know it will be of such as are not led by parcialitie, that vpon the often and continuall lamentable requests made to vs by the vniuersall states of the countries of Holland, Zeland, Guelders, and other prouinces with them vnited (being desperat of the king of Spaines fauours) for our succours to be yéelded to them, onelie for their defense against the Spaniards and other strangers, and therewith finding manifestlie by our often and importunat requests and aduises giuen to the king of Spaine, no hope of relefe of these their miseries, but rather an increase thereof by dailie conquests of their townes and slaughter of their people (though in verie truth we cannot impute the increase of anie late cruelties to the person of him that now hath the title of generall gouernor, shewing his naturall disposition more inclinable to mercie and clemencie, than it seemeth he can direct the hearts of the Spaniards vnder him, that haue bæne so long trained in shedding of bloud vnder the former Spanish gouernors) and ioining thereunto our owne danger at hand, by the ouerthrow and destruction of our neighbours, and accesse and planting of the great forces of the Spaniards so neere to our countries, with precedent arguments of manie troublesome attempts against our realme: we did therefore by god aduise and after long deliberation determine, to send certeine companies of souldiors to aid the naturall people of those countries, onelie to defend them and their townes from sacking and desolation, & thereby to procure them safetie, to the honor of God, whome they desire to serue sincerelie as christian people according to his holie word, and to inioie their ancient liberties for them and their posteritie, and so consequentlie to preserue and continue the lawfull and ancient commerce betwixt our people and those countries and ours.

And so we hope our intention herein, and our subsequent actions will be by Gods fauour both honorablie interpreted of all persons (sauing of the oppressors themselues, and their partizans) in that we meane not hereby, either for ambition or malice (the two rots of all iniustice) to make anie particular profit hereof to our selfe or to our people; onelie desiring at this time to obteine by Gods fauour for the countries, a deliuerance of them from warre by the Spaniards and forraines: a restitution of their ancient liberties and gouernement by some christian peace, and thereby a suertie for our selues and our realme to be free from inuading neighbors: and our people to inioie in those countries their lawfull commerce and intercourse of friendship & merchandize, according to the ancient vsage and treaties of intercourse, made betwixt our progenitors and the lords and earles of those countries, and betwixt our people and the people of those countries.

Three speciall things reasonablie desired by the quæne of England.
1. The end of warres with restitution of the low countries to their ancient liberties.
2. Suertie frõ inuasion of hir owne realme.
3. And renewing of the mutuall traffike betwéene the countries.

The causes of taking some townes into hir maiesties custodie.

And though our further intention also is, or maie be, to take into our gard some few townes vpon the sea side next opposite to our realme, which otherwise might be in danger to be taken by the strangers, enimies of the countrie: yet therein considering we haue no meaning at this time to take and reteine the same to our owne proper vse: we hope that all persons will thinke it agreeable with god reason and princelie policie, that we should haue the gard

and

and vse of some such places for sure accesse and recesse of our people and souldiors in safetie, and for furniture of them with vittels and other things requisit and necessarie, whilest it shall be needfull for them to continue in those countries for the aiding thereof in these their great calamities, miseries, and imminent danger, and vntill the countries may be deliuered of such strange forces as do now oppresse them, and recouer their ancient lawfull liberties and maner of gouernement, to liue in peace as they haue heretofore done, and do now most earnestlie in lamentable manner desire to do, which are the verie onelie true ends of all our actions now intended: howsoeuer malicious tongs make vtter their cankred conceits to the contrarie, as at this daie the world aboundeth with such blasphemous reports in writings and infamous libels, as in no age the diuell hath more abounded with notable spirits replenished with all wickednesse to vtter his rage against professors of christian religion. But thereof we leaue the reuenge to God the searcher of hearts, hoping that he beholding the sinceritie of our heart, will grant good successe to our intentions, whereby a christian peace may insue to his diuine honor, and comfort to all them that loue peace trulie, and will seeke it sincerelie.

An addition to the declaration, touching the slanders published of hir maiestie.

The summe of a slanderous pamphlet published in the Italian tong against the quenes maiestie.

After we had finished our declaration, there came to our hands a pamphlet written in Italian, printed at Milan, intitled Auuiso aduiso, directed to the archbishop of Milan, conteining a report of the expugnation of Antwerp by the prince of Parma: by the which we found our selfe most maliciouslie charged with two notable crimes, no lesse hatefull to the world, than most repugnant and contrarie to our owne naturall inclination. The one with ingratitude towards the king of Spaine, who (as the author saith) saued our life being iustlie by sentence adiudged to death in our sisters time: the other, that there were some persons procured to be corrupted with great promises, and that with our intelligence, as the reporter addeth in a parenthesis in these words (as it was said) that the life of the prince of Parma should be taken awaie. And for the better proouing and countenancing of this horrible lie, it is further added in the said pamphlet, that it pleased the Lord God to discouer this, and bring two of the wicked persons to iustice. Now, knowing how men are maliciouslie bent in this declining age of the world, both to iudge, speake, and write maliciouslie, falslie, and vnreuerentlie of princes: and holding nothing so deere vnto vs, as the conseruation of our reputation and honor to be blameless: we found it verie expedient, not to suffer two such horrible imputations to passe vnder silence; lest for lacke of answer, it might argue a kind of guiltinesse, and did therefore thinke, that what might be alledged by vs for our iustification in that behalfe, might most aptlie be ioined vnto this former declaration now to be published, to laie open before the world, the maner and ground of our proceeding in the causes of the low countries.

The quenes maiestie is gelous ouer the conseruation of hir reputation.

An answer to the first point of the said pamphlet, clearing hir highnes of ingratitude.

And for answer of the first point wherewith we are charged, touching our ingratitude towards the king of Spaine; as we do most willinglie acknowledge that we were beholding vnto him in the time of our late sister, which we then did acknowledge verie thankefullie, and haue sought manie waies since in like sort to requite, as in our former declaration by our actions maie appeare: so do we vtterlie denie as a most manifest vntruth, that euer he was the cause of the sauing of our life as a person by course of iustice sentenced vnto death, who euer carried our selfe towards our said sister in dutifull sort, as our loialtie was neuer called in question, much lesse anie sentence of death pronounced against vs: a matter such, as in respect of the ordinarie course of proceeding, as by processe in law, by place of triall, by the iudge that should pronounce such sentence, and other necessarie circumstances in like cases vsuall, especiallie against one of our qualitie, as it could not but haue beene publikelie knowne, if anie such thing had beene put in execution. This then being true, we leaue to the world to iudge how maliciouslie and iniuriouslie the author of the said pamphlet dealeth with vs, in charging vs by so notable an vntruth, with a vice that of all other we do most hate and abhorre. And therefore by the manifest vntruth of this imputation, men not transported with passion maie easilie discerne what vntruth is conteined in the second, by the which we are charged to haue beene acquainted with an intended attempt against the life of the said prince: a matter, if anie such thing should haue beene by vs intended, must haue proceeded either of a misliking we had of his person, or that the prosecution of the warres in the low countries was so committed vnto him, as no other might prosecute the same but he.

The second point of the pamphlet answered to the full satisfaction of anie that is reasonable.

And first for his person, we could neuer learne that he hath at anie time, by act or speach, done anie thing that might iustlie breed a mislike in vs towards him, much lesse a hatred against his person in so high a degree, as to be either priuie or assenting to the taking awaie of his life. Besides, he is one of whom we haue euer had an honorable conceit, in respect of those singular rare parts we alwaies haue noted in him, which hath wonne vnto him as great reputation, as anie man this daie liuing carrieth of his degree and qualitie: and so haue we alwaies deliuered out by speach vnto the world, when anie occasion hath beene offered to make mention of him.

The prosecution of the warres in the low countries is not like to cease, though the prince of Parma were dead.

Now touching the prosecution committed vnto him of the warres in the low countries, as all men of iudgement know, that the taking awaie of his life carrieth no likelihood that the same shall worke anie end of the said prosecution: so is it manifestlie knowne, that no man hath dealt more honorablie than the said prince, either in dulie obseruing of his promise, or extending grace and mercie, where merit and desert hath craued the same: and therefore no greater impietie by anie could be wrought, nor nothing more preiudiciall to our selfe (so long as the king shall continue the prosecution of the cause in that forcible sort he now doth) than to be an instrument to take him awaie from thense by such violent meanes, that hath dealt in a more honorable and gratious sort in the charge committed vnto him, than anie other that hath euer gone before him, or is likelie to succeed after him.

This being dulie pondered, all the world maie see how vniustlie hir highnesse is slandered.

Now therefore how vnlikelie it is, that we hauing neither cause to mislike of his person, nor that the prosecution of the warres should cease by losse of him, should be either author, or anie waie assenting to so horrible a fact, we referre to the iudgement of such as looke into causes, not with the eies of their affection; but do measure and weigh things according to honor and reason. Besides, it is likelie if it had beene true that we had bin anie waie chargeable (as the author reporteth) the confessions of the parties executed (importing such matter as by him is alledged) would haue beene both produced and published: for malice leaueth nothing vnsearched, that

The nature of malice compri-

maie

led in a sentence of few words.

maie nourish the venome of that humor.

The best course therefore that both we and all other princes can hold in this vnfortunat age that ouerfloweth with numbers of malignant spirits, is through the grace and godnesse of almightie God, to direct our course in such sort, as they maie rather shew their wils through malice, than with iust cause by desert to saie ill, or deface princes either by speech or writing: assuring our selues that besides the punishment that such wicked and infamous libellors shall receiue at the hands of the almightie for deprauing of princes and lawfull magistrats, who are Gods ministers; they both are and alwaies shall be thought by all good men, vnworthie to liue vpon the face of the earth.

The reward that wicked and infamous libellors shall reape at the hands of God and men.

Giuen at Richmount the first of October, 1585, and the 27 yeare of the reigne of our souereigne ladie the queene, to be published.

In the moneths of November and December, manie horsses and men were shipped at the Tower wharfe to be transported ouer into the low countries. And on the first of December the right honorable lord Robert Dudleie earle of Leicester, lord lieutenant generall (after he had taken his leaue of hir maiestie and the court) with his traine entred the towne of Colchester in Esser, where the maior & his brethren, all in scarlet gownes, with multitudes of people met him, and so with great solemnitie entred the towne, where he lodged that night, and on the nert morrow set forward to Harwich, into the which towne he was accordinglie receiued and interteined. On the eight of December, accompanied with diuers lords and knights, he arriued at Flushing, where he was interteined by sir Philip Sidneie gouernour, the Graue Morris, the states of the towne, and others passing honorablie. The nert day he sailed to Middleborough, where his receiuing was answerable to his person; and after certeine daies there spent, as occasions then moued, he came to Willamstat, then to Rotherodam, then to Delph, where he lodged euen in the house where the prince of Orange was slaine. And after a daie or twoes tarrance, he remoued thense to Donhage, where he was interteined with ten seuerall shewes, of no lesse rare inuention than exquisit sumptuousnesse, so glad were the people (best and worst, one with another) of his comming. Certeine daies passed, and Januarie entred, the lord lieutenant with three hundred horsses in their furniture entred Leidon, where he was receiued of the burgomasters, burgesses, and others, with seuen seuerall shewes that follow. It is to be noted, that eight yeares before this, they were besieged, and therefore now presented their extremities, which at that time they were driuen into. They brought therefore a faire woman on the stage verie brauelie apparelled, & she representing the towne, hir they assalted by Spaniards, with false fiers of great and small shot a long time in order of battell. & then retiring continued their siege; heere they laie so long that vittels waxed scarse, and then they presented after the poets, of what this shew had passed. Famine attired accordinglie then breathed into the woman, after which they presented men rending dogs and cats aliue in sunder, and fed on them, and souldiors robbing women of their children.

The earle of Leicesters passing ouer into the low countries.

The first shew of a woman representing Leidon.

The second shew of famine.

Sicknesse now possesseth hir and pestilence, and this they presented in abrupt burials of townesmen on heapes; and lastlie with a braue buriall of a capteine, who was borne ouer the stage with dead matches, howling trumpets, wrapt vp ancients, trailed pikes, drawne péeces; and after he was put into the ground, and bid farewell with a volée of great and small shot. The Spaniards pitieng hir, writ and sent letters by diuerse messengers, all which she read and refused, without returne of answer: now hope possesseth hir, and therefore they toke another waie. Now she commanded a light to be set on the highest steeple in the towne, to signifie vnto the prince of Orange that laie in Delph, how they hoped for succor; who againe by deuise of a doue sent them promise of aid, by which doue they promised to attend the good houre, and so the shew ended.

The third shew of sicknesse.

The fourth shew of Spanish seruitude.

The fift shew of hope to be succored.

Now came Gods prouidence, vpon whome the towne relied, and she leaned: Gods prouidence in the dead of the night ouerthrew a peece of the wall and bawmure of six and twentie poles. Which the enimie hearing, and fearing the prince and his power to be entred for their aid, they fled, whome when the towne had in pursute, they put all they ouertoke to the sword, the rest escaped by flight, and so with the woman as it were now at libertie that presented the towne, they marched awaie merilie with great triumph. At the last they brought in a woman verie braue, armed as the other was, hir they besieged with a Spaniard, intised with a Frenchman, and flattered with an Italian twise, the Spaniard put by, she fled the stage, and leaping off hastilie hid hir selfe vnder the earls cloke, whom he shadowed, and the Spaniard threatning marched awaie. The earle led hir to his lodging, wherein to he entred with shot. On the skaffold were written these verses, in effect as followeth in English:

The first shew of hope to be succored.

The last shew of libertie, victorie, and triumph.

We Flemings being banished, now wailing here,
We are as they in Babylon, by the water clere,
Bicause we wold not worship idols, but Gods word,
And might not sing our praise vnto the Lord,
Are we driuen out as now dooth appeere,
But our deliuerance is now verie neere,
For God hath looked vpon our miserableness,
And sent vs a prince whom he will blesse,
Which praised be God as it dooth beseeme,
Who hath deliuered vs from dangerous case,
And humbled the heart of such a noble queene,
As hath sent vs a gouernor now in this space,
Laieng his hand to the warres through his grace,
And his arme mightilie, the which vs defend,
Thus praised may he be world without end,
Which sendeth such a prince aboue all that liueth,
And one that gouerns to gods honor he now giueth.

These verses seeme to be made by no metrician, perhaps they were deuised by some of Leidon.

So passing on to my lords lodging, on the doore of the entring were written these verses following:

Pro auspicijs illustrissimi & generosissimi comitis Roberti Dudlæi, regiæ maiestati apud Anglos à consilijs, & gubernatoris Belgiæ, &c: ad Hollandos consolatio.

Inter Iberiadum furias & tigridis iras,
Oppressi fletum comprimitote viri,
Nos licèt innumeris hostilia bella periclis
Assidue infestent, mille necesque trahant,
Nostra tamen Domini rebus fiducia fisit
In Domino, miseris expediet facilè.
Nicanor Lestrygenus viribus malè nostras
Ceruices pulsat, barbara verba vomens:
Viribus at Lecestranis iugulabitur ille,
En Machabæus adest, qui Nicanora premat,
Auspicio Christi, qui in vitam funera vertit,
Qui fidei vindex, qui mala nostra leuat.
En generose comes, Dauidis pia facta sequutus,
Iusticiæ exerce iura seuera tuæ:
Et tibi sit præsens magnum qui temperat orbem,
Vt pede victrici colla teras Goliæ.

Verses written vpon the doore of the lord lieutenants lodging.

On the daie after his comming to the towne, he was banketted, at which banket were orations and deuises manie. On the fift of Januarie he came backe from Leidon vnto Donhage. The tenth he mustred part of his horsemen, to the number of fiue hundred or more, and then pointed them into seuerall garrisons, and to seuerall gouernors, the earle of Esser was that daie made generall of the horsses. The eleuenth daie hée came from Donhage to Leidon. The twelfe daie a generall fast was proclamed through Holland, Gelderland, and Friseland, which was kept with great zeale. The lord lieutenant spent that daie till night with preaching, reading, and singing of psalmes; neither he or anie of his eating anie thing. The nineteenth of Januarie he came from Leidon to Donhage, where in his time of abode he rode to a little fisher towne two miles from the Hage, named Skeueling, which towne doth bound on the maine seas. In this towne he was presented with these verses:

The lord lieutenant returneth backe from Leidon to Donhage.

Like as the sea goddesse Thetis had ingendred,
The valiant Achilles to the Greeks defence,
So hath now this English Thetis, who all praise deSent vs this Achilles to our assistence, (serued
Wherefore we yeeld him all due reuerence.

These words were written in the great hall at Donhage, cõteining terms of honor & welwishing: Beatus qui facit opus Domini fideliter. ¶ Inclyto principi Roberto Dudlæo comiti Leicestriæ, inter magnates maximè pio, prudenti, forti, Dei permissu a regina misso, præfecto ac gubernatori Belgarum, prosperum hunc optatúmque aduentum toto lætitiæ sinu gratulamur, ecclesiæ & reipublicæ salutem optamus, fœderati ordinis Belgij, addicti celsitudini eius. ¶ Deus cæpit, Deus dirigat.

On the fiue and twentith of Januarie, the lord lieutenant was installed and sworn, and likewise all the states sworne to the quéene. The manner of the installing was thus. At Donhage is a maruellous faire hall, at the vpper end whereof are fiue or six large steps ascending, which do reach to a faire chamber, at the vpper end whereof on high was placed a cloth of estate, in the middest of which were the armes of England, and against them my lord was seated: on each side of him two steps descending sat twelue of the principall states, & below them sat the residue, to the number of twentie right before my lord, but foure or fiue steps descending. On the right hand of my lord did stand the prince of Portugall, next him the lord Norleie, next master Norris gouernor of Munster, next sir William Russell, and sir Robert Germin, with diuerse men of great account. On the left hand of my lord did stand the Graue Norris, next the earle of Esser, sir William Stanleie, sir Robert Stapleton, and sir Thomas Parrat, with diuers others of great account. Thus being placed, a Dutchman made a large oration in Dutch, declaring the causes of the matter in hand, with thanks to the quénes maiestie and the lord lieutenant.

Then was read in Latine the couenants betwéene the states, the quæne and my lord: this done the couenants were deliuered to my lord, which he deliuered to the states, and the states deliuered an other to him: then was my lord demanded to vow the same by oth, who holding his hand to heauen did sweare to the couenants. The like did the states, holding vp their hands, vow to performe. Then againe were the states sworne to the quæne and my lord hir lieutenant in those affaires. This done, my lord gaue to them seuerall thanks, and they seuerallie did giue to him the like, which being done, my lord passed through to his chamber, the trumpets all sounding before him. And héere as matter of conueniencie requireth, we purpose to touch the peremptorie authoritie committed to the said lord lieutenant by common consent of the states: being as followeth in the placard.

A generall fast proclamed and deuoutlie obserued.

The lord lieutenant rideth to Skeueling, and is presented with a few English verses.

Titles of honor ascribed to the lord lieutenant, with a reioising at his comming.

The estates sworne to the quæne of England.

The earle of Leicester installed at Donhage, with the maner and order thereof.

Persons of honor and worship.

The conenants betwéen the quæns maiestie and the estates, read in Latine and deliuered to and fro.

A placard conteining the authoritie giuen by the states of the low countries, vnto the mightie prince, Robert earle of Leicester, baron of Denbigh, &c. for the gouernment of the said low countries: translated out of Dutch into English, as followeth.

THe generall states of the vnited prouinces of the low countries, to all those which shall see or heare these present writings, health and dilection. Euen as it hath pleased hir maiestie of England mercifullie to send ouer into these countries the high and mightie prince and lord, lord Robert earle of Leicester, baron of Denbigh, and one of the priuie councell, knight of the noble order of the garter, and not onlie to admit and institute his excellencie as chéefe head aboue all militarie souldiers on horse or foot, which hir maiestie hath sent or shall send ouer hereafter into these countries; & to the end to assist vs with counsell, aid & aduise, according to his great experience, policie and wisedome in the direction of publike affaires of the land, as well touching the feates of warre, as other waies, in conseruation of all that which most tendeth to the profit of the foresaid land, to bring backe and reduce the same into such good order and rule as it hath béene in times past to, the end that so much the better and orderlie he maie resist the force and tyrannie of our enimies, and to frustrate all his practises: but also besides this to honour and inrich his foresaid excellencie with greater authoritie, might and commandement, aboue all hir maiesties admerals and viceadmerals, and ships of war, to command them all, & to emploie them to the seruice of these countries, and in such order as his excellencie shall find nédfull for the same countrie; and that his excellencie following hir maiesties commandement, desirous to shew the effect of the good will and affection which he beareth to these affaires, and to the preseruation of the same, and also of the true christian religion, and hath imploied himselfe so willinglie in the foresaid matters, that his excellencie for that onlie cause hath left and abandoned his native countrie and goods, and transported himselfe hitherward amongst vs: so that hir maiestie and his excellencie could neuer haue done or shewed vnto vs a greater benefit than this.

Note what a title and stile of excellencie the states giue to the earle their gouernor, and the honorable seruice to him appointed.

The good will and affection of the lord lieutenant to performe the premisses signified and by good proofe testified.

Therefore are we resolued, with good and ripe deliberation, to certifie all men by these presents, that we haue desired, accepted, and authorised the foresaid mightie and honorable prince, lord Robert earle of Leicester, &c: to be our gouernor and generall captaine ouer all the vnited prouinces, and associat cities and members of the same. And we giue vnto his excellencie, besides the authoritie of hir maiestie giuen vnto him, the highest and supreme commandement, and absolute authoritie aboue, and in all matters of warfare by sea and by land, to execute & administrat the same to the resistance of the enimie, euen as his excellencie shall thinke most commodious to the preseruation of these countries: and so further, to do all such things as apperteine to the office of a generall capteine. And furthermore, we commit the administration & vse of policie and iustice ouer the foresaid vnited prouinces, and associat cities and members of the same into his hands, to execute and administrat the same with such power and authoritie, as haue had in times past all the other gouernors of these low countries before him; and especiallie, as haue béene exercised, and lawfullie administred in the time of Charles the fift; reserued onelie the lawes and priuileges of the foresaid countries: also with especiall power to collect profits, and receiue, and administrat all the contributions

The states agnise the peremptorie authoritie put into the lord lieutenants hands in respect of his gouernment.

Like authoritie giuen to the lord lieutenant, as other gouernours his predecessors haue had in the low countries.

butions which are agreed and condescended, or shall hereafter be consented or agreed, to the maintenance of the warres: and also, that which is or shall be deliuered hereafter into his excellencies hands; and this all according to the vertue of other letters and missiues written more at large touching the same agreement. All which former charge and commission, his excellencie through our earnest desire hath accepted, and hath deliuered solemne oth and assurance into our hands, first of all, for the preseruation of the true christian religion, and maintenance of the priuileges and rights of these lands and prouinces, members, and cities of the same.

In acknowledgement and performance of dutie and alegiance inioined to all persons of the low countries (vnder paine of punishment) to the lord lieutenant.

We therefore ordeine and command all gouernors of prouinces and cities, all admerals and vice admerals, all officers, coroners, capteins, their officers and souldiors by sea and land, and furthermore all other councellors, officers, treasurors, receiuers, bailiffs, burgomaisters, marshals, magistrats, gentlemen, burgers, & other inhabitants & subiects of these lands, of what qualitie or condition soeuer; that they & euerie of them do acknowledge his foresaid excellencie in the qualitie of gouernement, and capteine generall ouer the foresaid vnited prouinces, to honor, respect and obeie him, as they ought to do, without making anie difficultie in doing the same, vpon paine of falling in the displeasure and anger of his excellencie, and to be punished according to the heauines of the fault, and as reason shall require. And to the end that no bodie should pretend ignorance, we command expresslie to make knowne these ordinances, to proclame and publish them, whereas men are accustomed to proclame all publications, proceeding, and commanding to proceed with rigor against all disdainors and neglectors of the same, according to the order of punishment before mentioned, without anie fauour or dissimulation to the contrarie, because we haue thought the same to be expedient for the preseruation of the countrie. Giuen in our congregation & assemblie in the Hage, the sixt daie of Februarie, 1586, by ordinance of the foresaid generall states.

Bil pretense of ignorance cut off, least the course of obedience might be hindered.

This placard thus passed, the lord lieutenant bending his mind to his charge vndertaken, did ordeine certeine speciall men, natiues borne, of the councell, to the intent that such affaires as chanced to occur, might by them be conuenientlie managed. And as he toke order for matters of policie, so was he studious in preferring martiall affaires, prouiding by good lawes and ordinances not onelie concerning common souldiours, but capteins in like sort, that a conuenient course and well beseeming the excellencie of his place, might be obserued in all militarie businesses: for proofe whereof these lawes touching capteins (as a note of the rest) may serue.

Councellors for matters of state elected by the lord lieutenant.

Lawes for capteins and souldiors.

First, no capteine, officer, or other person, shall receiue or interteine anie other mans souldiour or seruant, without consent of his former capteine or maister, neither shall intise anie other mans souldior from him, vpon paine of losse of a moneths wages, and to restore the partie to his former capteine or maister.

Secondlie, no capteine shall send forth anie men to do anie enterprise, without knowledge of the generall or chefe officer appointed thereunto, vpon paine of losse of his place.

Thirdlie, all priuat capteins being no head officers, shall watch and ward with their ensignes, vnlesse it be by speciall leaue, vpon paine of the losse of a moneths paie, & for the second time lose his place.

Fourthlie, no capteine shall sell or ransome his prisoner without licence of the generall, and shall not suffer them to depart without making the high marshall priuie to the same, vpon paine to lose his prisoner, and imprisonment.

Fiftlie, anie capteine finding anie souldiour, of what band or companie so euer, which hath transgressed anie of these lawes & ordinances, may take him & bring him vnto the marshall to be punished.

Sixtlie, that no capteine shall receiue or inroll anie person into his paie vnder him, but that he cause the said souldior to receiue the oth, vpon paine to the capteine for not obseruing the same, of losse of a moneths paie.

Seauenthlie, no inferiour capteine shall for corruption or anie other cause, licence anie of his souldiors to depart the campe or garrison, without speciall licence of the generall or head officer, vpon paine of losse of his moneths paie, and expulsion out of his office.

Eightlie, if anie capteine hereafter receiuing his souldiors paie, do not paie the same vnto them within eight daies after, and being demanded, then vpon complaint made, and the capteine thereof indicted, he shall lose his moneths paie, and be depriued of his office, banished the campe, and disabled from thenceforth to serue in the armie.

Ninthlie, capteins & officers shall resort to their souldiors lodgings, to see in what state their armor and munition be in, and to giue great charge that their furniture be alwaies in a readinesse, their cornets with all peces belonging to the same, and their caleuers to be made cleane & oiled, to haue match and powder drie, and strings for their bowes, their bils and holberds to be kept cleane and sharpe, vpon paine and punishment arbitrarie, according to the qualitie of their negligence.

Tenthlie, that euerie capteine or officer shall cause these said statutes to be read euerie twentith daie to them of their charge, as well horssemen as fotmen, & to follow the same so nere as they may.

The lord lieutenant commeth from the Hage to Harlem, & how he was receiued.

Now when the state of the countrie was prouided for in such sort as before ye haue heard, the lord lieutenant proceeded to other actions, insomuch that on the first of March he came from Hage to Leidon, and the third of March from Leidon to Harlem, where being honorablie interteined, according to the maner in other places before named, with sundrie representations: on the tenth daie of March he came from Harlem to Amsterdam, a towne counted inexpugnable, being there receiued in most sumptuous sort with diuersitie of shewes & ceremonies. The like also were exhibited vnto him comming to Utricht, the people of which towne shewed themselues greatlie to fauour our Englishmen, for there came to the towne from the Leger three hundred or foure hundred souldiors, so sicke and poore, that it was wonder to see their miserie: and the townesmen not onelie receiued them, but also releeued them with meat drinke and cloths, giuing them for the most part new shirts and other necessarie apparell; looking so vnto them for their health, that whereas for the most part they were in great danger of death, few or none of them at that time perished.

Utricht people commended for their great kindnes shewed to the Englishmen.

The three and twentith of April, the earle of Leicester being lieutenant, and gouernour generall of hir maiesties forces in the low countries of the vnited prouinces (as is aforesaid) and making his residence at that time in Utricht (a great and goodlie towne vpon the frontiers of Holland) kept most honourablie the feast of S. George therein, the proceedings whereof being so princelie performed to the honor of our nation, in the view of so manie thousand strangers, I could not chuse (hauing gotten the true and faithfull description, by one William Seager ger alias Portcullis an officer at armes in that seruice) to make some breefe remembrance of the maner thereof in this booke, to wit. The streets of Vtricht being large and faire, were rankt and set with eight ensignes of burgers richlie appointed, wearing scarffes knit like roses white and red vpon their armes, betweene whome from the court of my lord vnto the cathedrall church called the Dome, the proceeding was on horssebacke. First rid the trumpetors apparelled in scarlet, laid with silver lace, sounding their trumpets most rotallie, their bannerols being displaied and richlie limmed with my lords armes. Then followed the gentlemen, capteins, coronels, and hir maiesties sworne men, to the number of a fortie horsse, richlie adorned in cloth of gold, silver, and silks, of all colours. After came six knights, foure barons, with the councell of estates: the right honourable earle of Essex accompanied the bishop of Cullen prince elector; and the prince of Portingall rid by himselfe: next proceeded the capteine of the gard, the treasuror and controllor of the houshold, bearing their white staues: after whom followed two gentlemen vshers, and Portcullis herald in a rich cote of armes of England.

S. Georges feast solemnlie obserued at Utricht.

S. Georges feast solemnlie obserued at Vtricht.

Lieutenant inuested in the robes of order.

Then came my lord most princelike, inuested in his robes of the order, garded by the principall burgers of the towne, which offered themselues to that seruice, besides his owne gard, which were a fiftie halberds in scarlet clokes, garded with purple and white veluet. He being thus honourablie brought vnto the church, after due reuerence done vnto the queenes maiesties estate, which was there erected on the right hand, he toke his owne stall on the left, by certeine degrees lower. Then began praiers, and a sermon made by maister Knelystubs my lords chapleine, after which my lord proceeded to the offering; first for hir maiestie, & then for himselfe, the which he performed with such decorum & princelie behauiour, that all generallie spake most honorablie of him.

These solemnities being done, his lordship returned as he came, leauing behind him the earle of Essex and certeine gentlemen to accompanie the princes and the ladies of the court. His court was a faire and large house, belonging in times past to the knights of the Rhodes, in which was a verie great hall richlie hong with tapistrie; at the vpper end whereof was a most sumptuous cloth and chaire of estate for the queens maiestie, with hir armes and stile thereon, and before it a table couered with all things so requisit as if in person she had beene there; on the left hand almost at the tables end was my lords trencher and stole, for he would haue no chaire. The tables being couered, & all degrees assembled, my lord before the estate of hir maiestie knighted a Dutch gentleman, called sir Martin Skinke, for his manifold services done to his countrie, the which done, the vshers marshalled the feast. At the table on the right side of the hall sat the yong prince of Portingall, the prince elector and his wife, the princesse Semele, the earle of Essex, the Graue Morris and his ladie, & betweene euerie ladis was an English lord or knight placed. On the left side sat the states and chiefe burgers of the towne, and the grand prior of Amerford (who came to see the feast) was by my lords appointment placed vppermost at that table. Then began the trumpets to sound in the seruice which was (most princelike & abundant serued on the knee) carued & tasted to hir maiesties trencher.

Martin Skinke knighted, who promised Portcullis to shew him seuentie ensignes that he had now in the field.

To prosecute the sumptuousnesse, statelinesse, and varietie of deuises in seruice at this banket, requireth a discourse of manie lines, and therefore leauing it to the imagination of the reader (hauing relation to the former) we will heare surceasse; remembring thus much to the honour of the lord lieutenant, that sundrie militarie exploits or stratagems were with no lesse magnanimitie attempted, than with felicitie atchiued against the enimie, during the time of his abode in those countries, which it were better vtterlie to omit, than not with conuenient dignitie to record: being heerein semblablie affected to his honour, as sometimes was the poet Horace to Agrippa, Qui sibi non conuenire tam sublime argumentum asseuerabat; proinde Varium poetam rectius scripturum eius præclara facinora dicebat, qui ad Homericam fœlicitatem proximè accedere videbatur. And now to leaue him in the hands of God, vpon whome dependeth his honours hope, we will heere leaue the netherlands, and approach to matters of England.

Seminarie præsts executed at Tiburne.

On the one and twentith date of this Januarie, two seminarie præsts (before arreigned and condemned) were drawne to the Tiburne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered. Also on the same date, a wench was burnt in Smithfield for poisoning of hir aunt and mistresse, and also attempting to haue done the like wicked offense to hir vncle.

A wench burnt in Smithfield.

On the second date of Februarie, or the feast of the purification of our blessed ladie, doctor John Whitegift archbishop of Canturburie, William lord Cobham lord warden of the fiue ports, and Thomas lord Buckhurst, were chosen and taken to be of hir maiesties priuie councell: the two first, to wit, the archbishop and the lord Cobham were sworne the same date, and the third on the next morrow. And here, as in other places of these chronicles, where we haue set downe certeine collections of right worthie personages in high calling and verie honourable office, we are lead by some reason to deliuer a catalog of the names (at least) of such archbishops as haue successiuelie possessed the metropolitan see of Canturburie, therein implieng their antiquitie and authoritie, &c: and from thense proceed to sate somewhat of the lord Cobhams and lord wardens of the cinque ports, as a matter of some consequence, by means of the mutuall aduancement at one instant which hir highnesse of speciall grace vouchsafed them both. And to begin with Canturburie, being first named, you shall vnderstand that Augustine the monke (according to the receiued opinion of chronographers) was the first archbishop which occupied that metroplitan see, next whome succeded one Laurentius, then Melitus, Iustus, Honorius, Deusdedit, Theodorus, Brightwaldus, Tatwinus, Nothelmus, Cutbertus, Beguinus, Lambertus, Athelardus, Wilfredus, Theologildus, Athelredus, Plegmundus, Athelmus, Wolfelmus, Odo Seuerus, Dunstanus, Ethelgarus, Siricius, Aluricius, Elphegus, Liuingus, Agelnothus, Edsinus: and so forward with the residue before and after the conquest, which being multiplied by vnities, do make vp the complet number of three score and twelue.

Pag. 1435, a 10.

The number of archbishops of Canturburie from the first to the last.

Where by the waie we might touch the varietie of their names (sith authors therein do dissent) as also the time wherein they liued and flourished, with some commemoration of their acts and deeds, both in church and commonwealth. But this kind of discourse being ecclesiasticall, is vnproper for this secular historie: wherefore labouring no further therein, we will remit the reader to such authors as Ex professo haue amplie treted of that argument: minding now by waie of note in a few lines to touch the three late primats, as they haue succeded ech other since the coronation and regiment of hir maiestie: the first of whom was Matthew Parker, whose predecessor Reg. Pole dieng, he was aduanced, and inioied the same aduancement certeine yeares, (hauing been the seuentith archbishop of that see) during which time he did much good diuerse waies, deseruing well not onelie of the church, but also of the commonwealth. But hauing spoken elsewhere of this man, we will here state our course; concluding this collection of archbishops in their successions, with the two reuerend diuines and doctors, the one Edmund Grindall late deceased; the other John Whitegift now liuing; of whom no more but silence, for vertue doth sufficientlie commend hir selfe. Now order would, that we should descend into a discourse of the lord Cobhams & lord wardens of the cinque ports, remembred before page 1435, a 10: but herein the reader is patientlie to put vp the disappointment of his expectation, vpon supposall of some reasonable impediment whie the same was not satisfied. And now to the course of our historie orderlie to be continued.

of

The note of Reginald Scot esquier concerning Douer hauen.

¶ In this yeare 1586, certeine of the lords of hir maiesties most honorable priuie councell made an appointment to haue met at Douer, to surueie a notable pæce of worke there latelie performed about the hauen, to the benefit of the whole land. Howbeit the said lords, by means of other accidents of importance, staid at the court, and went not that iourneie. Neuertheless the lord Cobham, lord warden of the cinque ports, one of hir maiesties priuie councell, repairing thither (accompanied with diuerse knights and gentlemen of great worship) did take the view both of the worke finished, and also conferred about the businesse then in hand. Now for so much as that which is alreadie done, is a perfect and an absolute worke, to the perpetuall maintenance of a hauen in that place, being such a monument as is hardlie to be found written in ante record, it might seeme absurd that no mention thereof should be made in this chronicle: and that the cost and businesse thereabouts imploied hath not bæne vnnecessarie, maie appeare by the reasons insuing.

Considerations whie the building of Douer hauen is here recorded.

First, Douer hath bæne euer reputed the keie and locke (as Matthæus Parisiensis reporteth, or as rather he should haue said) the verie doore and entrance into the realme of England, either for freend or foe, and also the readie passage vnto all nations, but especiallie into France, from whense it is not distant about thirtie English miles, and is commonlie passed in fiue or six houres at the most, and in a prosperous wind within halfe the time. Secondlie, it standeth in the most conuenient place of all this land to offend the enimie, and to defend either domesticall or forren freend. Thirdlie, a meane harbor would be there (in the opinion of all skilfull mariners) more beneficiall & commodious for the nauigation of England, than an excellent hauen placed anie where else about the coast thereof. Fourthlie, all our passengers through the narow seas being distressed by violence of weather, or by inconuenience of piracie, or else by force of the common enimie in the time of warre, might there haue present succor and refuge, and both spéedie and easie passage thereinto, or otherwise be best rescued. Fiftlie, of late yeares, the considerations aforesaid haue moued some noble princes of this land, to bestow infinit treasure to gaine a harborough or hauen in that place, to their great honor, fame, and commendation, to the wonderfull contentment of all their subiects, and for the good and benefit of all the neighbors adioining, and strangers passing these narow seas. Finallie, it hath pleased our most noble quæne Elisabeth to vndertake it, who in all good actions and necessarie works, for the benefit of the realme, & commonwealth of England, hath bæne so liberall, carefull, and prouident, as thereby hir glorie and renowme is spread ouer all the face of the earth, and reacheth vnto heauen, where the king of kings sitteth, and heareth the praises and praiers, not onelie of hir owne people, but of all christians liuing in hir behalfe, for whose good (it seemeth) she was brought forth and preserued in this world.

Reasons whie a harbor at Douer would be so beneficiall.

A true commendation of quæne Elisabeth.

And now (I saie) for so much as hir highnesse hath at this present time taken order for the building of a new hauen in this place, and bountifullie imploied great summes of monie vpon the same (being begun with more probabilitie, iudgement, and circumspection, and accompanied with better successe than euer anie of hir highnesse predecessors haue heretofore had in this case; wherin the most difficult and dangerous worke is alreadie accomplished, so as there is now and euer hereafter will be a verie good hauen, except extreme negligence be vsed in mainteining the same) I thought it a most necessarie matter to be here recorded, to hir maiesties perpetuall fame, and partlie also to giue light and incouragment to hir successors in the crowne of England, to attempt and vndertake, and the better to execute and accomplish the like famous enterprise. For actions of far lesse importance are made memorable by historiographers, as in euerie chronicle maie apeare.

The peut at Douer will maintaine a hauen there for euer.

In this discourse I thought mét to passe ouer the antiquitie of the towne and port of Douer, with the liberties thereof; which together with the ruines and misfortunes of fire are to be found extant in the perambulation of Kent, written by William Lambard esquier. Of Douer castell somewhat might here be said, but for so much as maister Lambard hath so largelie discoursed thereupon in his booke, which is likelie to remaine of continuance, I will make bold with the reader to referre him thereunto; and onelie giue this note (to wit) that whereas he iustlie complaineth of the miserable ruines thereof; it hath pleased hir maestie (in respect of the necessarie maintenance of the same) to bestow more charge of late in reparing and reedifieng of it, than hath bæne spent thereabouts (as it seemeth) since the first building thereof, whether the same were done by Iulius Cesar the Romane emperor, or by Aruiragus then king of the Britains (king Edward the fourth onelie excepted) who (as Iohn Rosse reporteth) did throughlie repare it, bestowing thereon 10000 pounds, insomuch as it is now reduced to be a pæce of great force and importance, and verie beautifull to behold. Wherein the honorable disposition of the lord Burghleie lord high treasuror of England is to be commended, who was a principall furtherer thereof, and whose forwardnesse in all militarie affaires is had in admiration among all the best souldiors of England, although he himselfe an aged and a most graue councellor. And in these commendations if I should omit the praises of the honorable lord Cobham, lord warden of the cinque ports, and constable of the castell of Douer, &c: I should do him great wrong. For by his prouidence and mediation, together with the diligent trauell and industrie of Richard Warrie esquier, lieutenant of the said castell, that worke is accomplished, to the comfort and benefit of the whole realme. Within the wals whereof is now also raised such a mount at the north side thereof, as thereby the castell is double so strong as before. But omitting all other occasions and matters concerning Douer, I will now passe to my purpose.

In peramb. Cant. tit. Douer.

Douer castell reedified by quæne Elisabeth.

Edward the fourth bestowed ten thousand pounds vpon reparations of Douer castell.

But yet, before I enter into these last works, I must giue you to vnderstand, that the verie situation of the place ministreth incouragement to the executioners, and yeldeth great fauor and occasion to the attempt. For Douer cliffes stand to the sea north and east, the towne being placed at the foot of the northerne cliffes, the castle on the top of the easterne cliffes, called the Castell Kaie: so as there is a naturall baie, through the which from by north ilsueth a proper riuer entring into the same baie: & thense runneth through the hauen into the sea. In times past, vntill of late yeares, that onelie baie hath serued them for a rode, and at manie times in some sort hath stood the naue (but especiallie the fisher botes) in good sted. For in a great northerlie and westerlie wind, the ships were driuen from the Downs and the foreland to repaire thither, where they might lie safelie vntill the wind blew great from by east or south, & then were they driuen to depart thense vnto the Camber at Rie (which then was a notable good rode, though now vtterlie decaied) or into the Ile of Wight. For in a sudden slaw or storme of wind at southeast, there haue beene seuen or eight ships broken all to peeces in one daie vpon the said cliffes. To releeue and amend the same harborough, and somewhat to mitigat the foresaid inconuenience, there was a round tower builded by one John Clarke, preest, maister of the maison de Dieu, about the yeare one thousand fiue hundred, at the south west part of the said baie, which serued somewhat to defend the ships from the rage of the southwest wind, but especiallie to moore the ships which were tied therevnto. For manie great ringles were fastened to the same tower for that purpose, as it maie yet be seene, sith it standeth there at this houre. And hereby that part of the baie was made so pleasant, as euer after that corner hath beene named, and is at this daie called Little paradise. Neuertheless this was thought verie insufficient in respect of the place, for the safegard of such a multitude of ships as vsuallie laie for harbour in that rode. For besides all strange botes, which commonlie repaired thither, it appeareth in the booke of Domesdaie, that Douer armed yearelie at his proper charges twentie vessels to the sea by the space of fiftéene daies, with one and twentie able men in ech ship.

The situation of Douer harbour.

A naturall rode for ships at Douer.

The hauen of Rie decaied, whereby more need of a harbour at Douer.

Ships lost for lacke of sufficient harbour at Douer.

The first benefit bestowed on Douer harbour.

Little paradise.

In the reigne of Edward the Confessor.

Now about the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and two, one sir John Thomson clarke, parson of the parish of saint James in Douer, being a man ingenious, and séeing the conueniencie and possibilitie of a good hauen to be made in that place, consulted with the cheefe and best mariners of the towne. Among whome it was agréed, that humble suite should be made to the kings maiestie by the state of the towne, for his gratious fauour and aid toward the making of a good hauen there. And it was also by them all thought meet, that the said sir John Thomson should exhibit their petition to his highnesse: whervnto he agréed, and drew a plot, and prepared a supplication in the name and behalfe of the towne, conteining the necessarie causes and reasons, deuises and instructions, for the erection and building thereof. But he told them he was poore, and therefore vnable of his owne proper charges to follow the suite. In which respect they collected among themselues, and deliuered vnto him foure pounds ten shillings, which he accepted, and forthwith repaired to the court; where he so demeaned himselfe, as he had present accesse to the king, who heard his suite with great fauor, and debated with him about the contents of his plot, and liked so well of his informations that he willed him to repaire home, and without delaie to returne to his presence, accompanied with some of the best mariners or seamen of the towne, and so with commendations dismissed him for that time.

Sir John Thomson preest his supplication.

When the maisters of the towne vnderstood his graces pleasure, they immediatlie assembled themselues, and made choise of Edward Maie, Robert Justice, Richard Cowchie, and John Steward, as the fittest and skilfullest persons to vse conference, and to be imploied in that cause, being all mariners of good experience. These foure and the said sir John Thomson without further staie resorted to the court, with whom when the king had communed, he conceiued of the necessitie of a hauen to be there had, and of the probabilitie and likelihood of good successe in the enterprise to be performed according to their suggestion. And because his maiestie vnderstood the poore estate of the towne, he granted his gratious aid for the supplie of their want of monie, deliuering at that time out of his owne cofers vnto them the summe of fiue hundred pounds, wherewith he willed them to make a beginning of the worke. At which time he bestowed on the said sir John Thomson the maistership of the maison de Dieu of Douer, which was a hospitall, valued at one hundred and twentie pounds by the yeare: the custome and dutie of the which house was (as the ancient townesmen informe me) to interteine and releeue soldiors, and others which came from beyond the seas, hurt or distressed, who were allowed some releefe there, by the space of certeine daies gratis: which though I find not directlie set downe in record, yet do I know assuredlie the same to haue beene put in execution, wherewith the verie name of the house is agréeable, and as it were a credible witnesse. The king at that time also apointed the said sir John to be principall surueior of the works, and vnder him the other foure to be ouerséers of the same.

Fiue hundred pounds giuen by Henrie the eight towards a beginning of Douer works.

The maison de Dieu of Douer.

Surueiors & ouerséers.

Now am I to giue you to vnderstand, that the drift and deuise of the said sir John Thomson was to erect a huge wall (which he termed by the name of a pierre) from Arcliffe chapell, being the southwest part of the baie directlie towards the east into the maine sea, about 131 rods in length: so as by that meanes the harborough was to be garded from the rage of all weather, comming from the north, northeast, northwest, and southwest, and so the entrance onelie at east southeast, whereinto when the ships were once brought, they might there lie safe in all weather, at the one side or the other. But the pierre was not finished by 55 fot so far as the foundation the roof (which he called the Polehead) was laid, which foundation consisted of great rocks, brought from a place néere hand, called Hakcliffe, or the castell Raie and Folkestone. This pierre was begun on S. Annes daie 1533, and it was compiled of two rowes of maine posts, & great piles of fiue or six & twentie fot long, set at each side close together, which were let downe and put in certeine holes hewed in the great rocks, laid for that purpose; but some of those piles were shod with iron, and driuen into the maine rocke of chalke, with a great engine called a ram. These posts and piles were combined and held together with iron bolts, and were filled with mightie stones of chalke, as also with beach and other earth: but the bottome consisted altogither of great rocks of stone, which if they had not béene brought thither by a speciall deuise, must néeds haue béene extreame chargeable: for manie of them were of twentie tun a péece, and few vnder.

In the reigne of Edward the Confessor.

The Polehead.

Douer pierre when it was taken in hand, and whereof it consisted.

The practise of this charge is now common, but it was before that time rare & vnknowne in England, and inuented there by a poore simple man named John Pong, who first with a nutshell, after with an eggshell, & lastlie with a small vessell, made proofe what weight those things could raise & beare in the water; and hauing by that experiment made triall, or at least a probable coniecture, that stones of great weight might be raised and carried in the water by greater vessels, he discouered his experience to such as were officers in the worke; who presentlie put in practise & execution the same deuise, & making prouision of great & strong barrels and pipes of wood, caried them to Folkstone, and at low water fastened therto with chaines such huge stones as laie on the shore, nere the low water marke (where the quarrie or mine of those rocks is) so as when the flood or full sea came, the said vessels with the stones thereto fastned rose vp & swam. And if the stone were of such quantitie as two or three emptie casks could not lift it vp, then did they ad a barrell or two more, which would not faile to do it: then did they drag with small botes the casks & stones therevnto tied, to the place where they were disposed to sinke them, & so the worke wherein consisted the greatest difficultie in apearance, was with most ease and least charge accomplished.

A notable deuise to carrie great rocks by water.

Foure pence a paie.

complished. And for this deuise the said John Young had a yearelie stipend giuen vnto him by the king during his life. With these stones, as also by this means was the greatest worke done, and with great cost and labor these piles were filled vp. The chalke and filling thereof being brought from the north pierre, was conueied thither in a great bote called a Gaboth, which had nine keeles. There stands yet of the timber worke of the old pierre foure score fot in length, and ioines vpon that part of the pierre, where stood a fort named the Blacke bulworke.

A Gaboth.

Now that which was done on that side, with the helpe of nature at the other two sides made an excellent rode or harborough for the time it continued, and had maintenance. The king for his part spared no charge, for he spent hereabouts (as I am crediblie informed) fiftie thousand pounds, nor yet did forbeare anie trauell which might further the worke. For in person he purposelie repaired thither diuerse and sundrie times, being distant from the court fiftie miles at the least; yea his highnes had such care that it should be well performed, that no expert man in water works, either on this side, or beyond the seas, but (if it might be) he was brought thither, or at the least conferred withall. And during the time of all the worke, the kings cofers seemed to stand wide open. But alas, the kings care and charge, and the continuall trouble and trauell of officers was such about the worke present, that the prouision for the future maintenance thereof was vtterlie neglected. For the kings absence at his being at Bullen, his sickenesse at his returne, and finallie his death meeting with the nonage of his son king Edward the first, made an end of all this worke: which being once in the state of decaie, there was no reparations nor further proceeding therein, till the time of queene Marie; in the beginning of whose reigne (by the space of two yeares) there was some rumbling thereabout. But the workmen and officers were not well paid; and after bad paiment, no paiment, and so all was giuen ouer. Sir Anthonie Aucher was treasuror in these works, and manie other inferior officers also there were, but especiallie of clerks.

The charge of the pierre.

The kings care for Douer pierre.

The kings repaire to Douer.

Sir John Thomlins deuise allowed.

The cause of the decaie of the pierre.

Officers about the pierre.

But now I am to declare vnto you the lamentable ruine and decaie of this worke, before the end and finishing whereof there was brought along the coast, from by southwest, a maruellous quantitie of beach and bowlder stone, whereof there had beene neuer anie seene before in those parts of that coast, and a great quantitie thereof rested vpon the backe of the pierre, especiallie before the Blacke bulworke, which (so long as it might lie there without further annoiance) was (in appearance) a singular helpe for the strength and preseruation of the said worke, but it fell out otherwise. For besides that, that an easterlie great wind would remoue and driue it from that coast, and consequentlie from the pierre, which then would lie naked as before, vntill the south and westerne wind turned it backe againe; the pierre through negligence decaieng especiallie at the Blacke bulworke (where the greatest abundance of beach vsuallie rested) it passed through the decaied places thereof in such measure, as in short time thereby grew a shelfe of beach from that point of the pierre to the east part of the baie, butting to the Castell Raie; so as no entrance thereinto for anie ship remained. And the more that the furthest point of the pierre decaied and wared shorter, the nearer was the shelfe brought vnto the shore: insomuch as if the residue of the pierre had not beene preserued, that shelfe would soone haue beene brought to the verie towne, and so haue choked vp the baie, and bereft all possibilitie of euer hauing a harbor in that place.

Stone called beach or bowlder choked vp Douer hauen.

Two causes of the decaie of Douer pierre.

The decaie of the pierre grew now more and more, partlie (as is said) through want of prouidence and cost to be imploied thereupon, and sufficient prouision to maintaine the same: but especiallie through the disorder of the poorer sort of the townesmen, who dailie purloined timber, iron, and all that was anie thing worth, which they could pull or catch from the decaieng places of the pierre. And now (by meanes of this shelfe) the hauen waxed worse than euer it was, insomuch as oftentimes a bote that drew but foure fot of water could not enter into the mouth thereof, and sometime none at all: for the baie was altogither shut vp, so as the harborough was become a pent, out of the which nothing could passe out or in, sauing the water that soked through the beach. But the riuer, which issueth out of the towne at a water gate standing at the northeast end of the said pent, in continuance of time would make an issue through some part of the same beach into the sea, sometime at one end, sometime at another, sometime verie shallow, and neuer verie deepe; which issue was alwaies their hauens mouth, vntill a contrarie wind did stop it vp againe, and then they had no entrance at all, vntill the riuer had made a new fret, or that they had digged a chanell through the beach, which manie times they were driuen to do.

Sometime no harborough at all at Douer.

The losse of this hauen, and the losse of Calis, which happened about one time, made such an alteration, or rather desolation in and of the towne, as was lamentable and wonderfull to behold. For of a braue, rich, and populous towne, it presentlie became a poore and desolate village, reteining onelie the name and liberties of the famous port of Douer. Neuertheless, the necessitie and expedience of a good hauen in that place did still remaine, a conuenient meane also was left for the accomplishment thereof, as it seemed to diuerse which were wise and of good experience: insomuch as that verie matter, which was supposed to be the destruction of the late harborough, should now become a principall helpe and furtherance to a new hauen of greater importance, and better securitie than euer it was before. For (as you haue heard) Douer cliffes naturallie defend this baie from all tempests comming from the northeast and northwest; the pierre yet remaining gardeth it from the west and southwest winds; & the shelfe of beach crossing from the end thereof to the Castell Raie, had made such a close pent, as if anie ships could be conueied thereinto, they might there rest in great safetie.

How Douer was made desolat.

That beach which destroied the pierre helpeth now the hauen.

The roome within this close baie conteineth almost fortie acres, and the riuer (as I haue said) runneth quite through the same immediatlie into the maine sea at south: so as the said pent being surrounded at euerie high water, and lieng almost bare at euerie ebbe, the ouze or fleech grew to be fourteene or fiftéene fot deepe, the bottome thereof being a maine rocke of chalke: insomuch as a great multitude of ships might be placed there in good securitie, if the entrance could be made good. These things considered by men of good capacitie and experience, sundrie deuises and conceipts were exhibited therabouts, whereof some seemed verie probable; and were the rather heard and commended, for that the worke was so necessarie and benefictall to the commonwealth. And in that respect, it pleased the quenes maiestie to grant to the towne of Douer, towards the reparing of their hauen, the free transportation of thirtie thousand quarters of wheat, ten thousand quarters of barlie and malt, and foure thousand tun of beere, without paieng either custome or impost: which was a gift of no small importance.

A bountifull gift of queene Elisabeth towards the reparing of Douer hauen.

For (besides great summes of monie already leuied and imploied vpon the beginning of these works) the licence or patent was sold to a couple of merchants of London named John Bird, and Thomas Wats, after the rate of three shillings and foure pence for euerie quarter of wheat, and two shillings and eight pence pence for euerie quarter of barlie and malt; and the licence of bëere being sold to diuerse others amounted to foure thousand marks at the least. Besides all this, it was enacted in the parlement holden the three and twentith yeare of the reigne of hir maiestie, for and in the considerations aforesaid, and for that there was a probable plot contriued by skilfull men, to be performed for a conuenient sum of monie, that for euerie ship, vessell, or crater, whereof anie of hir maiesties subiects were owners, or part-owners, being of the burthen of twentie tuns or vpwards, loding or discharging within this realme, or passing to or fro anie forren countrie, during the space of seuen yeres then next insuing, from fortie daies after the end of the same session of parlement, there should be paid for euerie such voiage by the maister or owner of all such vessels, &c: the summe of three pence for euerie tun of the burthen of such ship, &c.

The patent of the queenes gift sold vnto two merchants.

The act of parlement for Douer hauen 23. Eliz.

Three pence the tun of euerie vessell allowed towards Douer hauen.

Hereby there grew great summes of monie to be yearelie leuied toward these works, amounting to one thousand pounds yearelie at the least, and yet the time not expired by two yeares. After this, hir maiestie being carefull that the hauen should with expedition be taken in hand, directed hir letters patents, dated the nine and twentith daie of March, in the foure and twentith yeare of hir reigne, to the lord Cobham lord warden of hir cinque ports, &c: sir Thomas Scot, sir James Hales knights, Thomas Wotton, Edward Bois, the maior of the towne of Douer present and to come, Richard Barrie lieutenant of the castell of Douer, Henrie Palmer, Thomas Digs, Thomas Wilford, and William Partridge esquires, all which were of the shire, and men of great wisedome and iudgement, and no small trauellers in matters concerning the common wealth: some of them maruellous expert in affaires and matters of the seas, some in fortifications, some hauing trauelled beyond the seas for experience and conference that waie, and to see the order of forren seaworks and hauens, and none without singular vertues. In which respect they were commissionated and authorised by those presents, to do, and forsee to be done from time to time, all things needfull and requisit to be imploied about the reparing and mending of the said hauen, and as might tend to the furtherance of the said seruice: and to chose officers, and assigne their stipends, and the seuerall fees of all ministers, attendants and clerks needfull for the substantiall, necessarie, speedie, and cheape doing thereof, and therein to set downe particular orders and directions, as might be for the furtherance and accomplishing of the said works most expedient.

The tunnage amounted to 1000 pounds yearelie.

The tenure of the queens commission for Douer hauen.

Now for the performance hereof, manie plots by sundrie persons were deuised, and first of all one John True was commended, or at the least commended him selfe to the lords of hir maiesties priuie councell, to whome he made great shew to be an expert engineer, and by their lordships he was sent to Douer, and presented to be generall surueior of the works, as one in whome they reposed great hope of furthering and finishing the said hauen; whereof he made no doubt, but resolutelie promised the speedie execution and accomplishing thereof. His deuise and determination was, to make within the said baie neere to the shelfe of beach, a long wall from the water gate (out of which the riuer issueth into the harborough) to the blacke bulworke, in length two hundred rods. This wall was to bee made of excellent stone at Folkestone, the which he framed after a strange and contrarie kind of workmanship. And there was for this purpose alreadie perfectlie hewed of the same stone seuen thousand fot, and six thousand fot more was scapled: he bestowed and spent thereabouts one thousand two hundred fourescore and eight pounds, as appeareth in the accounts of the treasurors for that time being; and yet there was not one stone of his said long wall laid, nor that hither to hath come to anie profitable vse. But this wall if it had beene, or rather could haue beene finished, it would haue cost a hundred thousand pounds, and yet would neuer haue serued the turne. For a stone wall is so contrarie to the nature of that sandie foundation, as it can make no good coniunction nor perfect pent.

John True surueior generall of Douer hauen.

The deuise of John True.

Stone hewed at Folkestone amounting to 1288 pounds.

Infinit charge to accomplish the stone wall.

For the furtherance of his deuise he would haue plucked downe a great part of the old pierre, whereof there was then too little remaining: he detracted the time, for he had ten shillings a daie allowed vnto him for his fee, which perhaps he was loth to forgo. He either could or would not render anie reason to the commissioners of his doings and finall purpose, but alwaies said he would make them a good hauen, neither would he set downe anie time certeine for the accomplishing thereof. All these matters, with his negligence, delaies, & vntowardlinesse of his works, being aduertised to the lords of hir maiesties councell, he was dismissed.

John True had ten shillings a day for his fee.

John True discharged.

After whom, one Ferdinando Poins, who had beene conuersant and acquainted with water works in the low countries, and had dealt much about Woolwich and Erith breaches, offered his seruice for the accomplishing of these works; affirming, that it was an easie matter to bring the same to passe, in such sort as there should soone be a good harborough; refusing not to haue taken the worke to do by great, either by a plot of his owne deuising, or else by the plot agreed on by the commissioners, and allowed by the lords of the councell. But this Ferdinando Poins, although he seemed a verie good executioner either of his owne, or another mans deuise concerning such affaires: yet was he verie loth to discouer his order and maner of working, or anie other deuise of his owne, least (as he said) he might be preuented by some other that would vndertake to do it by his deuises, better cheape than him selfe could afford it, and so he to lose, and other to gaine the benefit of his inuention. Howbeit, in the end he was content to be imploied anie waie, so as therewithall he might haue monie before hand: for Woolwich works did so sticke in his fingers, as monie was verie palpable and plausible vnto him.

Ferdinando Poins.

Poins his groine.

In fine, he vndertooke to make certeine groins or knocks, which at the hauens mouth should cause such a depth, as thereby the whole harborough should lie drie at a low water, whereby the works about the wals might the better and more conueniently bee performed, and the present entrie amended. For it was concluded, that there should bee made a perfect pent within the baie, conteining in quantitie about fiftéene acres, which should be inuironed with a long wall, reaching from aboue the water gate neere to the Castell Raie, extending in length about a hundred and twentie rods alongst within the shelfe of beach, directlie towards the end of the pierre, where the blacke bulworke was placed; and at the end of the said long wall, a crosse wall of length about fortie rods, reaching from that wall directlie crosse to the shore at the northerne cliffe, not far from the townes end. And this should make a perfect pent to conteine and reteine the water of the riuer, which (when the sluse standing in the crosse wall should bee opened) might be of force to make and mainteine a depth for an entrance or hauens mouth for shipping to come into the rode, which lieth betwixt the maine sea and the pent.

The pent 15 acres.

The length of the long wall.

The crosse wall.

The rode for ships.

In this worke there appeared great difficultie, and so much the more, in that (for the most part) the place where the wall should stand, was continuallie surrounded rounded, and also the sea did euerie tide ouerflow the same, and besides that annoiance, the crosse wall also must crosse the riuer, the course whereof could not be diuerted anie other waie but with extreme charge. The speciall cause whie this harborough was continuallie surrounded, euen at the low water, was for want of a depth at the hauens mouth, which might at an ebbe conueie thense into the sea (more speedilie and abundantlie) all those waters which remained vpon the face of the hauen. To the erection hereof (I saie) the said Ferdinando Poins was appointed, and towards his charge therabouts there was first deliuered vnto him one thousand pounds, by force of a warrant sent by the commissioners for Douer hauen, to Thomas Smith of Ostinhanger esquire, farmer of hir maiesties customes inwards in the ports of London, Sandwich, Chichester, Southhampton, and Ipswich, with their creeks and members, and the creeke of Woodbridge, being a member of the port of Yarmouth, who is neuertheless called by the name of Customer Smith, because in times past his office was by letters patents to collect the said custome, and to yeeld account thereof, as other customers vsuallie do, hauing for his fee one hundred and three score pounds yearelie. Now for that he was so trustie and sufficient a person euerie waie, there was committed vnto his charge the receipt of all such summes of monie as were due, either for the aforesaid tunnage, or for the licence of free transportation of corne and beere, the which summes as need required, were by him to be deliuered to the treasurer for Douer harborough vpon the councels direction, and a warrant of six of the said commissioners hands.

One thousand pounds to Ferdinando Poins.

Customer Smith.

There might be much written in the renowme and commendation of this man, for his great affaires and aduentures, as also for other singular vertues: but for that he yet liueth, and is generallie knowne, it maie with modestie be deferred; yet thus much I haue said of him, for that he was a speciall fauorer and furtherer of these works, neuer making delaie of anie paiment appointed or required, but rather disbursing great summes of monie out of his owne cofers to set forwards the same. After the receipt of this thousand pounds, the said F. Poins had 200 more, as it appeareth in those accounts. Trulie, this Ferdinando Poins applied the works industriouslie, and performed some thing profitablie for the draining of the harborough, by making two groins, whereby there was a depth made at the hauens mouth. But as it is thought, his worke either was or might haue beene performed with lesse than halfe that monie: which if he had done, I would more willinglie haue published his praises. By the premisses it maie appeare, that the life of the hauen consisteth in the pent, and consequentlie in the long wall and crosse wall, without the which no pent could be made, so as wals must be erected. But now the question grew to be how and whereof they should be framed which were to be wrought in the sea, vpon the sand or beach, through a riuer, &c: and the same wall to withstand the violence and rage of the sea at the one side, and to hold and reteine a mightie weight of fresh at the other, so as no water might soke through or vnder the same.

Varietie of deuises.

Maister True (as you haue heard) would haue made stone wals verie costlie, and without limitation of time. Maister Ferdinando Poins would haue raised them with ooze and beach shoueled and cast together without anie more adoo. An other would haue made a coffin dam, wherof the cost would haue beene infinite. Pet and Baker, being skilfull shipwrights, with certeine other copartners, thought a wooden wall most conuenient; and presented to the commissioners a module thereof, deuised and framed (for the most part) by one Andrew a carpentar, then seruant to the said Pet: which deuise maister William Burroughs, a verie expert seaman, exceedinglie liked and commended. Maister True his deuise was reiected as impossible and intollerable. Maister Poins his workemanship was easie for a plaine man of the countrie to conceiue and performe: but verie few could be persuaded that his wall would be tight inough to make a pent, consisting onlie of slob and beach shoueled together, and lieng so howeer: for that was his deuise. Neuertheless, sir William Winter (a man verie skilfull and of great experience in sea matters, being sent to Douer by the lords of hir maiesties priuie councell, with maister William Burroughs and others, to surueie and confer about that hauen with the said commissioners) vnderstanding Ferdinando Poins had delt in the inning of Woolwich & Erith marshes, being also willing to do him good, gaue fauourable eare vnto him, as to one that propounded an easie and a cheape platforme, and not much vnprobable in his opinion, whose desire was to haue it well performed, and with as small charge as might be, for that he was the greatest preferrer of that bill in the parlement house, and yeelded the best reasons for a hauen to be there placed.

Sir W. Winter sent to Douer to surueie the harbor, &c.

At this assemblie were proposed other sundrie mens deuises; namelie, of one Thomas Broker gentleman, John Stoneham carpentar, Bedwell, &c: and among the rest sir Thomas Scot, being a man carefull for the affaires of his countrie, and therewithall verie perspicuous, being wearied with manie fruitlesse conferences, delaies, strange and vntoward deuises, chargeable and vaine attempts, and contrarie procedings; and among other things, hauing had great experience in Romneie marsh matters (the greatest businesse whereof consisteth in making and reparing of wals to defend the same marsh from the inuasion and inundation of the sea) and dailie seeing the nature and effects therof, weieng also in his mind, that Romneie marsh wals are of greater bulke and force than these need to be, for that they lie more open to the maine sea, and without comparison more subiect to the weight and violent rage thereof; and further knowing that the marsh wals are placed not farre from thense vpon that coast, vpon a foundation in all respects like vnto the same, if not worse (for sometimes they build vpon a verie quicke sand, where one maie thrust downe a pole of a dozzen or twentie fot, and not find or feele the bottome) and after he had compared these workes together, perceiuing no impediment whie one rule should not direct two workes of one kind, he conferred with his neighbours of Romneie marsh therein, who allowed and confirmed his deuise, and afterward redilie attended on him to Douer, there to approue his opinion with their reasons and experience; and not so onelie, but also to vndertake and performe what soeuer he had set downe or promised in that behalfe. The residue of the commissioners (hearing and conceiuing sir Thomas Scots reasons, ioined and confirmed with experience not far fetcht, but ratified by neere neighbours, being persons of good account, which were expert from their childhood in the practise of those kind of works) inclined greatlie vnto his motion; and the rather, for that they knew him to be such a one as would not seeke for priuat gaines. Howbeit, they which exhibited the wooden worke, could not well conceiue hereof, nor easilie consent herevnto. And no waie was thought by them more fit to preferre their owne worke, than to make some offer to do it by great, which the lords of the coun-

The wals of Romneie marsh subiect to the raging seas.

All the commissioners come with sir Thomas Scot, and allow his deuise.

cell greatlie desired, as whereby they might vnderstand the vttermost charge and time required for the accomplishing thereof. But the price of the woodden wall grew to be so large (for fiue thousand and fiue hundred pounds was the lowest rate of their demand for the long wall onelie) that it was much misliked. For first there was no likelihood or possibilitie that the same should be set fast and vnmoueable vpon the slub or sleech is fifteene foot deepe at the least, and the maine rocke immediatlie vnderneath it. Secondlie, if the same could be erected, yet it must in short time be so shaken by reason of the weight of the pent water on the one side at low water, and by the violence of the sea on the other side at the flood, that through the vnstedinesse thereof, it could not continue tight. Thirdlie, the nature of the sand and slub was thought to be so different from the condition of woodden boords and planks, whereof this wall was to consist, that though there were no weight or wether that could impech the stedie standing thereof, yet there could be no such firme coniunction betwixt them, but that the verie weight of the wall it selfe must needs cause the same to decline to one side or other, whereby water would draine betwixt, by reason of the thinnesse of the slub or sleech, which could minister no certeine staie thereunto, nor likelihood that the same should so vnite with the wood, as to stand stedie, and to make a perfect pent in that place: but to helpe that matter, they meant to haue shored and braced the said timber wall, in such sort as the same should haue staid the whole worke: yet no bracing could (as the best opinion was) haue preuailed to bring that wall to be good or stedie. Fourthlie, it was thought that such a wall so placed, would be subiect to more than ordinarie decaie, by reason that anie woodworke lieng in water, especiallie when it is sometimes wet and sometimes drie, will in short time rot and disioint: so as if the same could be repaired (whereof there was great doubt made) yet the reparations would be in respect of charge verie intollerable. Fiftlie, the delaie of time herein was also disliked, for two yeares being demanded for the accomplishing of that one wall, no time could be promised. Sixtlie, they being demanded whether they had euer seene (either on this side or beyond the seas) anie such wall or worke; they answered, No: but affirmed it to be in their opinions so probable, as they would aduenture to vndertake it for thirtie pounds the rod, but in what space to finish it they could not saie. Seuenthlie, there was required for the building of this wall 7000 tun of timber, which all Kent and Sussex (without vnrecouerable hurt in depriuation of their timber) was not able to yeeld: and the necessarie carriages for such a prouision could haue beene by no meanes procured, without the vndoing of the inhabitants, and spoile of the countrie. These causes were of force inough to ouerthrow a woodden wall. The deuise neuertheless deserued commendation.

Seuen inuincible reasons against the woodden wall.

These matters thus mentioned were afterwards debated before the lords of the councell, and these reasons with manie others were deliuered vnto their lordships by maister Thomas Digs, the first elected surueior of the works, as from the commissioners. The credit of the parties, who were to vndertake this woodden wall, and their reasons preuailed so much, as diuerse noble and wise men grew to conceiue good liking thereof. But the lord treasuror, whose voice and iudgement in all causes of importance hath in all his time worthilie caried the swaie, allowed rather of the marsh works; saieng that if he erred therein, as not seeing but hearing the matter in question, he would erre with discretion, as led by the reasons of the commissioners; who had

The lord treasurors resolution.

seene and tried the experience of that kind of worke.

Diuerse liked of Poins his worke, or at the least of his communication: partlie (as it is said) for the cheapnesse supposed, though in deed the contrarie fell out in demand: partlie for the expedition promised, which could neuer haue beene performed: partlie for that he was knowne to be a speciall executioner in Woolwich breaches, being workes defensatiue against inuasion of waters, as yet vnaccomplished, though no small charges haue beene therein imploied, for the recouerie of two thousand acres of excellent marsh land, lieng seuen miles from London, in the parishes of Plumsted, Erith, &c: lost by a breach made in the wals there with a tempest, about the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred and thirtie, to the vndoing of manie, but speciallie of sir Edward Boulton knight: partlie also he was hearkened vnto, for that he was reputed to be a good engino; partlie for his experience in forren works, partlie for his resolutenesse: but especiallie, for that he made a shew of more cunning than he would vtter; so as although his deuise for the erection of the wals was finallie reiected; yet was the matter brought to further conference. For he was commended to the lords of his maiesties priuie councell, and namelie to sir Francis Walsingham knight, principall secretarie to his highnesse; to whome was happilie referred the consideration and chiefe direction of all matters concerning these works; wherin he dealt from time to time, with as great care, trauell, and circumspection, as though his owne estate had depended vpon the well proceeding thereof. Whatsoeuer was thought necessarie to be done thereabouts, was alwaies aduertised by the commissioners vnto him, and his opinion and direction required, and he without good conference and probabilitie would enter into no action concerning this matter.

Of Woolwich and Erith breaches.

Secretarie Walsingham the chiefe director and furtherer of Douer hauen.

Now therefore he wrote to sir Thomas Scot, requiring him to send vp some sufficient person, acquainted & exercised in Romnie marsh works, to satisfie the lords of the councell in all such doubts as should be obiected, speciallie by maister Burroughs, who had more liking of the shipwrights maner of worke, than either of the Romnie marsh works exhibited by sir Thomas Scot, or of Plumsted works propounded by Ferdinando Poins. Wherein sir Francis Walsingham shewed maister Digs his defense, & his owne good liking of the earthen wals; onelie requiring, that sir Thomas Scot would throughlie informe himselfe by conference with the marshmen, to answer certeine obiections which he there inclosed, sent downe vnto him in writing, concerning the passage of the long wall, and the distance thereof from the shore, the high and tightnes of the same, the conuenience of the foundation, the manner of stuffe, the time of finishing, the breadth below and at the top, the vndertakers thereof, and of their assurance, &c: and lastlie, that some sufficient person should be sent vp, to confer in these matters. All which points were so answered by sir Thomas Scot, as sir Francis Walsingham was greatlie satisfied thereby. Concerning the doing thereof by great, sir Thomas Scots aduise was, that (seeing it was a princes charge) it might rather be performed by daieworkers and good ouerseers, than by great; wherein no man would aduenture, in respect of the quantitie of the charge and difficultie of the works, without certeintie of great gaines. Neuertheless, if it were so set downe by the lords of the priuie councell, that it should be done no other waie but by great; he himselfe would vndertake it better cheape than anie other had profered to do it by fiue hundred marks, and to that effect would Maister secretaries letter to sir Thomas Scot.

Questions propounded in Poins and the Plumsted vnit.

No dealing by great, in matters of excessiue charge and danger.

would put in verie good and sufficient assurance. Presentlie after the receipt of those letters, sir Thomas Scot sent to the court a kinsman of his, named Reinold Scot, who had béene deputed a surueior of Romneie marsh by the space of foure yeares togither; and Reinold Smith, who had béene clearke of Romneie marsh, and a continuall dealer about those wals by the space of thirtie years. These two repairing first to Douer, to consider of the earth, which should serue to make the wals of the pent of Douer hauen, and to search where such earth as would serue that turne might most conuenientlie and nérest hand be had, with pasture for horsses which should be imploied for carriage thereof, proceéded to the court at Richmont, where they attended on maister secretarie Walsingham on the mondaie and tuesdaie before Easter daie 1583: and after conference had with him, they deliuered vnto him certeine notes in writing from sir Thomas Scot, conteining necessarie orders, and recounting the charges, businesse, and offices, &c: incident to the erection of these walles, imitating as nére as time, place, and matter would giue leaue, the maner of Romneie marsh works: wherein he remembred or rather required a yéerelie assemblie of commissioners at Douer in Easter wéeke, as is by the lords of Romneie marsh at Whitsuntide, with the election of officers, and set downe the dutie and charge of ech officer, the order of the works, what prouision of stuffe should be made, to wit, of timber, thorne, faggots, néedels, keies, bétels, piles, pasture, earth, with totall sums of all officers fées, of all stuffe and prouision, of all the labourers, and of all the cartages: which estimat was little or nothing differing from the charge as it fell out, sauing that where he set it downe that both walles might be finished in two summers, he accomplished them in one quarter of a yéere, beyond promise or expectation.

Sir Thomas Scots notes.

Douer pent finished in three moneths.

Maister secretarie Walsingham (hauing perused these notes, & séene the maner of the works & rates set downe therein) liked verie well thereof: howbe it, he strictlie examined the parties aforesaid, how those works could be performed at so low prices, and especiallie, how so manie courts could be prouided without commission, or griefe to the countrie, euerie court hauing a horsse and a diner, and all for twelue pence a day, in a place where pastures are for the most part barren, and hard to be gotten: and both that and all other things, but especiallie victels extreame déere. But being satisfied herein by the said Reinold Scot & Reinold Smith, he thought good neuertheless to send them two, accompanied with Thomas Digs esquier, and William Burroughs gentleman, to confer with sir William Winter, the said Ferdinando Poins, & the Plumsted men, which were workemen in Woolwich and Erith breaches, who propounded to the said workemen certeine questions at the house of sir William Winter at Tower hill. Wherein they were demanded amongst other things, whether they euer had heretofore made anie wals, whereby water hath béene pent to anie highth, and vpon what foundation or soile they were set, and of what substance their wals were made, and whether they could remedie such wals if they leaked, or could worke in water: and finallie, what they would aske for a rod doing, and what suerties they could put in for the tightnesse of their worke.

Reinold Scot and Rafe Smith examined by maister secretarie about the wals of the pent.

Questions propounded to Poins and the Plumsted men.

Ferdinando Poins and his Plumsted men answered verie comfortablie to euerie question, they séemed ignorant in nothing, and promised to performe whatsoeuer was required, sauing assurance. But they knew not the order of Romneie marsh works, neither could they possiblie haue accomplished this: for they were onelie good dikers and hodmen, which arts were little pertinent hereunto. Maister secretarie being aduertised how Ferdinando Poins and his pioners of Plumsted shewed themselues in this conference, wherein neither their owne disabilitie, nor the difficultie of the worke by themselues was anie thing at all doubted of, thought it not amis to aduertise the residue of the lords of the councell thereof: so as if those works might in such wise be by anie thought possible to be performed, then might the marsh works with much more assurance be trusted vnto; and that did maister Burroughs now verie well conceiue and note: neuertheless, it was thought expedient by their lordships, that Poins and his workemen should repaire to Douer to a finall conference in those matters; who perchance might be somewaie at the least imploied in those businesses. And therefore maister secretarie sent down to sir Thomas Scot, that their lordships had receiued the resolution he grew vnto, vpon conference with the marshmen of Romneie, touching the proceéding in the plot of Douer hauen, and had both well considered & allowed of the same; and that their lordships also had appointed, that on the tuesdaie after Easter wéeke, maister Burroughs and maister Poins, with certeine marshmen of Plumsted, should be sent downe to méet and confer further with him about the going forwards with the same plot at Douer: at which time such order might be taken and agréed on among the commissioners, for the making of all necessarie prouisions for the same, as should be thought most expedient.

Sir Thomas Scots deuise allowed by the lords of the councell.

On the ninth daie of Aprill next insuing, the parties aboue specified came to Douer accordinglie, where all the commissioners for that harborough met them, who hauing receiued letters from the lords of the councell to set downe a finall resolution; after long debating of matters, agréed that Romneie marshmen should vndertake the worke; and for the better and more spéedie proceéding therein, the commissioners made election of all necessarie officers, and rated their wages in this sort. The treasuror, which was sir James Hales knight, to haue for euerie fiftie pounds receiued and disbursed, sir shillings eight pence, and for his clearke fiue pounds yearelie. John Smith the expenditor twentie pounds yearelie, his clearke fiue pounds yearelie. The common clearke twentie marks, and each sworne man during his attendance eight pence a daie. The generall surueior (that is to saie) maister Digs esquier twentie marks yearelie, which he gaue to Alexander Hindge his deputie.

The resolution at a conference at Douer.

Officers elected at Douer.

It was there also ordered, that the deputies surueior, the expenditor, and clearke, should take present order for the inlarging of the waies for carriages to passe; for thorne, fagot, bétels, nædels, keies, piles, bauin, and carriages for them, before Whitsuntide following. These things were committed to their charge; but they were afterwards eased by purueiors appointed for those and other purposes; they hauing more to do otherwise than they could well ouercome. Hauing now discouered the first & second estate of Douer harborough, euerie mans deuise for the amending or rather erecting of a new hauen in that place, with declaration of hir maiesties bountie, and the care of the whole state iointlie and seuerallie in that behalfe: I am to make description of the things performed, and of the manner of the execution thereof, in which thing consisted the difficultie, and (as some thought) the impossibilitie of this enterprise.

First therefore you are to vnderstand, that before a hauen could be there erected, there must be made a pent, to conteine abundance of water issuing ing from the land, which being let out at a sluse, should open & maintein the hauens mouth; the violence whereof should scowre it so, as neither beach, sand, nor slub might there remaine. The working of these wals in the sea and thorough the chanell, was the great thing to be brought to passe, as hath bene before said. The discouerie therefore of these workes will not be vnprofitable to posteritie, nor vnnecessarie for the time present. Herein I will omit all contentions & factions concerning these proceedings, as also all iniurious practises against those works, whense soeuer they sprang: but I would gladlie giue to euerie one his due commendation, which cannot be done; because therein I should grow to long. I thought met also to omit a controuersie rising about the placing of the hauens mouth, excellentlie disputed betwixt persons of good acount.

The commoditie of the pent.

The question was, whether were most conuenient a more readie and spedie entrance in times of danger, when contrarie winds permitted no entrie or abode in anie harbourough, though this entrance were somewhat more shallow, whereby the greatest ships in those cases should be excluded: or a deeper hauens mouth in an other place more conuenient for great ships, with a more calme ingresse, and a quieter rode, the hauens mouth somewhat more easterlie, and therefore not so good to enter into at a southwest wind, which distresseth men most in those seas: wherein (I saie) I forbeare to repeat the arguments of ech side, and the circumstance of that matter (being now decided and ouerruled) in such sort as I doo the works of the pent, the description whereof maie be profitable to all that shall haue to doo either in hauens or great water breaches. For both plumsted & Erith marshes, or anie like breaches by this means doubtlesse maie easilie and most assuredlie be recouered. In the declaration hereof also, the parties which haue deserued commendation or consideration maie perhaps in some sort haue a kind of recompense: for other reward was not looked after, or sought for by the best executioners hereof, sith the better sort imploied their trauell with great charges, the meaner sort their readie furtherance to their power, the poore people their labor at a small rate to the preferring and performance of this worke; and all with such forwardnesse and willingnes of mind, as the like hath not beene knowne or seene in this age: the beholding whereof would haue amazed anie man vnacquainted with Romeneie marsh workes, from whense the patterne hereof was fetcht, and the officers and chiefe workemen thereof brought by sir Thomas Scot to Douer. These works were digested and ordered by them, euen as a battell is marshalled by officers of the feeld. And trulie it was expedient that good direction should be vsed in this behalfe, for there were to be imploied fiue or sir hundred courts about a wall of small bredth at one instant, none to be idle or hindered by an other, for the staie of one court a verie little space might be to the works an incredible hinderance.

Woolwich breach recouerable.

Euerie degree willing to set forward this worke.

Six hundred courts imploied at once in these works.

The nature and names of the offices and officers hereunto perteining you haue alreadie heard. For as they were at the first set downe by sir Thomas Scot, so in all respects was it ordered and concluded in that behalfe; sauing that because these works were so great, and required such expedition, as the expenditor was ouercharged with busines, though an expert man trained vp in Romneie marsh in those affaires, trustie, diligent, and euerie waie sufficient: vnto whose office naturallie belonged the purueiance of all necessaries, anie waie apperteining to the maintenance of the wals. There was appointed by the commissioners (as chiefe purueior) a gentleman of good sufficiencie named John Reies, by whose countenance and discreet dealing men were brought to yeeld willinglie anie of their commodities towards the helpe and furtherance of these proceedings for their iust values, which was dulie answered vnto them, so as no man was seene to complaine of anie iniurie or hard dealing. But when the works, or rather the workers grew to be greater and more in number than was expected, (which came to passe by reason of the multitude of courts and workemen, who proffered their seruice so fast, as from the rate of two hundred, which was at the first set downe, they increased to six hundred) all pastures neere the towne being imploied that waie, manie men were content to make their owne prouision, conditionallie to be admitted into the works, insomuch as some hired pasture for their working horsses seuen or eight miles from Douer, and neuertheless came to worke with the first, and continued the whole daie with them that wrought longest. For they came at six of the clocke in the morning, and departed at six of the clocke at night, except extraordinarie causes in preuenting inconueniences of great and fowle tides caused them to worke longer. Diuerse brought thither courts from beside Maidstone and Seuenocke, being thirtie or fortie miles from Douer; and in the end the officers were driuen to put backe and refuse such as made suite to bring courts into the works: and yet had they for their horsse, their court, and their driuer but onelie twelue pence a daie. Which because it seemeth incredible, I thought good to discouer and vnfold to the reader in such sort, as he might be resolued and satisfied in the certeintie thereof, and throughlie conceiue not onelie the possibilitie but also the reason of it.

John Reies gentleman chiefe purueior.

A horsse, a court, and a driuer for twelue pence the daie.

First therefore the time of yeare when that worke was to be done must be considered, which was intended, and by proclamations in certeine market towns notified to haue had beginning the thirteenth of Maie (when in those parts barleie season is ended) and from that time till haruest or haieng time little is to be done in husbandrie; and assone as haruest should begin, their purpose was to leaue this worke vntill the yere following. So as in this meane time, that is to saie, from Aprill till haruest, the seruants, & speciallie the cattell of farmers are rather chargeable than anie waie gainefull vnto them, and therefore at such a time to raise profit by them is double aduantage. Neuertheless, he that should make his best commoditie herein, was to looke circumspectlie into the matter, and then might he see that it was requisit to haue two courts: for one bote might driue them both, because whilest the one was driuen, the other was filled, & the same being vnloden or discharged, he went for the other, leauing that to be filled. This filler was a labourer allowed to euerie man which had two courts, for whome the owner of the two courts had ten pence the daie: so as he had for his filler, his driuer, his two horsses, and his two courts two shillings and ten pence the daie, which amounteth to seuentéene shillings the weeke. He paied out of the same for the bord of his filler and driuer six shillings weekelie, and so had the owner of cléere weekelie gaine for his two seruants and two horsses nine shillings, which must all this while haue lien at his charge.

John Smith the expenditor.

There were among this number certeine double courts, which had double wages; because they were furnished with two horsses in a court, being double in quantitie to the rest, and were speciallie imploied about the cartage of fleech, a more weightie mould than either the chalke or the earth. A single court conteined in length fiue foot, in bredth two foot, and in depth sixteene inches: wherevnto the expenditor looked

The quantitie of one court or tumbrell.

lowed verie narrowlie, as also to the sufficiencie and diligence of euerie workeman and horse, so as vpon euerie default their wages was totted and defalked, or the offendors excluded from the works, or some times punished with stocks and other imprisonment.

The first entrie into the works.

An entrance into this worke was made in the beginning of Maie, one thousand fiue hundred foure score and three, in the fiue and twentith yeare of his maiesties reigne, with six courts onelie at the crosse wall; & such was the towardlines thereof, as yelded so great a hope & promise of good successe, that from that date forward there were continuallie cariages brought (at the rate before set downe) beyond all expectation: in so much as by the 27 of June, there were assembled in those works 542 courts, and almost 1000 workemen. And truelie, there consisted so great difficultie in marshalling this multitude (for all were to worke at once, none might staie for other, or be impediment to others worke) as without the paterne of former experience the worke could hardlie haue bene performed.

Romneie marshmen cheefe directors in the works.

Herein Richard Toall and William Morris iurats, and the aforenamed Reginald Smith clearke of Romneie marsh were cheefe directors, and as it were marshals, as hauing dailie experience in the like works. For in Romneie marsh there are euerie yeare commonlie imploted at one time about making or mending of some one wall 200 courts at the least, in each court for the most part being two oxen, for whome the owners hire feeding in the marsh, as they can agree with the landholders, and yet haue had hitherto for their court and diner but ten pence the date. And this togither with their manner of working would be wonderfull, famous, and much spoken of throughout England, if the continuance of so manie hundred yeares exercise thereof had not qualified the strangenesse and admiration of it. For here (though at Douer it could not be so, because they wrought altogither with horsbeasts) the nights feeding preuaileth so much ouer the daies working, that bullocks brought to those works leane and out of flesh, are returned from the works most commonlie in verie good plight.

A horsse, a court, and a diner by tweine penie the date.

A benefit to man & beast.

The stuffe or substance of the wals.

The stuffe carried by these courts for the erection of the walles at Douer, was earth, being of a haselie mould, chalke and sleech, whereunto the carriages were seuerallie imploid, the most number for earth, whereof the greatest part of the wall consisted; the second for chalke, which mingled and beaten togither with the earth, did make the same more firme, and was placed in the midst of the wall; the smallest number for sleech, which serued for the out sides onlie.

The disposing of the works.

For the same being beaten with beetles to the sides of the wall, would by and by cleaue so fast and close therevnto, as thereby the wals were strengthened; and therevpon also the arming might be set much more firmelie than vpon anie other mould. This also preserued the wall from annoiance by rage of waters, almost as well as if they were otherwise armed with thorne and faggot.

Henrie Guilford esquier, capteine of Arcliffe castell.

There was prouided neere to the castell called Arcliffe (whereof Henrie Guilford esquier, being one that toke especiall care and paines in setting forward that businesse, was then capiteine) two acres and a halfe of ground for the prouision of earth for the walles: which ground was distant from the crosse wall about twentie score tailors yards, and for the same the owner had ten pounds, and the soile remaining to himselfe, which in short time will recouer to be as good as euer it was. At an other place also called Horsepole sole, lieng behind S. James his church, was more earth prouided, which was altogither imploted vpon the long wall, as being neerer therevnto. Hereof euerie court brought commonlie to the walles in one daie about twelue lodes. The chalke was had from diuerse places of the cliffes, somwhat neerer to the wals than the earth, and these brought about seauentene or eightene lode a date. The sleech was for the most part had at the west part of the hauen in a place called Paradise. And to these seuerall sorts of stuffe were seuerall cariages appointed and disposed, as might most conuenientlie serue the turne, and as occasion serued; for somtimes more and sometimes lesse of each sort of mould was necessarilie imploied. Somtimes also the sleech was had close at the side of the wals, and therefore fewer cariages imploied that waie.

The ouze or sleech was twentie foot deepe at the least.

Now to make a perfect triall of the worke before the date limited that all the courts should come in, there was an experiment of great importance performed, which was the making of a baie head, & therby a pent to keepe the water in or out of a peece of the hauen called Little paradise, which place containeth about three acres and a halfe of ground in great depth, wherein there riseth manie springs. And in the place where this wall or baie head should be made, the ouze & sleech was twentie foot deepe at the least. Herin also was laid first a pinstocke, and afterwards a sluse of great charge, the streame whereof meeting with the course of the great sluse increaseth the force thereof to the benefit of the hauens mouth.

The beginning of the great works at Douer.

On the thirteenth date of Maie, in the yeare of our saluation one thousand fiue hundred eightie and three, when the courts, which (by proclamations made one moneth before in diuerse market townes) were to come to begin the works, there were more of them prepared and readie furnished for the purpose than were expected. Howbeit, the same was brought to passe by the meanes of sir Thomas Scot and other of the commissioners, who brought both their owne and their neighbors carriages, persuading all whom they thought able and meet, to set forward, and giue incouragement to the execution of these works. But Romneie marshmen, and such as knew those works, were they indeed which onlie gaue light to others of the true right maner of working, and of the commoditie insuing hereby; & they in effect supplied those works, vntill the countrie did see which waie to saue themselues, and make profit thereof. But such was the multitude alreadie assembled, that (to auoid the difficultie and confusion of so manie courts working togither at the beginning, and to do the better and greater seruice afterwards) the whole course was altered by sir Thomas Scot, by whome it was thought most meet to enter into the execution of both walles (to wit, the long wall and crosse wall) togither, & to diuide the courts into two parts: with whome the said Richard Barrie esquier lieutenant of Douer castell willinglie ioined, vndertaking the charge or ouersight of the long wall, as sir Thomas Scot did of the crosse wall; and by that meanes all the workmen & courts did with much more conuenience and speed accomplish their worke.

Reasons for the difficultie of the crosse wall.

The crosse wall was of more importance, and the difficultie to make it was greater than of the long wall, for manie respects. First, for that the crosse wall standeth neerer to the maine sea than the long wall, and by that meanes this worke more violentlie impugned, and sooner interrupted than that of the long wall. Secondlie, they carried the crosse wall through the chanell (a thing verie strange and difficult) and so did they not the long wall. Thirdlie, the ouze and sleech was deeper vnder the crosse wall than vnder the long wall. Fourthlie, the crosse wall was to be made deeper or higher, and broder or wider than the long wall. Fiftlie, the tide was to hinder this worke, by approching sooner, by rising higher, er, and by more violent raging than it did at the other. Sirtlie, the weight of the pent water was to lie altogither vpon this wall, and consequentlie the water would search thereinto more dangerouslie. Seuenthlie, in this wall there was a sluse to be laid, which without great circumspection would haue indangered the whole worke. Adde vnto these, that the crosse wall was more suddenlie vndertaken, & of more importance. For vnder fiftéene thousand pounds none euer made offer to do it before this time: for the first purpose was to begin with the long wall onlie, or rather a péece thereof, as a worke sufficient to be performed in one summer.

The quantitie of one court is vnmeet.

Now if the long wall was thought a worke so difficult, dangerous, costlie, and tedious, what may be thought of the crosse wall? Trulie, had not the other commissioners béene comforted herein by sir Thomas Scot, the impossibilitie presupposed would haue discouraged and ouerthrowne the whole enterprise. But he with good comfort and confidence entred vpon the crosse wall, and maister lieutenant on the long wall: insomuch as the one was called sir Thomas Scots wall, the other maister lieutenants wall. And certeinlie, they might well so be termed, in respect of the paines, care, and costs imploied vpon them by those two gentlemen. Sir Thomas Scot dwelt twelue long Kentish miles from Douer, yet did he seldome faile to come from his house to the beginning of the worke euerie mondaie morning while the walles were in hand; and from that daie vntill saturdaie in the euening, when he returned home. He lightlie came first to the walles, and departed with the last: and it behoued him so to do, in as much as by his meanes onelie this manner of worke was vndertaken, and all other deuises reiected. He laie in one John Spritwels house, who kept an inne in Doner, called the Greihound, and there did he and his followers and seruants, togither with maister lieutenant and his companie receiue their diet at a déere hand. For although the castell stand within a quarter of a mile of the worke, and as nére to the towne; yet was the lieutenants industrie and charge such, as he or his seruants did neuer lightlie returne home from fiue of the clocke in the morning till after supper; but remained alwaies there with sir Thomas Scot, in continuall businesse & extreme charge, not onelie in respect of their owne table, but also in regard of strangers, who came to sée them and the workes, whose charges they commonlie defraied. Besides that, they did (not seldome times) bestow rewards bountifullie vpon the poore workmen, who vpon sundrie occasions were driuen to worke longer than the rest, and with more difficultie; for some at some times wrought in danger of life, & ofttimes in the waters vp to the wast or shoulders. And among the rest (to whome I could rather wish a liberall recompense than a due praise) there was in these workes a poore man named John Bowle, borne and brought vp in Romneie marsh, whose derteritie of hand, fine and excellent inuentions in executing difficult workes, and whose willing mind and painfulnesse for his owne part, with furthering and incouraging of others, ought in some calling to haue béene honored, and in his poore estate should not be forgotten. As touching the residue of the commissioners, they for their parts (if they were in health) did almost dailie visit the workes, with as great care for the good procéedings thereof as was possible.

This worke vndertaken and other reiected by sir Thomas Scots means.

Bowle a notable good workman.

Commissioners.

Sir James Hales was this yeare chosen by the generall voice and consent of the commissioners, and with the good allowance of the lords of the councell, treasuror for the workes (as sir Thomas Scot was the two yeares precedent) and did not onelie discharge the office and dutie thereof with commendation and iust account, which amounted almost to fiue thousand pounds: but beside his often repaire at other times during the works, he did continue there by the space of one whole month, while sir Thomas Scot (by meanes of a sickenesse taken vpon the wals) was absent, and all that time kept a bountifull table, and vsed great diligence, in continuall ouersight and furtherance of the works, whereof Thomas Digs esquier was generall surueior commended thervnto by the lords of the councell, who although he made his chiefe abode then at London, yet did he often repaire to the works, and seriouslie bent himselfe to set forward the same there, being also a carefull sollicitor in that behalfe. Certeine of the iurats & chiefe magistrats of the towne, were by two at once dailie alligned to be directors and setters forth of the carriages, and to sée the courts well filled: these also did refuse their allowance, being eight pence the daie, and did neuertheless verie diligentlie attend vpon their charge: their names were John Watson, John Garret, William Willis, Thomas Brodgat, &c.

Treasuror.

Two iurats called directors.

There were eight men called guiders standing at eight seuerall stations, or places of most danger, to guide and helpe the driuers distressed or troubled with their cattell or courts, and to hasten them forward: for the default of one did make staie of the whole companie, and these had eight pence the daie.

Eight guiders

There attended also at the wals eight men called vntingers, to lose and vndo the tackle of euerie court immediatlie before the vnloding or shelving thereof, and were allowed eight pence the daie. Then were there eight shelvers, which pulled downe the courts as soone as they came to the place where it was needfull to vnlode, and these were chosen of the strongest and nimblest men, hauing ten pence the daie. There were also eight tingers, whose speciall office was to lift vp the courts immediatlie after they were vnloden, and to make fast their tackle; for the driuers hasted forth without making anie staie, otherwise all the companie must haue tarried for them; these had eight pence the daie. The number of the laborers which were to shouell abrode and laie euen the earth, chalke, and fléech, as soone as it was vnloden was vncerteine, they had six pence and eight pence the daie. A great manie marshmen were assigned to laie the fléech vpon the sides of the wals, and were called scauelmen, and had twelue pence the daie. The number of bétlemen also were vncerteine, who serued to beat or driue the fléech to the sides of the wals, and to breake the great stones of chalke laid on the wals; as also to leuell the earth, and to worke it close together, hauing for their wages eight pence the daie. Manie marshmen also were appointed to arme the sides of the wals, after they were fléeched, & had twelue pence, and some sixtéene pence the daie.

Eight vntingers.

Eight shelvers.

Labourers.

Scauelmen.

Bétlemen.

Armors.

The order of arming was in this maner. First beginning at the foot of the wall, they laid downe a row of fagot, through euerie one of the which they driue a nédle or stake about foure foot long, hauing an eie or hole at the great end. Then do they edder it with thorne and other prouision for that purpose, and lastlie driue a keie or wodden wedge (being one foot and a halfe long) through the eie of the nédle to kéepe downe the edder, which staith downe the fagot. Also there was an inferiour purueior for fagot, thorne, nédles, keies, &c: who for his horse & himselfe was allowed for euerie daie he trauelled two shillings. The clerke of the works, who kept all the reckonings of the expenditor (through whose hands all the monie passed) he at fiue a clocke in the morning, togither with the expenditor, called euerie one that wrought

The order of arming.

Inferior purueiors.

Clerke.

Expenditor.

that

that daie, and saw euerie court furnished, and recorded all this in his booke, and such as were absent, had no allowance that daie: if they came late, their wages was totted at the erpenditors good discretion.

The groins keeper.

There was one Juline appointed to attend vpon Poins his groins, he was a Dutchman, and more expert in those kind of water workes than Poins himselfe, his wages was first (I meane in Poins his time) two shillings a daie, afterwards (to wit) whilest these workes were in hand, and better husbandrie was vsed, he had but foure grotes a daie. And thus much touching the offices and officers duties.

The maner of the wall worke.

Euerie court was most commonlie filled ouer night, and in the morning at six of the clocke they all approched orderlie to the place where the wall should be made. The first driuer for good consideration was chosen to be a sufficient and a diligent person, and that court to haue a good gelding: for as he lead the danse, so must they all follow. When the first court came nigh to the place where he should vnlode, one vntinged it, and the driuer proceeded with his court, either into the ouze or water, or as neere therevnto as they could; and bringing his horsse about in his returne, when the taile of the court was turned to the water side, the shelues plucked downe the lode, as far into the chanell as he could. The driuer neuer staied, but went forth for a new lode: the tinger runneth after and pulleth vp the court, and fasteneth the tackle, and goeth presentlie with speed to do likewise to another; and so doth the vntinger. When the whole course of courts (being about two hundred) were vnloden, the labourers with their shouels and beetels plied to make euen the wall against another course came.

Sometimes they wrought a whole daie or two, and laid downe manie thousand lodes of earth and chalke, and no increase seene at night of the worke, either in higth or length; in so much as manie supposed that the earth was rather washed awaie than sunke. And in truth, some part thereof was carried awaie with the flood in a rough tide; for all the water in the hauen was manie times discoloured therewith; especiallie, vntill sir Thomas Scot tooke order, that before euerie flood, not onelie each side of the wall, but the end also should be armed with fagot; & in the morning or after none (when returne was made to the works) the end where they were to proceed, should be vnarmed againe: which needed not be done to the sides, for they carried the whole breadth of the wall with them. But in truth, the weight of the wall, with the continuall passage thervpon, made the whole worke to sinke to the verie rocke; being from the top of the chanell sixteene foot, and from the face of the water at the flood, almost as much more. But in the end, it was a wonder to see how the multitude of carriages (being well plied) prevailed, euen ouer the flood: which though it rose exceeding fast, and was come to the verie brinke or vppermost lane of the wall, a new course of courts came from time to time and supplied the want; which if it should haue staied a minut longer, would haue turned to great losse: for they could haue wrought no longer that tide.

How the wall was saued from being washed.

In this maner they proceeded, vntill there was made of the crosse wall about fiue and twentie rods, which they wrought alwaies (as they went) aboue the high water marke (otherwise it could neuer haue beene performed) and so they passed through the chanell or riuer, and carted the wall beyond the same three or foure rods, so as the backe water or chanell had no issue to passe downe into the sea; but as it rose aboue the flats, and ran awaie before the end of the wall; whense they continuallie droue it further and further by lengthening the same. Howbeit, by this meanes they wrought alwaies in the water, which was verie discommodious. This riuer therefore manie men would haue had turned some other waie; otherwise it was thought, that this wall could not haue beene made, the turning whereof would haue beene diuerse waies inconuenient. First, for the extreame charge; secondlie, the hauens mouth would (for want hereof) haue soone beene swarued vp; thirdlie, Poins his worke, which cost one thousand & two hundred pounds, should haue bin hereby frustrated; fourthlie, the hauen (all that time) and all passage vnto Douer had beene vtterlie taken awaie, to the great hinderance and vndoing of the townsmen there. But sir Thomas Scot, who imploied his head and mind to seeke all aduantages for the setting forward of this worke, and had conceiued a perfect plot for the finishing of the same, caused a cut to be made in the wall, and a small sluse to be laid in the verie place where the chanell did first run, which serued (for the time) not onelie to giue naturall passage to the riuer, and to mainteine the hauens mouth: but as a bridge also for the courts to passe ouer the water, to the further end of the wall; which now by this meanes remained drie and free from water vntill the flood, to the great aduantage and commoditie of the worke.

The inconuenience which would haue followed the diuerting of the riuer another waie.

A sluse made for diuerse good purposes.

This sluse was composed with two arches, in length sixtie foot (besides the splaies) at each end, in breadth eight foot, and in depth also eight foot, and the charge thereof amounted not to aboue one hundred marks. In truth, the laieng of this sluse was a verie dangerous and difficult peece of worke, and the executioners thereof worthie of commendation, for with great courage to do their countrie seruice they aduentured their liues in more perill than I can well expresse. Manie were astonied to behold the dangerous case of the workemen, and diuerse departed from the place as being loth to see the poore mens destruction. Wherein the said Reginald Smith, and the Romnele marshmen dealt with great dexteritie and courage; when all other almost had giuen it ouer, persisting in continuall and extreame trauell thereabouts, by the space of two daies and one night without intermission.

A difficult and dangerous worke.

After the cut was digged thorough the wall, the sluse was laid by peecemeale, at the direction of him and the foresaid Richard Coast, William Norris, and John Bowle, whose hands were as busie also as anie others in the doing thereof. And as they were trauelling hereabouts, the weight of the wall it selfe, with the earth cast out of the trench therevnto, and the multitude of the beholders standing thereon, made a clift or crase therein, consisting of manie hundred lodes of earth, which declined towards the cut where they wrought to late the sluse, and was redie to fall vpon them all, so as they were faine to sustaine the side therof with shores which they supported chéefelie with their owne force. Which if they had not done with great art & labour, by the space of diuerse hours together, the wall had fallen into the place where the sluse should haue beene laid, to the destruction of sundrie people, and to the discomfort of manie belonging to the works. But these marshmen neuer gaue ouer, till euerie sticke there of was laid, at what time ech man reioised that meant well to the works, and diuerse bestowed rewards vpon the workemen, and praise was giuen to God for his fauour shewed in that behalfe.

This worke being thus performed, the courts (which during that time were altogither set to worke at maister lieutenants wall) did now diuide themselues againe, and returne to worke as before at sir Thomas Scots wall, and at euerie side wrought with

Gods blessing and fauour showed to the workes of Douer.

with singular diligence & great facilitie. And God so fauored those works, as there were not lost in all that summer by meanes of foule wether aboue three daies and a halfe, wherein either courts or labourers were put from their worke, and in all those businesse not one person slaine, and yet almost in euerie action belonging thereunto there was imminent danger, as first you heard in the laieng of the fluse. And manie times in digging of chalke, they stood in the cliffe and undermined it, so as sometimes an hundred lode fell downe at once from vnder their feet, and sometimes from aboue their heads; and yet through Gods goodnes, & their diligent care, all escaped without hurt: sauing two persons, vpon whom great chalke rocks & much abundance of earth did fall, and yet were recouered without losse of life or of lim. In the passage also of the courts, if (by chance) either man or boie had fallen downe amongest them (as sometimes some did) the hill was so steepe at some places, and the court was so swift, that there could be no staie made, but the courts must run ouer them, and yet no great harme hath happened that waie. And I my selfe haue seene a court loden with earth passe ouer the belite or stomach of the driuer, and yet he not hurt at all therby. Manie courts also being vnloden (for expedition) were driuen at low waters through the chanell, within the pent, from maister lieutenants wall, whereby they gained more than halfe the waie: and so long as by anie possibilitie they might passe that waie, they were loth to go about. And when the flood came, the chanell did so suddenlie swell, as manie horses with their courts and driuers which rode in them were ouertaken, or rather ouerwhelmed with water, and were forced to swim, with great hazard of life, though therat some take pleasure. For sometimes the boies would strip themselues naked, and ride in that case in their courts through the chanell, being so high, as they were ducked ouer head and eares: but they knew their horses would swim and carrie them through the streame, which ministred to some occasion of laughter and mirth. Finallie, this summer, being in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred eightie and three, was verie hot and contagious, & the infection of the plague that yeare more vniuersallie dispersed through England than in manie yeares before, and that towne verie much subiect thereunto, by meanes of throughfare and common passage, and had bene extremelie visited therewith not long before, so as the towne was abandoned of most men; yea of some of the inhabitants themselues for that cause: and yet God blessed so the works, as in this extraordinarie and populous assemblie, there was in no part of the towne anie death or infection either of townsmen or workmen, which resorted thither from all the parts of England.

Dangers happilie escaped.

Boies plaie.

And one thing more in mine opinion is to be noted and commended herein, that is to saie, that in all this time, and among all these people, there was neuer anie tumult, fraie, nor falling out, to the disquieting or disturbance of the works, which by that meanes were the better applied, and with lesse interruption. For they neuer ceased working the whole daie, sauing that at eleuen of the clocke before noone, as also at six of the clocke in the euening, there was a flag vsuallie held vp by the sargent of the towne, in the top of a tower, except the tide or extraordinarie businesse forced the officers to preuent the houre, or to make some small delaie & staie therof. And presentlie vpon the signe giuen, there was a generall shout made by all the workers: and whersoeuer anie court was at that instant either emptie or loden, there was it left, till one of the clocke after noone or six of the clocke in the morning, when they returned to their businesse. But by the space of halfe an houre before the flag of libertie was hanged out, all the court driuers entered into a song, whereof although the ditie was barbarous, and the note rusticall, the matter of no moment, & all but a iest: yet is it not vnworthie of some briefe note of remembrance; because the tune or rather the noise thereof was extraordinarie, and (being deliuered with the continuall voice of such a multitude) was verie strange. In this and some other respect, I will set downe their ditie, the words whereof were these:

The flag of libertie.

O Harrie hold vp thy hat, t'is eleuen* a clocke, and a little, little, little, little past:
My bow is broke, I would vnyoke, my foot is sore, I can worke no more.

*Or six.

This song was made and set in Romneie marsh, where their best making is making of wals and dikes, and their best setting is to set a needle or a stake in a hedge: howbeit this is a more ciuill call than the brutish call at the theatre for the comming awaie of the plaiers to the stage. I thinke there was neuer worke attempted with more desire, nor proceeded in with more contentment, nor executed with greater trauell of workemen, or diligence of officers, nor prouided for with more carefulnesse of commissioners, nor with truer accounts or duer paie, nor contriued with more circumspection of the deuisers and vndertakers of the worke, nor ended with more commendation or comfort: sauing that vpon the seuen & twentith of Julie, being S. James his daie, the verie daie when the crosse wall and the long wall met, and were ioined together, and in effect finished (for both wals were brought aboue the high water marke, and nothing remained to be done of the same but highthening, which might be done at anie time after) sir Thomas Scot the principall piller of that worke fell sicke vpon the wals, and was conueied thense in a wagon to his house, where he remained six weeks, more likelie to die than to liue, whose ladie and wife (being a most vertuous and noble matrone, & a liuelie paterne of womanhood and sobrietie, the daughter of sir John Baker knight, and the mother of seuentene children) vsed such diligent attendance and continuall care for hir husbands recouerie of helth, as thereby she brought hir selfe into so weake state of bodie, as being great with two children, she fell sicke; and after hir vntimelie trauell, being deliuered of a sonne and a daughter, she ended hir mortall life.

Commendation of them which wrought or had anie charge about Douer works.

Sir Thomas Scot fell sicke in Douer works.

The death of the ladie Scot.

This sickenesse of sir Thomas Scot, and that which fell out thereupon, was no small discomfiture to him and all his. And the workmen at Douer made such mone for his sickenesse, and also for his absence, that euerie street was replenished with sorrow and greefe; and the people would be comforted with nothing more, nor anie waie be better incouraged to worke lustilie, than to be told that sir Thomas Scot was well recouered, and would shortlie be amongst them againe. And in truth, they translated their barbarous musicke into a sorrowfull song, and in steed of calling to Harrie for their dinner, they called to God for the good health and returne of their best frend sir Thomas Scot, and that with a generall and continuall outcrie, euen in their old accustomed tune & time. But the courts proceeded in highthening the wals, vntill they were raised about two foot higher than they were on S. James his daie, when the wals met together; so as the crosse wall is ninetie foot broad in the bottome, and about fiftie foot in the top. The long wall is seuentie foot in the bottome, and almost fortie foot in the top, in so much as vpon either wall two courts may meet and passe, or turne without troubling each other. The length of the crosse

The breadth, depth, length, and charge of the long and crosse wall, with the arming, &c.

crosse wall is fortie rods, the length of the long wall a hundred and twentie rods. The charge of these two wals, with the appurtenances, amounted to two thousand and seauen hundred pounds, as appeareth in the expenditors books. If there were anie issue or drayning of water vnder the wals, it was soone stopped by the peise of the wall it selfe, which neuer left sinking till it came to the foundation of the rocke, except (by some ouersight of the workemen) some part thereof were set vpon the beach, which should by order haue beene first remoued, & in that case they benched it, digging a trench at the fot of that part of the wall, and filling the same with earth, they made it verie tight, and so might anie such place be perfected and amended if need should require. But at this houre there leaketh not a drop of water vnder or through anie part of the wall that anie man maie perceiue or see: so as a full pent shrinketh not anie whit at all betwixt tide and tide, whereas the allowance of one fot leakage or fall at the least was required of them, which exhibited the plot of the woodden wall, which being measured from the top or face of the high pent diminisheth almost one quarter thereof. And thus betwixt the first of Maie and midst of August, this pent, which was thought vnpossible to be done in three yeares, was perfectlie finished in lesse than three months, and remaineth in so good and sure state, as the longer it standeth, the better and tighter it will be.

A necessarie remedie if water draine vnder the wall

Expedition necessarie and profitable.

The state of the wals.

If neuer anie thing should be added hereunto, this pent (by reason of the abundance of water reteined therein, and issuing out of the sluse) would mainteine a good hauen in that place: for the violent course therof will alwaies open the hauens mouth, and make a fret there, euen downe to the rocke, although it be distant from the same three score rods; in somuch as at this instant there maie come in at quarter sloud a barke of fortie or fiftie tun, and at full sea a ship of three hundred tun and vpwards. But when the two tuttie heads are once finished (which are now in hant) so as the hauens mouth be perfected, anie ship what soeuer maie enter in thereat, and remaine within that rode in good safetie. But as at manie other times heretofore there hath beene sure triall had of the good effects of this pent, so now in this last moneth of October one thousand fiue hundred foure score and six, one gate of the sluse being by mischance broken, so as by the space of foure daies there could be no water reteined within the pent, to scowre the mouth of the hauen, the same was so choked and swarued vp with sand and beach in that space, as no bote could enter in, or passe out of the same: insomuch as Edward Wotton esquire, being then at Douer to passe thense in an ambassage from hir maiestie to the French king, was forced to send to Sandwich for a crater, to transport him to Calis, because no bote of Douer lieng within the rode could passe out at the hauens mouth. But assone as the said gate of the sluse was repared, euen the next tide following, a vessell of three hundred tun might and did easilie passe in and out thereat, one pent of water had so scowred and depthened the same. Whereby it maie appeare, that neither the cost bestowed, nor the worke performed, hath beene vnprofitablie imploied, or vnnecessarilie vndertaken.

A sure triall latelie made of the good effect of the pent.

A gate of the sluse broken.

Edward Wotton esquire ambassador into France.

The effect of the pent.

Now you shall vnderstand, that the small sluse which was first made and laied in the crosse wall in such sort, and for such purpose as hath beene declared, was taken vp after the said walles were finished, and a sluse of far greater charge was made by the aforesaid Peter Pet, who vndertooke to do it by great, and had for the same foure hundred pounds, the laieng whereof did cost two hundred pounds more at the least. This sluse conteineth in length fourescore foot, in breadth fiftéene foot, in depth thirtéene, and hath in it two draw gates. It was one whole moneth in laieng, all which time the said lord Cobham made his abode there, and kept a most honorable and costlie table, furthering those works not onelie with his continuall presence and countenance, but also with his good direction, and that not at starts, but from morning till night, and from daie to daie, vntill the full accomplishing thereof.

Of the sluse.

The lord Cobham remaineth at Douer one whole moneth.

And in the meane time sir Francis Walsingham hir maiesties principall secretarie was not vncarefull of this action, as being the man without whom nothing was done, directing the course, and alwaie looking into the state thereof, and gaue continuall life thervnto, by prouiding monie for it, whereof when anie want approched, he neuer failed to see or rather to send a sure supplie. Since the finishing of these wals and sluses, there hath beene much worke and charge imploied about one of the tuttie heads, and beautifieng of the harborough, wherin one George Carte of Deuonshire esquire, and one John Hill an auditor, haue beene the principall directors. But because that worke remaineth as yet vnperformed, the report thereof shall also remaine to be made by others that shall hereafter haue occasion to write of such affairs.

Sir Francis Walsingham principall frend to these works.

Of the late works.

¶ At the assises kept at the citie of Excester, the fourteenth daie of March, in the eight and twentith yeare of hir maiesties reigne, before sir Edmund Anderson knight lord chiefe iustice of the common pleas, and sargeant Flowredaie one of the barons of the excheker, iustices of the assises in the countie of Deuon and Exon, there happened a verie sudden and a strange sickenesse; first amongst the prisoners of the gaole of the castell of Exon, & then dispersed (vpon their triall) amongst sundrie other persons: which was not much vnlike to the sickenesse that of late yeares happened at an assise holden at Oxford, before sir Robert Bell knight, lord chiefe baron of the exchéker, and iustice then of that assise; and of which sickenesse he amongst others died. This sickenesse was verie sharpe for the time, & few escaped, which at the first were infected therewith. It was contagious and infectious, but not so violent, as commonlie the pestilence is; neither doth there appeare anie outward vlcer or sore.

The note of Iohn Hooker alias Vowell concerning the sudden and strange sickenesse of late happening in Excester.

The originall and cause thereof diuerse men are of diuerse iudgements. Some did impute it, and were of the mind, that it proceeded from the contagion of the gaole, which by reason of the close aire, and filthie stinke, the prisoners newlie come out of a fresh aire into the same, are in short time for the most part infected therewith; and this is commonlie called the gaole sickenesse, and manie die thereof. Some did impute it to certeine poore Portingals, then prisoners in the said gaole. For not long before, one Barnard Drake esquier (afterwards dubbed knight) had beene at the seas, and meeting with certeine Portingals, come from New found land, and laden with fish, he toke them as a good prise, and brought them into Dartmouth hauen in England; and from thense they were sent, being in number about eight and thirtie persons, vnto the gaole of the castell of Exon, and there were cast into the deepe pit and stinking dungeon.

The originall cause of this infection whereto imputed.

Barnard Drake esquier.

These men had beene before a long time at the seas, and had no change of apparell, nor laine in bed, and now lieng vpon the ground without succor or releefe, were soone infected; and all for the most part were sicke, and some of them died, and some one of them was distracted: and this sickenesse verie soone after dispersed it selfe among all the residue of the prisoners in the gaole; of which disease manie of them them died, but all brought to great extremities, and verie hardlie escaped. These men, when they were to be brought before the foresaid iustices for their triall, manie of them were so weake and sicke, that they were not able to go nor stand; but were caried from the gaole to the place of iudgement, some vpon handbarrowes, and some betweene men leading them, and so brought to the place of iustice.

The mischiefe of nastie apparell.

The sight of these mens miserable and pitifull cases, being thought (and more like) to be hunger stared than with sickenesse diseased, moued manie a mans hart to behold and looke vpon them; but none pitied them more than the lords iustices themselues, and especiallie the lord chiefe iustice himselfe; who vpon this occasion tooke a better order for keeping all prisoners thensforth in the gaole, and for the more often trials: which was now appointed to be quarterlie kept at euerie quarter sessions, and not to be posted anie more ouer, as in times past vntill the assises. These prisoners thus brought from out of the gaole to the iudgement place, after that they had beene staied, and pansed a while in the open aire, and somewhat refreshed therwith, they were brought into the house, in the one end of the hall neere to the iudges seat, and which is the ordinarie and accustomable place where they do stand to their trials and arreignments.

The assise at Excester appointed to be quarterlie kept.

And howsoeuer the matter fell out, and by what occasion it happened, an infection followed vpon manie and a great number of such as were there in the court, and especiallie vpon such as were nerest to them were soonest infected. And albeit the infection was not then perceiued, because euerie man departed (as he thought) in as good health as he came thither: yet the same by little and little so crept into such, as vpon whom the infection was seized, that after a few daies, and at their home comming to their owne houses, they felt the violence of this pestilent sickenesse: wherein more died that were infected, than escaped. And besides the prisoners, manie there were of good account, and of all other degrees, which died thereof: as by name sargeant Flowerdale who then was the iudge of those trials vpon the prisoners, sir John Chichester, sir Arthur Basset, and sir Barnard Drake knights; Thomas Carew of Haccombe, Robert Carie of Clouelleigh, John Fortescue of Wood, John Waldron of Bradfield, and Thomas Kisdone esquires, and iustices of the peace.

This sickenes was contagious & mortall.

Principall men that died of that infection.

The losse of euerie of them was verie great to the commonwealth of that prouince and countrie: but none more lamented than these two knights, sir John Chichester, and sir Arthur Basset; who albeit they were but yong in yeares, yet ancient in wisedome, vpright in iudgement, and zealous in the ministration of iustice. Likewise Robert Carie, a gentleman striken in yeares, and a man of great experience, knowledge, and learning: he had beene a student of the common lawes of the realme at the temple, and verie well learned both therein, and vniuersallie seene in all good letters: an eloquent man of his speech, effectuall in deliuerie, deepe in iudgement, vpright in iustice, and considerat in all his doings. The more worthie were these personages, the greater losse was their deaths to the whole commonwealth of that countrie. Of the plebeian and common people died verie manie, and especiallie constables, reeues, and tithing men, and such as were iurors, and namelie one iurie of twelue, of which there died eleuen.

Sir John Chichester, and sir Arthur Basset bemoned and commended.

Eleuen of the iurie with other officers die of this sickenesse.

This sicknesse was dispersed through out all the whole shire, and at the writing hereof in the fine of October, one thousand fiue hundred fourescore and fir, it is not altogither extinguished. It resteth for the most part about fourteene daies and vpwards by a secret infection, before it breake out into his force and violence. At the first comming, it made the people afraid and dismaid, manie men then pretending rather than performing the amendement of life. So long as the plague was hot and feruent, so long euerie man was holie and repentant: but with the slaking of the one, followed the forgetfolnesse of the other; euen as it is with a companie of shrewd children, who so long as the rod is ouer the head, so long feare of correction frameth them to aptnesse, conformitie, and obedience.

Affliction draweth men to God, &c.

¶ In the chronicles of Ireland, vpon occasion of seruice in the highest office there, mention was made here and there of sir Henrie Sidneie his saiengs and doings, where promise did passe (by meanes of discoursing his death) that the reader was to looke for a full declaration of his life and death in the chronicles of England, as course of time should giue direction. Now therefore hauing entred into the eight and twentith yeare of hir maiesties gratious gouernment, and the yeare of Christ 1586, the time most fitlie openeth a readie waie into the historie concerning that nobleman, penned by one that could not be ignorant of his affaires, considering the nerenesse and necessarinesse of his seruice, and therefore as a truth to be receiued.

In introduction to the historicall remembrance of the Sidneis, the father and the sonne, &c.

The note of Edmund Molineux touching sir Henrie Sidneis life and death.

This right famous, renowmed, worthie, vertuous and heroicall knight, by father and mother verie noblie descended, was from his infancie bred and brought vp in the princes court, and in nerenesse to his person vsed familiarlie euen as a companion, and manie times a bedfellow. After that by course of nature and lawfull descent, this yong prince was inuested in the kingdome and imperiall crowne, he aduanced this gallant noble gentleman (partlie as it seemed for the singular loue and entire affection he formerlie bare him) to be a principall gentleman of his priuie chamber. For he was then reputed for comelinesse of person, gallantnesse & liuelinesse of spirit, vertue, qualitie, beautie, & good composition of bodie, the onelie od man & paragon of the court. And from time to time this good and most godlie king held such delight in his pleasant, modest, and sweet conuersation and companie, as he would sildome or neuer giue him leaue to be absent from him, till his last breth that he departed this life in his armes at Grenwich. Such exceeding expectation & hope was conceiued of this honorable gentleman in his yonger yeares, as he was specialtie chosen and sent ambassador to Henrie the first then French king, concerning matter verie important, being at that time not fullie one and twentie yeares old, and performed his charge with that singular commendation, wisedome, spirit and dexteritie, as at sundrie times not long after, he was employed in ambassage both in France & Scotland, yea somtime twise in one yere.

His employment in ambassage.

He was foure seuerall times lord iustice of Ireland, and three times by speciall appointment and commission sent deputie out of England: at each which seuerall time, he by his wisedome and good gouernement appeased and suppressed a great and an actuall rebellion, the seeds whereof were for the most part sowen and the fire kindled (though smothlie and cunninglie hid and couered) before his comming, or in the time of his absence. In his first deputation he suppressed the rebellion of Shane Oneill, and floured the top of the castell of Dublin with the archrebels head. In his second he suppressed the most dangerous insurrection begun and long continued by some of the Butlers. In the third the commotion of the erle of Clanricard, & his two graceless hopelost sonnes Shane and Ulike Bourke.

Foure times lord iustice, three time lord deputie of Ireland.

He suppressed by force and policie three actuall rebellions.

Imme-

He reuiued and put in execution the lawes for the abolishing of coine and liuerie.

Immediatlie after his first arriuall deputie, he caused the old statutes and ordinances for the abolishing of coine and liuerie (the ancient festering sore and crèping canker of that countrie and commonwealth) to be reuiued and put in due execution, against sundrie persons of calling and note, who were therewithall sharplie touched, whereupon followed a long time after great good to the countrie, and a spèedie releese to the poore oppressed people of that realme. He deuised that the remoter prouinces should be gouerned by presidents, after the imitation of the marches of Wales, from whense he toke his patterne, being himselfe at that time president, holding opinion that there could be neither better nor a more expedit and easie means to reforme and reduce that barbarous countrie to perfect obedience and ciuilitie, than planting of presidents in the remoter prouinces, to the end vniuersall iustice might be currant amongst them, whereby the poore might be deliuered from the wonted exactions and tyrannies of the lords and great ones (by whom they were dailie spoiled and oppressed) and tast the swèet benefits and pleasant fruits of peace and quietnesse, the onelie singular commoditie, and the most happie blessing of wise, politike, and discrèet gouernement.

He deuised the planting of presidents in the remoter prouinces.

He both first deuised, and consequentlie prudentlie executed, the plot for the diuision and distribution of the Irish countries into shire ground, whereby insued the currencie of hir maiesties writ, which before that time was either not knowne, or at least neuer vsed amongst them. He in his gouernment aduanced and increased the reuenues of the crowne by waie of custome, impost vpon wines, compositions with the Irishrie for rent and seruice, and other direct and commendable meanes, as out of casualties creating rents certeine, ten thousand pounds yearelie. And by good deuise and policie he had both intended, and would haue brought to passe and performed a farre greater increase, if enuie, spite, and malice of that vnhappie countrie had not crossed him, and opposed themselues all that they could, by purse or credit against his honorable, worthie, and commendable seruices & desseins: an example of rare note to be duelie followed, and carefullie executed by his successors, that Ireland may in short time be reduced to beare Irelands charges, and made both honorable and profitable to the crowne (as were to be wished.) He repared the castell of Dubline, being vsed a long time before as a ruinous, vncleane, and filthie place, of no reckoning and accompt, stored onlie with mechanicall persons, and some of worse sort (the constable and his familie excepted) and left the same a conuenient and fit house for the gouernour to lie in, to which vse it now serueth and is imploied.

He deuised the lawes for the distribution of the Irish countries into shire ground.

He increased the reuennes ten thousand pounds yerlie.

His buildings fortifications, and other necessarie works for the benefit and good of the countrie.

He builded the bridge of Athelon ouer the riuer of Shenin, arched it with masonrie and free stone, strong wall and battlement, and made it of that strength, togither with that spaciousnesse and bredth, as two carts may (in maner) meet a front. By building of which bridge ouer so swift & great a streame, the passage was set open and made free out of the pale into Conaught, which before (by reason of the strenablenesse of the water) was not passable, which dawnted and appalled the rebels and traitors more, and kept them in greater awe and due obedience, than anie deuise or policie before had done, or other plot lightlie could then do. He likewise began the walling and fortifieng of the towne of Carickfergus in Vlster, reedifieng of the towne of Athenrie in Conaught, the strengthening of Athelon with gates and other fortifications, the foundation and plot of the bridge of Caterlagh, and made a strong goale at Polingar, and walled the same about with stone, to imprison rebels, theeues, and other malefactors. And likewise he begun manie other needfull and necessarie works in sundrie other places which tended to the great furtherance and aduancement of seruice, but he left them Quasi opera inchoata: for he being called awaie so soone, time would not permit and allow him to finish and fullie to end them, or (it may be) by fatall appointment the time is not yet come the countrie deserueth so great a good and benefit of Gods eternall blessing.

He found hir maiesties records laid as it were in an open place, whither anie man (that vouchsafed his paines) might come that would, not defended, but subiect to wind, raine, and all kind of weather, and so in a sort neglected, that they serued now and then (as I haue by good men and good meanes crediblie heard reported) in stèd of better litter to rub horse hèels, which he with great care and diligence caused to be perused and sorted, and prepared an apt place within the castell of Dubline, well trimmed and boorded with a chimneie in the towne, where neither by the moisture of the wals, nor vnseasonablenesse of the weather, nor other meanes they could be subiect to harme. He prepared fit & conuenient places and seuerall diuisions to laie them apart, according to their seuerall natures, and appointed one of discretion and skill to looke to them, who also for his better incouragement was assigned a conuenient fée for his labor. He also caused the statutes, policies, and ordinances of that realme, which laie hid and not knowen to manie (though not destroied but kept in safetie) to be searched, surueied, and ouer viewed, by men of the best learning, skill, and discretion he could find or come by in that realme, giuing them in expresse charge to peruse and read all, and to collect such and so manie of them as they should in their discretions iudge and discerne to be expedient and necessarie to be published and knowen, to the end the same might be imprinted, as afterward they were, that no man thenceforth might pretend ignorance in the lawes, statutes, & ordinances of his owne countrie where he was borne, which euerie man by our lawes is bound to know. And because he both saw and by experience found what defect grew in the administration of iustice, by reason of kinred, affinitie, corruption, partialitie, as otherwise; he deuised, and earnestlie sought to haue Englishmen sent ouer to supplie the chèefe places of iustice. And for the better increase of hir maiesties reuenue and profit, he praied the like to serue in the roms of hir highnesse attornie generall and sollicitor.

He builte conuenient roms for the kèeping and preseruation of the records which before were neglected.

He caused the statutes of Ireland to be imprinted which neuer before were published.

He procured some Englishmen to be sent ouer, for the better administration of iustice.

No man had a greater desire to aduance the publike euerie waie than he had, and in opinion greatlie magnified & estèemed all them that were of that mind: for he would manie times saie, that those were things memorable, of perpetuitie, fame, and last, where all priuat things died and perished with their priuat persons. Whersoeuer he was bestowed to serue, he had such a rare gift, gallant courtlie behauior, and comlinesse of person, as he gained the harts of manie, and such vniuersall liking and loouing of all sorts of people toward him, as they were euer desirous and neuer wearie of him; but speciall sute commonlie made of the grauest, best, and wisest sort amongst them, when he was reuoked to haue him returne and continue againe amongst them. He was (as best became him) verie aduised, circumspect, and carefull in the seruice of the state, not onelie setting apart, but in a sort neglecting all businesse of his owne, in respect of his charge. He was a perfect orator by nature, hauing such readinesse and facilitie of spèech, flowing eloquence, swèet deliuerie, and passing memorie (for he seldome or neuer forgat anie thing he either read or heard) as he was specially

A great furtherer of all publike works.

The great loue he got him in all places where he serued.

His carefulnesse in the seruice of the state.

allie noted a most rare man of all that did heare him. Such ample instructions he would giue for the framing and writing of his letters, or anie other thing he committed to be conceiued and put downe in writing, and dispose the same in so good order and fine method, as a verie simple man, if he reteined and remembred but a part of that he said and deliuered, might supplie himselfe with matter inough to the purpose to write of.

Verie expert and able he was of a bad clerke in time to frame a good secretarie.

And when by occasion he happened vpon some dull conceipted spirited fellow (as Ireland and Wales now and then bred some such) to whome he had giuen instructions to write, who afterwards brought him the same to signe, not couched in sort as he liked or would haue it; his temperance, courtesie, and discreet modestie was such, as he would neuer shew choler and impatience, rent the paper in peeces, or publikelie disgrace the writer, but bid him not be discouraged for that fault: he could giue him the like instructions againe he gaue him before, but willed him then to marke and remember them better. At each seuerall time he was sent deputie into Ireland, he was by occasion, and as time fell out, furnished with a new secretarie. The first was master Edward Waterhouse, now knighted, and one of hir maiesties councell in Ireland. The second master Edmund Tremaine, who after was preferred to be a clearke to hir maiesties councell on hir highnesse person attendant. The third (who although it was thought of manie, who were in that case well able to iudge) neither in paine, desert, birth, nor breeding was much inferiour to the other two that were before him: yet in fortune, reward, or other recompense so far behind them, as this noble gentleman (who trulie honored vertue) master to them all three, would manie times in sort lament, and deepelie bemone to his good friends, commending highlie this mans paine and diligence, attributing his hard hap to his owne mishap, the time so serued he could not do him good, which manie times & by sundrie means he had earnestlie attempted to do; affirming often in solemne and earnest protestation as well to him as others, that it greeued him not a little, his fortune was so bad, to come to him now in the declination and wane of the mone: for he was the sole onelie man he had imploied about him in that neerenesse and credit of seruice, wherein he had vsed him, that euer had quailed vnder his hands (for that was the terme he vsed) howbeit, he well hoped time or some good man (in respect his seruice was publike and not priuat) would repaire that then he could not do. For he deemed the man right worthie regard and consideration, that had serued him so long (and that in his great and rotall seruices, in so painefull and toilesome a place) without anie great wages, fee, or other interteinment growing to him in perpetuitie or other wais; which was either burthenous to his purse, or proceeding by or from him by anie other degree, to the gentlemans benefit, increase of credit, or further aduancement, in recompense of his long seruice.

Of great facilitie in dispatch of common causes.

He had both a speciall care & likewise a singular gift in dispatch of common causes, and the people in like manner had a passing maruellous desire to be heard & dispatched by him. Therefore as well in part to satisfie their humors and affections, as more completlie to performe the due and full measure of his charge (which was to heare and helpe all as nere as he could) he applied himselfe greatlie thereunto, and would spare no paines, but indure maruellous toile and trauell to rid and dispatch awaie suitors: which he could do with such dexteritie and wonderfull facilitie, as the same might seeme no wearinesse and tediousnesse at all to him (that was halfe a hell to some others) but rather to be reckoned a kind of recreation and pastime. He made manie beholding vnto him, for he (as much as late in him) did benefit manie, and had more than an ordinarie desire to do for all his friends and faithfull followers; and so carefullie, earnestlie, and painfullie he would trauell to aduance their particular suites, were it sometimes to speake to hir maiestie hir selfe, or to the bodie of hir graue and honorable councell, or to anie priuat councellor apart, as though he had purposelie followed his owne most weightie causes.

A great desire to do for all men.

And as he was a most deere, kind, tender, and louing father to his children (for none could loue and esteeme his children more than he did) and noting in them great minds and hautie courages, which drew them by degrees to exceede in expense, and more than an ordinarie liberalitie, he would sometime fatherlie aduise them thus; that if they meant to liue in order, they should neuer behold whole sonnes, & seldome thinke whose nephues they were: so he was an affable, gentle, courteous, constant, and honourable master to his seruants. For he would often saie, it was an easie matter for them to keepe him, but hard to recouer his loue and fauour, if they had once lost him. And when anie of his noble and most louing friends would commend him greatlie (as manie times they would) that he made much of his old seruants (for few that came to him euer went from him, but such as were first aduanced by him to better preferment) he would answer pleasantlie after his wonted mirth; Lord I giue thee thanks, that of those thou gauest me I haue not lost one. He was maruellous affable and courteous of nature, of easie accesse, and pleasantlie familiar with anie that had occasion to repaire vnto him, & strict and precise in the obseruation of good order. For he would seldome breake it in anie respect, but vpon euident, knowne, and most iust cause, or when he was ouerruled (as sometimes he was) by such as had souereigne power to direct and command him. Extraordinarie courses he alwaies vtterlie misliked, especiallie when order was peruerted, or iustice hindered, whereby the common societie of mans life is onelie preserued and maintained; which two things specially purchased him such vniuersall goodwill euerie where (and namelie amongst the officers of hir maiesties most honorable household, with whome he would manie times be familiarlie conuersant) as they haue often wished he might haue bene honored with a white staffe, to haue borne office with authoritie amongst them.

A tender father to his children and a louing master to his seruants.

Solitario homini atque in agro vitam agenti opinio iustitiæ necessariæ est.

He was intirelie beloued of the officers of hir maiesties household.

His nature was so tempered with modestie, pietie and patience, as he seldome shewed heat or choler, how greeuous so euer the offense was which was giuen him. He was a fast friend where he professed friendship, and no reuengefull so when he was offended; & hardlie would he be remoued in friendship from his friend or follower, but vpon most iust, certeine, and knowne cause, which he could not smuther, and would not hide from the partie. I haue manie times heard him saie, and by occasion haue seene the same written in his owne letters, that he was dubbed knight (by that noble and vertuous prince king Edward) the selfe same daie sir William Cecill (then principall secretarie, now lord treasuror of England) was, by meanes wherof and that sir William Cecill was (yea euen in those daies) esteemed a most rare man, both for sundrie and singular gifts of nature, learning, wisedome, and integritie: and partlie by the friendlie good offices of that true paterne of humanitie and courtesie, sir John Cheeke, then schoolemaster to the king (a choise deare friend to them both) that there began such an entrie of acquaintance, knowledge, loue, mutuall goodwill, and intire friendship betwixt them, as continued alwaies stedfast, firme, and vnvariable after till his dieng daie. A matter of prolixitie it were and intollerable tediousnesse to particulat in ample maner the rare qualities of his bodie and mind: wherefore we will glansinglie run them ouer, as loth to abridge his deserued praise to liberallie. This noble man was fortunat in war, and no lesse happie in peace, passing well beloued of his soldiors, vpright in iustice, yet withall inclined to mercie; he reuerenced all men of science, for he would manie times saie, Science was to be honored whersoeuer it was to be found: Nam nemo nascitur artifex. He omitted not morning & euening praier, he was liberall and honorable in hospitalitie, his skill far exceeded other mens in knowledge and secrets of Ireland, yea of that countrie birth. The loue and affection the Irishrie bare him, drew manie of them to ciuilitie, he was little giuen to slēpe and ease in the night, for he seldome kept his bed aboue sir houres (if he were in health) neither after he arose would he take in the daie time anie kind of repose. He would in his iournies wearie and late vp most of his companie; nothing offended him more than ingratitude; in his dealings his word was his worst; sociable he was with his assistants; he had an intention to haue erected certeine nurseries of learning; his seruice was subiect to the eare, and not to the eie, whereby his vertues manie times were suppressed; he was deputie of Ireland, and president of Wales both at one time.

He was dubbed knight the same daie sir William Cecill was.

This noble knight, graue councellor, complet gentleman, and most worthie and rare subiect, departed this life at the bishops palace at Worcester, the fift daie of Maie, in the yeare of our Lord 1586 (being fiftie and seauen yeares old complet, wanting onelie one moneth and fiftēne daies) about foure of the clocke in the morning, after he had continued seuen daies sicke of a kind of cold palsie, as the physicians decreed of the disease, which happened vnto him (as it was of manie said, and of mo thought) by reason of an extreme cold he toke vpon the water in his passage and remoue by barge betwēne Bewdlie and Worcester, not long after he had bēene purged, and his bodie not fullie setled, but his pores remaining still open (as it is most like) by reason of an extraordinarie lowsenes which consequentlie followed the taking of his physicke, and could not be stopped; hauing then bēene lord president of hir maiesties councell established in the dominion and principalitie of Wales sir and twentie years complet, without anie change or alteration, or absolute transferring the rome or authoritie to anie other in the meane time, for whose death there was great mone and lamentation. As for his bodie by easie iournies and short remoues, it was conueied from Worcester to his house at Penshurst in Kent, verie honourablie and well attended with great traine, ceremonie, and all other things apperteining to funerall order, honor, and solemnitie, where he was honorablie interred the one and twentith date of June following. He was before imbowelled, & his intrals buried in the deans chapell in the cathedrall church at Worcester; his heart brought to Ludlow, & buried in the tome with his dēere beloued daughter Ambrosia, in the little oratorie he made in the semicollegiat parish church there, wherein he erected this monument.

The ninth date of August next following, died the most noble, worthie, beneficent, and bountious ladie, the ladie Marie Sidneie, his onelie spouse and most dēere wife, who was eldest daughter vnto that renowned duke John late of Northumberland, and sister to the right honorable and most worthie the erls of Warwike and Leicester, most zealoulie, godlie, and penitentlie, as by the testimonie of some honorable and other graue personages is well auouched, and was intōmed at Penshurst, in the same tome with hir dēere and honorable husband. During the whole course of hir sicknesse, and speciallie a little before it pleased almightie God to call hir hense to his mercie, she vsed such godlie spēches, earnest and effectuall persuasions to all those about hir, and vnto such others as came of frendlie courtesie to visit hir, to exhort them to repentance and amendment of life, and dehort them from all sinne and lewdnesse, as wounded the consciences, and inwardlie pearced the hearts of manie that heard hir. They left behind them yet liuing most dēere pledges, noble and worthie resemblances descended of them, three sonnes, all forward, martiall, and valorous gentlemen, and one onelie daughter, matched in mariage vnto the right honorable Henrie earle of Penbroke, whome God hath alreadie blessed with godlie, rare, and towardlie issue: sir Philip Sidneie his sonne & heire, Ad quem hæreditas gloria & factorum imitatio pertinet, a gentleman of great hope, and exceeding expectation, indowed with manie rare gifts, singular vertues, and other ornaments both of mind and bodie, one generallie beloued and estēemed of all men; who matched in mariage with the daughter and heire of sir Francis Walsingham knight, hir maiesties principall secretarie, by whome he hath alreadie a godlie babe, but a daughter.

This right worthie, and thrise renowmed knight sir Philip Sidneie lord gouernor of Vlissingen, hauing spent some time in hir maiesties seruice in the low countries, with great honor, speciall credit, and estimation; and withall, hauing obteined by his vertue, valor, and great politie, such an entrie of entire good will, trust, and authoritie with the states, as his counsels and persuasions could much more preuaile and worke singular effect with them, than anie one mans could doo in anie cause whatsoeuer that happened to fall in question or debate amongst them: therfore earnestlie following the course he then toke in hand for the aduancement of that seruice, and to win fame (the onelie marke true nobilitie either doth or ought to leuell at) he imbarked himselfe at Vlissingen, accompanied onlie with three thousand footmen; and bending his course to Axell, which lieth in the countie of Flanders, vsed both such diligence and secrecie in this expedition, as he surprised the towne, before they could haue intelligence of his comming, without losse or hurt of anie one of his companie. By means whereof, the forts and sconses there neere abouts adioining, being striken vpon the sudden into such a feare and amazement, as doubting some further perils to them intended, than anie at the present well appeared; voluntarilie and simplie gaue themselues and their holds into his hands, & yeelded to his disposition and mercie. And so after he had well refreshed himselfe and his companie in this towne he had thus new taken, he departed thense, & remained in the countrie not farre off, ten or twelue daies nert following, till he had victelled the same & put in a garrison, & left monsieur Vernon there gouernor.

Now in the meane time of his staie, attending these seruices (and because he would alwaies be occupied in some honorable action) he brake a sluse, forced a trench, and cut out a banke, that made such an open passage & entrance into the sea, as since it hath drowned and destroied the whole countrie (being well neere now worne into a chanell) the same hauing bēene the best and most fertill soile in those parts, and far exceeding anie territorie neere thereabouts, to so great a prejudice and annoiance of the enimie, as by common & well grounded opinion, neither by sluse, or lightlie anie other draine or deuise, that countrie can possiblie be recouered or regained. And this enterprise was atchiued without making head or other

He died at the bishops palace at Worcester.

His death greatlie bemoned.

His corps was buried at Penshurst.

The time of my ladie Sidneis death.

Sir Philip, sir Robert and maister Thomas Sidneis.

Marie countesse of Penbroke, William lord Herbert of Cardiffe.

The commendation of sir Philip Sidneie.

Lord gouernor of Vlissingen, commonlie called Flissing.

He surprised Axell in Flanders.

He drowned the countrie by making an entrie into the sea.

Forestance made by Mondragon.

offer of offense, invasion, or resistance by Mondragon, who was of purpose imployed with sufficient force to defend the countrie, and to haue impeached all these attempts and actions.

Graueling.

Moreouer, his aduise for the seruice intended at Graueling (dissenting in opinion from others, who were thought the most expert capteins and best renowmed and sorted souldiours) gaue such a sufficient proofe of his excellent wit, policie, and ripe iudgement; as his onelie act and counsell, with the losse of a verie few of his companie, wrought all their safeties, which otherwise by treacherie had beene most likelie to haue beene intraped. And so consequentlie going forward in other seruices, at an incounter with the enimie not far from Zutphen, where he that daie most valiantlie serued (for he bare the inuincible mind of an ancient worthie Romane, who euer where he came made account of victorie) he receiued hurt by a musket shot a little aboue the left knee, which so brake and rifted the bone, and so entred the thigh vpward towards the bodie, as the bullet could not be found before his bodie was opened. Of which hurt notwithstanding he liued (though in great paine and extreame torment) six and twentie daies following, and died the seauentéenth daie of October betweene two and three of the clocke in the afternoone at Arnam in Gelderland.

His hurt at the incounter neere Zutphen.

The daie of the death of sir Philip Sidneie.

He greatlie abounded in sundrie good vertues, which euer, where he came, procured him loue, but cheeselie in iustice and liberalitie (a worthie & most spectall note in a gouernour) which gained him hartie loue coupled with fame and honor. For the which especiallie, those vnder his late charge and gouernment so greatlie loued, esteemed, honored, & in a sort adored him when he was aliue; as they made earnest meanes and intreatie to haue his bodie remaine there still with them for memorie when he was dead; and promised that (if they might obteine it) to erect for him as faire a monument as anie prince had in christendome, yea though the same should cost halfe a tun of gold the building. His bodie was most honourablie conueied from Arnam to London, where it remained at the Minorites certeine daies, & from thense brought and remoued on the sixteenth of Februarie alongst the streets through Cheapside, with funerall pompe and solemnitie beseeming so martiall a gentleman; the ensignes of warre, and pikes trailed vpon the ground, the drums and flutes couered with blacke and making a soft\ie sound, with other statelie shewes of mournfull representations; the earle of Leicester with other honourable and worshipfull personages following the dead bodie, which finallie was interred in Paules church of London.]

Omnis virtus nos ad se allicit, facitque vt diligamus eos, in quibus inesse videatur, tamen iustitia & liberalitas id maximè efficit.

About this time one Thomas Louelace, late of Staple inne gentleman, for counterfeiting of false and treacherous letters against his owne kinred, containing most traitorous matter against hir maiesties owne person, was iudged in the Starchamber to be carried on horse-backe about Westminster hall with his face to the horses taile, and a paper on his backe declaring his offense; then to be set on the pillorie in the palace at Westminster, and there to haue one of his eares cut off: then to ride in like sort into London, and in Cheapside to be set on the pillorie vpon a market daie: after that to be conueied into Kent, where standing openlie on the pillorie in the place of assise as before, he should lose his other eare; and lastlie be set vpon the pillorie one market daie in Canturburie, and another at Rochester; his offense and punishment in euerie of the said places openlie read and published: which iudiciall sentence was accordinglie executed.

Thomas Louelace condignlie punished by iudgement of the honorable court in the Starchamber for counterfeiting of letters, &c. I.S.

On sundaie the eight daie of Maie an ambassador, named Henrie Ramelius, intituled Cancellarius Germanicus, arriued at the tower of London. A gentleman he was of goodlie personage, somewhat corpulent, and of sanguine complexion, verie eloquent likewise and learned, not onelie in the knowledge of diuerse tongs, as Latine, French, Italian, and German; but also in sundrie sciences. He came in ambassage from Frederike the second of that name, king of Denmarke, vnto the queens maiestie of England, and arriuing (as you haue heard) at the Tower, was honorablie receiued of the lord Cobham and other great estates; who conueied him from thense through Tower street into Bishopsgate street, and so to a faire and large house called Crosbies place, where he was well lodged and remained.

Henrie Ramelius ambassador out of Denmarke.

The said Ramelius, during the time of his tarriance had attendance done him conuenient for his person, both by water and by land: the queens maiesties barges and seruants imployed about him to & from London, the court then being at Grenwich; whither alwaies when he came, the nobilitie of England failed in no point of courtesie that might be shewed: which he seemed (as he could no lesse) verie acceptablie to take. Now being in England, and in the English court, he might (and no doubt did) marke the magnificence of hir maiestie, in all respects admirable. Whereof a notable president was giuen in Whitsunweeke; at what time the said ambassador, being at the court, was accompanied with certeine English lords to hir highnesse chapell, and placed not far from hir excellencie, did heare diuine seruice so melodiouslie said and song, both by voice and instruments of consort, as a man halfe dead might thereby haue beene quickened. The gentlemen of the chapell with the rest of the quier bending themselues both with skill and zeale, that daie to honour their prince according to their place. The bishop of Salisburie and others distinctlie reading part of diuine seruice, and in presence of all the auditorie doing such obeisance with knee and countenance, as the presence of so gratious a soueraigne as they had in their eies did require.

The Danish ambassador honorablie interteined.

The maiestie of the English court.

Heauenlie musike in the queens chapell.

Now when this solemnitie was ended, hir maiestie departed; and so did the ambassador, attended vpon and accompanied vnto the place appointed for dinner, where standing neere vnto a faire window fronting into the open court, he might (being in communication, now with one and then with another English lord, as the L. Charles Howard L. admerall, the lord Cobham lord warden of the cinque ports, &c:) behold the roiall seruice of hir maiestie, verie personable gentlemen thereto sorted, carieng couered dishes all of siluer and gilt verie beautifull; themselues in veluet and silke sutable in ech respect, and as decentlie made, so decentlie worn; the trumpets sounding, and the drums plaieng thereunto: a maruellous delightsome thing to heare, & a passing gallant sight to behold. When dinner was done, the ambassador was made partaker of such courtlie recreations as for that time were fit, wherewith he could not but be pleasantlie conceipted; considering that as euerie thing was done with purpose to delight: so he with others must needs be accordinglie affected. And as the better sort had their conuenient disports, so were not the ordinarie people excluded from competent pleasure. For vpon a greene verie spatious and large, where thousands might stand and behold with good contentment, there bearebaiting & bulbaiting (tempered with other merrie disports) were exhibited: whereat it cannot be spoken what pleasure the people took.

The ambassador of Denmarke seth the roiall seruice of the queene of England.

Recreations and disports for prince and people.

Now the daie being far spent, and the sun in his declination, the passimes ended, and the actors there therein weare; the ambassador withdrew vnto his lodging by barge to Crosbies place, where (no doubt) this daies solemnitie was thought vpon, and talked of; if not by him, yet by his traine, and perhaps (as like enough) of both. Now after this, and manie other English courtesies elsewhere, verie bountifullie giuen and taken: the ambassador, after the finishing of such affaires as he was put in trust withall, taking his leaue both of the court, citie, and countrie, returned towards Denmarke on the thirtith daie of Maie next following, whome we will leaue vpon his voiage, and touch other matters happening at home.

In this yeare one thousand fiue hundred foure score and six, and on the fourth daie of June, a commission was directed from the quéens maiestie then at Grénewich, tending to the ratification of a firme league of amitie betwéene the two mightie princes, Elisabeth quéene of England, and James the first of that name king of Scots, vpon certeine causes necessarie and important: the reigne and gouernement of the said princes, happening in so doubtfull and dangerous times, wherein the princes nére adioining, who will be called catholike, agnising the popes authoritie, by mutuall leagues do knit friendship, for the rooting vp and throwing out of the true, pure, and sincere religion of the gospell, not onelie out of their owne territories and dominions, but also out of other forrein kingdoms; and thereto haue obliged their faith.

Least they therefore that loue the religion of the gospell, should séeme lesse carefull for the defense and supportation thereof, than they which earnestlie indeuour to mainteine and vphold that of Rome, least it should be ouerthrowne; the said princes for the greater securitie of their persons, vpon whose safetie the safetie of the whole people doth depend, and for the preseruation of the true, ancient, and christian religion, which they now professe; haue thought good that a stricter bond of a mutuall and so-ciall league, than at ante time hitherto hath béene agreed vpon betwéene their maiesties progenitors, should now be substantiallie concluded. This league was articulated, and commissioners thereto appointed; the right honorable Edward earle of Rutland, (a complet noble man, answerable to the etymon of his name, and verie well deseruing the poets report:

——nomen virtutibus æquat, Nec sinit ingenium nobilitate premi)

the lord William Euers, and also Thomas Randolph esquier: who with their traine of attendants came to Berwike the nineteenth of June, where (the ambassadors of Scotland being in like sort present) they accomplished the matter, whereto they were commissionated: the articles of the said league in all and euerie part sufficientlie confirmed, on the fift of Julie. All which being dispatched, the said earle of Rutland with his traine returned. This ambassage is reported in the historie of Scotland, wherevnto (for the auoiding of tautologie) we refer the reader.

In the moneth of Julie a verie dangerous conspiracie was discouered, tending to the subuersion of the state and lamentable confusion of all things: wherein as the turbulent spirited did what they could to proceed, so it pleased God the author of peace to intercept them in the plot of their mischéeuous deuise, and to ouerthrow them in their owne imagined nets. Ringleaders in this pretended treason were certeine gentlemen and others (of whome hereafter by particular name we will speake) who had waded and ventured so far therein, that vpon the notice thereof (as God will suffer no such attempts to lie long vndetected) order was taken for a verie strict inquirie and search vniuersallie to be made for their apprehension, which was accordinglie executed, in so much that the conspirators distressed and succorles were put to verie hard shifts by this inquisition and pursute, and in fine apprehended, to the great reioising of the citizens of London, diuerslie testified; as with bonfiers, making merrie in the streets at squate and round tables, singing of psalmes, marching about their fiers with tabber and pipe, and giuing manie a shout, that the aire rang withall. In so much that the consideration thereof did so worke in hir highnesse, as hereupon (a thing rare in a prince) she directed letters of thanks to the citie, for the manifold testifications of their loue and loialtie: which because they are materiall (as no word nor title proceéding from so singular a souereigne, is to fall to the ground vnrecorded) we are in dutie bound trulie to anner them, as we had them vnder publication. And first a brefe oration of maister James Dalton, one of the councellors of the citie of London, in the absence of the recorder, as followeth.

The oration of maister Iames Dalton, &c.

RIght worshipfull, my good countriemen and citizens of this most noble citie of London: since the late brute and report of a most wicked & traitorous conspiracie, not onelie to take awaie the life of our most gratious souereigne (whom God grant long to liue and reigne ouer vs) but also to stir vp a generall rebellion throughout the whole realme: the great and vniuersall ioie of you all of this citie, vpon the apprehension of diuerse of that most wicked conspiracie of late declared and testified, by manie outward acts and shewes, hath wrought in the quénes most excellent maiestie such a gratious contentment; that it hath moued hir highnesse, by hir letters signed with hir owne hand, to signifie vnto my lord maior of this citie & his brethren, hir most noble and princelie acceptation thereof, and that in such sort, as thereby may appeare, that hir highnesse hath not more, no not so much reioised at the most happie escape of the wicked mischéefe intended against hir owne person, as at the ioie which hir louing subiects, & namelie you of this citie of London toke at the apprehension of the practisers of that intended treason.

By occasion whereof, hir highnesse brought to a thankefull remembrance, and acknowledging of Gods infinit blessings bestowed on hir, comparable with ante prince or creature in the world, no worldlie thing more or like accompteth of, than of the hartie loue of hir louing and faithfull subiects manie wales, and manie times before now; but especiallie by this our great ioie in this sort, at this time, and vpon this occasion shewed. And that hir exceéding great loue and acceptation of our reioising maie the more appeare vnto you: it hath pleased hir highnesse in the same letters to declare, that she desireth not longer to liue among vs, than she shall mainteine, continue, nourish, and increase the loue and goodwill of hir subiects towards hir. And this hir highnesse hath willed to be made knowne vnto you all, with this; that she will not faile with all care, and by all good means that apperteine to a christian prince, to sæke the conseruation of you all, so louing and dutifull affected subiects.

This hir maiesties pleasure in part now declared, and more to be made knowne vnto you by hir owne letters, which you shall heare read, my lord maior and his brethren haue required me to declare vnto you all, that they doo heartilie reioise & thanke God for the happie daie of the good acceptation of this your great ioie; & my * lord himselfe hath willed me to giue you all heartie thanks in his name; for that in the time of his seruice, your dutifull behauiours haue gotten to the citie so noble and worthie a testimonie of dutie and loialtie, of so noble and worthie a queene. Now, for somuch as Gods blessings wonderfullie abound, & one ioie commeth vpon another, let vs not be vnthankefull to God, but acknowledge his goodnesse, and attribute the same (as in deed we ought) to the sincere religion of almightie God, most godlie established by the queens most excellent maiestie, which hath taught vs to know God aright, our dutie to our souereigne, and to loue our countrie, and hath made vs dutifull and obedient subiects, reioising at all good things happening to hir maiestie, hir realme, or to anie in hir noble seruice, the true effects of a true and good religion: whereas the contemners thereof, and immoderat affectors of the Romish religion and superstitions, being void of the true knowledge of God, haue declined from God, their allegiance to their prince, their loue to their countrie, and haue become inuenters of mischeefes, vsers and spreaders abrode of false and seditious rumors, such as ioie at no good thing; but contrariwise reioise at euerie euill successe, the badges and marks of their profession, who haue before this, in this realme and in other hir highnesse dominions, stirred vp rebellion, forren inuasion, and manie times practised the verie death & destruction of the queene hir selfe, the ruine & subuersion of the whole realme; the proper effects of their Romish religion.

Sir Wolstan Dixie lord maior of London, Anthonie Ratcliffe, and Henrie Pierrell shiriffes.

We haue beheld all these things, and seene in our daies the ruine and mischeefes inuented against others, fall vpon the inuenters them selues; and haue knowne the wicked and violent hands of diuerse of them, diuerslie to kill and murther themselues, when most traitorouslie they would, and most happilie they could not, slea the lords annointed. As we haue knowne all these things, so God be thanked, that by a better religion, hauing beene better taught, we haue beene no partakers of their wicked deuises, but haue put to our helping hands, as occasion hath serued; and euer readie to ouerthrow the authors and deuisers thereof. And I haue no doubt, but we of this noble citie, who hitherto haue beene alwaies readie, dutifullie and faithfullie to serue hir maiestie vpon all occasions (hir highnesse now so gratiouslie accepting onelie of our reioising at the apprehension of hir enimies, euen the least part of the dutie of a good subiect to so good a queene) will be readie euerie one with all that we can make, and with the vttermost aduenture of all our liues, speedilie to be reuenged vpon all such as shall villanouslie and traitorouslie attempt or put in vre anie mischefe to hir noble person; and in the meane time will haue a better eie and care to all suspicious and miscontented persons, to their saiengs and doings, to their false brutes and reports, to the places and corners of their haunt and resort, to their harborers, companions, aiders and mainteiners. God vphold and continue his religion among vs, and increase our zeale therein, which hath made vs so louing and loiall, and so beloued and acceptable subiects to so worthie a prince; and rot out that wicked and Romish religion, that hath made so manie disloiall and traitorous subiects; to whome is both odious & irkesome the long life and prosperous reigne of our most noble queene Elisabeth. God confound all such traitors, and preserue hir highnesse long to liue and reigne oure vs. ¶ Hauing thus spoken, the multitude all the while no lesse silent than attendant, the speaker verie reuerentlie opened hir maiesties letters, & read the same with a verie distinct and audible voice, as followeth.

To our right trustie and welbeloued, the lord maior of our citie of London, and his brethren the aldermen of the same.

RIght trustie and welbeloued, we greete you well. Being giuen to vnderstand, how greatlie our good and most louing subiects of that citie, did reioise at the apprehension of certeine diuelish and wicked minded subiects of ours, that through the great and singular goodnesse of God haue beene detected, to haue most wickedlie and vnnaturallie conspired, not onelie the taking awaie of our owne life, but also to haue stirred vp (as much as in them laie) a generall rebellion throughout our whole realme: we could not but by our owne letters witnesse vnto you the great and singular contentment we receiued vpon the knowledge thereof; assuring you, that we did not so much reioise at the escape of the intended attempt against our owne person, as to see the great ioie our most louing subiects toke at the apprehension of the contriuers thereof: which to make their loue more apparant, they haue (as we are to our great comfort informed) omitted no outward shew, that by anie externall act might witnesse to the world the inward loue and dutifull affection they beare towards vs. And as we haue as great cause with all thankfulnesse to acknowledge Gods great goodnesse toward vs, through the infinit blessings he laieth vpon vs, as manie as euer prince had; yea rather as euer creature had: yet do we not for anie worldlie blessing receiued from his diuine maiestie, so greatlie acknowledge the same, as in that it hath pleased him to incline the hearts of our subiects, euen from the first beginning of our reigne; to carie as great loue toward vs, as euer subiects carried toward prince, which ought to moue vs (as it doth in verie deed) to seeke with all care, & by all good meanes that apperteine to a christian prince, the conseruation of so louing and dutifull affected subiects: assuring you, that we desire no longer to liue, than while we maie in the whole course of our gouernment carie our selues in such sort, as may not onelie nourish and continue their loue and good will toward vs, but also increase the same. We thinke meet, that these our letters should be communicated in some generall assemblie to our most louing subiects the commoners of that citie. Giuen vnder our signet at our castell of Windsor, the eightéenth daie of August one thousand fiue hundred foure score and six, in the eight and twentith yeere of our reigne.

But leauing this princelie president of thankefulnes to perpetuall record, we will touch the next occurrence, as course of time ministreth occasion. About this time of the yeere returned into England sir Francis Drake knight, a man of rare knowlege in nauigation, and verie fortunat in the euent of his enterprises, after manie feats of good seruice accomplished in forren countries, as at Baion, Hispaniola, S. Dominico, Carthagena, &c: to the admiration of all people amongst whom he came, and contrarie to the expectation of the Spaniards, who vpon supposall of places impregnable grew so confident, that they seemed lightlie to estéeme anie purposed force of the enimie, and therefore doubted no kind of annoiance. Howbeit, they were as safe as he that hangeth by the leaues of a tree in the end of autumne, when as the leaues begin to fall. For they were were so terrified at the sight of sacke and spoile, as also doubting a totall wast by fire and sword, that they were glad to yeeld to composition. And heere, because mention is made of Hispaniola, note ye that it is supposed that Salomon king of Jerusalem had his great riches of gold from hense, and that his ships sailed to Ophir (the old name as some affirme of Hispaniola) by the gulfe of Persia, called sinus Persicus. As for Sancto Dominico, it is the cheefe citie in Hispaniola, reported in histozie, as touching the building, that there is no citie in Spaine, Tanto pro tanto, no not Barselona, that is to be preferred before it generallie. For the houses are for the most part of stone, as are they of Barselona, or of so strong and well wrought earth, that it maketh a singular and strong binding.

Sir Fr. Drake h turne int England his last v finished.

Hispaniola in old time called Ophir.

But leauing description of places, it shall not be amisse hauing now touched (though not with conuenient dignitie) the last voiage of this singular gentleman, to anner in this place a memoriall of a former voiage by him attempted, namelie on the thirteenth date of December, in the yere of Christ one thousand fiue hundred seuentie & seuen: at what time accompanied with fiue tall ships well manned & appointed, he sailed into the west Indies: & by the same aduenture (most luckilie accomplished) eternised his name. At what time the king of Moluccaes admiring his order, & astonied at the hearing of the peales of English ordinance, roring like thunder (which he there at his arriuall valiantlie & liberallie discharged) receiued him right honorablie, causing foure galliasses to conduct and bring his ship into the surest harborough, and him selfe with his companie to his presence. In this voiage he discouered a countrie erst vnknowne, which he named Noua Albion, where by his courteous dealing he so allured and wonne the hearts of the inhabitants, that twise they crowned him king. Beyond the large countrie of Chilie, where it hath beene heeretofore thought that nothing had beene but continent and firme land, he found sundrie Ilands, the furthest whereof lieng most south, he called by his maiesties name Elisabetha. Now after manie a singular note of his incomparable valorousnesse exhibited in places where he came, and purposing to make his aduenture profitable, he neglected no meanes that might stand with his honestie and honor; returning home into England with great riches the six and twentith of September, in the yeere of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred and eightie; with one ship onelie. For of the fiue, wherewith (at his first setting forth) he was furnished, he was forced to set two on fire, the third perished, the fourth came backe and went not forwards at the first. A voiage of great aduenture and prosperous successe, contrarie to the ackward and frowning hap of sundrie worthie gentlemen, whose attempts albeit honorable and commendable, yet matched with misfortune, or at least defectiue in deserued and hoped issue: a sore discouragement to gentlemen of trauell, and not a little impeaching the art of nauigation.

The returne of sir Francis Drake into England with great riches, &c.

Manie voiages of great difficultie haue beene vndertaken, but failed in the issue.

And now to resume our former remembrance of the conspirators, you shall vnderstand, that after due examination had, & no rigor vsed either by torture or torment, the wicked wretches guiltie consciences driuing them to voluntarie confession, on the seuenth date of September, certeine of them were led from the Tower of London to Westminster by water, where they were indicted; first, for intending treason against the queens owne person; secondlie, for stirring ciuill wars within the realme; and thirdlie, for practising to bring in forren power to inuade the land. Seuen of them appeared at Westminster on the thirteenth date of September, who all pleaded guiltie, and therefore had no iurie, but were condemned, and had iudgement on the next morrow.

Traitors indicted, arreigned, and condemned at Westminster.

The first seuen condemned without anie iurie.

On the fifteenth date of September, other seuen of them were likewise arreigned at Westminster, who pleading not guiltie, were tried by a iurie, found guiltie, and had iudgement accordinglie. The effect of whose treasons shortlie to touch them were these. John Sanage, remaining long in France at Rheims, was persuaded by doctor Gilbert Gifford, that great honor should redound to him, if he would take in hand to change religion, to inuade the realme by forren power, to dispossesse the quéene of England, and to proclame the Scotish queene, and set hir in hir place. All which Sanage promised to do, or else to lose his life, and thereupon returned into England; where he imparted his purpose to Anthonie Babington, requiring his aid therein. Then John Ballard préest, also persuaded the said Babington to the purpose before expressed, promising him aid of threescore thousand men that secretlie should be landed, and told him both how & when (as he thought.) Whereupon Babington promised and concluded to make a slaughter vpon the councell of hir maiestie in the Starchamber, then to haue sacked London, to haue burned the navie and cheefest ships, to kill or displace the lords, knights and magistrats, that remained true subiects to our right & lawfull quéene and realme, and also to haue cloied and poisoned the greatest ordinance, &c. These were their purposes.

The effect of the last seuen their treasons notable.

Now touching the names of the traitors, their behauiours and speaches, with the maner of their executions, you shall vnderstand, that vpon the twentith date of September, being tuesdaie, John Ballard a preest, and first persuader of Babington to these odious treasons, was laid alone vpon an hurdell, and six others two and two in like sort, all drawne from Tower hill through the citie of London, vnto a field at the vpper end of Holborne, hard by the high waie side to saint Giles in the field, where was erected a scaffold for their execution, & a paire of gallowes of extraordinarie hight, as was that whereupon haughtie Haman was hanged for his ambition, &c: the place likewise so railed to keepe off horsemen, as the people might plainelie see the execution. On the first date the traitors were placed vpon the scaffold, that the one might behold the reward of his fellowes treason. Ballard the preest, who was the first brocher of this treason, was the first that was hanged, who being cut downe (according to iudgement) was dismembred, his bellie ript vp, his bowels and traitorous heart taken out & throwne into the fire, his head also (seuered from his shoulders) was set on a short stake vpon the top of the gallowes, and the trunke of his bodie quartered and imbrued in his owne blood, wherewith the executioners hands were bathed, and some of the standers by (but to their great loathing, as not able for their liues to auoid it, such was the throng) besprinkled. This Ballard, at the verie time of his death not denieng his treason, died an obstinate papist, and in his protestation doubtfullie said, that If he had offended the quéens maiestie, or anie man else, he was sorie, and so conditionallie desired forgiuenesse. The malicious affection of his heart towards hir highnesse appeared in the trembling passage of death, that whereas his treasons were impious, odious, and damnable, as the most wicked (to wit his confederats for the most part) confessed (as the common fame goeth) that they exceeded the greatnesse of hir maiesties mercie, which maie not be measured, where there is anie measure in offending.

The order of the traitors executed.

John Ballard preest persuader of Babington to these odious treasons executed.

The place of their execution was sometime the meeting place of their consultation.

How Ballard was affected at his death.

Ballards sophisticall asking of the queens maiestie forgiuenesse.

And yet in his desire of remission at hir highnesse hands, he added this condition (If) as one that doubted if hs had offended hir person.

Anthonie Babington esquier executed.

Next vnto this priest, Anthonie Babington was made readie to the gallowes, who in euerie point was handled like vnto Ballard; in whome a signe of his former pride was to be obserued. For whereas the rest (through the cogitation of death) were exercised in praier vpon their knees and bare-headed; he (whose turne was next) stood on his feet with his hat on his head, as if he had beene but a beholder of the execution. Concerning his religion, he died a papist. His treasons were so odious, as the sting of conscience compelled him to acknowledge himselfe a most grieuous trespasser against the diuine maiestie, and the queens highnesse. Next vnto Babington, Sauage was likewise prepared for the execution. This notable traitor (as the fame goeth) was the man that conferred with doctor Gifford at Paris; and by the confirmations of the English fugitiues at Rhemes was resolued, and resolutelie determined to kill the queene. It is likewise said, that vpon the apprehension of Ballard the priest, Babington accelerated and hastened this Sauage to dispatch his resolution, and that he onelie deferred the matter for the making of a courtlike sute of apparell.

A note of Babingtons pride at the verie instant of his execution.

John Sauage gentleman executed.

The fruites that issue from listening to the counsell of Jesuits, Romanists, and Rhemists.

When Sauage was executed, Barnewell was made readie to die, an obstinat papist, who for his treason made conscience his best excuse; howbeit a rotten conscience, which was infected with the murther of a vertuous queene; which sith it was so bad, few there were that heard him, but forbad their conscience to pitie him, otherwise than charitablie to be sorowfull for his offense, deseruing so shamefull a fall, and damnable before God and man. After this Barnewell, Tichborns turne was serued, a proper yong gentleman, whose humilitie and mone moued much compassion. Tilneie one of the queens maiesties pensioners, next vnto Tichborne, made worke for the hangman, a wretch well worthie of death, who went about to take awaie hir highnesse life.

Robert Barnewell gentleman executed.

Chidiocke Tichborne esquire executed.

Charls Tilneie a pensioner executed.

The last of these seuen that suffered was Edward Abington, whose father was an officer of good credit in hir highnesse house, and for manie aduancements was bound to saie; God saue good M. Elisabeth. But his sonne was a notable papist, & an archtraitor, who at his death did all that in him laie, to stir a feare in the hearts of the ignorant multitude, with this speech, that there could not chose but be great effusion of bloud in England verie shortlie. But Gods prouidence maketh it apparant, that the prophesies of traitors prooue not euermore scripture. For Throgmorton the traitor said, that before one yeare was expired, the prosperitie & peace of England should be turned into generall calamitie. Howbeit, the date of that diuination is out, & they both (as maie befalle the rest of that rebellious rout in their appointed time) by Gods grace partakers of semblable destinie. This Abington was the last of the first seuen that were executed: and thus ended that daies worke, to the comfort of Israell, for that the execrable thing which troubled the whole land (and highlie offended the diuine maiestie) was taken awaie.

Edward Abington esquier executed, his threatning speech.

Throgmortons prophesie and Abingtons of like truth in euent.

On the daie following (according to generall expectation) being the one and twentith date of September, Salisburie was laid alone vpon an hurdell, and other sir, two and two in like maner, all drawne from Tower hill through the citie of London, vnto the former place of execution. Salisburie was the first man that suffered, who in all points was handled as the other seuen the daie before; sauing that he and the latter sir were executed with this fauour, that they were permitted to hang vntill they were fullie dead, before the rest of their execution was performed. And albeit this man was blinded with the superstition of papistrie, euen at the point of death, yet he mildlie acknowledged his grieuous offense against the queene, and in his last commendation charged all catholikes (for so he onelie accounted the papists) that they should leaue attempting to set vp their religion by violent hand, and by double and treble repetition exhorted them to patience, and earnestlie forbad them all maner of violence.

Thomas Salisburie esquier executed.

The last seuen traitors executed with great fauour.

Salisburie acknowledgeth his grieuous offense: a note of repentance.

Violence forbidden by Salisburie.

After Salisburie was with all possible fauour executed, Dun was striped into his shirt, and seemed penitent for his grieuous offense: who after that with verie earnest persuasions he had likewise disuaded the Romanists from attempting anie matter of violence, he was executed with exceeding fauour. This Dun (as the report goeth) liued reasonable wealthilie, but it seemeth the man was of a discontented humour, and in dislike with a competent vocation; as appeared by this his vaine imagination. For in Trinitie terme last, comming into the Kings bench office, among other pleasant speeches to one of his familiars; You will maruell (quoth he) to see me within one quarter of a yeare to walke vp and downe the streets with twentie men after me. Whereupon one of his acquaintance pleasantlie answered, that he feared he should first see him followed to the gallowes with a thousand people. Dun shewed his desire, and the other read his destinie. But let the end of this traitor be a warning to all ambitious men, that destruction followeth presumption, and pride will haue a fall.

Henrie Dun gentleman executed.

The ambitious humour of Henrie Dun.

When the execution of Dun was finished, the next in that tragedie was Jones. This traitor (by that which was easie to be gathered of his behauiour at the gallowes) was a verie close papist, of a shrewd reach, and a most dangerous member in this common wealth. For notwithstanding his protestation that he disuaded Salisburie from this odious enterprise; yet his owne talke shewed that his counsell proceeded of a feare which he had, that the prond humor of Babington threatened an ouerthrow of their purpose; rather than of anie dutifull zeale that he bare towards the safetie of the queens maiestie. For he neither would him selfe discouer this treason of the highest degree, neither did he counsell his friend Salisburie to preuent his owne danger in detecting the conspiracie of his companions: yea when the odiousnesse thereof brake out into publike knowledge, he (contrarie to the generall duetie of a good subiect, and in contempt of a speciall warrant directed vnto him) not onelie refused (as he himselfe confessed) to apprehend Salisburie being in his owne house, but (so far as he might) succoured him, after that he was published to be a firebrand of that most wicked treason. One speciall thing neuertheless, which moued manie to pitie him aboue the rest, was, because with vehement words he protested, that although he was a catholike in religion, yet he so deepelie weied the libertie of his countrie, as that he would be (and euer was) readie to spend his life in withstanding anie forren enimie, French, Italish, Spanish, or whatsoeuer: by whose opinion the tolleration of innasion was so far from nature and christian duetie, as no excuse or punishment might satisfie the crime.

Edward Jones esquier executed.

Forren innasion reproued by Jones.

After Jones had paid the price of his treason, with all possible fauour, then Charnocke was executed, and after him Trauers, both two men (as it seemed) bewitched with an ignorant deuotion; for that in their ends nothing was to be obserued but their praieng praieng to our ladie, calling vpon saints, ioined with a number of ceremonies, crossings, and blessings, &c. So that it appeared that in their praiers, they were bound to forme more than to faith.

John Trauers & John Charnocke gentlemen executed.

See before pag. 1357, a, 60, &c. 1358, b, 60, &c.

When the hangman had giuen these two his beastie blessing, Gage prepared himselfe to die, who began his protestation, that there was neuer subiect more bound to a prince than his father was to hir maiestie: and from that reuerend recognisance and true acknowledgement of hir maiesties graciousnes, he fell to excuse him selfe of the odious treasons for which he was to die: but on so weake a ground, as the simplest iudgement then present, found (by the order of his owne confession) that he was a dangerous instrument for the pope. He confessed that he accompanied Ballard the seminarie preest (who hatched the great eg of this pestilent practise) into Yorkeshire, & that he wrote a letter for the said preest to a Frenchman or Spaniard of account beyond the seas. To be short, in all the course of his confession, in indifferent iudgements, he accused himselfe to be an hollow hearted subiect, and a sound papist. This cunning traitor Gage could neuer haue made a confession of more infamie to himselfe, than in acknowledging the queens maiesties most excellent fauour, shewed to his father (which a dutifull sonne ought to esteeme a benefit vnto himselfe) and so to redouble the reproch of his treasons, he condemned himselfe of ingratitude, an vnnaturall vice, which the verie soules of the aire abhorre: as (to vse one example of sufficiencie for a thousand) is reported of the storke; which so often as she hath yong, casteth one out of the nest for the hire of the house, and reward of him that lodged hir.

Robert Gage executed.

Hir maiesties gratiousnesse commended by this traitor.

Hypocrisie of Robert Gage.

The last that suffered was one of the Bellamies, whose countenance discouered him to be a setled papist, and who as he could saie little to saue his life; so at the gallowes he spake nothing to defend his death. Although this traitor had but a dull spirit, yet (as it seemed) he had a malicious heart, answerable to that of his frends, who succored Babington and some of his associats, when feare of the law, and shame of their odious treasons, made them to shrowd themselues like foxes in holes and couerts. And it seemeth that they were as resolute to follow the treasons of Babington, as they were readie to releeue him from the danger of the law. Otherwise if this Bellamies brother had not had an accusing conscience, he would neuer with violent hands haue hanged himselfe.

Jerom Bellamie gentleman executed.

One of the Bellamies hanged himselfe in the Tower.

Thus ended the second daies execution, to the full satisfaction of the peoples expectation; who neuerthelesse (as the daie before) were inwardlie touched with passions ingendred by the deepe impressions of the present obiects: but touched they were, as nothing pitieng their deserued deaths, in regard they were most heinous malefactors: but as they were men, in whome humanitie should so haue preuailed, as that they should rather haue chosen losse of life & liuelod, than to haue intended the desolation of their natiue countrie, the deprivation of prince, the deposition of peeres, the destruction of people; and what soeuer might seeme as a directorie to bloudshed and slaughter, from the highest gouernor sitting in roialtie adorned with crowne and scepter, to the sucking babe lieng in the cradle wrapped in swathing clouts. Which extremities of butcherlie crueltie and vnnaturall sauagenesse, haue had an ancient purpose of practise, as maie appeare by a clause or two of John Nichols his recantation; where speaking of Pius Quintus, excommunicating our liege souereigne, he saith that the same was within a twelue moneth of the first publication reuiued, and fiue hundred copies printed at Rome, which were dispersed throughout Italie, Spaine, & Germanie. Whereof what were the contents, is at large set downe in the treatise of execution of iustice in England for treason, not for religion.

Ex libello I. Nich. typis C. B. excuso 1581.

But thus saith the same conuert, that a reader of diuinitie positiue, in the hearing of two hundred scholers, vomited these prophane words out of his vncircumcised mouth; that it was lawfull for anie of worship in England, to authorise the vilest wretch that is, to seeke the death of hir highnesse: whose prosperous estate the Italish preest and Spanish prince do so maligne, that they would worke wonders, were it not for certeine impedits: as father Pais a Spaniard, reader of diuinitie scholastically in the Romane college, affirmed in an auditorie of three hundred, saieng: Bona papæ voluntas trita & manifesta est, & eius crumena parata: sed R. P. aut metus subtrahit, aut potestatis defectus vetat, vt suum in Angliam exercitum ducere non audeat. Where (by the waie) would be noted an inuasion long since pretended. And that the queens maiesties estate was then maliciouslie aimed at, maie appeare by these comminations and threats, that they would burne hir bones, and the bones of all such as loued hir, either aliue or dead; of whome, some were lords temporall, some spirituall, &c. Memorandum, that this was to be done, when they held the sterne of gouernement: which shall be, when errant traitors are good subiects, and ranke knaues honest men.

The causes that haue so long hindered king Philip to inuade England.

And now to touch the punishment inflicted vpon the foresaid wretches, there is none (if he be not a sworne aduersarie to the state, and an enimie to iustice) but must needs confesse, that although some of the conspirators were no lesse sharpelie executed, than by law was censured: yet considering the qualitie of their offense, it was a death tempered with lenitie, if no more but the spedines of their execution be considered, whereby their paine and smart was but momentanie. Oh with what seueritie did the ancients punish offenses of this nature! And not without cause. For besides that nothing is more vsuall in all the whole scriptures, than prohibition to kill or to seeke the life or honor, not onelie of the prince, but also of inferior magistrats, although they be wicked (and it is said in Exodus; Thou shalt not raile vpon the iudges, neither speake euill of the ruler of the people) so is it prouided by the lawes of nations, that not onelie he that hath killed his souereigne, but he also that made the attempt, that gaue counsell, that yeelded consent, that conceiued the thought, is giltie of high treason. Yea, he that was neuer preuented nor taken in the maner, in this point of the souereigne, the law accounteth him as condemned alreadie; and iudgeth him capable of death, that thought once in times past to haue seized vpon the life of his prince, anie repentance that followed notwithstanding.

The reuerend regard that subiects ought to haue of their soueraignes, &c.

And trulie there was a gentleman of Normandie, who confessed to a Franciscane frier, that he once minded to haue killed king Francis the first: but repented him of that euill thought. The frier gaue him absolution, but yet afterwards informed the king of the same; who sent the gentleman to the parlement at Paris there to be tried, where he was by common consent condemned to die, and after executed. Amongst the Macedonians there was a law, that condemned to death fiue of their next kinsfolks that were conuicted of conspiracie against their prince. And most notable is the historie of Romilda, who seeing hir towne or citie besieged by a barbarous king, but yet youthfull and wanton; she signified vnto the enimie by messengers, that she would betraie the citizens into his hands, if he would honour hir with marriage. Which when the

A gentleman iudged to die because he once thought to haue killed his prince.

A seuere law against treason.

king had promised to doo, she in the night season opened the gates, and (the people vnwitting and ignorant) let in forren force. Now the king being entered & in possession, commanded that the towne should be sacked, and all the people slaughtered, Romilda excepted, the vse of whose bodie (for his oth sake, which he was loth to violat) he had the same night as in wedlocke: howbeit, the next daie he cast hir off, and betooke hir to twelue scullions by turns to be abused; & lastlie pitcht hir vpon a stake.

A woman traitoresse well rewarded.

Here you haue examples in both sexes (man and woman) of treason and conspiracie most seuerelie executed: which if they be compared vnto the sufferings of our late offendors, Jesu what ods shall we sée and confesse? And as the ancients had treason in mortall hatred; so could they not awaie with ingratitude, as maie be obserued by the laws of Draco (which were said to be written in bloud, they were so sharpe and peremptorie) amongst which, there was a commandement, that if anie man had receiued a benefit of his neighbor, and it were proued against him long after that he had bæne vnthankefull for it, and had ill acknowledged the good turne receiued; such a one should be put to death. So then we sée how in old time they opposed their affections against particular vices, persecuting them with seueritie, as laboring to supplant them: this age of ours beholdeth ingratitude and treason combined, with a fowle nest of other irksome and noisome sins, in the hearts of helhounds (for we maie not vouchsafe them the name of men) breathing out the vapors of their venemous infection, to the damnifieng of the whole commonwelth: what fauour then deserue such to find where they haue offended, or rather what rigor are they not worthie to suffer?

Against seeking after nouelties, and to teach men to be well aduised, &c.

Among the Locrians there was a strict decrée, that euerie citizen, desirous to bring in a new law, should come and declare it publikelie before the people with a halter about his necke; to the end that if his new law was not thought meet to be receiued, and verie profitable for the commonwelth, he might presentlie be strangled with the same rope. If they in old time went so short a waie to worke in a case of vnadui sedneſſe, to teach others that they vndertake nothing without mature deliberation: what are we taught to be conuenient for such, as breake not their wits either to deuise or prefer new laws; but indeuor what they can to dissolue all law and order, all peace and societie, all gouernment and subiection; and by the impulsion of a furious mind to let in libertie, contempt, and all the enormities and abuses that accompanie a licentious life? To let passe the pluralitie of examples & authorities of this kind, the number being so great as that they would fill vp Erotosthenes siue; and to saie somewhat of seueritie, that by opposition of countrie to countrie in that respect, we maie sée the great difference betweene ours and theirs.

Extreame kinds of torments in other countries for treason, &c.

It is seueritie to flea men quicke, to chaine them aliue to a stake, in such sort as they maie run round thereabout, the fier inuironing them on all sides: it is seueritie to haue collops of flesh pluckt from the bodie with hot burning tongs: it is seueritie to be cast downe from a steepe place starke naked vpon sharpe stakes: it is seueritie to be torne in peeces with wild horsses, and to haue the bones broken vpon a wheele. All these be extremities of torments awarded by law, and at this daie practised in forren regions for treason, and sometime for crimes of nothing so dangerous a nature. Finallie, if we confer the seueritie of this execution, exercised vpon rebellious and traitorous subiects in a superlatiue degrée of disloialtie, with that of other nations commonlie vsed, namelie in principall affaires, which concerne peace and warre, and matters of gouernment, to accept the seruice of runnagate slaues, to place them in authoritie, to change or depose at pleasure anie whatsoeuer; yea to strangle them vpon the least suspicion or dislike: our seueritie is clemencie. For in this is ripe reason and iudiciall processe; in the other will without wit, & (as commonlie they saie) Omnia pro imperio, nihil pro officio.

Traitors iustlie rewarded, and yet nothing so as they deserue.

And therefore we conclude, that ingratitude being counted vnnaturall, and treason (a vice vomited out of hell mouth) linked togither with manie knots of other shamefull sinnes, and all concurring in the hearts and liues of these outragious conspirators as in a centre: whie should it be thought seueritie to haue iustice iustlie administred, that traitors should be drawne vpon hurdels, strangled in a halter, cut downe aliue, dismembred, their bellies ripped, their bowels taken out and burned, their heads chopt from their shoulders, their bodies clouen in foure quarters, and set ouer the gates of London, for the foules of the aire to féed vpon at full? Vnto which fowle end maie all such come, as meane anie mischiefe against good quéene Elisabeth, the lords of hir highnesse councell, the bodie politike of the land, the slander or innouation of true religion, &c: wherein God make prince and people of one mind, and plant in all subiects a reuerend regard of obedience and contentment of present estate, supported with iustice and religion: least longing after nouelties, it fare with them as with the frogs, who liuing at libertie in lakes and ponds, would néeds (as misliking their present intercommunitie of life) with one consent sue to Jupiter for a king, and so did. Whereat he wondering, granted their desires, and cast them an huge trunke of a tree, which besides that it made a great noise in the water as it fell, to their terrifieng; so it was cumbersome by taking vp their accustomed passage: insomuch that discontented therewithall, they assaulted Jupiter with a fresh petition, complaining that (besides diuerse misliкes otherwise) the king whom he gaue them was but a senseleſſe stocke, and vnworthie of obedience: wherefore it would please him to apoint them another indued with life. Whereupon Jupiter sent the herne among them, who entring into the water, deuoured vp the frogs one after another: insomuch that the residue, séeing their new king so rauenouslie gobling vp their fellowes, lamentablie wéeping besought Jupiter to deliuer them from the throte of that dragon and tyrant. But he (of purpose vnchangeable) made them a flat answer, that (will they nill they) the herne should rule ouer them.

A prettie apolog allusorie to the present case of malcontents.

Whereby we are taught to be content when we are well, and to make much of good quéene Elisabeth, by whom we enioie life and libertie, with other blessings from aboue; beséeching God we maie sée a consummation of the world, before the scepter of the kingdome be translated to another. For (as the prouerbe saith) seldome commeth the better. But to the purpose, this execution being dispatched, and the testimonies thereof dispersed and visible in diuerse places about the citie, as at London bridge, where the traitors heads were ranged into their seuerall classes: manie rimes, ballads, and pamphlets were set forth by sundrie well affected people, wherein breefelie were comprised the plot of their conspiracie, the names of the traitors, and their successiue suffering, which growing common and familiar both in citie and countrie, were chanted with no lesse alacritie & courage of the singer; than willinglie and delightfullie listened vnto of the hearer. So that, what by one meane and what by another, all Seldoms commeth the better.

English

England was made acquainted with this horrible conspiracie, not so much admiring the maner of the mischeefes intended, as comforted that hir highnesse had the holie hand of God ouershadowing hir, the surest protection that prince or people can haue against perill. So that England is replenished with faithfull and louing subiects, though here and there (like darnell among wheate) lurke a viper or aspe waiting opportunitie to bite or sting.

Traitors inflicte reuenged, and yet nothing to the purpose.

Now to make a complet discourse of all these heauie & tragicall accidents, hauing thus far continued much important matter concerning the same: the reader is with due regard to peruse the addition following, wherein is argument of aggrauation touching these treasons: which being aduisedlie read, considered, and conferred with the former narration, will yeld as sound, pithie, and effectuall information for the knowledge of the conspirators purposed plot, as anie subiect would desire: and more than without greefe or teares anie true English heart can abide to read or heare. Where, by the waie, is to be noted, that Marie the Scotish Q. was a principall.

It is aparant by the iudiciall confessions of John Ballard preest, Anthonie Babington, and their confederats, that the said John Ballard (being a preest of the English seminarie at Rheims), in Lent past (after he and sundrie other Iesuits and preests, of his sect, had trauelled throughout all parts almost of this realme, & labored to their vttermost to breed in hir maiesties subiects an inclination to rebell against hir) he went into France, and there treated and concluded with Barnardino de Mendoza (the Spanish ambassador resiant at Paris) with Charles Paget & Thomas Morgan two English fugitiues, and inexcusable traitors for an inuasion to be made by forren forces into this kingdome. And because no assurance could then be made vnto Mendoza for the interteining, assisting, and good landing of those whome the king his maister, the pope, and the house of Guise should dispatch for that seruice, he sent the said Ballard into England at Whitsuntide last, with expresse charge to informe the catholikes, that for sundrie important considerations, the king his maister had vowed vpon his soule to reforme England, or to lose Spaine: and for that purpose had in readinesse such forces & warlike preparations, as the like was neuer seene in these parts of christendome. And therefore willed him to stirre the people, and worke the meanes to make some faction to giue them landing & interteinment at their comming: & specially to preserue the Scotish Q. in that confusion; letting the catholiks vnderstand, that in case they did not assist the inuaders, they would then enter as conquerors, put no difference betwixt man & man.

Barnardino de Mendoza, alwaies mischeeuously minded against the state of England: note his practises with Ballard.

With this dispatch Ballard by the speciall direction of Morgan (a notorious traitor to this state, yea a professed & sworne seruant vnto the Scotish queene) repaired to Anthonie Babington, a gentleman to whom the said Scotish Q. vpon the commendation of Morgan & the bishop of Glascow, had long before written letters of gratulation, & with whom she had secret intelligence by sending of letters & other messages, the space almost of two yeares before. To this gentleman Ballard discouered at large the whole purpose of Mendoza, Paget, & Morgan, and said (as he had in charge) that if happilie a strong partie could be made here to assist the inuasion, and aduance the Scotish queene, men, munition, monie, and vittels should be abundantlie suplied from beyond the seas; and therefore persuaded Babington to sound the whole realme, and to vndertake the action. Babington at the first proposed manie difficulties, but principallie this, that the inuaders or their assistants could haue no hope (the state being so well setled) to preuaile during hir maiesties life. Whereupon Ballard presentlie replied, that hir life could be no hinderance therein. For vpon like doubts mooued beyond the seas by meanes alreadie laid, John Sauage (a conspirator conuicted hereof by his owne confession) through the persuasion and procurement principallie of one William Gifford (an English fugitiue, and reader of diuinitie in the English seminarie at Rheims) had vowed and sworne to kill hir maiestie, as a thing resolued vpon to be lawfull, honorable, and meritorious.

The Scotish queene is an actor in this purposed conspiracie.

John Sauage had vowed and sworne to kill the queene.

This difficultie being thus removed, and Ballard from daie to daie continuing his persuasions, and highlie commending the murthering of hir maiestie as a deed of great honor, singular merit, and easie to effectuat: Babington vndertooke the managing of the whole action, and hauing first with his complices entred into manie severall propositions of sundrie treasonable natures, as to surprise hir maiesties person by force, to kill the lord treasurer, the earle of Leicester, and sir Francis Walsingham, to remoue hir councellors, and to place new, to murther the nobilitie whilest they were set in administring iustice, to sacke the citie of London, to fire the navie of the realme, to surprise some forces and hauens, to furnish the pate of their forces by an vniuersall spoile and robbing of the richer sort; hauing (I saie) first entred into these and such like propositions) in fine, he with Ballard and others resolued vpon these three principall points; first, that the inuaders should be assisted by a prepared readinesse in the people to rebell in diuerse places, and to ioine with them vpon their first landing; that hir maiestie should be murthered by six gentlemen of resolution; and lastlie, that the Scotish queene should be aduanced to the crowne of England. For the better performance of these resolutions, Ballard and Babington sounded diuerse, and dealt with manie; and so farre Babington proceeded in short time, that a choise was made by him of the six that should execute the attempt against hir maiesties person, that some others were especiallie assigned by him to attend and assist the inuasion, with direction from Babington to be popular vnto their vttermost; and that himselfe resolued vpon the first assurance either of hir maiesties death, or of the strangers arriuall, to proclame the queene of Scots queene of England.

Babington vndertaketh the managing of the whole action: note their treasons.

Things standing in these terms, and Babington deferring onelie the execution of this plot, vntill signification therof were giuen to the Scotish queene, and hir good pleasure knowne therein (God so ordeining it) the Scotish queene in June last wrote vnto Babington a short letter in cipher, signifieng hir discontent for the breach of their intelligence, and requiring him to send by that bearer a packet receiued for hir in April before, and vntill that time reteined by Babington, as wanting good meanes of conueieng, and therefore fearing the danger of that seruice. Whereupon Babington vsing that opportunitie, both deliuered hir packet vnto that messenger, and by him wrote vnto hir touching euerie particular of this plot aboue mentioned, and how farre he had proceeded therein; signifieng amongst manie other things, how desirous he was to do hir some seruice, how well it might be performed, if assurance were giuen from beyond the seas for that which was vndertaken thense, and how necessarie it were that rewards were promised vnto the chiefe actors for their better incouragement, and to be giuen to their posteritie, in case they miscaried in the execution. And therefore he required, that she would grant authoritie to some such as it might like hir to giue certeine offices and dignities necessarie for this action. Unto this letter Babington about twentie daies after in the same cipher, by which he did write before, receiued answer from the Scotish quéene, with which she also sent inclosed (as hir secretarie now confesseth) a new alphabet in cipher, to be vsed betweene them from that time forward.

The Scotish queene writeth vnto Babington in cipher: with his aduise, direction, and request.

And in this hir letter she not onelie declared hir good opinion of Babington, gaue him due thanks for his readinesse to do hir seruice, promised correspondencie in all that she might, and willed that the resolution being taken, he should with all spéed impart it to Barnardino de Mendoza, considering first what forces on foot or horssebacke he could make, what place for their assemblie, what leaders in euerie shire, what generall or chéefe leaders; but also amongst infinit other traitorous directions (apparant by the verie letters) she aduised that vpon returne of answer from Mendoza, with assurance that all things were in a readinesse, then and not before it should be conuenient to sound the countrie. And to colour the prouision and preparation, it should be giuen out, that what they did, was not vpon anie euill or disloiall disposition towards hir maiestie, but for the iust defense of catholikes, their bodies, liues, & lands, against the violence of the Puritans, the principall whereof being in the low countries with the chéefe forces of the realme, purposed at his returne to ruine not onelie the whole catholikes, but also meant to depriue hir maiestie of the crowne. And that they should giue it out, that therefore the preparation was for the defense of hir maiestie, and hir lawfull successors, not naming the Scotish quéene: vnder which pretense an association also might be made amongest the catholikes.

The Scotish quænes aduise in this mischiefous plot fauoring altogither of inhumanitie.

Which being done, and all things in readinesse both within and without the realme, it should be then time for the six gentlemen to worke, taking order that (because the time would be somewhat vncerteine of the exploit vpon hir maiesties person) there should be continuallie some men in readinesse about the court well horsed, to bring word in post into the countrie (by foure seuerall waies for feare of intercepting) when that designment was performed, to the end she might be taken awaie before hir kéeper could either conueie hir awaie or fortifie the place. She wished that some fire might be kindled in Ireland, to the end the councellors attention might be distracted from that part whense the stroke should come, which was from Flanders, Spaine, and the house of Guise. She aduised Babington to deale carefullie and vigilantlie, to prouide all things necessarie for effecting the enterprise, in such sort that it might take good effect by the grace of God (for so it pleaseth hir to vse the phrase.) Lastlie, after great promises of large requitall to all the conspirators, and manie other particular aduises tending wholie to the subuersion of this state, and deprivation of hir maiesties life, she groweth towards a conclusion, with praier for his good successe in the aforesaid conspiracie. It were needlesse to exprésse more particularlie the contents of his or hir letters, the originals themselues being extant and surprised.

Six gentlemen of resolution, &c.

To these letters Babington wrote for answer by the same messenger, that so sone as the resolution was fullie taken with Mendoza, he would informe hir more; and therevpon within three daies after addressed Ballard towards Mendoza with signification, that all things were here in a readinesse, and attended onelie the arriuall of their forces. But God, who hath alwaies protected hir maiestie in all mercie beyond the expectation of man, euen almost in the verie point of execution, discouered the conspiracie. And therevpon Ballard (being readie to imbarke himselfe) was taken, vpon whose apprehension Babington forced (as he said) with the extreme danger to be discouered, and the no hope of anie pardon for so hatefull an offense, entred a new resolution with Sauage aforenamed & Charnocke, to take hir maiesties life awaie presentlie, otherwise intended to haue béene respited vntill the inuasion, which (as Ballard from the mouth of Mendoza swore) must at the vttermost haue béene performed by September. But Babington, finding himselfe restreined before he wist, and thereby assuring himselfe that all was knowne, found the meanes to escape, in hope to haue recouered the sea, and so to haue saued himselfe and his confederats. Yet after ten daies search through all countries adioining to London, though disguised in clownes attire, and discoloured with walnut leaues, he was discouered, apprehended, and with some other of the conspirators brought vnto London, with greater manifestation of true loie in the people for their surprise, than tong can exprésse or pen maie write.

Ballard apprehended being readie to imbarked and transported ouerseas.

The conspirators disguised themselues, thinking by that meane to shift the matter.

The apprehension of Ballard and flight of Babington dismaied the rest, and dispersed the other conspirators; yet not so farre, but that iustice hath since laid hold vpon the most of them. And though in the beginning they seemed all resolued to stand vnto the denial of euerie part of this action; yet such is the force of truth, that without either hope of fauor or feare of torture, they haue all acknowledged the conspiracie, and confessed their seuerall offenses, agnising the Scotish quéene to be the principall comforter, directer, and imbracer of these treasons, and imputing this error to their deceiuable expectation of hir future greatnesse in this land, the hope whereof ioined with hir allurements, hath heretofore as the world can witnesse (though these could not beware thereby) bred diuerse rebellions within this kingdome, ouerturned manie happie estates, and defiled sundrie families of vnspotted fidelitie in former time.

Magna est veritas & prævalet.

All which notwithstanding our catholikes and others owe and attribute so great a priuilege to hir person onelie, that being past expectation (as they terme it) of anie good from the king hir sonne, and not regarding the interest of anie other to the succession of this state, if she by death or otherwise maie not be aduanced vnto this kingdome: they are then determined to set the crowne on the house of Spaine, either by pretense of some putatiue title, to which effect some pamphlets haue béene alreadie composed; or rather (to auoid all controuersies) by some grant and inuesture from the see apostolike: for the dispatch whereof (as the conspirators confesse) doctor Allen an English fugitiue, and some others attend in Rome to sollicit the pope. Which being once performed, some of the grauer and more reuerend sort (as they call them) of our fugitiue diuines, must secretlie make their repaire hither, and in auricular confession persuade the principall catholikes of this land, and such as are able to swaie the rest, to fauor, maintein and aduance that title of Spaine against all others, vnder paine of damnation. By meanes whereof it is intended that Spaine shall mount to so huge a greatnesse, as to be able of himselfe to giue lawes to all the states of christendome. ¶ With this note, being the verie flower and grace of all the former discourse, we will conclude, hauing now no more to saie touching the conspiracie, but these few verses, which we will vse in lieu of a conclusion, and so proceed vnto other matters of consequence, conuenient for the booke:

How the popish catholiks are affected to the Scotish quæne.

What the fugitiue diuines must doo for their parts.

Quid non papa ruens spondet, modo iussa capessat
En diadema tibi, sceptráque, pactus Hymen.
Dissimilem votis mercedem nacta, sed ausis
Et sceleri retulit turba nefanda parem.

In nefariam Babingtoni cæterorumque coniurationem, hexastichon.

Succesſere

Succesſere rogi regno, coniuge coronæ,
Pro sceptro laqueus, pro thalamo tumulus.]

Sir Philip Sidneie slaine at Zutphen in Gelderland: of whome see more pag. 1554.

In this meane time, to wit, on the 22 daie of September, sir Philip Sidneie knight, a most valiant & towardlie gentleman, sonne & heire to sir Henrie Sidneie late deceased (as is before shewed, in seruice of his prince, and defense of his countrie, in the warres of the Netherlands) was shot into his thigh with a musket at Zutphen in Gelderland, whereof he died on the 17 of October, whose bodie was conueied into England, to be honourablie buried. On the eight of October, John Low, John Adams, and Robert Dibdale, being before condemned for treason, in being made preests by authoritie of the bishop of Rome, since the feast of John Baptist in the first yeare of hir maiesties reigne, and remaining here after the terme of fourtie daies after session of the last parlement, were drawne to Tiborne, and there hanged, bowelled, and quartered.

Seminarie preests executed at Tiborn.

The note of R. S. esquire. A tempestuous wind in October terrible and hurtfull.

On the same daie at night being saturdaie, there arose the greatest storme that happened since the wind which some do call Doner wind; and some others, the wind that blew awaie Calis, which was in the time of the reigne of queene Marie. For besides great harmes, which happened that night vpon the seas, there were vpon the land in euerie quarter ouerthrowne thereby, houses, cottages, barnes, haiestacks, tiles, chimneies, pales, and gates innumerable, and manie trees both great and small were not onelie torne and rent asunder, but grubd vp by the roots: in so much as vpon the mondaie next in manie places men could not passe on horsebacke in the high waies, by reason of the trees that laie blowne and broken downe crosse ouerthwart the streets. And among other strange chances happening in that tempest, I thought good (for a taste) to recite three accidents which befell not farre asunder within the countie of Kent. The one was at Sittingborne, where a woman passing in the street by hir neighbors house, saw a great tree standing close by the same, to wauer and wag at the verie root, in such sort as she suspecting the ruine thereof, called vnto hir neighbors who were then in bed, and told them the danger thereof, who presentlie arising, descended from out of the loft where they lodged, and were no soner departed thense, but downe fell the tree and brake through the roofe of that house, and rested on the bed where they laie.

The accidents noteworthie by meanes of this blustering wind.

A strange accident of a walnut tree blowne downe with the wind, &c.

There was also blowne downe with the violence of the same wind not far off a great walnut tree, the armes and branches whereof bare and bent a couple of imps, in such sort as the owner in the morning to saue them, did cut off two branches from the walnut tree, and so departed to the church to heare morning praier: but before he was returned home to dinner, his walnut tree stood as vpright as euer it did, and so remaineth and groweth as before.

The third strange chance

The third strange chance happened that night at Dartford in the said shire, at the dwelling house of maister Bere esquire, where by the force of the said wind, all the coping of one side of a great gable hed of bricke (reaching from below the top or roofe of the same house almost to the eaues thereof) was blowne quite ouer the house vnder which it stood, and neuer touched anie part thereof at anie side. By these accidents happening within so small a circuit, it maie be conceiued what great harmes were done that night throughout the whole realme. For it was thought vniuersall, as was also that which raged in the end of September, wherewithall fell such sharpe shewers of raine, that the drops thereof beating against the faces of trauellers made them to smart, as with twigs of birch: and so vehement they were that they perced through their clothing to their skin: so that manie wringing wet and sore beaten with wind and weather, being verie ill apaid, were glad to shorten their purposed iournies, by taking the next towne for their present succour, where they might see the roofes and rafters of houses naked of tiles, and heare the donging of belles as they hong in the steeples, &c. At what time it was reported by people of great age, that they had béene in manie tempests they thanked God, but none comparable to this: which might well be so, if a man were disposed to set downe a register of the particular casualties, losses, damages, hurts, hinderances, &c: thereby occasioned. In the table if you loke for tempests and winds, you shall read strange matter and worthie obseruation, though some account this and manie more but ridiculus stuffe: which kind of people I doubt are not of the number that wonder at Gods works, but are to too much addicted to naturall philosophie.

Ludgate of London newlie builded.

One of the west gates of the citie of London, commonlie called Ludgate, being sore decaied, and in perill to haue fallen, was taken downe, the prisoners thereof in the meane time remaining vnder the charge of Thomas Lutwich custos or keper of Ludgate, in the southeast quadrant to the same gate adioining: which quadrant, for the ease of the prisoners freemen of that citie, was sometime builded by sir Steuen Foster fishmonger, lord maior of that citie, in Anno 1453. And this yeare, the said gate was againe not onelie newlie, but also stronglie and beautifullie builded, at the charges of the citizens of the same citie, the foundation whereof, in the name and presence of sir Wolstan Dixie maior, certeine of his brethren the aldermen, Anthonie Ratclife and Henrie Pranell shiriffes, was laid on the second daie of Maie, and so forthwith so diligentlie applied by William Kirwine free mason (and other workmen of diuerse crafts vnder his charge) who for a certeine sum had taken vpon him for all maner of stuffe & workemanship to the same belonging, that the same gate was fullie finished in the space of six moneths or lesse. So that on the 29 daie of October in the same yeare, the said gate was set open to sir William Cicill knight lord treasuror, who first entered the same on horsebacke, accompanied of diuerse other honorable persons, and noble men of hir maiesties priuie councell, who all rode to the Guildhall, where on the same daie kept his feast George Barnes lord maior of that citie, after he had taken his oth and charge in the exchecker at Westminster.

Parlement at Westminster.

On the 29 daie of October the archbishop of Canturburie, the lord treasuror, and the earle of Derbie, representing the queens maiesties person, began the high court of parlement by prore, which session of parlement was at this time assembled for triall of matters concerning Marie queene of Scots, as more plainlie shall appeare, by that which followeth the end of that session. In the moneth of Nouember about the 23 daie, the right honorable lord Robert earle of Leicester, lieutenant generall of all hir maiesties forces in the vnited prouinces of the low countries, returning from thense, arriued at London, and went late to the court, where as he was not so suddenlie come, as forwardlie welcome of the principall, and others, to the great reioising of all estates throughout the whole realme, as maie appeare by verses of gratulation, in part as followeth:

Anno Reg. 29. The earle of Leicester returned from the low countries, and arriued in England.

Solonem ingenio, magnum qui Nestora vincis
Consilio, pietate Numam, grauitate Catonem:
Gratus ades, ter gratus ades, Comes inclyte, ab oris
Teutonicis, falsi emensus vada cærula ponti:
Rauca fuit Wansteda diu, te absente, nec vllas

In reditum magnanimi herois, Roberti Comitis Leceſtrij, Ἐυδειξτικὸν gratulatorium. T. N.

Lætitiæ ediderat voces: Ilfordia eclypſin
Paſſa fuit, modulis fleuit Laitona canoris:
Hammáque mœſtificis vlulauit percita curis.
At veluti auricomus diſpellit nubila Titan,
Exhilarat tua ſic noſtros præſentia vultus
Magne Comes, terræ decus, immortale Britannæ,
Magnanimos inter meritò numerande dynaſtas.

The parlement prorogued.

On the ſecond date of December, the ſeſſion of parlement (begun the nine & twentith of October as is afore ſhewed) was diſſolued & broken vp, and was prorogued vntill the fiue & twentith of Februarie nert following. The ſubſtance and effect of matters handled in the ſame parlement, is ſet downe in a letter learnedlie penned, and directed to the right honorable the earle of Leiceſter, as followeth.

THE COPIE OF A LETTER TO the right honorable the earle of Leiceſter, lieutenant generall of all hir maieſties forces in the vnited prouinces of the low countries, written before, but deliuered at his returne from thenſe: with a report of certeine petitions and declarations made to the queenes maieſtie at two ſeuerall times, from all the lords and commons latelie aſſembled in parlement: and hir maieſties anſweres therevnto by hir ſelfe deliuered, though not expreſſed by the reporter with ſuch grace and life, as the ſame were vttered by hir maieſtie.

ted, reſolued, and digeſted, with great labor and premeditation of the greateſt, graueſt, wiſeſt, and moſt choiſe perſons of the whole realme, whereof although I haue but ſlenderlie portraied the lineaments, without expreſſing to life the externall ornaments of hir rotall ſpeach, accompanied with all princelie and gracefull accomplements: yet doubt I not but your lordſhip will eaſilie find hir inward vertues, whereof it is impoſſible for me to make the leaſt adumbration.

And becauſe in the dailie expectation of your lordſhips returne, I reſted vncerteine how theſe might come ſafelie to your lordſhips hands: I did therefore aduiſe to haue this my letter with the included copies to be readie to attend your firſt arriuall, in gratulation of the ſafetie thereof, which hath bæne long deſired. Wherein, as I ſtriue to performe a particular dutie to your lordſhip, ſo truſt I you will haue that honorable conſideration, that in the communication thereof with others, there grow not anie prejudice to me for my preſumption, in aduenturing to be a reporter of that, which in the deliuerie wrought ſo great aſtoniſhment to all the hearers, as it exceeded the fulneſſe of euerie mans expectation: and therefore, without ſome fauorable conſtruction of mine attempt, I might incurre great blame by my ſlender maner of report, ſo to haue blemiſhed the excellencie of hir maieſties ſpæches, whereof I humblie beſeech your lordſhip to haue fauorable regard. Thus referring them to your lordſhips diſpoſition, and my ſelfe to your fauorable protection, I humblie take my leaue. 25. Nouember. 1586.

Your lordſhips moſt humblie in all dutie to command, R. C.

To the right honorable the earle of Leiceſter, &c.

ALbeit with earneſt deſire of my heart (right honorable my verie good lord) I haue alwaies indeuored to do your lordſhip ſome acceptable ſeruice, for the honour you firſt vouchſafed me from beyond my cradle, and after confirmed with the fauorable opinion therewith you haue alwaies countenanced me euer ſince, euen thus far onward on my daies, which alſo together with my yeares hath increaſed faſter than mine abilitie to performe, being croſſed in nothing more dæpelie, than when I was letted by the ouermuch tendering of me by my parents, to attend your lordſhip in your late voiage and honorable expedition into the low countries: yet haue I bæne euer ſince moſt ſtudious to obſerue and apprehend ſome good occaſion, or fit opportunitie, to teſtifie the dutifull reuerence I beare to your lordſhip: wherein if hitherto I haue bæne ſlacke in performance during your abſence, it hath proceeded of the care I had, not to interteine your lordſhip with matter either friuolous or vulgar: though things of that nature might beſt become my condition, and well agrée with my vnderſtanding.

In which cogitation it came to my mind, that the report of the ſpæches deliuered by the queens moſt excellent maieſtie in a late and weightie cauſe dealt in this parlement, in anſwer to the petitions preſented to hir maieſtie the twelfe and foure and twentith date of Nouember at Richmond by the lord chancellor and ſpeaker, reſpectiuelie, in the name and behalfe of both eſtates, accompanied with diuerſe of either ſort, would doubtleſſe be a thing to your lordſhip moſt gratefull, as one euer pleaſed iuſtlie to admire the rare perfections of hir mind, and approued iudgement, wherewith according to your eſtate and place, deſeruedlie, your lordſhip hath bæne vſuallie acquainted: as alſo worthie of eternall monument and euerlaſting memorie, for as much as on the ſudden they were deliuered by hir ſelfe, for anſwer of a matter propounded, debated, reſolued, and digeſted, with great labor and premeditation of the greateſt, graueſt, wiſeſt, and moſt choiſe perſons of the whole realme, whereof although I haue but ſlenderlie portraied the lineaments, without expreſſing to life the externall ornaments of hir rotall ſpeach, accompanied with all princelie and gracefull accomplements: yet doubt I not but your lordſhip will eaſilie find hir inward vertues, whereof it is impoſſible for me to make the leaſt adumbration.

And becauſe in the dailie expectation of your lordſhips returne, I reſted vncerteine how theſe might come ſafelie to your lordſhips hands: I did therefore aduiſe to haue this my letter with the included copies to be readie to attend your firſt arriuall, in gratulation of the ſafetie thereof, which hath bæne long deſired. Wherein, as I ſtriue to performe a particular dutie to your lordſhip, ſo truſt I you will haue that honorable conſideration, that in the communication thereof with others, there grow not anie prejudice to me for my preſumption, in aduenturing to be a reporter of that, which in the deliuerie wrought ſo great aſtoniſhment to all the hearers, as it exceeded the fulneſſe of euerie mans expectation: and therefore, without ſome fauorable conſtruction of mine attempt, I might incurre great blame by my ſlender maner of report, ſo to haue blemiſhed the excellencie of hir maieſties ſpæches, whereof I humblie beſeech your lordſhip to haue fauorable regard. Thus referring them to your lordſhips diſpoſition, and my ſelfe to your fauorable protection, I humblie take my leaue. 25. Nouember. 1586.

Your lordſhips moſt humblie in all dutie to command, R. C.

The briefe of the lord chancellors firſt ſpeach, at the time when he deliuered hir moſt excellent maieſtie a petition in writing, for and in the name of the lords and commons: which ſpeaches were of more length than here are by me collected: but ſure I am, the ſubſtance thereof is here trulie expreſſed.

THat the lords and commons, hauing of long time to their intolerable greefe, found, by how manie practiſes the Scotiſh quéne had compaſſed the deſtruction of hir highneſſe moſt rotall perſon (in whoſe ſafetie nert vnder God they acknowledged their chiefe felicitie to conſiſt) thereby not onelie to bereaue them of the ſincere and true religion in this realme profeſſed and eſtabliſhed, but to bring backe againe this noble realme into the thraldome of Romiſh tyrannie, and to ouerthrow the happie eſtate thereof: wherein, although hir highneſſe of hir abundant, gratious, naturall clemencie, and princelie magnanimitie, hath either lightlie paſſed them ouer, or with no ſmall indulgence tolerated, notwithſtanding the often and earneſt inſtances of hir nobilitie and commons in ſundrie parlements heretofore: and further hath protected hir from the violent purſute of hir owne people: ſhe yet, as a perſon obdurat in malice (as it appeareth) continued hir former practiſes, as had bæne latelie manifeſted by certeine wicked conſpiracies plotted by one Anthonie Babington, and diuerſe deſperat perſons, that had combined and confederated themſelues by vow and oth in a moſt horrible enterpriſe, by murther to take awaie the life of hir maieſtie: wherein the Scotiſh quéne did not onelie aduiſe them, but alſo direct, comfort, and abbet them, with perſuaſion, counſell, promiſe of reward, and earneſt obteſtation.

Whereupon

Whereupon hir maiestie at the earnest request of such as tendered the safetie of hir roiall person, and the quiet of the realme, did direct commission vnder the great seale to sundrie lords and others of hir maiesties priuie councell, & a great number of lords of parlement, of the greatest and most ancient degree, assisted with some of the principall iudges of the realme, to heare, examine, and determine the same, according to a statute in that behalfe, made in the seuen and twentith yeare of hir reigne. Who to the number of thirtie and six, hauing attended the execution of the said commission, and diuerse dates and times heard the allegations against the said Scotish queene in hir owne presence and hearing (she being permitted to saie what she would in hir owne excuse) did with one assent, find hir culpable both in priuitie & consent to the said crimes obiected, and also in compassing the queens maiesties death.

Which sentence, by hir owne directions, vpon the hearing of the prowes and processe in parlement, was iudged to haue béene most honorable and iust. And thereupon they all beséech hir maiestie, that forasmuch as the said queene of Scots, was the verie ground and onelie subiect, whereupon such dangerous practises and complots had béene founded, against hir maiesties most roiall person, and the estate of this realme for these manie yeares, to the ouerthrow of sundrie of the nobilitie of the land, and danger of christian religion, and that they could sée no hope of hir desisting, and hir adherents; but that still hir maiesties safetie must be hazarded, and stand to the euent of the like miraculous discoueries.

Therefore, as most humble and instant suppliants, they did vpon their knées at hir most gratious fét, beséech and request in most earnest maner, that aswell for the continuance of Gods religion, the quiet of this kingdome, preseruation of hir person, and defense of them and their posterities, it would please hir highnesse to take order, that the said sentence might be published, and such further direction giuen, as was requisit in this so weightie a cause, according to the purport and intent of the said statute. Wherein, if hir maiestie (pursuing hir wonted clemencie) should now be remisse, besides the imminent danger to hir person, she might by the state thereof, procure the heauie displeasure of almightie God, as by sundrie seuere examples of his iustice in the sacred scriptures doth appeare. And so he deliuered to hir maiesties owne hands the petition in writing, which he said had béene with great deliberation assented vnto by all the whole parlement.

not spare anie meanes whatsoeuer, that maie bereaue vs of your maiestie, the onelie impediment that she inioieth not hir desire.

2 She is obdurat in malice against your roiall person, notwithstanding you haue shewed hir all fauour and mercie, as well in preseruing hir kingdome, as sauing hir life, and saluing hir honor. And therefore there is no place for mercie, since there is no hope that she will desist from most wicked attempts: the rather, for that hir malice appeareth such, that she maketh (as it were) hir testament of the same, to be executed after hir death, and appointeth hir executors to performe it.

3 She boldlie and openlie professed it lawfull for hir to moue inuasion vpon you. And therefore, as of inuasion victorie maie insue, and of victorie, the death of the vanquished: so did she thereby not obscurelie bewraie, that she thought it lawfull for hir to destroie your sacred person.

4 She thinketh it not onelie lawfull, but honorable also and meritorious to take your life from you, as being alreadie depriued of your crowne by the excommunication of the holie father. And therefore it is like she will (as hitherto she hath done) continuallie séeke it by whatsoeuer meanes.

5 That she is grédie of your maiesties death, and preferreth it before hir owne life and safetie: for in hir direction to one of hir late complices, she aduised (vnder couert termes) that whatsoeuer should become of hir, that tragicall execution should be performed vpon you.

1 IT is most perillous to spare hir, that continuallie hath sought the ouerthrow and suppression of true religion, infected with poperie from hir tender youth, and being after that a confederat in that holie league when she came to age, and euer since a professed enimie against the truth. The danger of the ouerthrow of the true religion.

2 She resteth wholie vpon popish hopes to deliuer and aduance hir, and is thereby so deuoted to that profession, that aswell for satisfaction of others, as for feeding of hir owne humor, she will supplant the gospell, where and when so euer she maie: which euill is so much the greater, and the more to be auoided, as that it slaieth the verie soule, and will spread it selfe not onelie ouer England and Scotland, but also into those parts beyond the seas, where the gospell of God is mainteined, the which cannot but be exceedinglie weakened, by the defection of this noble Iland.

1 As the Lydians said, Vnum regem agnoscunt Lydi, duos autem tolerare non possunt: So we saie, Vnicam reginam Elizabetham agnoscunt Angli, duas autem tolerare non possunt. The perill of the state of the realme.

2 As she hath alredie by hir allurements brought to destruction more noble men and their houses, together with a greater multitude of the commons of this realme, during hir being here, than she should haue bæne able to do, if she had béene in possession of hir owne crowne, and armed in the field against vs: so will she still be continuall cause of the like spoile, to the greater losse and perill of this estate: and therefore this realme neither can, nor maie indure hir.

3 Againe, she is the onelie hope of all discontented subiects, she is the foundation whereon all the euill disposed do build, she is the rot from whense all rebellions and trecheries do spring: and therefore whilest this hope lasteth, this foundation standeth, and this rot liueth, they will reteine heart, and set on foot whatsoeuer their deuises against the realme, which otherwise will fall awaie, die, and come to nothing.

4 Percie

A SHORT EXTRACT OF SVCH reasons, as were deliuered in speach by maister sargent Puckering, speaker of the lower house, before the queens most excellent maiestie in hir presence chamber at Richmond, the twelfe of Nouember 1586, in the eight and twentith yere of hir reigne, conteining diuerse apparant and imminent dangers, that maie grow to hir maiesties most roiall person, and to hir realme from the Scotish queene and hir adherents, if remedie be not prouided.

First touching the danger of hir maiesties person.

1 BOth this Scotish queene and hir fauorers, do thinke hir to haue right, not to succeed but to inioie your crowne in possession: and therefore as she is a most impatient competitor, so will she

4 Mercie now in this case towards hir would in the end proue crueltie against vs all. Nameſt quædam crudelis miſericordia, and therefore to ſpare hir, is to ſpill vs.

5 Beſides this, it will exceedinglie greeue and in a maner deadlie wound the hearts of all the good ſubiects of your land, if they ſhall ſee a conſpiracie ſo horrible not condignlie puniſhed.

6 Thouſands of your maieſties moſt liege and louing ſubiects, of all ſorts and degrees, that in a tender zeale of your maieſties ſafetie, haue moſt willinglie both by open ſubſcription and ſolemne vow, entered into a firme and totall aſſociation, and haue thereby proteſted to purſue vnto the death, by all forcible and poſſible meanes, ſuch as ſhe is by iuſt ſentence now found to be: can neither diſcharge their loue, nor well ſaue their oths, if your maieſtie ſhall keepe hir aliue: of which burthen your maieſties ſubiects are moſt deſirous to be releeued, as the ſame maie be, if iuſtice be done.

7 Laſtlie, your maieſties moſt louing and dutifull commons doubt not, but that as your maieſtie is dulie exerciſed in reading the booke of God: ſo it will pleaſe you to call to your princelie remembrance, how fearefull the examples of Gods vengeance be, that are there to be found againſt king Saule for ſparing king Agag, & againſt king Achab for ſauing the life of Benadad; both which were by the iuſt iudgement of God depriued of their kingdoms, for ſparing thoſe wicked princes, whome God had deliuered into their hands, of purpoſe to be ſlaine by them, as by the miniſters of his eternall and diuine iuſtice. Wherein full wiſelie Salomon proceeded to puniſhment, when he tooke the life of his owne naturall and elder brother Adonias, for the onelie intention of a marriage, that gaue ſuſpicion of treaſon againſt him. Herein we your maieſties moſt louing and obedient ſubiects earneſtlie depend vpon your princelie reſolution, which we aſſure our ſelues ſhall be to God moſt acceptable, and to vs no other than the ſtate of your regall authoritie maie afford vs, and the approued arguments of your tender care for our ſafetie vnder your charge doth promiſe to our expectation.

A REPORT OF HIR MAIESTIES

moſt gratious anſwer, deliuered by hir ſelfe verballie, to the firſt petitions of the lords and commons, being the eſtates of parlement, in hir chamber of preſence at Richmond, the twelfe daie of Nouember 1586, at the full almoſt of eight and twentie yeares of hir reigne. Whereof the reporter requireth of all that were hearers, a fauorable interpretation of his intent, becauſe he findeth that he can not expreſſe the ſame anſwerable to the originall, which the learned call Prototypon.

THe bottomleſſe graces and immeaſurable benefits beſtowed vpon me by the almightie, are, and haue beene ſuch, as I muſt not onelie acknowledge them, but admire them, accounting them as well miracles as benefits; not ſo much in reſpect of his diuine maieſtie, with whome nothing is more common than to do things rare and ſingular: as in regard of our weakeneſſe, who can not ſufficientlie ſet forth his wonderfull works and graces, which to me haue beene ſo manie, ſo diuerſelie folded and imbroidered one vpon another, as in no ſort I am able to expreſſe them. And although there liueth not anie, that maie more iuſtlie acknowledge themſelues infinitelie bound vnto God than I, whoſe life he hath miraculouſlie preſerued at ſundrie times (beyond my merit) from a multitude of perils & dangers: yet is not that the cauſe, for which I count my ſelfe the deepeſt bound to giue him my humbleſt thanks, or to yeeld him greateſt recognition; but this which I ſhall tell you hereafter, which will deſerue the name of wonder, if rare things and ſeldome ſeene be worthie of account. Euen this it is, that as I came to the crowne with the willing hearts of my ſubiects, ſo do I now after eight and twentie yeares reigne, perceiue in you no diminution of good wils, which if happilie I ſhould want, well might I breath, but neuer thinke I liued.

And now, albeit I find my life hath beene full dangerouſlie ſought, and death contriued by ſuch as no deſert procured: yet am I therein ſo cleare from malice (which hath the propertie to make men glad at the fals and faults of their foes, and make them ſeeme to do for other cauſes, when rancor is the ground) as I proteſt it is and hath beene my greeuous thought, that one, not different in ſer, of like eſtate, and my neere kin, ſhould fall into ſo great a crime: yea I had ſo little purpoſe to purſue hir with anie colour of malice, that as it is not vnknowen to ſome of my lords here (for now I will plaie the blab) I ſecretlie wrote hir a letter vpon the diſcouerie of ſundrie treaſons, that if ſhe would confeſſe them, and priuatlie acknowledge them by hir letters to my ſelfe, ſhe neuer ſhould need be called for them into ſo publike queſtion. Neither did I it of mind to circumuent hir: for then I knew as much as ſhe could confeſſe, and ſo did I write. And if euen yet, now that the matter is made but too apparant, I thought ſhe truelie would repent (as perhaps ſhe would eaſilie appeare in outward ſhew to do) and that for hir, none other would take the matter vpon them; or that we were but as two milke maids with pailes vpon our armes, or that there were no more dependencie vpon vs but mine owne life were onelie in danger, and not the whole eſtate of your religion and well doings, I proteſt (wherein you maie beleeue me, for though I maie haue manie vices, I hope I haue not accuſtomed my tong to be an inſtrument of vntruth) I would moſt willinglie pardon and remit this offenſe.

Or if by my death other nations and kingdoms might truelie ſaie, that this realme had attained an euer proſperous and flouriſhing eſtate: I would (I aſſure you) not deſire to liue; but gladlie giue my life, to the end my death might procure you a better prince. And for your ſakes it is, that I deſire to liue, to keepe you from a worſe. For as for me, I aſſure you, I find no great cauſe I ſhould be fond to liue: I take no ſuch pleaſure in it, that I ſhould much wiſh it; nor conceiue ſuch terror in death, that I ſhould greatlie feare it: and yet I ſaie not, but if the ſtroke were comming, perchance fleſh and bloud would be moued with it, and ſeeke to ſhun it. I haue had good experience and triall of this world: I know what it is to be a ſubiect; what to be a ſouereigne; what to haue good neighbors, and ſometime meet euill willers. I haue found treaſon in truſt, ſeene great benefits little regarded, and in ſtead of gratefulneſſe, courſes of purpoſe to croſſe.

Theſe former remembrances, preſent feeling, and future expectation of euils (I ſaie) haue made me thinke, An euill is much the better, the leſſe while it indureth: & ſo, them happieſt, that are ſoneſt henſe: and taught me to beare with a better mind theſe treaſons, than is common to my ſex: yea, with a better heart perhaps, than is in ſome men. Which I hope you will not meerelie impute to my ſimplicitie or want of vnderſtanding, but rather, that I thus conceiued, that had their purpoſes taken effect, I should not haue found the blow, before I had felt it: and though my perill should haue béene great, my paine should haue béene but small and short: wherein, as I would be loth to die so bloudie a death, so doubt I not, but God would haue giuen me grace to be prepared for such an euent, chance when it shall, which I refer vnto his good pleasure. And now, as touching their treasons and conspiracies, togither with the contriuer of them, I will not so preiudicat my selfe and this my realme, as to sate or thinke, that I might not, without the last statute, by the ancient lawes of this land, haue proceeded against hir, which was not made particularlie to preiudice hir; though perhaps it might then be suspected, in respect of the disposition of such as depend that waie. It was so far from being intended to intrap hir, that it was rather an admonition to warne the danger thereof: but sith it is made, and in the force of a law, I thought good, in that which might concerne hir, to proceed according thereunto, rather than by course of common law: wherein, if you the iudges haue not deceiued me, or that the books you brought me were not false (which God forbid) I might as iustlie haue tried hir by the ancient lawes of the land.

ſhould

But you lawiers are so nice in sifting, and scanning euerie word and letter, that manie times you stand more vpon forme than matter, vpon syllables than sense of the law. For in the strictnesse & exact following of common forme, she must haue béene indicted in Staffordshire, haue holden vp hir hand at the barre, and béene tried by a iurie: a proper course forsooth, to deale in that maner with one of hir estate. I thought it better therefore, for auoiding of these and more absurdities, to commit the cause to the inquisition of a good number of the greatest and most noble personages of this realme, of the iudges and others of good account, whose sentence I must approue: and all little enough. For we princes, I tell you, are set on stages, in the sight and view of all the world duelie obserued; the eies of manie behold our actions; a spot is soone spied in our garments; a blemish quicklie noted in our doings. It behoueth vs therefore to be carefull that our procéedings be iust and honorable.

But I must tell you one thing more, that in this last act of parlement you haue brought me vnto a narrow streict, that I must giue direction for hir death, which cannot bée to mée but a most grieuous and irksome burthen. And least you might mistake mine absence from this parlement (which I had almost forgotten) although there bée no cause whie I should willinglie come amongst multitudes, for that amongst manie some maie bee euill: yet hath it not béene the doubt of anie such danger or occasion that kept me from thense; but onlie the great grieefe to heare this cause spoken of; especiallie, that such a one of state and kin should néed so open a declaration, and that this nation should be so spotted with blots of disloialtie. Wherein the lesse is my griefe, for that I hope the better part is mine, and those of the worse not so much to be accounted of, for that in séeking my destruction, they might haue spoiled their owne soules. And euen now could I tell you, that which would make you sorie. It is a secret, and yet I will tell it you; although it is knowne I haue the propertie to keepe counsell, but too well oftentimes to mine owne perill. It is not long since mine eies did sée it written, that an oth was taken within few daies, either to kill me, or to be hanged themselues: and that to be performed per one moneth were ended. Hereby I sée your danger in me, and neither can nor will be so vnthankefull or carelesse of your consciences, as not prouide for your safetie.

I am not vnmindfull of your oth made in the association, manifesting your great good wils and affections, taken and entered into, vpon good conscience, and true knowledge of the guilt, for safetie of my person, and conseruation of my life: done (I protest to God) before I heard it, or euer thought of such a matter, vntill a great number of hands with manie obligations were shewed me, at Hampton court, signed and subscribed with the names and seales of the greatest of this land. Which as I doo acknowledge as a perfect argument of your true hearts, and great zeale to my safetie: so shall my bond be stronger tied to greater care for all your good. But for as much as this matter is rare, weightie, and of great consequence, I thinke you do not looke for anie present resolution: the rather, for that, as it is not my maner, in matters of far lesse moment, to giue spéedie answer without due consideration; so in this of such importance, I thinke it verie requisit with earnest prater to beséech his diuine maiestie, so to illuminat my vnderstanding, and inspire me with his grace, as I maie doo and determine that, which shall serue to the establishment of his church, preseruation of your estates, and prosperitie of this common wealth vnder my charge. Wherein (for that I know delaie is dangerous) you shall haue with all conueniencie our resolution deliuered by our message. And what euer anie prince maie merit of their subiects, for their approued testimonie of their vnfained sinceritie, either by gouerning iustlie, void of all partialitie, or sufferance of anie iniuries done (euen to the worst) that doo I assuredlie promise inuiolablie to performe, for requitall of your so manie deserts.

¶ The occasions of the second accesse.

This answer thus made by hir maiestie, the lords and commons were dismissed. And then hir highnesse some few daies after, vpon deliberation had of this petition, being (as it appeared) of hir mercifull disposition of nature, and hir princelie magnanimitie, in some conflict with hir selfe what to doo in a cause so weightie and important to hir and the realme, sent by the lord chancellor (as I heard) and by the mouth of an honorable person, and a right worthie member of the lower house, this message to both houses: moouing and earnestlie charging them, to enter into a further consideration, whether there might not be some other waie of remedie, than that they had alreadie required, so far disagreeing from hir owne naturall inclination. Whereupon, the lords and commons in either houses assembled, had sundrie consultations, both in their seuerall houses generallie, and by priuat committees deputed specially. And after conference had betwixt the said committées, it was resolued with vnanimitie of consent amongst them in the lower house, and by vniuersall concord in the vpper house (the question there propounded to euerie one of the lords) that there could be found no other sound and assured meane, in the depth of their vnderstanding, for the continuance of the christian religion, quiet of the realme, and safetie of hir maiesties most royall person, than that which was conteined in their former petition. The reasons whereof were summarilie these that follow, which are more shortlie reported than they were vttered.

A briefe report of the second accesse the foure and twentith of Nouember 1586: and of the answer made in the name of the lords of the parlement, to a message sent from hir maiestie by the lord chancellor after hir first answer.

THe lord chancellor, accompanied with aboue fiue or six and twentie lords of parlement, came before hir highnesse in hir chamber of presence, to deliuer the resolution of all the lords of parlement, concerning a message which he had not long before deliuered from hir maiestie, for further consultation, whether anie other meanes could be thought of, or found out by anie of them, how the Scotish quéens life might be spared, and yet hir maiesties person saued out of perill, and the state of the realme preserued in quiet; declared, that according to that he had receiued in commandement from hir maiestie, he had imparted the same vnto the lords assembled in the vpper house, whom he found by their generall silence much amazed at the propounding thereof, considering the same had béene before in deliberation amongest them, and resolued vpon, and as appeared by their former petition exhibited to hir highnesse, wherein they had expressed the same resolution.

Notwithstanding, for hir maiesties further satisfaction, they had entred into a new consultation, & for that purpose selected a great number of the choisest persons of the higher house of parlement to confer thereof, either priuatlie or togither with the lower house: which also was done accordinglie at seuerall times. At all which conferences it was concluded by them all, & so afterwards by the whole assemblie of both houses, that there could be no other assured meanes for the preseruation of hir maiesties life, and continuance of Gods religion & quiet of this state, than by the full execution of the sentence according to their former petition, instantlie pressing hir maiestie with manie arguments and reasons tending thereto. All which, though by distance from his lordship I could not well conceiue, yet this I did remember precíselie and especiallie was one: that as it were iniustice to denie execution of law at the suite of anie one particular, and the meanest of hir people: so much more not to yeld to the earnest instance and humble praiers of all hir faithfull and louing subiects. And so concluded, with earnest petition for hir maiesties resolute determination and answer, for a present and spéedie direction by proclamation, and otherwise also, according vnto the forme of the statute.

A summarie report of the second speach, vttered by the speaker of the lower house, by direction of all the commons.

THat if hir maiestie should be safe without taking awaie the life of the Scotish quéene, the same were most likelie and probablie to grow, by one of these meanes following.

1 First, that happilie she might be reclamed and become a repentant conuert, agnising hir maiesties great mercie and fauors in remitting hir heinous offense, and by hir loialtie hereafter performe the fruits of such conuersion.

2 Or else by a more streict gard be so kept, as there should be no feare of the like attempts hereafter.

3 Or that good assurance might be giuen by oth, bonds or hostages, as cautions for hir good and loiall demeanor from henceforth.

4 Or lastlie by banishment, the realme might be voided of hir person, and thereby the perils further remoued that grow to hir maiestie by hir presence. The moments whereof being dulie pondered, did yet appeare so light in all their iudgements, that they durst not aduise anie securitie to rest in anie, no not in all of them. For touching hir conuersion, it was considered, that if pietie or dutie could haue restreined hir from such heinous attempts, there was cause abundantlie ministred vnto hir on hir maiesties behalfe, when she not onelie protected hir against the violence of hir owne subiects, who pursued hir to death by iustice, but couered hir honor when the same by publike fame was touched, and by verie heinous and capitall crimes (obiected and proued against hir before certeine commissarie delegats assigned to examine the same) more than blemished; and spared hir life, when for hir former conspiracies and confederacies with the Northerne rebels, hir highnesse was with great instance pressed by both the houses in the fourteenth yeare of hir maiesties reigne, to do like iustice vpon hir, as now is desired, and as hir treasonable practises then had most iustlie deserued.

And where the penaltie of this act sufficientlie notified vnto hir, should haue terrified hir from so wicked attempts; she hath neuertheless insisted in hir former practises, as a person obdurat in malice against hir maiestie, and irrecouerable; so as there was no probable hope of anie conuersion, but rather great doubt and feare of relapse and recidiuation, forasmuch as she stood obstinatlie in the denial of matter most euidentlie proued, and now most iustlie sentenced against hir, and was not entred into the first part of repentance, the recognition of hir offense, and so much the further off from the true fruits that should accompanie the same.

As for a surer gard & more streict imprisonment, it was resolued that there was no securitie therein, nor yet in the other two meanes propounded of bonds and hostages: forasmuch as the same meanes that should be practised to take hir maiesties life awaie, (which God forbid) would aptlie serue for the deliuerie of hir person, and release of the bonds & hostages that should be giuen for cautions in that behalfe: which being vnhappilie atchiued, and to our irreparable losse, who should sue the bonds, or detaine the hostages? Or being detained, what proportion was there in bonds or hostages whatsoeuer, to counteruaile the value of so pretious & inestimable a iewell, as hir maiestie is to this realme, & to vs all? But she will solemnlie vow & take an oth, that she will not attempt anie thing to the hurt of hir maiesties person. She hath alreadie sundrie times falsified hir word, hir writing, and hir oth; and holdeth it for an article of religion, that faith is not to be holden with heretiks, of which sort she accounteth your maiestie and all the professors of the gospell to be: and therfore haue we little reason to trust hir in that, whereof she maketh so small a conscience.

As for banishment, that were a step A malo in peius, to set hir at libertie, a thing so greatlie desired and thirsted for by hir adherents, and by some princes hir alies, who sought hir inlargement chéeflie to make hir a head to be set vp against hir maiestie, in time of inuasion. To the which were added some few reasons collected out of hir owne letters and the confession of Babington, hir instrument and conspirator: by which appeared how hir owne conscience bewraied what might iustlie fall vpon hir, in case anie of hir intended designements came to light, that she might haplie be shut vp in some more close end strict prison, as the Tower of London, if there befell him no worse thing. And in that she directed Babington, in case he failed in the action of his deliuerie, that he should neuertheless proceed in the residue; which was the death of his maiestie: who also confessed, that vpon assurance of his maiesties death, or the arriuall of strangers, he intended to proclame the quéne of Scots, and made no doubt of the desired successe: and therefore his maiesties death being so earnestlie sought, for aduancement of this competitor, his highnesse could not remaine in quietnesse or securitie, if the Scotish quéne should longer continue his life.

and

THE SECOND ANSWER

made by the queens maiestie, deliuered by hir owne mouth, to the second speach, vttered in the names of the lords and commons of the parlement.

All grieuous is the waie, whose going on, and end, breed cumber for the hire of a laborious tourneie. I haue striued more this daie than euer in my life, whether I should speake, or vse silence. If I speake and not complaine, I shall dissemble; if I hold my peace, your labour taken were full vaine. For me to make my mone, were strange and rare: for I suppose you shall find few, that for their owne particular, will cumber you with such a care. Yet such I protest hath bene my grédie desire and hungrie will, that of your consultation might haue fallen out some other meanes to worke my safetie ioined with your assurance (than that for which you are become such earnest sutors) as I protest, I must néeds vse complaint, though not of you, but vnto you, and of the cause; for that I do perceiue by your aduises, praiers, and desires, there falleth out this accident, that onelie my iniurers bane must be my lifes suertie.

But if anie there liue so wicked of nature, to suppose, that I prolonged this time onelie, Pro forma, to the intent to make a shew of clemencie, thereby to set my praises to the wierdrawers to lengthen them the more: they do me so great a wrong, as they can hardlie recompense. Or if anie person there be, that thinke or imagine, that the least vaineglorious thought hath drawne me further herein, they do me as open iniurie as euer was done to anie liuing creature, as he that is the maker of all thoughts knoweth best to be true. Or if there be anie, that thinke, that the lords appointed in commission durst do no other, as fearing thereby to displease, or else to be suspected to be of a contrarie opinion to my safetie, they do but heape vpon me iniurious conceipts. For either those put in trust by me to supplie my place, haue not performed their duties towards me; or else they haue signified vnto you all, that my desire was, that euerie one should do according to his conscience, and in the course of his procédings should inioie both frédome of voice and libertie of opinion; and what they would not openlie declare, they might priuatlie to my selfe haue reuealed. It was of a willing mind and great desire I had, that some other meanes might be found out, wherein I should haue taken more comfort, than in anie other thing vnder the sun.

And sith now it is resolued, that my suretie can not be established without a princelie end, I haue iust cause to complaine; that I, who haue in my time pardoned so manie rebels, winked at so manie treasons, and either not produced them, or altogither slipt them ouer with silence, should now be forced to this procéding, against such a person. I haue besides, during my reigne, séene and heard manie opprobrious bokes and pamphlets against me, my realme and state, accusing me to be a tyrant; I thanke them for their almes: I beléeue, therein their meaning was to tell me news, and news it is to me in déed; I would it were as strange to heare of their impietie! What will they not now saie, when it shall be spread, that for the safetie of hir life, a maiden quæne could be content to spill the bloud, euen of hir owne kinswoman? I maie therefore full well complaine, that anie man should thinke me giuen to crueltie, whereof I am so giltlesse and innocent, as I should slander God, if I should saie he gaue me so vile a mind: yea, I protest, I am so far from it, that for mine owne life I would not touch hir: neither hath my care bene so much bent how to prolong mine, as how to preserue both: which I am right sorie is made so hard, yea so impossible.

I am not so void of iudgement, as not to sée mine owne perill; nor yet so ignorant, as not to know it were in nature a foolish course, to cherish a sword to cut mine owne throte; nor so careless, as not to weigh that my life dailie is in hazard: but this I do consider, that manie a man would put his life in danger for the safegard of a king, I do not saie that so will I: but I praie you thinke, that I haue thought vpon it. But sith so manie haue both written & spoken against me, I praie you giue me leaue to saie somewhat for my selfe, & before you returne to your countries, let you know, for what a one you haue passed so carefull thoughts. Wherein, as I thinke my selfe infinitlie beholding vnto you all, that séeke to preserue my life by all the meanes you maie: so I protest vnto you, that there liueth no prince, that euer shall be more mindfull to requite so good deserts. And as I perceiue you haue kept your old wonts, in a generall séeking of the lengthning of my daies: so am I sure that I shall neuer requite it, vnlesse I had as manie liues as you all: but for euer I will acknowledge it, while there is anie breath left me. Although I maie not iustifie, but maie iustlie condemne my sundrie faults and sinnes to God: yet for my care in this gouernment, let me acquaint you with my intents.

When first I toke the scepter, my title made me not forget the giuer: and therefore began, as it became me, with such religion, as both I was borne in, bred in, and I trust shall die in. Although I was not so simple, as not to know what danger and perill so great an alteration might procure me: how manie great princes of the contrarie opinion would attempt all they might against me: and generallie, what enimitie I should breed vnto my selfe: which all I regarded not, knowing that he, for whose sake I did it, might, and would defend me. For which it is, that euer since I haue bene so dangerouslie prosecuted, as I rather maruell that I am, than muse that I should not be: if it were not Gods holie hand that continueth me, beyond all other expectation. Then entered I further into the schole of experience, bethinking what it fitted a king to do: and there I saw, he scant was well furnished, if either he lacked iustice, temperance, magnanimitie, or iudgement. As for the two latter, I will not boast, my sex doth not permit it: but for the two first, this dare I saie; amongst my subiects I neuer knew a difference of person, where right was one: nor neuer to my knowledge preferred for fauour, whome I thought not fit for worth: nor bent my eares to credit a tale that first was told me: nor was so rash, to corrupt my iudgement with my censure, before I heard the cause. I will not saie, but manie reports might fortune be brought me by such as might heare the case, whose partialitie might mar sometime the matter: for we princes maie not heare all our selues. But this dare I boldlie affirme, my verdict went euer with the truth of my knowledge. As full well wished Alcibiades his frend, that he should not giue anie answer, till he had recited the letters of the alphabet: so haue I not vsed ouer sudden resolutions, in matters that haue touched me full neere: you will saie that with me, I thinke.

we

And therefore, as touching your counsels and consultations, I conceiue them to be wise, honest, and conscionable: so prouident and carefull for the safetie of my life (which I wish no longer than maie be for your good) that though I neuer can yeeld you of recompense your due: yet shall I indeuour my selfe to giue you cause, to thinke your good will not ill bestowed, and striue to make my selfe worthie for such subiects. And now for your petition, I shall praie you for this present, to content your selues with an answer without answer. Your iudgement I condemne not, neither do I mistake your reasons, but praie you to accept my thankefulnesse, excuse my doubtfulnesse, and take in good part my answer answerlesse: wherein I attribute not so much to mine owne iudgement, but that I thinke manie particular persons maie go before me, though by my degree I go before them. Therefore if I should saie, I would not do what you request, it might peraduenture be more than I thought: and to saie I would do it, might perhaps breed perill of that you labour to preserue, being more than in your owne wisedoms and discretions would seeme conuenient, circumstances of place and time being dulie considered.

Thus far the proceeding against the Scotish queene, as the same is reported by R. C. Now followeth the publication of the same, which was done with great port and statelinesse. For vpon tuesdaie, being the first daie of December, the lord maior of London, assisted with diuers earls, and barons, the aldermen in their scarlet gownes, the principall officers of the citie, the greatest number of gentlemen of the best accompt in and about the citie, with the number of fourescore of the most graue & worshipfullest citizens, in cotes of veluet, and chaines of gold, all on horsse backe, in most solemne and statelie maner, by the sound of foure trumpets, about ten of the clocke in the forenone, made open and publike proclamation and declaration of the sentence latelie giuen by the nobilitie against the queene of Scots, vnder the great seale of England, bearing date at Richmont the fourth daie of December, being openlie read by maister Sebright, towne-clerke of London, & with lowd voice solemnelie proclamed by the sargent at armes of the said citie, in foure seuerall places, to wit, at the crosse in Cheape, at the end of Chancerie lane in Flestreet, ouer against the Temple, at Leaden hall corner, and at saint Magnus corner neere London bridge.

The sentence giuen against the Scotish queene solemnlie proclamed.

During which time, the like solemne proclamations were made with great solemnities in the countie of Middlesex, namelie in the palace at Westminster, without Temple barre, and in Holborne, by the shiriffes of London and Middlesex, assisted with sundrie noblemen, gentlemen of good account, and the iustices of peace of the said countie, to the great and wonderfull reioising of the people of all sorts, as manifestlie appeared by their eger running after the portlie traine, their thronging to heare the same published, their ringing of bels, making of bonfires, and singing of psalmes in euerie street and lane of the citie. The said proclamation followeth.

A true copie of the proclamation latelie published by the queenes maiestie, vnder the great seale of England, for the declaring of the sentence latelie giuen against the queene of Scots, in forme as followeth.

ELisabeth by the grace of God, queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. Whereas we were giuen to vnderstand very crediblie, though to our great greefe, that diuerse things were, and of late time had beene compassed, imagined, and resolutelie intended, tending directlie to the hurt and destruction of our roiall person, and to the subuersion of the state of our realme by forren inuasions and rebellions at home, as well by the queene of Scots, remaining in our realme vnder our protection, as by manie diuerse other wicked persons with hir priuitie, who had freelie confessed the same, and had thereupon receiued open triall, iudgement, and execution according to the lawes for their deserts. And though in verie truth we were greatlie and deeplie greeued in our mind, to thinke or imagine that anie such vnnaturall and monstrous acts should be either deuised, or willinglie assented vnto against vs, by hir being a princesse borne, and of our ser and bloud, and one also whose life & honor we had manie times before saued and preserued: yet were we so directlie drawne to thinke all the same to be true, by the sight and vnderstanding of such proues as were manifestlie produced afore vs, vpon matters that had as well proceeded from hir selfe, as from the conspirators themselues, who voluntarilie & freelie without anie coercion had confessed their conspirations, both iointlie with hir, and directed by hir, against our person and our realme: and therefore also we saw great reason, to thinke the same ouer dangerous to be suffered to passe onward to take their full effect.

Wherefore we were by sundrie lords of our nobilitie, and others our louing subiects, earnestlie moued and counselled, to take vndelaied order for the inquisition and examination of all these dangerous enterprises & conspiracies, by sundrie waies directlie auowed to be by the said queen of Scots against vs and our realme certeinlie intended; and also to vse all present meanes with expedition to withstand or rather to preuent the same. And for that we were verie vnwilling to proceed against hir, considering hir birth and estate, by such vsuall sort as by the common lawes of the realme we might haue lawfullie done, which was by indictment and arreignment by ordinarie iuries: therefore, in respect both of our owne honor, and of hir person, we yeelded, by good aduise giuen to vs, to proceed in the most honorable sort that could be deuised within our realme, to the examination hereof, according to a late act of parlement, made the three and twentith daie of Nouember, in the seuen and twentith yeare of our reigne.

Whereupon by our commission vnder our great seale of England, bearing date at our castell of Windsore in our countie of Barkeshire, the first daie of October now last past, we did (for that purpose) according to that statute, assigne, name, and appoint all the lords and others of our priuie councell, and so manie other earls and barons lords of parlement, of the greatest degree and most ancient of the nobilitie of this our realme, as with the same lords and others of our priuie councell, made vp the number of fortie and two, adding also thereto a further, number according to the tenor of the foresaid act of parlement, of certeine of the chefest and other principall iudges of the courts of record at Westminster, amounting in the whole to the number ber of fortie and seuen, to examine all things compassed and imagined, tending to the hurt of our roiall person, as well by the said quéene of Scots, by the name of Marie the daughter & heire of James the fift late king of Scots, commonlie called the quéene of Scots & Dowager of France, as by anie other by hir pretintie, and all the circumstances thereof, & thereupon according to the tenor of the said act of parlement, to giue sentence or iudgment, as vpon good proofe the matter vnto them should appeare, as by the same commission more fullie appeareth.

And where afterwards the more part of the said councellors, lords, and iudges, in our said commission named, that is to saie, the number of six and thirtie, did in the presence and hearing of the said quéene of Scots, where she remained at our castell of Fodringhaie, at diuerse daies and times in publike place, verie exactlie, vprightlie, and with great deliberation examine all the matters & offenses, whereof she was charged and accused, tending vnto the dangers afore rehearsed and mentioned in our said commission and all the circumstances thereof, and heard also at large in all fauorable maner, what the same quéene did, or could saie for hir excuse and defense in that behalfe. Whereupon afterwards on the fiue and twentith daie of October now last past, all the said councell, lords, and iudges, that had heard and examined the same cause in the said quenes presence, as afore is mentioned, with one assent and consent, after good deliberation did giue their sentence and iudgement, in this sort following.

That after the first daie of June, in the seuen and twentith yeare of our reigne, and before the date of our said commission, diuerse things were compassed and imagined within this realme of England by Anthonie Babington, and others, with the priuitie of the said Marie, pretending title to the crowne of this realme of England, tending to the hurt, death, and destruction of our roiall person. And likewise, that after the same first daie of June, and before the date of our said commission, the said Marie, pretending title to the same crowne, had compassed & imagined within the same realme, diuers things tending to the hurt, death, and destruction of our roiall person, contrarie to the forme of the said statute: which sentence and iudgement the same lords and commissioners haue with one full consent caused to be put in writing, and dulie ingrossed, with the whole processe of their procéedings thereunto belonging, and haue subscribed the same with their hands, as by a record thereof shewed to vs, more fullie and largelie doth appeare.

And whereas also, sithence the same sentence and iudgement so giuen and recorded, the lords and commons in this present parlement assembled, haue also at sundrie times in open parlement, heard and considered the principall euidences, proofes, and circumstances, whereupon the same sentence and iudgement was grounded, and haue by their publike assent in parlement affirmed the same to be a iust, lawfull, and true sentence, and so haue allowed and approued the same in writing presented vnto vs: and haue also notified to vs, how deepelie they did foresée the great and manie imminent dangers, which otherwise might and would grow to our person, and to the whole realme, if this sentence were not fullie executed: and consequentlie therefore, they did by their most humble and earnest petitions in that behalfe, of one accord, hauing accesse vnto vs (vpon their sundrie requests) most instantlie vpon their knées, praie, beseech, and with manie reasons of great force and importance, moue and presse vs, that the said sentence and iudgement so iustlie & dulie giuen, and by them approued, as is aforesaid, might (according to the expresse tenor of the said act of parlement) by our proclamation vnder our great seale be declared and published, and the same also finallie executed.

But after such most earnest request, so made to vs from all the said lords and commons in parlement, they perceiuing by our owne speeches and answers, how deepelie we are grieued to heare of these horrible and vnnaturall attempts and actions of that quéene, whose manie former offenses, manifestlie and dangerouslie committed against vs, our crowne and realme, we had ouerpassed with our ouer great clemencie, contrarie to the manie aduises and requests of our subiects, aswell in parlement as otherwise: and therefore they also vnderstanding from our selfe, how desirous we were to haue some other meanes deuised by them in their seuerall places of parlement, to withstand these mischiefes intended both against our selfe, and the publike quiet state of our realme, and suertie of our good subiects, than by execution of the foresaid sentence, as was required: they did after their sundrie consultations apart, and conferences iointlie with one accord, in the names of all the lords of parlement, euen by the particular votes of them all assembled, and also of the commons with one vniuersall assent, representing the state of all our realme, at their seuerall times of accesse vnto vs, alledge, declare, and protest, that vpon their long, manie, & aduised consultations and conferences by our commandement, and for our satisfaction in that behalfe had, they could not by anie meanes find or deuise, how the suertie of our roiall person, and the preseruation of themselues and their posteritie, with the good state of the realme, might be prouided for and continued, without the publication and due execution of the said sentence.

Whereupon, being not onelie moued to our greefe, but also ouercome with the earnest requests, declarations, and important reasons of all our said subiects, the nobles and commons of our realme, whose iudgement, knowledge, and naturall care of vs, and the whole realme, we know doth farre surmount all others, being not so interessed therin, and so iustlie to be estéemed: and perceiuing also the said sentence to haue béene honourablie, lawfullie, and iustlie giuen, agréeable to iustice and to the lawes of our realme: we did yéeld, and do according to this said statute by this our proclamation vnder our great seale of England, declare, notifie, and publish to all our louing subiects, and other persons whatsoeuer, that the said sentence and iudgement is giuen in maner aforesaid, to the intent, that they and euerie of them, by this our proclamation may haue full vnderstanding and knowledge thereof. We do also will you, that you returne this our proclamation into our court of Chancerie, as spéedilie as you maie conuentientlie, with the place and time of the proclaming thereof thereupon indorsed, whereof faile you not. In witnesse whereof, we haue caused this our proclamation to be made patent, and sealed with the great seale of England. At our manor of Richmont the fourth daie of December, the nine and twentith yeare of our reigne, and in the yeare of our Lord God, one thousand fiue hundred fourescore and six.

Now to conclude with a remembrance of perpetuitie concerning the queens maiestie, of whose louing care and tender affection towards all hir faithfull subiects as we haue manifold testimonies in the historie of hir highnesse time, whereby their hearts are linked vnto hir maiestie with an indis-soluble knot of deserued loue and lotaltie: so we maie not omit in anie case the publike witnesse of hir highnesse naturall care and mercifull prouidence ouer hir liege people, euen those of the poorer sort, vnto whome the comfortable streames of hir rare regard for their benefit and welfare, in a hard time of scarsitie, do most plentifullie flow. But because our barren and sapleſſe stile is insufficient, with conuenient dignitie to describe, naie not so much as to delineat or shadow out this incomparable pitie and pietie of hir highnesse tender heart to hir commons, I will surcease to intermeddle therein, reseruing the same vnto the due consideration of euerie particular member of this bodie politike (whereof hir maiestie is the souereigne head) by the view and perusall of the proclamation and orders here annexed.

A true copie of the said proclamation concerning corne, &c.

THe quéenes most excellent maiestie, foreseeing the generall dearth growne of corne & other victels, partlie through the vnseasonablenesse of the yeare past, whereby want hath growne more in some countries than in others, but most of all generallie through the couetousnes & vncharitable greedines of such as be great cornemasters & ingrosers of corne, vsing all the subtill meanes they can, to worke their owne present vnconscionable gaine against the rules of charitie, which hir maiestie of hir princelie care and loue towards hir people, vtterlie condemneth, and earnestlie desireth to remedie, for the releefe of the poorer sort. And therefore, hir maiestie with hir princelie care towards hir people, hauing (with the aduise of hir councell) had good consideration hereof, doth by this hir proclamation, giue expresse commandement and charge vnto all such to whom it shall or maie appertaine, that such good orders as hir maiestie hath commanded to be deuised for that purpose, and now also are sent to all parts of hir realme, be diligentlie and effectuallie put in spéedie execution: signifieng withall vnto all hir good and louing subiects, that if anie shall be found obstinat or negligent in the due execution, or otherwise in the obseruation thereof, that then vpon due information and proofe thereof made vnto hir highnesse said councell, which she requireth not to be spared by anie, hauing iust cause of complaint, for respect of anie person, she hath giuen speciall commandement and order, that they shall be spéedilie called to answer; & thereupon, according to the qualitie of their offenses, shall receiue sharpe punishment, whereby others maie take example to auoid the like contempt, negligence, or other defaults.

And although this dearth hath in sundrie parts of the realme first growne by the visitation of almightie God, in the alteration of seasonable weather this last yeare, which neuertheleſſe of his great mercie hath not bene so extreme in this realme, as in manie other countries adioining, where the dearth is by manie occasions manifestlie knowne to be far greater than is in this relme hitherto, or by his goodnesse is like to be: yet it is manifestlie knowne the said dearth to haue bin wilfullie increased in verie manie places of this realme, not onelie by & through the couetousnes of manie ingrosers of corne & cornmasters, but also by vnlawfull transportation of graine, & lacke also of preseruation of store in time requisit. Hir highnesse acknowledging this maner of Gods mercie and fauour in a more fauourable measure towards hir countrie and hir people, than to other forren parts nere adioining, hath thought good and necessarie, for a further remedie against the vncharitable couetousnesse of the cornemasters, as cause shall require, to notifie, that if such as be the great cornemasters and owners of graine, or of other necessarie victels for food of the poore, shall not be willing, or do not performe these orders, whereby the poorer sort maie be relæued in the markets at reasonable prices; or that it shall appeare that other néedfull victels shall by couetousnesse of anie persons grow to excessiue prices, to the pinching of the poorer sort: then hir highnesse doth hereby signifie, that she will not onelie seuerelie punish the offendors for their cruell couetousnesse and offenses against hir orders; but will also for redresse of the excessiue prices of other néedfull victels, giue order that reasonable prices shall be set both on corne and other victels, to be sold for the releefe of hir maiesties poore subiects, according both to hir prerogatiue roiall, and to the order of iustice, as by speciall law of parlement therefore made in the fiue and twentith yeare of the reigne of hir late noble and deare father king Henrie the eight, is speciallie in such cases prouided. Giuen at Grænewich the second date of Januarie, one thousand fiue hundred fourescore and six, in the nine and twentith yeare of hir highnesse reigne.

Now the said orders before specified, being a matter of coherence (deuised by the speciall commandement of hir maiestie, for the releefe and staie of the present dearth of graine within the realme) and published at large, do here follow (agréeable to that which was sent from the court at Grænewich abrode into the realme, the second date of Januarie, one thousand fiue hundred foure score and six, in the nine and twentith yere of hir maiesties reigne, by hir maiesties priuie councell) but abridged according to the annotations. And first; That the iustices shall diuide themselues into sundrie parts to execute these orders: To appoint sundrie iuries to inquire of things hereafter following: The oth of the iurors, with charge to inquire what number of persons be in the houses of them that haue store of corne: For badgers, broggers, and carriers of corne: Maltmakers, bakers, and brewers: Buiers of corne to sell againe: Buiers of corne vpon the ground: Against such as shall refuse to declare the truth of the matters inquirable: Parties offending to appeare afore the councell: A consideration of all persons that haue corne, to determine how they shall serue the markets with such portions as they maie spare: The forme of the recognisance to be freelie taken.

In abridgment of the orders deuised for the releefe of the poore in this time of dearth, &c.

Orders to be obserued by such as shall be appointed to serue the markets with corne, for the releefe of the poore people first: To whome corne shall be sold, after that the poore are serued: No corne brought to the market vnsold, to be caried out of the towne: None to buie such kind of corne as they shall bring to sell, but by warrant vpon reasonable cause: No corne to be bought & to sell againe: No corne to be bought but in open market: Inquirie to be made against ingrosers: An order for all licences from the iustices of the peace, to be kept in a record: Regard to the bakers for kéeping of the assise of bread: Bread faultie in anie excesse to be sold towards the releefe of the poore: No badger to buie corne but in open market, and with a sufficient licence in writing: The badgers to shew wéekelie their books of buieng: No iustices seruant to be a badger, nor none other, but such as shall be licenced in open sessions: No badger, baker, brewer, or purueior, to buie graine, vntill an houre after the full market begin: Some iustices to be present in the market, to see the poore relæued vpon reasonable prices.

Where iustices are wanting in anie hundred

for

for to appoint some rich persons to suplie the want: That ministers and preachers exhort the rich sort to be liberall to helpe the poore with monie or vittels needfull: To make malt of oates in countries where there hath béene vse thereof: No waste of bread corne superfluouslie, nor anie expense thereof but for féeding of people: None suffered to make Starch. starch of anie graine: Able poore people to be set to worke: Stocks of monie for prouision of works for poore people: Clothiers to continue their worke-folks: Souldiors hurt, and impotent people, to be relæued in their dwelling places: That no millers be suffered to be common buiers of corne, nor to sell meale, but to attend to the true grinding of the corne brought, & to vse measurable tole these deare seasons: Conferences to be had betwixt the iustices of peace in the shires, and the principall officers of cities and townes corporat for prouisions of graine, for the inhabitants in cities and corporat towns: Order for places exempted from the iurisdiction of the iustices of peace in the bodies of the shires: Regard to staie all transportation of graine out of the realme: Certificat to be made of the execution of these orders monethlie to the shiriffe, and he to certifie the same to the priuie councell within euerie fortie daies: To certifie what iustices be absent from the seruice, that such as without iust excuse shall not attend, maie be displaced, and their roms, if there be næd, supplied.

The conclusion of these orders is this Ad verbum, That if anie shall offend against the true meaning of these instructions, or of anie part thereof, or shall vse anie sinister meane to the defrauding thereof, that such be seuerelie punished according to the lawes; and for such obstinat persons as shall not conforme themselues, the iustices shall at their pleasure bind them to appeare before the quéenes maiesties priuie councell by a date certeine, there to be further delt with by seuere punishment, for the better example of all others.

P. T. Now as Holinshed and such as with painfull care and loue to their countrie haue thought good before me, to knit vp the seuerall reigne of euerie seuerall king with a generalitie of the seuerall writers in that princes daies: so haue I béene importuned by manie of my frends, to knit vp the said whole historie with a particular catalog of all such as haue purposelie in seuerall historiés of this realme, or by the waie in the historiés of other countries written of England and English matter. For which cause (with the title of other anonymall chronicles) I haue here for that purpose, by order of alphabet set downe the same. Wherein, although I shall not set downe euerie mans name, nor of what time & qualitie euerie one was (for he is not liuing I suppose that can do the same) yet hauing done my good will therein, and that more than perhaps some others would haue done, I praie thée to beare with the defaults, and accept that which I haue done and could do. And although perhaps I maie set downe one man twise, as first by his name, and then set downe the worke without his name, as another seuerall thing: yet is it not of purpose done, or to the end that I would make a great shew, and séeme ambitious of names or knowledge; but for that I haue not as yet attained to that perfection, which hereafter I hope to do in distinguishing of the same. For Rome was not built in one daie, & yet if one daies foundation thereof had not bæne first laid, it had neuer béene after builded: and so to the matter.

A, Abbo Floriacensis liued in the time of Dunstane archbishop of Cantorburie, to whome he dedicated his booke: Abbas Wiseburgensis, Nicholaus Adams liued in the daies of king Edward the first, Alfric Abbas, Alfric that gathered the lines of the saints in Saxonie, which I sometimes had, it maie be that these two were all one man; Alfridus Beuerlacensis thesaurarius whom Leland calleth Aluredus Fibroleganus; Alanus abbat of Teukesburie, one of the foure that writ the Quadrilogium of Thomas Becket in the time of king John; Alexander Hessebiensis, he writ Epitome Britannicæ historiæ; Alexander Somersetensis, Alexander Staffordiensis, Aelius Spartianus, Alured or Alfred king of England in the peare of Christ nine hundred and three, Adam Perimuth canon of Paules in the reigne of Richard the second, Anianus Marcellinus, Richardus Angeruil surnamed De Berie, bishop of Durham, died in the peare of our Lord one thousand three hundred fortie and fiue; Antoninus, Arnold of London in the time of king Henrie the eight, Asserius Meneuensis, Aurelius or Aluredus Riualensis, Robert Auersberie.

B, Sir Nicholas Bacon knight lord képer of the great seale vnto quéene Elisabeth, Benedictus Claudiocestrensis, Balantine a Scot, William Baldwin liued in the time of king Edward the first, Stephan Batemaine died in the yere one thousand fiue hundred eightie and foure, Beda an English Saxon died in the yere of Christ seuen hundred thirtie and two; G. de Barrie archdeacon of S. Dauids writ the life of Remigius bishop of Lincolne, John Bale flourished in the time of Edward the first, Barnardus Andreas writ a chronicle intituled Liber Barnardi Andreæ Tolosati poetæ laureati regij historiographi de vita atque gestis Henrici septimi, in whose time he flourished; Robert Boston in the time of Edward the second, Rafe Baldocke bishop of London vnder Edward the second, Peter Ballet in the time of Henrie the fift, whose life he did write; Robert Bale recorder of London, he died in the yere of our Lord one thousand foure hundred three score and one, about the latter end of the reigne of Richard the second; Edmund Bedenhame writer of the chronicles of Rochester; John Bramus, and not Bromus as saith Bale, a monke of Tedford; John Brackelow a Benedictine monke, in the peare one thousand two hundred fourtéene; Iohannes Brompton, historia vetus quam contulit Iornal. monasterio, as hath Mathew Parker In vitis episcop. Cantu. Ferdinando Blake liued in the peare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred foure score and foure, Bodinus, John Bouchet a Frenchman of Aquitaine, Nicholas Brodingham or Brodzingham, John Bosue of Burie, Blondus Foroliuiensis, Henrie Bradshaw borne in Chester a blacke monke there in the time of Henrie the eight, John Burgh a monke in the daies of K. Edward the third, Nicholas Bungeie borne in a towne of the same name in Northfolke in the daies of king Henrie the first, sir John Bourchier knight lord Barnes translated Froissard, Bullerus, Roger Bond, Thomas Buckhurst lord Buckhurst now liuing, Stephan Birchington, George Buckhanan liued in the yere of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred and foure score.

C, Thomas Castleford: sir William Cicill knight lord Burleigh lord treasuror of England now liuing, William Carton liued in the daies of king Edward the fourth, Campbell, Carton a Germane, Caradocus Lancarnauensis liued in the daies of K. Stephan, Iulius Cæsar a Roman, John Capgraue borne in Kent an Augustine frier died in the fourth yere of king Edward the fourth, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred three score and foure; Cornelius Hibernensis, Cornelius Tacitus, Albertus Crantz, John Caius died in the reigne of our quéene Elisabeth, William Camden den now liuing, George Cauendish gentleman vsher vnto cardinall Wolsele, whose life he did write, John Clinu or Lina an Irishman, he flourished in the yere of Christ one thousand three hundred and sixtie, Rafe Coggeshall abbat of Coggeshall in Esser liued in the time of king Henrie the third and writ the appendix to Radulphus Niger, Thomas Cooper bishop of Winchester now liuing, Richard Carguent flourished in the daies of king Edward the first, Thomas Churchyard now liuing. D, Demetrius a Britaine, Diodorus Siculus, Dionysius, Dion Cassius, Thomas Dando a Carmelit frier of Marleborow, writ the life of Alphred king of Percia or rather of west Saxons, and liued in the time of king Henrie the first; Diouionensis, Dolensis writ De laudibus Britonum.

E, Edmerus a monke of Canturburie liued in the time of Henrie the second; Elwardus, Eutropius a Romane præst, Enguerrant de Monstrellet a Frenchman, and scholer in Paris in the time of king Henrie the fift; Edmund Campian a Iesuit brought vp in Oxford, & executed in the yere of our Lord 1581; John Euersden a monke of Burie flourished in the time of king Edward the first, and so continued in the time of king Edward the third; Ernulphus bishop of Rochester liued in the time of king Henrie the second compiled Textus Roffensis, conteining the grants of the lands to the same house, & the copies of sundrie ancient lawes in the Saxon tong, Thomas Elmeham prior of Lenton.

F, Robert Fabian alderman of London, liued in the time of Henrie the seuenth, Geffreie Fenton now liuing; Samuell and Abraham Flemings both liuing, brethren by one bellie, and Londoners borne, Quorum prior historiolam quandam de regimine Mariæ nuper Anglorũ principis, eámq; elegantem, Latino idiomate (nunquã tamẽ excusam) cõtexuit: posterior in hisce chronicis detergẽdis atque dilatandis, vna cum vberrimorũ indicum accessione, plurimùm desudauit; Iohannes Fibernis or Beuer writ the historie of Westminster, John Froissart, Ferculphus, Flaccus Albinus or Alcuinus, Philip Flattesberie a worthie Irish gentleman flourished in the yere 1517, John Fourdon a Scot, John Fox a learned diuine, that writ the Acts and Monuments, and is now liuing; George Ferres liuing in the yere of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred three score and eight, Fabius Questor, Florentius Wigornius died about the yeare of our Lord one thousand one hundred and eighténe, being about the eightéenth yeare of king Henrie the first.

G, Robert Gagwin a Frenchman, John Greie bishop of Norwich in king Johns time, Thomas Gardiner a monke of Westminster in the time of Henrie the eight; Robert Glouer by office named Somerset now liuing a most rare antiquarie, and worthily deseruing to be named scientissimus antiquitatũ; Francis Guiciardine an Italian liuing in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred three score and eightéene, Laurence Guiciardine, Gildas Sapiens, Gildas Cambrensis, Gildas Badonicus, Gildas Albanius, Geffreie of Munmouth liued in the time of king Stephan, John Gower knight died about the second of Henrie the fourth, Giraldus Cambrensis liued in the time of Henrie the second, Richard the first, and king John; Nicholas Gill a Frenchman, Gocelinus first a monke of saint Berine beyond the seas, and after a monke of Canturburie; Giraldus Cornubiensis De gestis Anglorum, Gulielmus Malmsberie in the daies of K. Stephan, Gulielmus Parus alias Gulielmus Nouoburgensis or Newberie, Geruasius Dorobernensis, Geruasius Tilberiensis, Richard Grafton in the time of quéene Elisabeth, Robert Gréene, Guido de Columna.

H, John Hales, Hugo Albus Petroburgensis, in the time of king John; John Harding esquier liued in the daies of Edward the fourth, Edward Hall a counsellor of Greies inne flourished in the time of Henrie the eight and Edward the first, Abrahamus Hartwellus Academicus Cantab. that writ in verse Regina literata; Henrie of Marleborow, Gualter Hemigsford a monke of Gisborne in the daies of Edward the third, Hector Boetius a Scot, Hirmannus archdeacon in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three score and ten, Herbert de Bosham one of the foure that writ the life of Thomas Becket, Hoclet one that liued in the time of Henrie the first in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred fiftie and foure, John de Heram and Richard de Heram liued in the daies of king Richard the first, Wilfrid Holme vnder Henrie the eight, Raphaell Holinshed in the time of quæne Elisabeth, William Harrison now liuing, John Harrison doctor of arts and of physicke, Rafe Higden alias Cestrensis flourished in the time of Edward the third, John Higgins now liuing, Roger Houeden liued in the time of king John, Hugo de sancto Victore; Hugo Abbas Petroburgensis, it mate be that Hugo Abbas before & this Hugo were one man, although for this time I supose the contrarie; Hugo de Genesis an Italian, John Hooker alias Hoxell now liuing.

I, Iehan de Bauge, Iohannes Maior a Scot, Iohannes Seuerianus, Iohannes Carnotensis one of the foure that writ the Quadrilogium of the life of Thomas Becket, Iohannes Anglicus writ Historiam aurea, Iehan Maior de Belgis, Iohannes Londonensis, John a monke of Ford, Iossridus Crowlandensis, Ingulfus abbat of Crowland in the daies of William Conqueror, Thomas Ichingham whome Leland calleth Thomas Vicanius, Iosephus Domnonensis, Joceline of Furneis, Peter de Icham or Itham a monke, whose booke beginneth Non solum audiendus sacræ scripturæ verbis aurem sedulus auditor accomodare tenetur, which booke Caius de antiquitate Cantab. doth ascribe to Robert Remington, as after shall appeare; Iulius Capitolinus In vita Antonij Pij.

K, Albertus Krantz a Dane, Kentigernus, Henrie Knighton liued in the time of king Richard the second. L, Lanfrancus that writ a chronicle in Welsh, Stephan Langton bishop of Canturburie writ the life of king Richard the first, John Leland in the time of Henrie the eight and Edward the first, William Lambard esquire now liuing, and deseruing well of all antiquitie; George Lillie, Humfrete Lhoid, he died in the time of quæne Elisabeth; Piers de Longtoft, Thomas Lanquet, John Lesle a Scot bishop of Rosse in Scotland now liuing, John Langden bishop of Rochester.

M, Marcerius an Englishman, of whom John Baconthorpe speaketh in the prolog of the fourth booke of Senten. quæst. 10. John Maluerne monke of Worcester continued Ranulphus in the yeare of Christ, one thousand three hundred three score and sixtéene; Marianus Scotus liued about the yeare of Christ one thousand foure score and ten, Matthew Paris, Matthew Westminster alias Flores historiarum a monke of Westminster, and liued in the time of king Edward the third; Thomas More knight lord chancellor of England, Thomas de la More knight liued in the daies of Edward the second, Radulphus Marham, Merlinus Ambrosius, Merlinus Syluester, Melkinus, Nicholas Montacute liued in the time of Henrie the first, Edmund Molineux now liuing, Sebastian Munster a Germane.

N, Nennius Helius brother to Cassiuelane & Lud kings of Britaine, Nennius Banchorensis, Nauclerus Alexander Nevill now liuing, Laurence Nowell died about the sixtéenth yere of quéene Elisabeth,

Ninianus

Niniánus that wrote Eulogium. O, Osbert de Clare prior of Westminster, Osbernus Dorobernensis in the time of William the Conqueror, Thomas Otterborne a Franciscan or greie frier lived in the time of Henrie the fift, Abraham Ortuelius now living a Fleming; Christopher Ocland now living sometime schoolemaister in Southwarke.

P, William Pakington clerke & treasuror to the blacke prince of his household in Gascoigne, Patricius Consul, Ioannes de Prato a writer of Aquitaine & protonotarie, Paulus Aemilius, Petrus Blessensis archdeacon of Bath, Philip de Comines aliàs monsieur de Argentone secretarie to Charles duke of Burgoine, Polydor Virgil an Urbinat Italian and canon of Paules in the daies of Henrie the eight, Paulus Iouius an Italian bishop of Nucerne, John Pike, John Price knight died in the reigne of quéene Elisabeth, William Paten now living, John Proctor schoolemaister of Tunbridge to whom I was sometime scholer, Ptolomeus, David Powell now living.

R, John Read in the time of Edward the first, John Rastall, Radulphus Londonensis, Radulphus Niger lived in the daies of king Henrie the third, Radulphus de Diceto deane of Paules in London in the time of king John, Rentha king of Scots, Michaell Ricius, William Rishanger a monke of saint Albons in the daies of Edward the second, Richester a monke of Westminster lived in the time of Edward the third, and wrote an excellent chronicle beginning at the comming of the Saxons in the yeare of our Lord foure hundred fortie and nine, & continued it vntill the yeare one thousand three hundred fortie and eight, conteining eight hundred fourescore and nine téene years; Richardus Deuisiensis, Richardus Cadneus, Richardus Eliensis whose storie beginneth Cùm animaduerterem excellentiam Elienſis inſulæ, &c. Richardus Elienſis an other from the former that wrote an other historie of Elie, Robert abbat of saint Michaels mount florished in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and eight; Robertus Montensis, Robertus sine cognomento, Robertus Remingtonus De gestis Anglorum, cuius initium, Non solùm audiendus sacræ scripturæ verbis, &c. This saieth Caius In antiquitate Cantabrigiæ. But others attribute that worke to Peter Iotham, See before in the letter I.

Robert Record living in the time of quéene Marie, Robert bishop of Hereford which lived in the yeare of our redemption one thousand three score and twelue, Robertus de Paterna that wrote the register of Orford, Robert a prior of Shrewsburie, Roger of Abindon, Roger of Winsore, Roger de Windore, Roger of Chester lived in the daies of Edward the third, John Rouse borne in Warwikeshire lived in the daies of Henrie the seuenth, and being a canon of Oseie died at Warwike in the yeare of our Lord one thousand foure hundred fourescore and eleuen, Thomas Rudborne archdeacon of Sudberie after bishop of S. Dauids in Wales lived in the time of Henrie the fourth, Henrie the fift, and Henrie the first; Thomas Rudborne an other from the former was a monke of Winchester and followed manie other authors, amongst which was the said Thomas Rudborne bishop of S. Dauids.

S, Saxo Grammaticus a Dane, Samuel Britannus, Sextus Aurelius, Sentleger, Edward Segeswike now living, Iohannes Sulgenus or Sullenus, Solinus, Sigebertus Gemblacensis, Thomas Spot who lived in the reigne of Edward the first, Antonius Sabellicus a Venetian, John Sleidan a Germane, Richard Southwell, Reginald Scot now living, Simon Dunelmensis, John Stow now living, John Knith a Cornish man in the daies of Henrie the eight, Richard Stanihust borne in Ireland now living, Sharton now living, John Swapham, Stephanides aliàs Fitzstephan. T, Titus Liuius Patauiensis, Titus Liuius Foroliuiensis an Italian lived in the time of Henrie the fift, John Tartor a monke of Burie, Andrew Theuet a Frenchman, Nicholas Triuet a blacke frier borne in Northfolke sonne to sir Thomas Triuet knight one of the kings iustices lived in the daies of Edward the third, and died in the yeare of our Lord one thousand three hundred twentie and eight; John Tilberie florished in the yere of Christ one thousand one hundred fourescore and ten; John Treuisa a Cornishman préest and vicar of Barkleie, Telesinus a Briton, Francis Boteuile aliàs Thin now living, Brian Duke knight lived in the daies of Henrie the eight, John Twine died in the reigne of quéene Elisabeth, William Thorne lived in the daies of Richard the second, Richard Turpin borne of a worshipfull familie in England serued in the garison of Calis, he died in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred fortie and one; Tobias Roffensis, Turgotus which lived in the yeare of Christ one thousand ninetie and eight in the time of William Rufus wrote a chronicle of Durham.

V, Veremund a Spaniard, Raphaell Volateran, Giouanni Vilani a Florentine, Ponticus Virunnius an Italian, John Ufford, John Uton. W, John Whethamsted otherwise called Frumentarius a learned man abbat of S. Albons lived in the daies of Henrie the first, Roger Wall an herald who in Latine writ the doings of Henrie the fift, Thomas Walsingham a monke of the abbeie of S. Albons lived in the reigne of Henrie the first, William of Riuall lived in the age of king Stephan, Willielmus Cantuariensis one of the foure that wrote the Quadrilogium of Thomas Becket lived in the time of king John, Willielmus Gemeticensis, Willielmus filius Stephani a clerke of the Chancerie and deane of the chapell of Thomas Becket in the daies of Henrie the second, Willielmus Summersetensis, Willielmus Crowlandensis (for the other Williams sée in the letter G, in the name of Gulielmus) Thomas Wike canon of Oseie, John Walworth, Walterus Exceſtrensis, Walterus Couentrensis.

Annales Burtonenses, Memoriale historiarum, Chronica Dunstable, Chronicle of Tinmouth, Chronicles of S. Albons, Defloratione Galfridi, Historia obsidionis Elienſis insulæ, Chronica, cuius initium, Calendarium Bruti, Chronicle beginning Rex Pictorum, Chronica Westmonast. Chronicle beginning In diebus sanctiſsimi regis Edwardi, Chronicle beginning Aeneas cum Aſcanio, Chronica chronicorũ, Supplementum chronicorum, Fasciculus temporũ, Historia Richardi secundi beginning De parte Bruti, Eulogiũ, Historia Iornalensis, Historia Carina written in Latine compiled in the thirtéenth yeare of Richard the second by whom it was caused to be written, as the title declareth, which for that it sheweth no name of the author, and for that maister Fox borowed the same of maister Carie citizen of London, maister Fox in his Acts and Monuments the second edition calleth the same booke Historia Carina.

Anonymall or nameiesse chronicles, treating whollie or in part of England.

The epitome of chronicles from Brute to Henrie 6. beginning Ab origine mundi concurrunt anni ſecundũ Hebræos, 6646. Chronicle beginning Chronicorũ verò quæ ſunt imagines hiſtoriarum, Chronicle of genealogies beginning Cuilibet principi congruum, The chronicles of S. Swithin, The commentaries of Hide, The continuances of Roger Houeden beginning Excerpta ex dictis viri religioſi, An other chronicle of S. Albons beginning Fecit rex Edwardus tertius comites, Hiſtoria ſtoria regia vel ſancti Edmundi, Chronicle of Elie beginning Anno ab incarnatione dominica, 616. qui eſt annus 21, ex quo Auguſtinus cum ſocijs ad prædicandum genti Anglorum miſſus eſt, Hiſtoria Anglorum beginning Conſiderans hiſtoriæ Britonum, Pictorum, Scotorum, Saxonum, Anglorum, Danorum, & Normannorũ prolixitatem, &c. Le mer des hiſtories, Les annales de France, Les annales d'Acquitaine, Les grand cronicqz de Britane, Les petit cronicqz de Britane, Les cronicqz de Normandi, Le Roſarie, Les genelogies des roys, Cronicles de Flandres, The chronicles of London, The chronicle called Brute, The Saxon chronicle of the church of Worceſter, The Saxon chronicle of the abbeie of Peterborrow, The Saxon chronicle written in the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred foure ſcore and fiue, The chronicles of England. Thus far this catalog. Now peraduenture ſome will looke for a rehearſall omnigatherum of ſuch as haue written in the reigne of our bleſſed ſouereigne: but herein as it paſſeth our poſſibilitie to ſatiſfie their expectation, their number being infinit, and manie of them vnknowne and vnworthie of remembrance: ſo it were to be wiſhed that ſome fauourer of learned mens fame, would compriſe their names and works in a particular volume, therein imitating either the order of Bale, or Geſner; or elſe the commendable method of John James the Frißlander, printed at Tigurie one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and three, either of which courſes being taken would well ſerue the turne.

The concluſion of A. F.

✻ Thus far (bleſſed be Chriſt) the ertent of Engliſh chronicles; a long labour, of great care and expenſe: howbeit at length conquered and ouercome, by the benefit of his grace who enableth vs to go through with all things that be good: his name be praiſed therefore. Wherein if the helpe of ſuch as are furniſhed with varietie of knowledge, or as by gorgeous ſhew of words and rich pompe of phraſe pretend profound ſkill, had béene as forward to aduance this worke (being of vnexpected magnitude by means of the multitude of contents) as ſome of low ſaile, willing to laie out their poore talent, haue affoorded what furtherance they were able (ſomewhat to the ſatiſfieng of thoſe honeſt minded men and parteners, at whoſe great coſts and charges the ſame is now newlie printed, though not to their full contentment, who were euer deſirous and diuerſlie made aſſaies to haue it ſo abſolute, as nothing might want of due perfection, if the meanes might haue béene obteined) the chronicles of England, both for matter & maner, had béene comparable to anie hiſtorie or annals in Chriſtendome. Howbeit perfected as it is, though not with exquiſit curiouſnes to pleaſe euerie fickle fanſie, yet according to the proportion of ſkill vouchſafed of God to the dealers therein (men of commendable diligence though not of deepeſt iudgement) ſomewhat to ſatiſfie the well affected and indifferent mind, the ſame is now come abroade, yéelding matter no leſſe manifold than the ſpring doth floures, and the ſame maruellous frutefull, if they haue their right vſe and due application: which indéed is the verie end of hiſtories and chronicles. And ſo crauing a fauorable acceptation of this tedious trauell, with a toleration of all ſuch defaults as haplie therein lie hidden, and by diligent reading maie ſone be ſpied; we wiſh that they which beſt maie, would once in their life grow reſolute and at a point, in this laudable kind of ſtudie (moſt neceſſarie, next to the word of God, for common knowledge) little or much to exerciſe their head and hand. Finallie beſéeching God to bleſſe the realme of England, and the pretious iewell of the ſame (euen good queene Eliſabeth) to ſaue as the apple of his eie; to protect hir with the target of his power againſt all the pernicious practiſes of ſatans inſtruments; to lengthen the liues of hir highneſſe honorable counſellors, by whoſe vigilant policie this whole land fareth the better; in preuenting, intercepting and making fruſtrat (God directing and proſpering their conſultations and proceédings) all the attempts of traitors, to whom O Lord in vengeance giue the iudgement of Judas, as they haue bæne partakers of his ſinne; let them be intangled and taken in the traps of their trecheries, and ſwallowed vp in the ſeas of deſerued confuſion, that they be no more a familie. And we beſéech God to increaſe the multitude of loiall ſubiects, to make them ſtrong in faith towards him, and in loue one with another, that the goſpell (which is the doctrine of pacification and obedience) maie be glorified in the commonwealth of England, a corner of the world, O Lord, which thou haſt ſingled out for the magnifieng of thy maieſtie, and wherof we praie thee to giue vs a dailie remembrance: ſo ſhall we make conſcience of ſin, & addict our ſelues to the exerciſes of righteouſneſſe, Amen.

FINIS.

m. 1587.

The third table for the Chronicles of England from the conqueſt vntill this preſent regiment: wherin the reader is to obſerue theſe notes for his better direction; namelie, to ſeeke for the ſurnames of perſons as more commonlie knowne than the proper; and alſo when the name faileth to looke for the dignitie, title, office and degree of ſuch perſons; as Armenia, Cipriots, Spaine, France, Portingall, Nauarre, Denmarke, &c; if they were kings: Archbiſhop, Biſhop, Pope, Cardinall, Legat, &c; if they were Clergiemen: Chancellors, Treaſurors, Lord high conſtables, Lord wardens of the cinque ports, &c; Duke, Earle, Marqueſſe, Queene, Ducheſſe, Counteſſe, &c; if they were great ſtates: Maior, Sargents at law, Officers, &c: if they were of that degree: knights and eſquires excepted, who as they were of renowme, are accordinglie noted by their vſuall names. Likewiſe for ſuch as haue beene executed as notorious offendors againſt the prince and the ſtate, to come to the knowledge of their names, looke for the qualitie of their offenſe; as counterfeting, coineclippers, conſpiracie and conſpirators, murther and murtherers, rebellion and rebels, treaſon and traitors, preeſts ſeminarie, &c: of all which this table affoordeth infinit examples. Finallie, whereſoeuer you find this word (Note) there dooth matter of conſideration come to hand.

If the reader be not ſatiſfied with this table, let him not blame the order, but his owne conceipt. Gathered by Abraham Fleming.

A.

Abbaſie of wincheſter obteined for monie, 21, a 40
Abbat Agelnothus, ¶ See Agelnothus. Of Battell in reſcuing wincheſete is put to flight, 427, a 50. Egelſin. ¶ See Egelſin. Egelwine. ¶ See Egelwine. Feckham of weſtminſter inſtalled, 1132, b 20. Frederike. ¶ See Frederike. Joachim, a man of great fame, 126, a 10. Of Glaſtenburie an erls ſon, 42, a 60. Loſauage. ¶ See Loſauage. Paule. ¶ See Paule. Of ſaint Auguſtine capteine of an armie, 2 a 10. Of S. Edmundſburie, Robert Lou an earls ſonne, 20, a 40. Thurſtan. ¶ See Thurſtan. Of weſtminſter dieth ſuddenlie, 516, b 30. ¶ See Conſpiracie.
Abbats ordeined by William Rufus, 20, a 60. They and priors deprined, and why, 30, b 10. Not to be made knights, &c: note, 30, b 50
Abbie of Battell with the roll thereof, 3, 4, 5. The firſt of white monks when and by whom founded, 26, a 60. Of S. Albons repared by Lanfranke, 18, a 60
Abbies builded three by duke William, 15, a 40. Founded in king Stephans time, 64, b 60
Eleuen let out to farme, 26, a 40. Searched and ranſacked at duke Williams commandement, 8, b 50. Suppreſſed, 945, b 50, 946, b 10, 947, b 50. Their lands promiſed by queene Marie to be reſtored: note, 1127, b 10, &c. ¶ See Churches and Nunneries.
Abiuration for ſpeking againſt the popes authoritie, 898, b 30. Of biſhop Pecocke, 646, a 60. ¶ See Biſhop Pecocke.
Abſolution to be purchaſed from Rome, 214, b 60. Of the clergie ſued for from Rome, 201, b 60. Of Oxford by legat Otho, 222, a 50. For bowes & other offenſes, 257, b 60. For an oth obteined, 313, b 60. For the offenſe of diſobedience, 201, b 10. Pronounced by cardinall Pole to the parlement houſe, 1123, b 10
Aburgauennie lord arreigned at weſtminſter, 872, b 10. Aſſembleth a power againſt Wiat, & putteth them to flight, 1094, a 10, b 20
Accuſation falſe for a time preuailed but in fine fruſtrate: note, 223, b 50, 60. Of a iuſtice for taking of bribes, 243, b 50. Of two noble men that had the cuſtodie of the king and queene of Scots, 251, a 30. Againſt prince Henrie to king Henrie the fourth his father, 539, a 10. Vniuſt redoundeth to the accuſants ſhame, 937, b 60. Interchangable and doubtfull tried by combat: note, 992, b 60, 993, a 10. Falſe puniſhed, 968, a 50. By the pillorie: note, 1132, b 30. Of a maiſter againſt his ſeruant whereof followed ſecret vengeance, 1084, b 20, 30
Acton knight his rebellion, ſurpriſed, he and his complices condemned of treaſon and hereſie, 544, a 60, b 40
Adela married to Richard Henrie the ſecond his ſon, 94, a 30
Adelicia. ¶ See Queene.
Admonition. ¶ See Warning.
Adnothus maſter of the horſſe to king Harold ſlaine in fight 6, a 60
Aduenturers, 875, b 10. Soldiers and why ſo called, 880, b 60, 881, a 10. Their capteine ſlaine, and they diſcomfited, 882, b 10. Good ſeruitors, 882, b 60. Slaine and diſcomfited, their finall end, 883, b 50. ¶ See Kreekers.
Aduke. ¶ See Emperour.
Adulterie puniſhed with hanging, 211, b 60. Seuerelie corrected in a maiors time of London, 440, b 10. ¶ See Inceſt and Whoredome.
Affinitie ¶ See Freendſhip and Marriage.
Agatha the mother of Edgar Etheling driuen by tempeſt into Scotland, 6, a 30
Agelmarus biſhop of Thetford depoſed and whie, 9, a 20
Agelnothus abbat of Glaſtenburie, 5, a 10
Agincourt battell, 552, b 60. When fought, 618, b 20. The number of the ſlaine, noblemen priſoners, 555, a 50, 60, b 10, &c.
Agreement. ¶ See Peace.
Aire red as though on fier, 38, a 40. Full of clouds, red, pellow, & greene, 102, b 60. Ruddie of colour as though it burned and of a ſanguine hue, 142, a 10. Seemed to be on a bright fier, 167, a 40. ¶ See Sights.
Aiſke a towne, burned by the Engliſh, 810, b 30
Alane earle of Britaine aduanced by duke William his vncle, 7, a 60
Alane the blacke earle, iſſueleſſe, 7, b 20
Alane le Rous, iſſueleſſe, 7, b 20
Alan the ſon of Stephan, 7, b 30
Alanſon beſieged & yelded vp, 561, a 40
Albemarle beſieged by French king, 146, b 30. Wone by the earle of Flanders, 88, b 30
Albemarle William, whoſe ſon ſhould haue beene made king of England, 22, a 10
Alberike ruler of Northumberland, 13, a 40
Albertus de Laſco, &c: his coming into England, 1353, b 40. Prepareth for his returne into Poland, 1354, b 60. Deſcribed, 1355, a 10. Interteined at Oxford, 50, 60, b 10. His departing thenſe, 20. ¶ See Polander.
Aldermen of London his authoritie, 120, a 30. Seuen deceaſed within the ſpace of ten moneths, 1209, b 60, 1132, b 10 ¶ See Almſhouſes, Charitie, Londoners, and Schoole.
Aldgitha queene, ſiſter to Edwin & Mercia ſent to Cheſter, 1, a 30
Aldred archbiſhop of Yorke, 1, a 40. Crowneth duke William, 1, b 20. And Mawd queene, 6, a 60. Dieth for griefe, b 60.
Alexander king of Scots deceaſſeth, the manner thereof, 283, a 10
Alexander biſhop of Lincolne fled into Scotland, 8, a 30
Alexander Robert. ¶ See Juſts triumphant.
Alexander. ¶ See Pope.
Alice the daughter of erle Morteine ſold for monie, 84, a 60,
Allum deere, 791
Almaine great and tall incountred withall by the duke of Suffolke, 833, b 60, 834, a 10
Almes. ¶ See Charitie.
Almeſhouſes for the poore, 1311, b 20. within Biſhopſgate, 1062, b 30. Of Dauid Smith for poore widows, 1375, b 50, 1376. For the releefe of the poore, 1377, b 30
Almiramumoli king of the Saracens ſeineth himſelfe dead, 124, a 20
Altars taken downe and tables ſet in their roome, 1062, b 10
Ambaſſadour into Denmarke, 892, b 10. 1348. a 20, 30, &c. Sent into France, 110, b 10, 167, a 50, 205, a 60, 209, a 20, 257, a 20, 336, a 20, 351, a 50, 477, a 30, 485, b 30, 546, b 30, 849, a 10, &c: 1229, a 10, a 10, 20, 1129, a 50, 1380, a 50, 60, 1381, all. 1382, a 10, &c. ¶ Sée Sackuill. Sent to the generall councell, they come to the councell, 236, b 60. At Cambzeie, 260, b 10. Sent into Germanie, 292, b 20. Sent to the king of Almaigne, 260, b 60. To Philip archduke of Burgogne, 777, a 50. To the pope, 242, a 20, 365, a 50, 380, a 20, 535, a 20, 30, 381, b 10, 237, a 60, 205, b 10, 179, b 60, 187, a 50, b 30, 29, a 50, 31, b 10, 20, &c. Sent to the king of Scots, 297, b 20, 162, a 60, 163, b 30, 1402, b 30. Sent into Spaine, 248, b 30. To the emperour Charles, 897, b 60. The answer which they receiue, 899, a 10. Sent from Alfonse king of Castile, &c: 100, b 50. Sent from the king of Connagh in Ireland, 96, b 40. Sent from the emperour, 1093, a 30, 961, a 50, 894, a 30, 891, a 60, 839, a 60: note, 791, a 30, 35, a 10, 38, a 10, 75, a 60. Out of France into England, 1238, a 20. From the K. of Spaine, 808, b 60, 894, a 60, b 10. From the French king with a traine, 848, a 40, 50, 60, 771, a 50, 546, b 30, 1315, b 60, 1316, a 10, 518, a 30, 474, b 40, 350, b 60, 282, b 50, 334, b 60. From the good townes in Flanders, 368, a 60. From the king of Hungarie, 894, b 40. Out of Muscouie, 1132, b 60, 1211, b 50, 60. From the duke of Burgogne, 693, b 30, 60. From the pope, 336, a 10. Out of Scotland, 705, a 30, 518, a 60, 159, b 60, 875, b 40. From Swethen about a marriage, 1185, a 60, b 10

Ambassador ligier of Spaine. ¶ Sée Mendoza.

Ambassage disdainefull, 545, a 10. Roiall into France, 477, a 60

Amberuilliers castell taken, 589, a 60

Amphibalus bodie found and buried at saint Albons, 101, b 30

Amphibologie of this word daughter, 156, b 10

Ambition was Anselme loth to be suspected of, 28, a 10. Of earle Robert of Northumberland, 22, b 10. Of earle John, 132, b 40. In the French and Spanish kings aspiring to the empire, 851, a 40, &c. Of archbishop Thurstane notable, 38, b 10. Of bishop Longchampe, 129, a 10. Of an old aged bishop of Durham: note, 119, b 40, 50, 60. Of earles suing to be kings, 1, a 30. Of two archbishops, 39, b 60. Of bishops, 38, b 20. Contentious, 121, a 30. Of two monks labouring for an abbasie, 18, b 60. Of mans nature, 76, a 40, 714, a 30. The working thereof, 739, b 60. And fruits thereof: noted in Robert, 12, a 30. It will haue a fall: note, 734, b 60. Note the whole storie, from page 1083, a 60, b 10, &c. 1084, b 10, &c. ¶ Sée Selim and Turke.

Amsterdam a towne of great concourse and commerce, inexpugnable, 1430, b 30, 50

Anabaptists do penance and are burned, 946, a 40, 50. Their heresies, recantation, and penance at Pauls crosse, 1260, b 10, 20, 30, &c. Banished. 1261, b 20. Burned in Smithfield, 1261, b 40. Warne in Amsterdam, 1430, b 40

Anger and what the heat thereof driueth a man vnto: note, 211, b 10. ¶ Sée Enuie.

Angiers citie taken, 158, b 30. Wone of king John by assault, 170, a 30. And by him repared, 170, b 30

Angleseie inuironed with the sea, 23, a 40

Angolesme recouered by the Frenchmen, 369, a 30

Anion, a rode made thereunto by the duke of Clarence, 579, b 60

Anne Askew and others arreigned and acquited, 968, b 10, &c.

Anne Bullen created marchionesse of Penbroke, 928, b 30. ¶ Sée Quéene.

Anne of Cleeue, a marriage betweene hir and king Henrie the eight concluded, 947, b 60. She is receiued at Calis, landeth in Kent, the order of hir receiuing on Black heath, 948, a 40, b 30. The meeting of hir and the king, hir chariot wherein she rode all hir tournie, hir welcome to Greenewich, 949,, a 50, b 20, 60. She is married to king Henrie the eight, 950, a 10, &c. At quéene Maries coronation, 1091, a 30. Deceaseth, 1133, b 60

Annates forbidden to be paid to the pope, 928, a 40

Annuities. ¶ Sée Patents.

Anselme archbishop of Canturburie elected, 20, a 60. At strife with William Rufus, and why, 24, a 10. His shift for his paiment to William Rufus and his honest satisfaction, 22, b 10. ¶ Sée Archbishop. Prepareth to auoid the realme by ship, and complaineth to the pope of William Rufus, 26, a 10. His admonition from Rome to william Rufus, returneth into England, 27, b 60. At the instance of Hugh earle of Chester commeth ouer into England, 28, a 10. Restored home, 28, b 20. Goeth to Rome, 31, b 20. Denieth to do homage to Henrie the first: note, 29, a 50. Holdeth a councell at Westminster: note, and what was there decreed, 30, a 60. Refuseth to consecrat the bishops inuested by the king, 31, a 60. Banished, and his see seized vpon into the kings hands, 32, a 10. Received into Henrie the firsts fauour and returneth home, 33, b 20, 30. Held a synod, and what was there decreed, 34, b 10. Writeth to pope Paschall that he would not send archbishop Thomas of yorke his pall, 35, a 20. His curse feared of king Henrie the first and his bishops, 36, b 30. He falleth sicke, 35, b 60. His death, and what countrie man he was, 36, a 30

Antedating of the kings seale treasonable and so executed, 953, a 20

Anticipation. ¶ Sée Subsidie.

Antipape, 421, a 50, b 50, 475. a 10, 535, a 10, 24, b 20. ¶ Sée Fitzleo, Pope, and Schisme.

Antiquitie reuerenced, note the meaning of the proclamation, 1321, b 30. Presented vnto quéene Elisabeth at Norwich, 1293, b 30, 1294, a 60, b 10

Antwerpe entred into by the Spaniards who plaied the cruell tyrants, 1263, a 10. Interteineth the duke of Alanson right royallie: note, 1332, 1333, &c: to 1344, a 10. Retorteth at the duke of Alansons comming, 1331, a 60. ¶ Sée Duke of Alanson.

Apparell of king Henrie the eight at his coronation, 801, a 40. Running at the ring, 805, b 60. Of him and his nobles going to meet Maximilian, 820, a 10, 20. After the taking of Tornaie, 822, b 60. Sumptuous at quéene Annes coronation, 931, a 10, &c. b 60. Of the duke of Alanson whereat the French wondered, 1337, a 10. Of William Rufus counted gorgious then, but now verie simple, 27, b 40. Of Edward the second gorgious and triumphant, 322, a 20. Sumptuous of Richard the second, 501, b 40. Of sir John Arundell verie sumptuous, 423, b 50. Strange of prince Henrie, sonne to Henrie the fourth, 539, a 30. Gorgious of Richard the seconds court: note, at the verie end of his storie, 544. Of Edward the fourth at an interview with the French king, 699, a 60, b 10, &c. Sumptuous of the earle of Northumberland, 791, a 60. Sumptuous of the duke of Buckingham, 801, a 10. Of great estates, 825, a 20. Statelie in France at a tilt, 834, a 30. Of the earle of Surie receiuing the French kings ambassadors, 148, a 40. Statelie of the duchie of Brabant, 1336, a 20. Of the monsieur of Brabant, 1333, b 60. Of the king of England and France at an interuiew, 851, a 50, b 60, 859, a 60, 860, a 20, 30, 40. Right gorgious in a shew, 807, b 40. Faire suites giuen by king John and the archbishop of Canturburie to their seruants: note, 163, a 60. Disguised souldiers in womens apparell: note, 1188, b 40. Of women wherein a bishop disguiseth himselfe, 132, a 10. Costlie forbidden, 111, b 40. An act for it, 353, a 40, 396, b 40. Of a knight all not worth foure shillings, 1099, b 20. Changed from robes to rags: note, 460, b 30. ¶ Sée Waske.

Apparition. ¶ Sée Vision.

Appeales to Rome, 213, a 40, 133, a 60, 98, a 50, 210, a 30. Forbidden, &c, 74, a 30. Of the prince of Wales before the French king, 401, a 20

Appletree. ¶ Sée Gun.

Apprentises at what time admitted to fellowships of companies, 120, a 20

Aques besieged by earle Richard, Henrie the seconds sonne, 99, b 40

Aquitane full of warre, 403, a 50. The grant thereof to the duke of Lancaster reuoked, 485, b 10. Recouered by the French, the dignitie and state of that dukedome, 641, a 40, 50

Arbitrement of certeine graue persons in the strife betweene William Rufus and his brother Robert retected, and why, 21, a 60

Archbishop Aldred submitteth himselfe to duke William, 1, a 50. ¶ Sée Aldred. Anselme, ¶ Sée Anselme. Arundell of Canturburie his answer for the clergie, he chaketh, the kings answer to him, 526, a 20, 40, 60. Baldwine of Canturburie exhorted men to go to war against the Saracens, 108, a 40. Ddeceaseth, 130, b 50. Boniface of Canturburie vncle to quéene Elenor, 225, a 60. Described, and how he came to be aduanced, 226, a 60. He deceaseth, 767, a 30. Courtneie of Canturburie his visitation, 483, b 60. He excommunicateth the wicleists: note, 484, a 10. Authorised by the pope to leuie foure pence of the pound, &c: note, 485, a 20. Cranmer of Canturburie, 929, b 30. ¶ Sée Cranmer. Edmund of Canturburie getteth him to Pontneie to remaine in voluntarie exile, 224, b 60. What caused him to depart England, his death and surname, reputed a saint, 225, a 10, 20. Grindall of Canturburie elected, 1262, a 30. Deceaseth, 1354, a 20. Heath of Canturburie his words vttered in the parlement house touching the proclaming of quéene Elisabeth, 1170, a 40. Lord chancellor, 1130, b 40. Hubert elected of Canturburie, lord cheefe iustice, 140, a 30, 145, b 30. Complained of to the pope, 153, a 20. His words at the coronation of king John, 158, b 60. Lord chancellor, to the mislike of some: note, 159, b 30. Deceaseth, 169, a 50. Lankranke. ¶ Sée Lankranke. Langton of Canturburie elected whiles two others were struing for it, 171, a 10. Meuill of Canturburie commended, 213, a 60. His conditions, b 10, &c. Parker of Canturburie deceaseth, 1261, a 10. His commendation, 20. A benefactor diuerse waies, 40, 50, 60. ¶ Sée Parker. Rafe of Canturburies returne into England out of Normandie, 41, a 10. Dieth, 42, a 60. Reignolds election of Canturburie bred much discord, 169, a 60. Richard of Canturburie elected receiueth his pall, 37, b 20. His consecration disturbed, 85, b 60. His death, and conditions: note, 108, a 40. Robert of Canturburie accused by Edward the first to the pope, suspended, 313, b 50. Roger of Canturburie, 64, b 20. Seuage of Canturburie deceaseth, 795, b 30. Stephan of Canturburie deceaseth, 210, a 10. Stigand. ¶ Sée Stigand. Stratford of Canturburie in Edward the the thirds displesure, he writeth vnto him, refuseth to come to the court, 361, a 10, 30, 60. Sudburie of Canturburie made lord chancellour, 424, b 50. Theobald of Canturburie consecrated, 50, a 60. Deceased, 68, b 60. Thomas, 9, a 20. ¶ See Thomas. Wethersheid elected to Canturburie, 210, a 10. Whitegift doctor of diuinitie, thankfull for his aduancements, the armes of both sées which he inioied blasoned, his posie answerable to his propertie, 1355, b 30, &c. Made of the priuie councell, 1434, b 60. William of Canturburie, 42, a 60

Archbishop of Canturburie primat of Ireland, 22, b 50. Made the popes legat, 147, b 50. Besieged Marleburgh castell, 142, a 40. Flieth out of the realme, 59, a 60. Goeth to Rome, 39, b 60. Hath power legantine, 69, a 10. He and king William at contention and whie, 24, a 20. Capteine of an armie, 2 a 10. Put by from crowning the king, 1, b 20. Accused of treason by the speaker in parlement, 490, b 40. Condemned to perpetuall imprisonment, 491 a 50. His words at a parlement in the behalfe of the clergie, that would be exempted from paieng of subsidies, &c: 301, b 60. His goods confiscat, his obstinacie, 302, a 20, 50. Purchaseth a grant of the pope to leuie monie, 238, a 60. Restored to his sée, 514, a 10. His curse, 241, a 60. He and winchester made frends, 247, b 10. Standeth against Henrie the third in defense of his clergie, at contention with the earle of Kent, appealeth to Rome, dieth in his returne from thense, 213, a 30, &c. Readie to broch new contention, 204, b 60, Legat and lord cheefe iustice of England, 147, b 60

Archbishops at contention for primasie: note, 9, a 30. Decided by the king and bishops of the lands, 9, a 60. Sentenced by decree of the pope, 9, b 40. Go both to Rome, and whie, 31, b 20. At strife, 35. all. For the primasie: note, 37, b 40. Thorough ambition, 39, b 60 Sue both personallie for their consecration to the pope, 40, a 10, &c. At strife for a pece of seruice about king Henrie the first, 43, a 40. At strife for carrieng of their crosses, 142, b 20. At strife in king Henrie the eights time, 919, b 30. Of Canturburies see void foure yeares, and in Henrie the first hands, 37, a 60

Archbishops of Canturburie from the first to the last, their names and liues, &c: set downe in a collection, 1435, a 10, &c.

Archbishop Geffreie bastard of Yorke, 119, b 10. Obteineth his pall, 130, b 20, Committed to prison: note, 130, b 60. Deprined and whie, 161, b 60. Restored to all his dignities, 173, b 20. Stealeth out of the realme, 170, b 50. Deceaseth, 176, b 10. Gerard of Yorke consecrateth the bishops of Henrie the firsts inuesting, 31, b 10. Receiueth his pall, 31, b 60. Deceaseth, 35, a 10. Greie of Yorke, 182, a 60. Greenewich, and what summes of monie the pope had of him, 315, a 20. Meuill, 969, b 10, Roger sent to the pope, 72, a 60. Forbidden the vse of the sacraments, 76, b 10. Deceaseth, 105, b 20. Sands, 1145, b 50. ¶ See Sands. Thomas sometimes Henrie the firsts chapleine and much a dooabout his consecration, 35, a 10. &c. Refuseth to come to Canturburie to be consecrated, 35 a 50. Suspended, &c. 35, b 60, 36, a 10. Hath his pall sent him from the pope, 36, a 50. Submits himselfe to Canturburie, note the forme, 36, b 30. Dieth, 37, b 40. Thurstane of Yorke, 37, b 40. Restored vpon condition, 40, b 60. Made lieutenant of the north parts, 49, a 20. In armes against the Scots, 49, a 50. Deceaseth, 1211, a 50

Archbishop of Yorke acknowleged primat of all Scotland, 9, b 20, His subiection to the archbishop of Canturburie: note, 9, b 10. Sent ouer to Guisnes to be kept in safe custodie, 693, b 10. Inconstant and variable: note, 683, a 20, 60, b 10. A conspirator, he is in armes, 529, b 10, 20. Forbidden to be at Richard the firsts coronation, 143, b 30. The estimation that was had of him, his protestation whie he put on armes, b 60. He and others arrested, put to death, reputed a martyr, 530, a 30, 60, a 10. Of counsell with the Persies conspiracie, 522, a 10, 20. Made cardinall, resigneth his archbishoprike, 279, b 20. Crowneth Henrie the first, and whie, 28, a 20. Deprined of his crosse, 257, b 50. Accursed by the pope, his constancie: note, 256, b 40. Gouernour of the realme, 229, b 10. Proud, deposed, and out of fauour with Richard the first, 147, b 40. Accused but to no purpose, 143, a 10. His presumptuous demeanor, 98, a 30. He and Elie reconciled by Richard the firsts means, 144, a 60. He and Durham at strife, 133, a 60. Sicke and his place supplied, 49, a 60

Archbishop of Cullen visiteth Beckets towne, 107, b 60. Of Rone cheefe gouernour of England, 132, b 30. Of saint Andrews in Scotland receiueth his staffe from an altar, 41, a 50. A deadlie enimie to Henrie the eight, 959, b 10. Of Vienna the popes legat not receiued as legat, and whie, 29, a 40

Archbishops of England are in no respect to deale with the pope: note, 24. Their authoritie notablie exemplified in Inselme: note, 24, 25. Their election annulled vpon good causes: note, 210, a 10. Six at London in time of the parlement, 256, a 10

Archbishoprike of Canturburie void moze than three yeares, 225, a 60 Void foure yeares: note, 18, b 10. Let out to farme, 206, a 40

Archbishoprikes giuen to strangers by duke William, 9, a 20

Archdecons should be decons, 30, b 30

Archdeconries not to be let out to farme, 30, b 30

Archer good was Henrie the eight, 806, a 40

Archer English of the garrison of Calis, a notable pece of seruice against the enimie, 380, a 60

Archers of England driue the French from their siege, 363, a 10. Notable seruice against the Genowaies: note, 372, a 40, 50, Victorious against the French, 373, a 60. Seruice against the Scots, 987, a 60. Fulfill a prophesie: note, 388, b 50. Force against the French, 389, a 40, Worthie actiuitie, 396, b 60. Valiancie against the Spaniards, 399, a 30. Good seruice vnder sir Hugh Caluerlie, 422, b 50. Under the conduct of a préest, 443, b 50 Shot killeth in a quarell, 447, a 50. Great seruice against the Spanish & French 448, a 10. Good seruice against the Saracens, 473, a 60. In the time of a conspiracie: note, 516, a 30. The greatest force of the English armie: note, 553, a 60. Good seruice at Teukesburie field, 687, b 60. Good seruice vnder sir Humfreie Talbot, 770, b 30. Good seruice against the enimie, 771, a 10. Of the Cornish rebels whose arrowes were in length a full cloth yard, 782, b 10. Game made with laieng wast of gardens in Mowe field, 785, a 20. A shew of two hundred in a maigame before king Henrie the eight, 836, b 40. Gall the French hostlemen, 966, a 60

Archers Irish, 986, a 20. Discomfited, 984, b 40. ¶ See Inclosures.

Ard assaulted by the Englishmen, 528, b 40

Arden murthered by the means of his wife a notable whore: note, 1062, b 40, &c.

Arden. ¶ See Sumeruill.

Arks besieged, 819, a 30

Arlet duke William Conquerors mother the daughter of a burgesse, 20, a 10

Armach in Ireland, where the see metropolitane is, 100, b 40

Armenia, the king thereof commeth ouer into England for aid against the Turkes, 448, b 50. Sueth for a safeconduct to come into England, which is denied him, 453, b 30. Would gladlie that a peace betweene England and France should be concluded, 480. b 30

Armetrida the wife of Hugh Lou earle of Chester, 20, a 40

Armie called the armie of God and the holie church, 185. a 50

Armour, and an ordinance for the same, 105, a 30. ¶ See England.

Arnalt knight his valiantnesse, 997, a 10, 40

Arrogancie of Becket blamed, 77, b 10. ¶ See Ambition and Pride.

Arsacide. ¶ See Saracens.

Arthur made awaie by meanes of his vncle king John, and whie, 7, b 30

Arthur the eldest and first son of Henrie the seuenth borne, 769, b 10. Had carnall knowledge with his wife, he is sent into Wales, 789, a 50, 60, b 20. Deceaseth, 790, b 10

Arthur Plantagenet created vicount Lisle, 878, a 50. Deceaseth in the tower, 955, a 60. ¶ See Plantagenet.

Arthur of Britaine. ¶ See Duke.

Arundell castell besieged, 30, a 50

Arundell knight drowned, his excesse and sumptuous apparell, 423, b 10, 60

Aske a notable rebell pardoned: note, 942, b 30. He and others practise to raise a new rebellion, 944, a 10, &c. He with his coparteners is executed, 944, b 10

Assassini. ¶ See Saracens,

Assemblies vnlawfull an act there against, 1061, a 30

Assise of bread published by proclamation: note, 166, a 20, 30

Astronomers deceiued, and how they excused their false predictions, 882, b 20. Deceiued in their predictions, 1356, b 30, &c.

Attaindors at parlament, 946, b 20. 955, a 10. ¶ See Treason.

Audleie lord cheefe capteine of the Cornish rebels ignominiouslie drawne vnto Tiburne and executed, 782, a 10, b 30. Slaine, 649, b 10

Audleie knight lord chancellor, 929, b 20. Keeper of the great seale, 928, b 20

Auricular confession. ¶ See Confession.

Auxerre citie taken by sir Robert Knols, 391, b 30

B.

Babington and his confederats. ¶ See Traitors.

Bacon knight lord keeper deceaseth, 1271, b 60. His epitaph in Paules, 1272, a 10. See more of him, 1286, b 40. ¶ See Chancellors.

Badbie his notable constancie, 536, a 60

Badge of the bright sunne the earle of Marches badge, 660, a 20. Of the earle of Warwike worne in euerie mans cap: note, 678, b 40. Of Richard the second, 500, b 60. Of queene Elisabeth, note, 1290, b 10

Badges a bill against the wearing of them, 472, b 60

Baffuling what it is among the Scots, 427, a 30

Bagot knight and prisoner discloseth secrets of trouble, 512, b 50, 60, &c: 513, a 10, &c.

Bailiffes first that bare rule in London, 119, b 60. ¶ See London, and Officers.

Bainards castell new built, 788, a 10

Baion yelded to the Englishmen, 293, b 20

Bakers sell bread lacking six of seuen ounces weight in a penie loke, 282, b 60. Punished by the pillorie, 259, b 40

Bales writting within the compasse of a penie, 1262, b 10
Baliol king of Scots obteineth the kingdome of Scotland, 288, b 60. The forme of his fealtie to the king of England, 288, b 60. 289, b 50. His homage, 290, a 20. Crowned king of Scotland, 349, b 60. Chaled out of Scotland, 350, a 20. Doth homage to Edward the third, 350, b 20. Departeth this life, 308, b 60
Banbourgh. ¶ See Castell.
Banket roiall: note, 254, a 50. 825, a 30. Of two hundred and three score dishes. 849, a 40. Of two hundred dishes vpon the sudden, 922, b 20. Of thirtie or fortie dishes and not one of them fish nor flesh, 1192, b 50. Full of proper deuises, 1425, a 30
Banketting house of French king described, 849, b 10, &c. Of Henrie the eight in his palace at Guisnes, 857, b 60. within the towne of Calis, 861, b 20, &c. At westminster builded, 1315, b 10. How garnished and decked, 30. The costs and charges thereof, 40
Bankerupts practise, 812, b 20
Banishment of bishops and other English in duke williams time, 8, a 30. By whome ordeined, 33, b 50. For twelue moneths, 269, b 10. Of the earle of Cornewall out of the realme, 319, b 60. Perpetuall, 465, a 30
Banister the duke of Buckingham seruant receiueth the duke in perill of life into his house, 743, b 50. Betraieth him into the hands of his enimies for monie, Gods secret iudgements vpon him and his children: note, 744, a 50, 60
Barnabées date kept holie date all London ouer, 1062, b 10
Barnard of Newmarch a Norman, 17, a 60
Barnes doctor and two merchants of the Stilliard did penance at Paules crosse for heresie, 892, b 60. For a sermon inuective against bishop Gardener. asketh him forgiuenesse, 950, b 10. He and others executed, 952, b 30
Barnet towne how seated, 684, a 10
Barnet field. ¶ See Battell.
Barons foure vnder the earle of Chester, 20, a 20
Barton the Scotish pirat, 426, b 20. Incountreth the lord Howard, he is slaine, 811, a 20, &c.
Bastard of Burgogne ambassadour into England, iusts betwixt him and the lord Scales, 669, a 10, 20
Bastard to a king made a bishop, 99, b 60
Bastards made legitimat, 487, b 10
Bath taken by the bishop of Constance, 17, a 40. Iohn and welles when and by whome vnited, 27, b 50
Battell of Agincourt, 552, b 60, 553, a 10, &c. At Barnet, 684, a 10, &c. 685, a 10, &c. Of Blorheath, 649, a 50, 60, b 10. Of S. Edmundsburie, 90, b 20. Of Northhampton, 654, b 20. Of Palmesundaie, 664, a 40. Of Saxton. ¶ See Palmesundaie. At Hedgcote or Banberie, 672, b 30. At Exham, 666, b 10. At Teukesburie, 687, b 60. The first at saint Albons, 643, a 60, 644, a 20. At Wakefield, 659, b 10. Of three long houres betweene the English & French, great losse on the English side, 601, b 30. Second at saint Albons, 660, a 60. Of Mortimers crosse, 660, a 20. Of Nerneuil, 588, a 50, b 40. Of Ferribrig the thirteenth of March, one thousand foure hundred three score and one, wherein twentie thousand were slaine, most knights and gentlemen, 1234, a 50. Betweene duke William and his sonne Robert: note, 12, a 40. Betweene the Danes and Normans verie fierce, 7, a 40. Begun with praier: note, 371, a 60. At Kenils crosse, 376, a 20. Of Aulroie, 396, b 10, &c. Of Sluise where the English were victors, 358, b 10. Of Banokesburie, 322, a 40. Called the White battell, and why, 325, a 10. Of Borroughbridge, 341, a 10. Of Comeran in Vlster, 322, b 60. At Dunbar betweene the English and Scots in Edward the first time, 299, b 30. Betweene the earle of Lincolne and the earle of Arthois, 302, b 30, 40, &c. Of Fowkirke, 307, b 30. Betweene Henrie the third and his barons: note, 267, b all. Of Euesham, 270, a 50. Of Chesterfield, 272, a 40. Betweene king Richard the third and the earle of Richmond, called Bosworth field, 758, b 60. At Stoke neere to Newarke betweene the earle of Lincolne, &c: and Henrie the seuenth, 766, b 40, 50, 767, a 10, 20. Of saint Aulbin in Britaine betweene the duke of Britaine and the French king, 769, a 30. At Blackheath, 782, b 10. Of Spurs, 822, a 50. At Floddon between the English and the Scotish, 426, 427, 428. Of Pauia, 884, a 60, b 10, &c. At Muskleborrow. ¶ See Leith and Scotland. Stated by Gods prouidence: note, 943, a 30. Of the bridge of Bouins, 183, a 60. Sharpe and bloudie betweene duke Robert and Henrie the first brethren, 33, a 10, 20, &c. Three things to be forseene by them that shall giue it, 52, b 50, 60. Of Wonadmore in Ireland, 59, b 10
Battell betwixt fishes, 225, b 60. Of herrings, 600, a 40. Betwixt flies and gnats, 465 b 60. Their slaughter, 466, a 10. ¶ See warres.
Battell abbeie, why so called and by whome built, 15, a 40. The church to what saint dedicated, 21, a 40. Their abbie roll, 3, 4, 5
Baulbason a French knight valiant fighteth with Henrie the fift hand to hand, 577, a 10, 60
Becket Thomas archdecon of Canturburie, 64, b 20. Lord chancellour, 65, a 40. Sent into France, 67, a 50. His & Henrie the seconds first falling out, 68, b 20. His authoritie, 69, a 10. A better courtier than a preacher, 69, a 30. Practiseth secret treason, 69, b 10. Receiueth an oth, 70, b 10. Repenteth him thereof, and would haue fled the realme, 70, b 20, &c. Cited to appeare before the king and sentence against him, 70. b 60. Condemned in fiue hundred markes, 71, a 10. Called to an account, 71, a 20. Will not be perswaded to submit himselfe to the king. appealeth to Rome, goeth to the court, is reputed a traitor, and disallowed to be archbishop, 71, all. His stout courage, 72, a 10, His flight by night, 72, a 40. His complaint to the pope, 72, b 50. Resigneth his pall, 73, a 50. His curse, 74, b 20. An edict against him, 74, a 20, Six years in exile, 77 a 30. His arrogancie and wilfulnesse in opinion, in fauour with the French king, reconciled to Henrie the second the king of England, 77, b all. Is aduised by the French king, returneth into England, is complained of to Henrie the second by the archbishop of Yorke, he is killed, 78, all, 79, all. His death discussed, 82, b 50. The king purgeth himselfe of his death, 83, b 30. Canonized a saint, his holie date and collect for the same, 85, b 10, 20. His towne visited by the French king, 103, a 60. His towne visited by the archbishop of Cullen, 107, b 60. His shrine visited by the earle of Flanders, 152, a 60. His sword in the ministration of an oth, 303, b 40. His shrine taken awate and his dead bones burnt, 945, b 50
Becons and the vse of them in countries neere the sea, 752, a 30
Bedford castell besieged, 206, b 20. Deliuered to the barons, 185, a 60
Bele doctor an vndiscreet and seditious preacher, 841, a 10, 20
Beleme. ¶ See Erle.
Bell a seditious priest arreigned, condemned, his prophesie, his sermon to the rebels, his seditious letter, his execution at saint Albons, 437, a 40, &c.
Bell rong at eight of the clocke at night by whom appointed, and whie, 6, a 50. ¶ See Chime.
Bell castell assaulted and yelded vp to the English, 879, b 30
Belman. ¶ See Common crier.
Benbrike doctor poisoned at Rome, 835, b 50
Benefices belonging to strangers their valuation taken, 236, b 40. The value of them in strangers hands, 247 b 20. Bestowed without consent of patrones, 224, a 10. Impropriat, 214, b 60. With request to the pope that he would not meddle with their reseruations, 408, b 60, 409, &c. Inhibited by the king & how: note, 363, b 60. The best in strangers hands, 365, a 60. A proclamation that all English beneficed men in Rome should returne into England, 474, b 50, 60. ¶ See Abbeies, Bishops, Churches, Clergie, Pope, Sequestration.
Benenolence granted to Edward the fourth, 694, a 50. Put into Henrie the seuenths head to be leuied ouer the whole land, 792, a 20. An exaction of monie of whole deuise. 771, b 60. ¶ See Subsidie.
Benenolence of the French king to the earle of Richmond: note, 745, a 40
Benningfield knight his churlish vsing of the ladie Elisabeth his prisoner and in his keeping, 1117, b 40. He is too streict and seuere in his office against the ladie Elisabeth, 1155, b 10, &c. He grudgeth at the gentle intertetnement of hir, his rude and vngentle behauiour, 1156, a 60, b 10, 20, &c. 60. His cruell dealing towards hir, 1157, a 30
Berebeating on sundaie reuenged by Gods iust iudgment: note, 1353, a 30
Berds shauen, and rounded haire in vse with the Normans, 5, b 10
Berengaria daughter to the king of Nauarre, king Richard the firsts wife, 126, b 40, 127, a 40
Berkhamsted castell surrendred, 198, a 60
Bertie, husband to the duchesse of Suffolke attached by bishop Gardiner: note, 1142, b 10, &c. ¶ See duchesse Katherine of Suffolke.
Berwike fortified, 320, b 10. Taken by the Scots, 383, a 60. Besieged, 350, a 30. Surrendred, 350, a 50. Betraied to the Scots, 324, a 20. Summoned and wone by Edward the first, 298, a 20, 50. Fortified by Edward the first, 299, a 30. Chéeflie regarded, 881, b 40. yelded to Henrie the fourth, 530, b 50. The castell wone by the Scots, recouered by the earle of Northampton, 446, b 20. Wone by the Scots, 421, a 60. Recouered by the earle of Northumberland, 421, b 10. Wone by the Scots, recouered by the English, 418, a 60. The capteine thereof will not suffer the duke of Lancaster to enter, 439, a 10. Deliuered to the French king and of him possessed, 665, a 60. Wone by the Englishmen, 705, b 60. Deliuered to the lord Stanlie, &c: 706, b 60
Betrice Henrie the thirds daughter borne, 230, b 10
Beuchamps tournie to the holie land against the Saracens, 21, a 60. His valiantnesse, 88, a 10
Beuclerke Henrie why so called, 15, a 60
Beuer castell to whom it apperteined, 189, a 30
Beuerleie towne burned, 113, b 20
Beumont vicount his daughter married vnto the Scotish king, 110, a 60. Discomfited by the Scots, 323, a 40
Beaumont lord of Heinault: note, note,337, a 60,346,b 60,347. Forſaketh the king of Englands ſeruice,367,b 50, Lord high conſtable of England, 627, a 20

Bible in euerie church commanded to be read,945,b 40. The neceſſarie vſe and beneſite thereof,1042, b 50. Preſented to queene Elizabeth which ſhe promiſeth the citie often to read ouer,1175, b 60
Bigod Roger his ſpoiles and boties,17,a 50. Hugh ſometime ſteward to Henrie the firſt,46,b 40. Knight procureth a commotion,943, b 60. Apprehended and executed, 944,a 10,b 10
Bilneie burned, 928,a 10
Bishop Dotian an Italian of Herefoꝛd, Bath and Wels, 771,a 40. Agelmarus. ¶ See Agelmarus. Alexãder. ¶ See Alexander. Anthonie of Durham his great reuenues, kept out of the abbeie of Durham, ſummoned to appeare beſoꝛe Edward the firſt, refuſeth, the concluſion of the ſtrife betweene him and the monks, 315,a 40,&c. Athelmarle Henrie the thirds halfe bꝛother biſhop of wincheſter, 243, a 10. Beauchampe of Saliſburie is ſent to the duke of Yoꝛke,&c: to know the loꝛds meaning that were bp in armes,649, b 60. Beaufoꝛt of wincheſter ſonne to John duke of Lancaſter, 590, b 60, 591,a 10,&c. Otherwiſe called the rich cardinall, deceaſed, and deſcribed, 627, b 60, 628. Chriſtianus. ¶ See Chriſtianus. Cox of Elie deceaſeth, his epitaph, 1321, b 60. Egelwinus. ¶ See Egelwinus. Ermenfred. ¶ See Ermenfred. Fiſher of Rocheſter complained of to king Henrie the eight, 911, b 40, 50. Beheaded,938,a 60. Foliot of London ambaſſadoꝛ to the French king, 72, a 50. Foꝛ of Durham owner of Noꝛham caſtell, 782, b 50. Of Exceſter ambaſſadour into Scotland, 767,b 50. Of wincheſter, 839, b 50, 60. ¶ See Corpus Chriſti college. His wiſedome in pꝛocuring the clergie to be contributoꝛs of monie foꝛ Henrie the ſeuenths behalfe,792, a 50, 60. Gardiner biſhop of wincheſter ambaſſadoꝛ into France, 939, a 60. ¶ See Gardiner. Geffreie of Lincolne king Henries baſe ſonne, 99, b 60. His letter to the archbiſhop of Canturburie, he reſigneth his biſhoꝛpike, 104, b 10, 40. Giffoꝛd of wincheſter refuſeth to be conſecrated at the archbiſhop of Yoꝛks hands, and therefoꝛe baniſhed and depꝛiued,31,b 10. ¶ See Gifkoꝛd. Godfreie of wincheſter ſonne to the loꝛd Richard de Lucie deceaſeth, 168, b 30. Graie of Noꝛwich loꝛd lieutenant of Ireland, 174,b 30. Graie of Noꝛwich pꝛeſident of the councell, 169, b 10. Groſted of Lincolne deceaſed,his pꝛaiſe,249,a 10. Harnie firſt biſhop of Elie, 36,a 30. Hoꝛne of wincheſter deceaſeth, 1299, b 60. Hugh of Lincolne his bold courage to king Richard the firſt,143, b 60. Deceaſeth, a deſcription of his doings, and life preſumptuous, 162, b 30. Admitted into the number of ſaints, 163, a 10. Of Couentrie reſtoꝛed to his ſee, 147, b 30. Jewell of Saliſburie deceaſeth, 1226, b 30. Liſle of Elie and the ladie Wake at variance, 392, a 10. Longchampe of Elie the popes legat, his ſtatelie poꝛt, 129, a 10. Depꝛiueth biſhops, meaneth to keepe earle John low, beſiegeth the caſtell of Lincolne, raiſeth his ſiege with diſhonour, breaketh agreements concluded, 129, ult. Loꝛd chancelloꝛ of England, 121, a 10. Moꝛton of Elie commended, 791, a 10. Buildeth vpon the dukes ambition, 737, b 10. Deuiſeth to be at his owne libertie in his biſhoꝛpike of Elie, he ſaileth into Flanders to the earle of Richmond, 741, a 60, b 10. What pagents he plaid, the high honour wherein he was placed, his ſubtill vndermining of the duke of Gloceſter, 736, b 10, 30, 50. Defeated the practiſes of king Richard the third and Peter Landoiſe, 747, b 60. Adiureth duke Richard to releaſe the realme by ſome deuiſe from the preſent euill eſtate, 738, a 60. A new conference betweene them, b 20. Made archbiſhop of Canturburie, cardinall, and loꝛd chancelloꝛ, 767, a 30. Odo. ¶ See Odo. Olmond. ¶ See Olmond. Pecocke of Chicheſter abiured at Paules croſſe: note, 646, a 20. Peter of Wincheſter gouernoꝛ of king Henrie the third, 202, a 60. Rafe of Durham his warlike exhoꝛtation, 49, a 60. Ralegh of wincheſter conſecrated by the pope, he ſtealeth out of the realme, he giueth to the pope ſix thouſand marks, 231, b 60. Ranulfe. ¶ See Ranulfe. Remeld of Herefoꝛd inueſted by the king: note, 31, a 50. Remigius. ¶ See Remigius. Richard of London tranſlated to the archbiſhoꝛpike of Canturburie, 37, b 10. Roger of Saliſburie put in truſt with the gouernement of the realme, 45, b 50. Ruthall of Durham, one of king Henrie the ſeuenths pꝛiuie councell, his booke of pꝛiuat affaires vnaduiſedlie deliuered in ſtead of the kings, diſaduantageable to himſelfe, 796, b 60. He dieth with griefe, 797, a 10. Samſon of Woꝛceſter the mouth of the biſhops, 36, a 60. Tunſtall. ¶ See Tunſtall. Wainfleet of wincheſter founder of Magdalene college in Oxford, 628, b 10, &c. Walkhelme. ¶ See Walkhelme. Walkher. ¶ See Walkher. Walter of Alba bꝛingeth Anſelme his pall, 25, b 60. ¶ See Walter, 1, a 50. Waltham of Saliſburie buried at Weſtminſter among the kings, 485, a 40. Warlewaſts woꝛds to pope Paſchall in behalfe of Henrie the firſt, 31, b 40. Watſon of wincheſter deceaſeth, 1368, b 60. Wickham of wincheſter remembꝛed and commended: note, 526, b 60, 527, a 10, &c. Made loꝛd chancelloꝛ, 466, b 50. William. ¶ See William. Wolſtane. ¶ See Wolſtane.
Biſhop of Beauuois taken pꝛiſoner, 150, b 50. In aduerſarie to Richard the firſt, two of his chapleins come to Richard the firſt, to intreat that they might wait vpon their maiſter, but are denied, 151, a 10
Biſhop of Carleil bold and faithfull, commended, 513, b 40. The firſt was a pꝛieſt, and the kings confeſſoꝛ, 44, b 20. Of Conſtance with others taketh Bath, 17, a 40. Of Couentrie committed to pꝛiſon, 318, a 30. Of Dublin made archbiſhop, 59, b 20. Of Durham created an earle, 119, b 50. Beſieged the caſtell of Tickhill, 142, a 30. Loſt his earledome. 144, a 10. Reſtrained of his libertie, 122, b 60. Chiefe ruler of the noꝛth parts, 121, a 10. He & earle Patrike at ſtrife, 161, a 10. By letters aſſwageth the Scotiſh kings diſpleaſure, hee goeth into Scotland, 785, a 30, 40. Winneth caſtels, 307, a 40. Of Elies taking bp of hoꝛſes to K. Richard the firſts vſe, 122, b 50, 60. Summoned to appeare at Reading, his returne to London, a declaration againſt him, he pꝛeſideth bp the tower, 131, all. His letter to the ſhiriffe of Kent, 130, b 30. Diſguiſeth himſelfe in womans apparell, he flieth, is betraied, and committed to pꝛiſon, complaineth of his wꝛongs to the pope, 132, a 10. He deceaſeth, 151, b 10. Of Elie impꝛiſoneth archbiſhop Geffreie of Yoꝛke, 130, b 30. Arriueth in England as a ſimple biſhop, 139, b 30. Sent ambaſſadour to the emperour, 148, a 30. Baniſhed, 50, b 30. Blind of Exceſter ſent to Rome from Henrie the firſt, 37, b 30. Put in charge with the citie of London, beheaded by the Londoners, 338, a 40, b 30. Herefoꝛd arreſted foꝛ treſon, 335, a 10. His deuiſe to get monie of the biſhops, 251, b 10. Of Ireland elected out of England, 22, a 50. Of Leege murthered, 140, a 10. Of Lincolne viſiteth abbeies, and is ſuſpended by the pope, 244, a 40, 50. Capteine of a band of men, 30, a 50. Of London taken bp with repꝛochfull woꝛds, and renenged by the Londoners, 412, a 20. His palace, where Richard ſecond kept open houſe, 474, a 10. Stout woꝛds to an earle, 458, a 20. Made loꝛd chancelloꝛ, 440, b 60. Ambaſſadour to the emperour, 168, b 20. Deane to the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 35, b 20. Of Noꝛwich in armes againſt the antipape, 441, b 50, 60, 442, a 40. Courageous and warlike, 444, a 20. Setteth foꝛward with his armie, & inuadeth Flanders, 442, b 10, 50. The oꝛder of his battell againſt the Flemings, 443, a 30. His diſobedience puniſhed, 445, a 20. His armie of fiue hundzed
C.iij.
kowtmen and manie hoꝛſemen, 176, b 50. Returneth out of Flanders into England, 444, b 60. Of Roſſe an enimie to the Engliſh eſtate, 1370, b 60. Of Saliſburies men and the Londoners in a riot, he maketh a great complaint of them to the king, 478, a 20, 50. Dieth foꝛ thought, 50, b 30. Made loꝛd chancelloꝛ, 51, a 10. Shamefullie murthered: note, 636, a 10. Of whitherne conſecrated, 119, b 10. Of Wincheſter lent Henrie the fift two hundzed thouſand pounds, 580, b 10. Made a cardinall, 596, b 10. Legated and vnlegated by the pope, 602, a 60, b 60
Biſhop earle of Kent, 13, a 60. Capteine of an armie, 7, b 40. Wiped of fiue thouſand pounds by William Rufus: note, 20, b 10. Depꝛiued of his ſtaffe by the king, 21, a 40. ¶ See Herbert. One reuengeth anothers death, 12, b 20
Biſhops choſen pꝛincipall iuſtices of the realme, 115, b 20. Sent ambaſſadours to the French king, 112, b 50. Foꝛbidden the vſe of the ſacrament, 76, b 10. Diſallow archbiſhop Thomas Becket, 71, b 40. Thinke to pleaſe God in breaking their oth, 46, b 40. Of Man firſt and ſecond, 59. b 10. Threatened, 59, a 40. In ſuſpicion to be diſloiall, 50, b 10. Inueſting doone by the kings of England, 29, a 50. ¶ See William Rufus. At ſtrife about crowning the king, and ſaieng maſſe beſoꝛe him, 37, a 10. Tranſlation from ſee to ſee, 36, a 30. Of pꝛiuie councell and ambaſſadoꝛs to Rome, 31, b 20. Fine conſecrated by Anſelme in one date, 34, a 40. Inueſtitures giuen awaie from the king by the popes ſentence, 31, b 60. Of a late election Saliſburie and Herefoꝛd, 30, a 60, b 10. Depꝛiued by the biſhop of Elie, 129, a 50. Contentious and ambitious, 121, a 50. Elected and conſecrated, 119, a 60, b 10. Quarell with the monks of Canturburie, 169, b 30. Thꝛee dead in one yeare, 788, b 20. Reſtoꝛed and others depꝛiued, 1089, a 20. Trauell to make peace, 265, a 30. Would rather become maꝛtyꝛs than loſe their monie, 252, b 40. Pꝛactiſe to diſappoint the archbiſhop of Canturburie of his purpoſe, 243, a 50. Readineſſe to reſiſt the Saracens, 209, a 50. Ambaſſadoꝛs, 205, a 60. Cannot tell what to ſaie in the contention betweene king William Rufus and Anſelme: note, 25. Of Ireland their names and ſees, 22, b 50. Seditious and ranke warꝛioꝛs, 17, a 30, 40. In fault that duke William was king of England, 1, a 40, 50. Submit themſelues to duke William, 1, a 40. Swoꝛne to be loiall, 1, b 20. Flie into foꝛren lands and countries, 6, a 20. Sees remoued from ſmall towns to cities of moꝛe fame, 11, b 60. In armes againſt rebellious earls, 11, a 50. Of Scotland

Scotland consecrated by the archbishop of yorke, 9, b 20. Of Excester from the first to the last set downe in a catalog, 1300, a 20, 30, 1301, &c. Six receiue the communion, 1185, a 60. Deprined, & others succeeding, 1184, b 30. ¶ See Ambition, Archbishops, and Consecration.

Bishoprike of Carleils erection 44, b 20. Of Elie first erected, 36, a 30. Of Lincolne void seuenteene yeares, 75, a 60, 109, b 40. Of Waterford in Ireland erected, 22, b 40

Bishoprikes bestowed by king Henrie his gift thought insufficient, 31, a 50. Bought of king William Rufus, 21, a 40. Let out to farme, 26, a 40

Bishopsgate new builded, 702, b 60

Biskains and Englishmen togither by the eares, 813, b 60

Blackwagon that followed euill Maie date, 844, a 60

Blackheath field, 782, b 10

Blackenesse an hauen towne on the south shore of Scotland, 989, b 50

Blackwell knight smothered to death in a throng, 319, a 10

Blacke Will a notorious murthering ruffian, 1063, a 50, b 40. Receiueth ten pounds in reward for murthering of Arden, 1065, a 10. Burnt at Flushing, 1066, a 20

Blasing starr, 1131, b 10, 252, a 50, 204, b 40, 277, b 40, 1344, a 40, 1314, a 50. Of strange appearance, 37, a 40. With other strange sights, 519, b 60. Verie dreadfull for thirtie daies space togither, 225, b 60. In the north of a moneths continuance, 323, a 10. With long & terrible streames, 353, a 20. Appearing in a faire & cleare daie, 11, b 50. ¶ See Comet and Starre.

Blasphemie of pope Julie against God, 1128, a 40. Of a popish preacher seuerelie punished by God, 1128, b 60, 1129, a 10

Bleothgent king of wales partaker with a rebell, 5, a 20

Blewbeard, capteine of rebels, 632, a 20

Blockhouses & bulworks builded, 946, b 10

Bloreheath field, 649, a 50

Bluet Robert bishop of Lincolne: note, 20, b 10

Blunt knight, his notable seruice against the French, 540, b 50

Bohune John, his wife and issue, 20, a 50

Boier maior of Bodwin in Cornwall hanged: note, 1006, b 50, &c: 1007, a 10

Boldnesse. ¶ See Magnanimitie, and words.

Bolton prior of S. Bartholomews buildeth an house at Harrow on the hill to auoid flouds prognosticated that yeare, 882, b 20

Bondage. ¶ See Seruitude.

Bondmen by letters reuocatorie disfranchised, 437, a 10. Letters of manumission called in, 438, a 10

Boner bishop of London employed about the controuersie of Henrie the eights vnlawfull marriage, 923, b 30. Beareth with the enimies of the L. Elisabeth, 1160, a 10. His god was the rood of Paules, 1121, a 60. Writeth to cardinall Pole concerning persecution, 1164, a 10. Head broken: note, 915, a 60, b 10

Bookes anie waie imparing the popes dignitie are forbidden, 1131, a 60. Seditious scattered, and the offendors executed, 1353, b 40. Printed & the printer executed, 1357, a 40. Popish dangerous and damnable to read or listen vnto, 1391, b 50. Seditious published against the state, and the offendors executed, 1413, a 50 ¶ See Libels.

Borne doctor preaching at Paules crosse hath a dagger throwne at him, 1089, a 60, b 10

Bosworth field. ¶ See Battell.

Bounarme with his ten speares all at once about him, 834, a 50

Bowes Rafe. ¶ See Iusts triumphant.

Bow steeple builded, 815, b 60

Brabanders and the reason of their name: note, 98, b 50, 60, 99, a 10. Ouercome by earle Richard, Henrie the seconds sonne, 98, b 50. The number of 20000 reteined by Henrie the second to beare armor, 87, a 50

Braie knight of the garter commended. 791, a 10

Brambre knight executed with an ax of his owne deuise, 464, a 10

Brandon knight standardbearer to the earle of Richmond slaine, 759, a 50. Knight his pompe at a iusts, 807, b 60. He is created vicount Lisle, 816, a 30

Bread made of bran & pulkens, 1022, a 10. Made of kerne rootes, 616, b 60. ¶ See Assise.

Breame. ¶ See Brunstar.

Brest yeelded vp to the duke of Britaine, 487, b 30. Besieged by the duke of Lancaster, and the maner how, 449, b 10. Force intended against it, 1149, b 50

Brethren at deadlie hate & pursuing one another, 32, b 40. Set at variance by factious persons, 32, a 60. In armes one against another, 19, a 10. Forces vnited how valiant & effectuall in warre, 6, b 50, 7, a 20

Brereton capteine of the aduenturers taken and slaine, 882, b 20

Briake in Britaine assaulted & taken, 534, b 30

Bribe of fiue hundred markes giuen to come to the popes presence, 80, b 30

Bribes the ouerthrow of lawes & good orders: note, 862, b 40. Of a iustice severelie handled for taking them, 243, b 50. 244, a 10. Hinder the execution of good orders & statutes: note, 380, b 30, 40. Refused, 18, b 60

Briberie how it tempteth mens minds: note, 361, b 50. ¶ See Gifts and Rewards.

Bridges made with hard shift, 1138, b 60. In England borne downe with landflouds, 38, a 40. ¶ See Flouds.

Bridgenorth besieged, 30, a 60

Bridewell a place which Henrie the eight put to vse of pleasure. 894, a 20. Henrie the eights new palace, a place receiuing noblemen, 873, b 30. The maior and aldermen enter and take possession thereof, 1130, b 40. when it became a place to punish vagarant and lewd persons, 1082, b, 10

Bristow taken by the earle of Glocester, 48, b 60. ¶ See Faire.

Britaine was the first name of England & Scotland, 1000, a 10. ¶ See Earles.

Britains plagued by the lord admerall, 814, a 10, &c.

Bromleie esquire his manhood, 551, b 10

Bromleie knight his decease, 565, b 40. Made capteine of Dampfront, 563, b 30. The old armes of their house, 564, a 30. Knight lord chancellor, 1272, a 20, 1286, b 60

Brotherton Thomas K. Edward the first his sonne, 309, a 60

Browne his seditious bookes procure losse of life, 1353, b 40

Browne. ¶ See Murther.

Brunkard Henrie. ¶ See Iusts triumphant.

Bruse crowned king of Scotland, in armes against prince Edward and the English power, put to flight by the erle of Penbroke, fled into Kentrie, his wife and brethren taken, his words to his wife, he is executed, his lands giuen awaie by the king Edward the first, wherein note the end of disloialtie, 314, a 10, 40, 60, b 20, 40, 50

Bruse inuadeth England, 332. His ill dealing with Welshmen, 95, b 30. His wife whose daughter she was, 314, b 20. Pronounced accursed, 324, a 50. Thriueth in his successe, inuadeth England, & raiseth his siege, 322, a 10, b 30, 40

Brustar and Marie Breame smothered to death, 1353, a 60, b 10

Buchanan reproouing and reproued, 112, a 30

Buckhurst lord made of the priuie councell, 1434, b 60. ¶ See Sackuill.

Buggerie committed by a lord and punished, 952, b 20

Buieng and selling on the sundaie a law against it, 624, a 20. ¶ See Selling.

Buildings of william Rufus verie great and famous, 23, a 60, b 10

Bull seditious hanged on the bishop of Londons gate, and the partie executed as a traitor, 1221, a 20, &c. 1222, a 30. ¶ See Felton and Pope.

Bullen besieged, assalted, deliuered vp, the number of them that went forth of the towne, 964, a 40, b 30, 60. Manie feats of armes exploited betwixt the English & French, 972, a 40. The Frenchmen busie to build a fort there, 970, a 60, b 10. To be restored to the French king by accord, note how, 973, b 20. And Bullenois restored to the French vpon certeine conditions: note, 1061, b 60. Deliuered vp and entered into, a 10, 20. By the French king, 1062, a 10, &c. Besieged by the Englishmen the king himselfe being present, 775, a 10. The base, a canuasado giuen vnto it, the French haue an ouerthrow, 967, a 20, &c.

Bullocke a mercilesse murtherer hanged within Bishopsgate: note, 1228, b 20, &c. ¶ See Murther.

Bulmer knight rebuked for refusing K. Henrie the eights seruice, and taking the seruice of the duke of Buckingham, 852, b 60, 853, a 10

Burchet gentleman of the middle temple hanged: note, 1259 a 30

Burdet knight his valiantnesse against the enimie: note, 590, b 40

Burdet knight slaine, 618, a 40

Burdet for a word spoken beheaded. 703, a 10

Burdeux yeelded againe to the French king, 641, a 30

Burgesse of the parlement arrested, and what mischefe thereof insued: note, 955, b 40, &c. 956, a 10, &c.

Burgognians ioine with the English host & make it stronger, 875, a 30 Burlie knight and the earle were in faithfull freendship, 464, a 40. What the same Burlie was: note, a 50, &c.

Buriall of duke williams bodie not suffered without satisfaction to the lord of the soile, 15. a 50. Of more than two hundred ded corpses in the Charterhouse yard, 379, b 30. Christian forbidden priests concubines, 207, b 30. Of nobles and great men in a monks cowle: note, 195, b 10, 20. Neglected: note, 157, a 10. Of the dead done with honor and reuerence, 576, a 60. For the dead, 1211, b 10. Of dead bodies within their owne parishes, 31, a 10. Of the Iewes at London, 101, b 20. ¶ See Churchyard new.

Burning in the hand when inacted, 787, a 60, b 10

Burse, ground purchased to build it, the first stone thereof laid, 1209, a 40, 50. Finished & named The roiall exchange by the now queene Elisabeth, 1224, a 60

Bushie knight, 495. ¶ See Flatterie.

Butcher strangelie saued from drowning, 41, b 30. Hanged for fauouring rebels, 943, a 60

Butterwife set on the pillorie, 702, b 40

C.

Cadwallon prince of wales slaine, 103, b 20

Caen taken by the English, 559 b 60. Besieged and yeelded to the French king, 630, a 50

Cages and stocks ordeined, 792 a 10

Caldwell doctor in physicke founder of surgerie lecture in London: note, 1349, a 20, &c. Deceaseth, his distributions in his life, and bequests after his death, his commentaries vpon Paulus Aegineta and other bookes, his infirmitie that was his end, his age, 1369, b 10, &c. His armes blasoned, his epitaph, 1370, a 10, 20

Calendar. ¶ See Kalendar.

Calis, the French commissioners would haue raised to the ground, 480, a 40. Preparatiõ made to win it, the enimies frustrated, 536, b 10, 40. Besieged: note: the commodiousnesse of that towne, 373, b 10. Surrendred to Edward the third, vpon what conditions, 377, b 60. Inexpugnable! note, note,375,a 10. Six burgesses thereof presented to Edward the third,378,a 10. Yelded to the king of England, 378,a 30. Made a colonie of English, a practise to betrate it, Edward the third passeth ouer secretlie thither,378,a 30, 40, b 40, 60. Not furnished with a sufficient number of men,deliuered to the French, 1135,a 10,b 60. Rifled & spoiled by the French, the powest auoid out of the same, conquered and lost in lesse than eight yeres,how long in possession of the kings of England,1136, a 10, 50, b 10, 20. Hauen,the Frenchmens mening to destroie the same disappointed, 878, b 50.How the French were in loue with it after it was lost,note the words of the lord Cordes 771, a 20. King Henrie the seauenth saileth thither, 788, a 10, &c. The mart of all English commodities kept there,778,a 20. The duke of Burgognies armie of 40000 men,613,b 60. Besieged, he breaketh vp his siege and flieth,614,a 20,b 30. A report that Richard the second ment to resigne it into the French kings hands,462,b 10. The vote that the French made euerie waie for the getting of it,1136,b 60,1137,a 10. The French king goeth to visit Calis,1141,b 20. The losse thereof with what indignation queene Marie taketh it, 1149,b 40. Might haue beene recouered from the French, 1150,b 60. The eleuenth king from the conquest got it, and the eleuenth againe after him lost it, 1161, b 10. Queene Marie pensife for the losse of it, the cause of hir sicknesse and death,1151,b 10,20. Triumphs in France for the getting againe thereof, 1141, a 30.¶ See Calis,Duke,and Victozie.

Caluerlete knight a valiant capteine,418,b 60. He recouereth Marke castell, 419, a 10. His exploits against the French,419,b 10. His valiantnes, 422,b 50

Cambridge, queene Elisabeths progresse thither,1206, b 20, &c.Presenteth a faire & statelie cup to queene Elisabeth, 1299,a 10. ¶ See Emanuell college.

Campeius refuseth to giue iudgement in the matter of Henrie the eight his vnlawfull marriage with queen Katharine, 908,b 50,60. ¶ See Cardinall.

Campians description of cardinall Wolsele, 917, b 20. ¶ See priests seminarie.

Campbell a Scotish pirat or rouer taken on the sea, 872, b 20

Canons regular put in priests places,100, a 10. Of yorke refuse to receiue the archbishop of Canturburie as their primat, 147,b 60

Canonizing of kings deere, 691,a 40

Canturburie. ¶ See archbishoprike.

Canutus ment to haue attempted a subduing of London, and what hindered, 7, a 30. Discomfited by the Normans retireth to his ships, 7,a 40. ¶ See Otwone.

Cardinall Campeius sent into England about Henrie the eight his vnlawfull mariage, 906,b 60, Sent from the pope & the causes of his staieng at Calis, receiued with great pompe, what trash was inclosed in his chests, the pomp of him and Wolsele going to the court, 845, a 10,&c. Of Canturburie,thought the fittest man to deale with the queene for surrendring hir sonne,717,a 50, he bleth another waie to persuade hir, 720,b 20. De Comos letter to Parrie, touching resolution to kill the queene, 1388, b 10,&c. Gualo commeth ouer into England,192,a 20. A couetous prelat and fauourer of king John,187,b 20. Johannes de Anagnia, prohibited to passe no further into England than Douer, 120,a 60, b 10. Nicholas sent into England to take awaie the interdiction,181,b 20. Octauianus legat into Ireland, 110,b 30. And what words Richard the first vsed to him against Rome,123, b 50. Otho commeth into England,the lords grudge at his receiuing without their knowledge, he is praised for his sober behauiour, strifes by him are compounded,221,b 30,&c. He holdeth a synod at London, he goeth to Oxford, a fraie betwixt his men & the scholers, his cooke slaine,he complaineth to the king, he curseth the misdoers, 222, a 10, &c.Made to blush at a Charterhouse monks words,225, b 10. Lieth in the wind still for the popes profit,224,a 40, &c,b 40. Beginneth to looke to his owne commoditie,224, a 10. His persuasions to the English clergie, touching tribute to the pope,frustrate, 208,a 40,50, &c, b 10. Peito become a begging frier,1365, b 10. Petrus Hilpanus sent from the pope,the cause of his comming,his demand of monie of religious houses,315,b 50,60. He preacheth,& curseth Bruse the vsurper, 316, a 10. Piergot his trauell to treat a peace betweene both kings of England & France, 388, b 40: note. Powle made archbishop of Canturburie, 1132,a 10. Was to reduce the church of England to the popes obedience, 1092, a 10. Sent for home into England,1092,b 60 The councell diuided about the receiuing of him,1093,a 10.Arriueth at Douer, his restitution in bloud, commeth to the parlement house, his oration there tending to the publike estate, 1122, all. Against the pope, 1365,a 60.Cõmeth to Pauls crosse in great pompe, 1126,a 60. A supplication exhibited vnto him, his authoritie apostolike: note,1123,a 60. His malice against Henrie the eight,1134,b 60.Boners letter touching persecution vnto him,staieth Boners cruelties somewhat,a papist but no bloudie papist,halfe suspected for a Lutheran at Rome, an errant traitor, seditious and impudent, his treasons detected by his owne brother, worse than a pagan, 1164, all. Vnkind to Henrie the eight that brought him vp, the manner of his death and distribution of his goods, 1165,a 10,20,&c. Deceaseth, described,1162,a 60, earnest in burning the bones of the dead,b 10, articles touching the cleargie to be inquired of in his visitation, 30, &c, and the latter, 1163, a 30. Of Praxed, liberall of the faculties: note 428,b 60,429, a 10, &c. Uuiano of S. Stephans in mount Celio,100,a 40. Of Winchester complained against by the duke of Glocester,620,a 50,&c. Otherwise called the rich cardinall, deceaseth: note,627,b 20. Wolsele. ¶ See Wolsele.

Cardinall commeth into England, receiuing an oth not to prejudice the realme, 239, b 60. He maketh shift for monie, 240, a 10. Two, Iohn and Peter sent into England in commission from the pope,8,b 60. Two robbed and the robbers executed, 323, a 60,they curse the Scots,3, b 10. Two from the pope to accord the two kings of England and France, 377,b 50.Two come into England about a treatie of peace 354,a 30. Their returne to Rome, a 60. Appointed to treat a peace betweene England and France,406,b 30. Sent to the king of England and France, to treat of peace, they gather monie, 295, a 10.

Cardinals of England all from the first to the last, collected, 1165,b 10,&c,1166,1167,1168.

Careie George knight desirous of combat with the lord Fleming, his letter of challenge, and replie to a former answer, 1218,a 10,30,b 30

Carew baron slaine with a bullet shot,817,b 10. Knight taken of the French,960,b 60. Beheaded: note, 946, a 60. Used as an instrument to appease rebellion in Deuon, 1015,b 30. Charged with the rebellion in Deuonshire,1022 b 30. ¶ See Dinham.

Carlil destroied by the Danes, repaired and peopled by William Rufus,19,b 50,60. Assaulted by the Scots,447,b 40

Carter an Englishman seruing among the French, but to their disaduantage,an hardie soldiour, and good seruitor, 997,a 20,b 10

Cassimere ambassador from the emperor Maximilian: note, 791,a 30. His comming into England, receiuing at London,going to the court, made knight of the garter, 1271, b 10,&c.

Castell of Wanbourgh how wone and gotten, 21, b 50. Yelded vnto king William Rufus,21,b 60. Of Beauer summoned to yeld to king Iohn,189,a 30. Of Witham yelded,203,a 30. Chartleie and Weston built, 202,b 50. Of Doll in Britaine belonging to earle Rafe, besieged, 11,b 40. Of Douer & Windsor could Lewis neuer subdue,192,a 60.Yeelded vnto the queene,49,a 10.Dwith Lewis the French labour to get but in vaine, 193, a 30. Of Durham by whom built, 18, b 60.Of Faringdon built,56, b 20. Of Fodringheie taken by dissimulation, 203, a 20. Galtard besieged and wone by the French, 166, b 50. Builded by Richard the first 155,a 60,b 10. Of Horne ouerthrowne by William Rufus,17,b 40. Of Huntington wone,92,a 60. Of Mainatsin built by William Rufus, and Whit,21,b 50. Of Montgomerie built,203,a 60.won by the Welshmen, 21. Of Newarke in whose keeping, 192,b 20. Where king John died, 194, a 60. Of Newberrie wone,59,b 30. Norham by whome begun, 42, a 40. Nottingham wone by Richard the first, 142, a 60. In whose keeping,192, b 60. Of Ramseie where Odo late fortified against William Rufus, 17, b 40. Of Richmont neere Gillingham builded, 7, b 10. Of Rochester. ¶ See Rochester. Of Rockingham,25,a 10. Of Rutland builded,67,a 30. Of Tickhill yelded,142,b 10. Of Tunbridge yelded into William Rufus his hands, 17, b 40

Castels besieged and surrendered to Lewis the French kings sonne,198,b 20. Wone by the bishop of Durham, 307,a 40. Builded by duke William for the suppressing of rebellions,6,a 40. Fortified by king John,192. Besieged by bishops,142,a 30,40. Deliuered to king Richard the first,128,a 60. Deliuered by the king of Scots,95, a 30. Wone by the Scots,91,a 60. Held by great men against king Stephan,48.b 60. Licenced to be builded,47, a 30. Manie builded in king Stephans daies,65,a 10. In number 1115 to be raised,61, b 20. Fortified by the bishop of Winchester,54,a 20. Built by the bishop of Salisburie, 50, b 20. Recouered by K. Stephan,50,a 50. Of Bristow & Cardiff, &c: by whome builded,37,a 50. Fortified against Henrie the first, 30,a 30

Castell seene in the aire and armed men, 395,a 60

Casteller. ¶ See Shomaker.

Castile inuaded by the duke of Lancaster and the king of Portingale,450,a 30. Philip king thereof saileth out of Flanders into Spaine, cast by casualtie of sea vpon the English coasts, promiseth to deliuer to Henrie the seuenth the earle of Suffolke, 794,a 20,30,50

Cat hanged in Cheape disguised like a massing preest,1102, b 50

Cataia. ¶ See Frobisher.

Catesbie and his conditions described, 721,a 30

Cauendish lord cheefe iustice of England beheaded by the rebels, 434,b 10,20

Cementarius and his mischeeuous preaching, 173,b 60

Chancellor lord elected bishop, 20,b 10

Chancellors of England first & last laid downe in a collection, 1272,a 30, 1273,&c. 1286,b 60

Chan-

Chancerie court by whome instituted,8,a 60. It and Kingsbench kept at Yorke, & from thense remoued to London, 480,a 10

Chanell from Torkseie to Lincolne made by hand, 42,a 40

Chapell of our ladie of peace, 486,b 60

Chapels none to be newlie built without the bishops consent, 30,b 40

Charing crosse and others erected, 285,b 40

Charles de Valois chaseth the Englishmen, his returne into France, 294, a 40, b 60. Sent to Bruges, and disappointed of his preie,304,b 40, 50, ¶ Sée French king.

Charles James yoong prince of Scots christened, 1209, b 50

Charitie of Henrie the sift, 566,b 20. Of Henrie the seauenth,797,a 20. Of Londoners towards the hospitals, 1083,a 10, &c. Of sir Rowland Hill: note,1060,b 50,60. Of william Lambe esquier, 1311,a 60,b 10,&c, 1312,1313. Of sir Andrew Jude, 1062, b 20. Of Justice Randolph, 1349,a 40,1354 a 40. Of archb. Parker,1261,a 20,30,&c. Of sir William Harper, 1194, b 40. Of sir Roger Manwood, 1377,a 60,b 10,&c. Of sir William Peters, 1227,b 50. Of David Smith, 1375, b 50, 1376. Of John Ligh a preest, 796,a 10, 20, &c. Of Kneilworth maior of London,792, b 10,20. Of sir John Allen, twise maior of London,961, a 60,b 10,&c. Of George Monex maior of London, 830,a 30. Of Thomas Huntlow shiriffe of London, 948, a 10. Of Thomas Gibson shiriffe of London, 945, b 60. Of sir Thomas white, 1092, a 30. Of sir John Gresham, 1131,b 10. Preached before Edward the sixt, and the effects that followed: note,1081 b 20,&c. It and concord in a commonwealth be things most necessarie: note,971,b 30 ¶ Sée Almeshouses, Pittie, and Mercie.

Charta de Foresta, 308, b 10, 185,b 60, 207,a 40, 306, a 40.

Charter of Alexander king of Scotland made to Henrie the third, 233,b 60. The same confirmed by the pope, 235. Of articles concerning a league betweene Henrie the third & the nobles of wales, 226,b 60. Of the articles of Dauid of wales his submission, 227,b 60. Wher Edward the first is acknowledged superior lord of Scotland,286, b,10, &c, 287, a all. Of king Johns submission, as it was conueied to the pope at Rome 177,b 50. Of Richard the first concerning turnaments. 146,a 10 Conteining articles of the peace and agreement concluded betwixt the two kings read in S. Peters church in Yorke,96,a 10. Of agreement betweene the king of England and the king of Conagh, 96, b 60. Of king Stephan and the pacification of troubles betwixt him and Henrie Fitzempresse,62, a 10. Of manumission granted to the rebels by Richard the second,434, a 10. Blanke sealed: note,496,a 10, Confirmed vnder Henrie the thirds acknowledgment and subscription of witnesses, 220, b 20. Cancelled and much greeued at, 208,b 60.

Chartres taken by treason notwithstanding the truce, 607, a 60

Chastitie of the ladie Graie, and hir wisdom,726,a 50. Should such professe as would be admitted subdeacons, 30, b. 30. ¶ Sée Clergie.

Charuage a certeine dutie for euerie plowland, 229,a 50

Chaucer the English poet in what kings time he liued,541 b 50. ¶ Sée Dukes.

Chaumount Hugh taken prisoner, 152,a 10

Cheeke knight his deserued commendation: note 1055, a 50,60,b 10,&c. His treatise shewing how greeuous sedition is to a commonwealth: note,1042,1043,&c,to 1055.

Cheinie knight, lord warden of the cinque ports, authorised by Henrie the eight to the christening of the Dolphins daughter,973,b 50,60. Enemie to Wiat: note,1094, a 40. Henrie the eights letter to him for a prescript forme of demeanor in the English towards the French, 974, a 40,&c. Lord warden of the cinque ports his death, his old seruices at home and abroad, much spoken to his praise and honor: note,1171, a 30,40,50,60,b 10,20,30.

Cheapside conduit builded,704, b 10

Chelhire made a principalitie, 492,b 40

Chelshiremen gard Richard the second,489,b 50. Slaine: note, 523,b 60

Chester abbeie by whome builded,27, b 60. And who gaue order thereto,28,b 10. Earledome by whome possessed and inioied, 20 a 10

Cherburgh besieged by the English,562,b 50. yeelded to the Englishmen, 563 , a 10. Deliuered to the English, 420,a 10. Possessed by the English, 564,a 40

Child of eleuen years old speaking strange speeches. 1315. a 10,&c.

Chime of saint Giles without Cripplegate to be maintained, 1312, a 60. ¶ Sée Bels.

Chimniage. ¶ Sée Subsidie.

Chinon taken by force of assault. 169,b 60

Chisie William,a notable theefe hanged, 124,a 20

Christ and of a portion of his bloud shewed in a solemne procession, 240,a 40

Christ counterfet whipped, 1194,a 10. False apprehended and punished, 203,b 40,50

Christs hospitall erected, 1082, b 10

Christians preuaile against the Saracens at Damieta, 202, b 20. At enuious discord,134, a 20. Beheded by the Turks 133,a 30. And Saracens are a peace 135. Two hundred and threescore deliuered from the captiuitie of the Turks, by means of one John Fox: note,1310,b 20. ¶ Sée Saracens.

Christiantie abhored for monks note, 27,a 40

Christianus a bishop of the Danes, & captaine in Warre, 7,b 40

Christine a queenes sister,a nun ¶ Sée Margaret.

Christmas roiall, 807,a 40

Christmas shewes, 816,a 10

Christmasse called The still Christmasse, 892,b 40

Chronicles whereof and whie so named, and their necessarie vse, 1268,1269

Chroniclers deserue a dutifull reuerence,and whie, 1268

Church of saint Anthonies in London,when and by whom builded,779,a 50. Of saint Dunstans in the east defiled with bloud: note, 562, a 20, &c. Of Elie dedicated: note, 246,b 30. Of Hales solemnitie dedicated,244, b 60,245,a 10. Of Scotland obedient to the church of England,97, b 10. Of England sore sleesed of hir wealth,18,b 30. Ruinated by the Danes in the north parts,and verie scant: note, 11,a 20. Depriued of temporall prosperitie,256,a 50. Impropriat , and that the bishop of Lincolne had authoritie to institute vicars in them,246, a 40. Occupied by incumbents strangers of the popes preferring, what grudge it bred: note,214,a 60 Spoiles aduantage not the getter: note,194,a 50. That for feare of the censure thereof the English pledges were released,147,b 10, Jewels &c,turned into monie for Richard the first his ransome, 139, b 10. The state thereof in Becketts time,77,a 60. Liuings restored by act of parlement: note, 1130,a 20. Cathedrall to inioie the right of their elections,409,a 10. Ouerthrowne by an earthquake, 440, b 40. In London stricken and broken by tempest, 1185, a 10. Made a kenell of hounds,reuenged,23,a 50. ¶ Sée Consecration, Fines, Inuestitures, Lands, Schisme.

Churchmen. ¶ Sée Clergie.

Churchyard new neere Bedlem first made, 1211,b 10

Cicester, the situation thereof, 796, b 10

Cicill knight commissioner into Scotland,about an accord of peace, 1192, a 30. Created lord treasuror, 1238, a 50. His discent. 1255,b 30

Cipriots resist Richard the first his landing,and are pursued, banquished, 127, a 60, b 10. Their offers in respect of his discontentment & losse, 127, b 60. Submit themselues and are receiued as his subiects, 128,a 40. Their king submitteth himselfe to Richard the first,128, a 10. Stealeth awaie, & submitteth himselfe againe,is committed prisoner and chained in giues of siluer, 128,a 10,60, b 10

Circumcision for loue of a Jewish woman, 203,b 60

Cisteaux monks. ¶ Sée monks white.

Citie wherof it consisteth, 1046, b 50

Cities their necessarie vse and seruice : note, 1047, b 10, 20,30

Citizens, ¶ Sée Londoners.

Clergie their presumptuous authoritie restreined by acts, 239,b 40. Large offer to Henrie the third in a parlement, 255,b 30. Depriued of their liuings and liberties,8,b,60, and Mozmans preferred, 9,a 10. Kicked at by duke William, against whome note his malice,9, a 10. Pinched by their purses, fret and fume against the popes procedings in that behalfe, 252, b 30. Resist duke Williams decrees,and are banished,8,a 30 Hardie delt withall, and out of order: note, 24, a 30. Of England complaine to pope Urban against William Rufus,18 b 40. Cardinall Pols articles concerning them, 1162,b 30. Grant halfe of all their spirituall reuenues for one peare to Henrie the eight, 877,b 20. Complained of by the commons,911,a 30. Both head and taile one with another against them, 911, b 10. In danger of a premunire, their offer to Henrie the eight 923,a 20,30. The same pardoned,923,b 10. Their submission to H. the eight: note, 923. Speake euill of Henrie the eights procedings in the reformation of religion, 941, a 20,30. Conuocation for the reforming of religion, 940, b 60. Complained of for their cruelitie Ex officio. 928,a 20. The cause whie so heinouslie offending was so fauoured, 787,a 50,&c. Of two sorts and both desirous to spare their purses,792,a 30. Of Excester against Henrie the sixt and the duke of Summerset, in defense of their ecclesiasticall priuileges,637,b 30. A bill exhibited against them in the parlement,545,b 10. Libels against them cast abrode 558,b 20. Sorelie vrideled, 475,a 30. Inueied against of the wicklenists. 481, b 60. They complaine of them to the king,482,a 10. Ignorant and couetous in Richard the seconds time: note, 508 a 30. Maunteined by archbishop Arundell of Canturburie, 526,a 20,30,&c. Fauoured of Henrie the fourth, 536,a 50. Displeased by Henrie the firsts doings,31, a 40. Of England consisted most of preests sonnes,34,a 20. Exempted from dealing in ante temporall cause or office, 30, b 20. To keepe no women in their house: except, &c, 34, b 10. Of liberties obteined for them,99,a 40. Against Henrie the second, whome he laboureth to bridle,70,a 10. A heauie time for them: note,172,a 50. In what awe they had K. John,180,b 20,&c. Repining against king John,184,b 30. More malicious to K. John than he deserued,196,a 20,30, &c,b 20. Complaine to Henrie the third against the collections for the pope,225,a 10. Of Durham glad to flie into the holie Iland,7, b 60. Paid a tenth soner than the time appointed,355,a 40. Deposed for denieng the subsidie, 406, b 20. Presumptuous demeanors,335,a 30. Without head: note,293,a 10. Grant halfe part of their liuings to king Edward the first, 293, a 20.

Grant the eleauenth part of eccleſiaſticall things to Edward the firſt,285,b 20. And tenths of ſpirituall liuings to Edward the firſt,285,b 50. Continue in deniall of a ſubſidie, 301, b 60. Excuſe to be frée from ſubſidies,&c,301, b 40. Their pride abhorred of Edward the firſt, 316, b 20. Oppreſſed complaine, & the ſame redreſſed,315,b 30. Fined,but the temporaltie pardoned: note,201, b 60. In a miſerable caſe,302,a 40. Pinched with courteſies,beneuolences, and aids: note, 315, a 30. Maintained & defended by archbiſhop Richard of Canturburie,213,a 50. Sore greéued at the popes exactions, 224,b 40,&c. ¶ Séé Biſhops, Churchmen, and Préeſts.

Clerke knight, a valiant captaine, 422,a 50

Clinton lord admerall, ſent againſt the rebels in the north, 1212,b 40. Sent out againſt Brait,1149,b 60. His ſeruice in Scotland, 986, 987, 988, 989,b 50. Deceaſeth,1378, b 50,1379,a 10

Clinton Geffrie, a noble man accuſed of treaſon, 43,b 50

Clinton Atkinſon. ¶ Séé Pirats.

Clothiers in diuerſe places reléeued,1311,b 40. In Burton had two hundred pounds lent gratis for euer, 1369,b 30

Clippers of gold. ¶ Séé Coine.

Cnuto with certeine Danes, arriueth in England: note, 11, b 30

Cobham lord with his new ſupplie of ſoldiors, valiant,998,a 10,40. Condemned: note,493

Cobham lord vnable to reſiſt Wiat and his power,1095, b 50. Made of the priuie councell,1434,b 60. His lineall deſcent, 1505,b 30,&c.

Cocke of weſtminſter. ¶ Séé Caſteller.

Cogniſances. ¶ Séé Badges.

Coine baſe, 963, b 10. New, 1090,b 50. Of ſmall péeces, as ſix pence, &c, 1194, b 50. New of ſundrie ſorts, 1193, b 50. Thirtie barrels carried ouer ſea for ſoldiours paie, 229,b 20. Of ſundrie ſorts in England current,prohibited by proclamation, 309, a 20. ¶ Séé Mone. Of Edward the firſt amended, 280, a 20. Of grotes and halfe grotes, firſt coined,380,b 10. To be inhanſed or abaſed,400, b 40. Diſanulled, and degrées of Florensmade,367,a 30. New of gold called the Floren, 366,a 10. Of Ireland reformed,174,b 30. Altered, 67,a 40. Of Henrie the ſeconds changed in forme, and whie, 104,a 30. Crackt, wherein note Henrie the firſts art, 45, b 10. Changed,540,a 40. Imbaſed,1066,b 40. New ſtamped,667,b 10. Diuerſe ſorts newlie ordeined,791,b 60. Of gold ſet at their valuation, 893,b 60. Baſute, 578

Coine chipped an ordinance for the ſame: note, 241,a 10

Coine clippers, waſhers, &c, ſearched for, 279,b 30

Coine clippers both gold and ſiluer, executed as traitors, 1262,a 40: note,1270, a 30

Coine counterfetors executed, 1271,a 60,1211,a 60

Coiner executed, 792,a 20

Colcheſter caſtell beſieged, and deliuered to king John, 190, b 30

Collect deuiſed in honour of Thomas Becket: note, 85, b 20. ¶ Séé Prayers.

Collection. ¶ Séé officers.

Collingborne a fauourer of the earle of Richmond, his purpoſe to aid him at Poole in Dorſetſhire, indicted to be a libeller againſt the king,he is executed, 746,b 10,&c.

Collingham a valorous gentleman of Suſſex, 192,a 50

Colonie of ſoutherne men planted in Carlell, 19,b 60

Combat appointed at Tuthill, in a controuerſie of land, but not tried: note, 1225, b 60, 1226,a 10,&c. With the lord Fleming, ſued for by ſir George Careie, 1218, a 10. Fought at weſtminſter,379, b 50. In a caſe of debate,appointed and diſappointed,381, a 10. Required betwixt the king of England & France, for triall of all matters in controuerſie betweéne them 152,a 30. Purpoſed in a controuerſie of lands, 100, b 50. Betwixt Henrie de Eſſex, and Robert de Montfort,67, a 20. Fought betwixt two eſquires of differing nations, 446,a 60. Betweéne two dukes, ſtaied by Richard the ſecond,493,a 60. Appointed betweéne the duke of Lancaſter, and the duke of Norfolke,494,b 30,&c,495,a 10,&c Betweéne a knight and an eſquire,with the maner therof: note,424,b 50,425,a 10,&c. For triall of treaſon,in what caſe lawfull: note, 424, b 10. Betweéne two Scotiſh gentlemen, accuſing each other, 992,b 60,993,a 10. Betweéne Henrie the ſixt, and monſieur Baulbaſon, 577, a 10, 60, b 10,&c. Upon triall of manhood betweéne an Engliſhman & a French,628,b 40. Appointed and diſappointed, 626, b 10. Betweéne Iulian Romeron, and Marow, 974, b 60. The French king challengeth the emperor thereto,and giueth him the lie, 905,b 60

Comet. ¶ Séé Blaſing ſtar.

Commandement bloudie,executed on the Engliſh, 10,b 10

Common crier for ſale of houſhold ſtuffe, 1207,a 50

Commons proponed certeine articles againſt the duke of Suffolke, 631, a 30

Commotion of the commons in diuerſe parts of the realme, by reaſon of the great ſubſidie,and other oppreſſions, 429 a 60,b 10,&c. In Somerſetſhire & other places: note, 1002, a 40. In Yorkeſhire, 672,a 10. In Norwich againſt the prior of the place: note,626,a 60. ¶ Séé Inſurrection, Rebellion, and Subſidie.

Communion booke and common praier published, 996, b 10. Confirmed, 1066,a 60.

Communion in both kinds, 980,a 10. Receiued of ſix biſhops, 1185,a 60

Companie lewd,and what miſchéefe and diſorder it worketh,318, b 10. With ill counſell how miſchéefous, 321, b 10

Compaſſion of an Engliſhman to a French, 628, b 50. Of Perkin Warbecke counterfet, 781,a 40

Compiegne ſurrendered to the Engliſh by a policie, recouered from the French, 587, a 60,b 30.

Complaint out of England to Rome againſt Henrie the third,222,b 30. Made to the pope by the monks of Chriſts church of their archbiſhop, 153,a 20. Of Becket to the pope,72,b 50. Of Anſelme to the pope againſt William Rufus,26,a 10. ¶ Séé Clergie.

Compremiſe. ¶ Séé abitrement.

Compulſion voluntarie, 1015, a 30

Conan the ſonne of Alane earle of Britaine, married to a kings daughter, 7,b 30

Concubine of the duke of Lancaſter married vnto him,485, b 60,486,a 10. Of the duke of Glocester,whom he marieth, 590, a 60. Thée of Edward the fourth, 725, a 10. ¶ Séé Shores wife, Perers, and Préeſts.

Concubines lone to hir paramour,notable, 149,b 60

Conduit at Walbrooke new built,1211,a 60. In Holburne founded and finiſhed, 1311, b 60. In Cheapſide builded, 704, b 10. At Biſhopſgate builded, 792,b 10

Confeſſion of the duke of Suffolke at his beheading, 1100, b 60,1101,a 10. Of ſir Thomas Palmer on the ſcaffold at Tower hill, 1090, a 60. Voluntarie of Francis Throckmorton the traitor, written to queéne Eliſabeth, with his letters of ſubmiſſion: note,1373,b 60, 1374,&c. Voluntarie of Partie the notable traitor that ment to haue murthered the queéne, 1384,b 60,1385, 1386, 1387. Of the ladie Jane at hir beheading,1099,b 60.1100,a 10. Of ſir Thomas Wiat, before iudgement paſſed againſt him,1104. Of the duke of Northfolke, when he ſhould be executed on Tower hill: note,1229,b 20,&c,1230. Of Richard the firſt his lewd life: note,126,b 10. Of Jack Straw at the time of his death,438,b 10. Of the duke of Summerſet at his death on the Tower hill,1068,a 10, b 50. Of the lord Cromwell when he was beheaded, 951, b 20. Of Eliſabeth Barton the holie maid of Kent,at hir execution,937,a 40. Auricular ſpoken againſt, and how the ſame was puniſhed: note, 968,b 30

Confirmation of children by the biſhop, 1003,a 40

Conters knight, a captaine of Durham tower,101,a 20. Of rare valiantneſſe, 672,a 50

Coniunction of Jupiter and Saturne,484,b 40. Prophecied,but the prophecier deceiued, 1356,b 30,&c.

Coniuror ſaddenlie dieth when a caſe of his ſhould haue béene tried in law: note,1271,a 20. Puniſhed: note,348,a 50,60, b 10. Hanged, 1314,b 60

Connagh in Ireland how ſeated,81,b 60. A kingdome,96, b 40. The king thereof entreth into the marches of England,he and his are vanquiſhed,212,b 50,60. The king is taken and committed to priſon, 213,a 10

Conquet and diuerſe other places burnt by the lord admerall of England, 814, b 10. Taken and burned, 1151,a 10

Conrade duke of Auſtrich. ¶ Séé duke.

Conſcience guiltie of an offendor vnquiet: note,1228, b 50, 60. Guiltie in extremitie of ſickneſſe pincheth ſore, 541,a 40. Grudging and accuſing what a torment, 735, b 50. Troubled for offenſe of rebellion: note,18, a 30. Guiltie. ¶ Séé Suſpicion.

Conſecration of biſhop Samuell: note,22,a 40. Of Richard archbiſhop of Canturburie diſturbed by yong king Henrie,85,b 60, 86, a 10. Of churches in what reſpect alowed,30,b 50. Of Thomas archbiſhop of Yorke vpon his ſubmiſſion, and recouereth his pall 36,b 40. Of the archbiſhop of Yorke deferred: note 35,all. Of biſhops denied becauſe of their inueſtiture by the king: note, 31, a 60,b 10. Of the archbiſhop of Canturburie by pope Calixtus, 40,a 50. Of Eadmer,whereabout was contention, 41, a 20. Of the Lords bodie,1003, a 50,&c. Of an Iriſh biſhop, 22,b 60

Conſpiracie againſt king William Rufus, to put him beſide the crowne,17, a 10, 20. Of Robert earle of Northumberland,and whie,21, b 30. In Northfolke towards, and how extinguiſhed: note, 1221,b 60,1222,a 10. Of the lords againſt Henrie the third,209,a 50,60,&c,b 10. Of Foukes de Brent, againſt Henrie the third, and his foule end,206,a 40. Againſt the lord cheéfe iuſtice, 204, a 40. To ſet priſoners at liberte,333,a 30. Of lords againſt king John, 184,a 10, 185, a 30, &c. Of lords banding themſelues againſt king Iohn,185, a 10. Of great men againſt king Stephan, 48,b 60. Diſcloſed,and the diſcloſer ſlaine, 531, b 40. What an ill euent it hath,530 a 40, 60,b 30, &c. A freſh againſt Henrie the fourth, by the earle of Northumberland and others,529,a 60. Of the Perſies with Owen Glendouer,521,b 50,522,523. Deuiſed, but not practiſed, and yet puniſhed: note,520,a 10, &c. Againſt Henrie the fourth & the parties executed,516,a 50,60,b 10,&c. Of the noblemen ſtrangelie diſcloſed: note 515,a 10,20. Of the abbat of weſtminſter againſt Henrie the fourth: note, 514, b 20. Betweéne the duke of Glocester and the abbat of ſaint Albons, their purpoſe, & is diſcloſed,488,b 10,40,50. Of Richard the ſecond againſt the duke of Glocester, 489, a 60. Of Frenchmen againſt the Engliſh, 568, b 60. Of nobels againſt Edward the fourth: note,670,b 20,30,671 672,&c. Of the Pariſiens againſt the duke of Bedford puniſhed punished with death,586,a 60 At Excester against Richard the third, some of the parties executed,746,a 10,30. Of the duke of Buckingham against Richard the third, had ill successe: note,743,a 10,&c, 744, a 10,&c. Against Henrie the seauenth, and what an ill end it had,765, 766,767,a 10, &c. Against the prince talleth out alwaie to the cõspirators shamefull death, 790,a 30,40. Traitorous: note,941,vpon a malcontentment. ¶ See Lincolneshiremen. Against the ladie Elisabeth whiles she was in trouble,1157,a 50,60, b 10,&c. Against quéene Marie, sorting to an euill end: note,1132, a 20, 40,60. Of quéene Maries death, and the offendors executed, 1117, a 60. ¶ See Duke of Buckingham, Noblemen, Rebellion.

Conspirators ouerthrowne and discomfited: note,18,a 10,20. Extreamlie punished, and that diuerslie,21,b 60. Vanquished and punished: note, 188,a 30,40, In league, and inuade Henrie the seconds dominions,87,b all. Against Henrie the first, to put him beside the crowne, 29,b 20

Constable. ¶ See France.

Constables of England, called high constables, the office ending in the duke of Buckingham, 865,b 60,866,&c.

Constance the mother of duke Arthur. ¶ See Duke.

Constance wife to Eustace sent home, 61,a 30

Constancie of the archbishop of Yorke,256,b 40. Of the earle of Carlill at his death, 334,a 60. In martyrdom, 536, a 60. Of a good Jew in christiantie, 27,a 60

Constantia the daughter of Margaret countesse of Britaine, how married, 7, b 30

Constantinople the emperor thereof commeth into England, 222,a 60

Contention betwixt the earles of Leicester and Glocester, 261,b 10. Betweene the two princes of Wales pursued: note,226, b 20,&c. Betwixt prelats,244,b 10. Betweene Henrie the third, and the bishop of Lincolne, 228, b 40. Betwixt Frederike the emperour and pope Innocent, 224,b 30. Betwixt two welsh princes for the principalitie, 224,b 10. Betweene the archbishop of Canturburie and the earle of Kent,213,a 40,&c. Newlie broched by the archbishop of Canturburie, 204,b 60. Betwixt the earles of Leicester and Glocester,259, a 60. About the chosing of the emperor,155,a 20. Betweene bishops for superioritie, 133. a 60. Betwixt two ambitious bishops,121,a 50. Betweene Henrie the second and Thomas Becket, 68, b 20. Betweene bishops,36,b 60, 37, a 10. About the election of the maior of London, 445, a 60. Hot betweene William Rufus & Anselme,24, 25. ¶ See Discord, Dissention, Variance.

Contracts of marriage to be void without witnesses, 30, b 60. ¶ See Marriage.

Contribution appointed by Henrie the second, 74, a 60

Controuersie betwixt king Henrie the third, and the bishop of Winchester, 231, b 60, 232,a 10. About the crowne of Scotland,285, b 60, 286, a all. Betweene the archbishop of Canturburie & the monks 120,b 10. Betwixt the nobles and peeres appeased by Henrie the first,38,a 60. ¶ See Combat and Contention.

Conuocation at Westminster called by bishop Longchamp, 129,a 20. ¶ See Councell and Synod.

Cooke Anthonie. ¶ See Iusts triumphant.

Copland refuseth to deliuer his prisoner the king of Scots to anie except to the king of England, 376,a 60

Copsti slaine by Osulfe,13,a 30

Cordes lord a Frenchman maketh aduantage of occasion, 770,a 60. His malicious and foolish words, 771,a 20

Cornishmen strong archers,782 b 10. Rebell against Henrie the seauenth, their shamefull end, 781, b 20, 30, &c: 782, a 10,&c.

Coronation solemne and statelie of Richard the second,416, a 60,b 10,&c,417,a 10,&c. Of Richard the first royall, 118, a 30

Corpus Christi college in Oxford, by whome and when founded, 839,b 50,60

Cosnetc besieged by the Dolphin, & rescued by the duke of Bedford, 582,b 40,60

Cotteshold sheepe transported into Spaine, 668,b 50

Couentrie the quéenes Henrie the sixts wife secret harbour, 654,a 30. She is a better capteine than the king hir husband, 654, a 50. The church when and by whom ioined to the see of Chester,27 b 60

Couetousnesse of Henrie the first: note,37,a 60. Of Cardinall Vimano noted, 100, a 10,b 10. Of the emperor, hauing Richard the first his prisoner,137,a 30 Of the emperor notable against honestie and honour, 141, a 20,30,40, 50. To be noted in Richard the firsts demands,124,b 40. Of king John,184,b 20. Of cardinall Gualo, 187, b 20. Of Gualo notable, 193, a 20. Of duke William, 8, a 40, b 50. Of William Rufus,18,b 10,20,b 10. Purchased Henrie the seuenth hatred among his people,791,b 20,30,40. Of two monks,18,b 50. Of officers in a collection, 139,a 60. Inueighed against,213,a 60, b 10. Of monie the cause of murther: note, 1228,b 20,&c. Cloaked with an excuse,37,b 10. ¶ See Flemings, and Rome.

Councell held at Rockingham castell: and whie, 25, a 10. Held at London, 204, b 60. Generall summoned by the pope,236,b 20,237,a 10,&c. In Edward the thirds ship,368, a 10. Of the cleargie called by the cardinall, 181, b 40. At Yorke,322,a 60. At Westminster by the archbishop of Canturburie,162, a 10. At Winchester and traitors proclamed,143,b 10. At Canturburie,120, b 20. At Pipewell,119,a 60. At London by king Henrie the first, and whie,34,a 30. At Oxford, 68, a 60. At Clarendon,70,a 30. At Tours,69,a 60. Generall at Rome,102,b 20. At Westminster, 85, a 60. At Gatington,111,b 60. Of bishops, 71,a 20. At Cassill, called by K. Henrie the second, 82, a 40. Of lords at Clarkenwell, 108,b 30. Generall at Pisa, 535,a 20. Prouinciall,535,a 20. At Stamford,477,b 30. At Notingham, and who present,456,a 60. Generall at Constance, 547, a 40. Generall the prerogatiue of the English nation, 558, a 60. Of Henrie the sixt, most spirituall persons: note, 622, b 60. ¶ See Assemblie, Folkmote, Parlement, & Synod.

Counsell good, the want whereof a cause of committing foule sinnes: note,18,b 10. Euill of nobles to duke Robert, to put king William his brother from the crowne,17, a 10, 20. Good of Lanfranke to William Rufus, to win and keepe fauour of people, &c, 16, b 10. Of strangers folowed, homebred refused,231,a 30. Good giuen, and lakelie followed: note,215,a 10,20,30. That bred grudge and mislike betweene Henrie the third and his nobles, 205,b 40. Euill turneth to the hurt of the counsellor,205,a 40. Euill of a bishop to his souereigne, against the commonwealth, 204,b 60. Euill falleth out ill to the counsell giuer: note, 204,a 40,50. Euill and lewd companie how mischeeuous, 321,b 10. Good giuen, ill rewarded,332,a 40. Good not to vse cruelitie, 188,a 30. Good ill requited,184,b 20. Giuen for the which the counsellors were cursed,168,b 50,60,169 a 10. Of euill persons to the sonne against the father, dangerous to a state,86,a 50,b 10 Euill sorteth ill to the counsellor,112,a 50. Lewd falleth out ill to the counsellor,28,b 30. Euill and dangerous,430 b 20. Good neglected, 447, b 50. Euill and what inconuenience followeth it: note,507, b 50. Taken how to deale with the lords that conspired against Richard the second, 458,b 20. Euill how preualent and mischeeuous,670, b 30,50, &c. Of the lord Hastings to his acquaintance: note,675,b 10. Of a damsell to the duke of Clarence,675, a 10, 20. Good regarded of a king: note,852. Ill giuen to a king,248,a 60. Euill giuen & followed: note,12,a 40. couetous & mischeeuous of the earle of Hereford practised, 8, b 60. ¶ See warnings.

Counter in Woodstreet not ancient, 1129,b 40

Counterfet of Richard Plantaganet, 775,a 60

Counterfet earle of Warwike, 785,a 30

Counterfet king Edward the first, whipped, and executed as a traitor,1127, a 40, and b 10

Counterfet king Richard the second, 515,a 50,525,b 10

Counterfet duke of Yorke. ¶ See Perkin Warbecke.

Counterfet Christ whipped, 1194,a 10

Counterfet to be possessed with the diuell, punished by doing open penance, 1259,b 60

Counterfet spirit in a wall without Aldersgate, 1117, b 60. ¶ See Dissimulation and Dissemblers.

Counterfetting of licences, and antedating them, 953, a 20 ¶ See Antedating.

Counterfetting of quéene Elisabeths hand, punished as an offense treasonable,1227,b 60, 1315,a 40

Countesse of Bierne a woman receiueth soldiors paie, 230, 30. Of Bongham hir punishment for setting the crowne on Robert Bruse his head: note,314, a 10. Of Oxford practise to bruite that Richard the second was aliue, 525, a 60. Committed to prison,525, b 20. Deceaseth,702,b 40,237 b 20

Countesse of Prouance commeth ouer into England,231 b 50,240,b 20. Dealeth vnthriftilie with Henrie the third hir sonne in law, 238,a 40

Countesse of Richmond and Derbie,&c, mother to Henrie the seauenth, 678,a 60

Countesse of Salisburie beheaded, being the last of the right line and name of Plantagenet, 953,a 60

Countesse of warwike taketh sanctuarie, 685,b 50

Court, certeine lords, ladies, and others put out of Richard the seconds court, 463, a 50,60

Court misliked, 496,a 60

Courtneie lord, prisoner in the Towre, he hath priuie enimies, 1101, b 10, &c, 1102,a 10,&c.

Courtneie earle of Deuonshire goeth ouer into Italie, deceaseth, descended of the bloud royall, 1129,a 20,30.

Couper. ¶ See Follie.

Cox doctor the duke of Somersets ghostlie father at his death, 1069, a 40

Cranmer arreigned of treason, 1093,a 30. Nominated archbishop of Canturburie, 929,b 30. He, Latimer & Ridlie sent to Oxford to dispute, 1102, b 60. Committed to the tower, 1090,b 60. Examined, condemned, burned, described, 1131, b 20,30,60

Credulitie how mischeefous, 780,a 40,50,&c: 781,a 10, &c.

Creichton a Scot apprehended with diuerse plots for inuasion of this realme, 1387,b 60

Creplegate builded, 705,b 40

Crispine William taken prisoner,33,a 40. ¶ See earle.

Crofts knight, generall of Hadington, 996,b 60. Examined touching the ladie Elisabeth, 1154,a 60. Went to talke with the quéene of Scots, 1188, a 10. His militarie seruice in Scotland, 1187,a 30

Crotoie besieged by the duke of Burgognie, & rescued, 616, b 10

Crome at Pauls crosse recanteth, 973,b 30,40.

Cromwell sometimes cardinall Wolseis seruant, aduanced to Henrie the eights seruice, 913,b 20. Maister of the iewell house,929,b 50. Created lord lord and keeper of the prime seale,941,a 10. Made knight of the garter,944.b 20. Lord earle of Esser, & great chamberleine of England,950, b 50, 60. Committed to the Towre,951,a 10. The words he spake at his death, 951,b 20. A description of him by sundrie circumstances, b 60, 952,a 10,20,&c.

Crosse called the blacke crosse, 347,b 30. Of the bishop of Elie and the print thereof, 131, b 60. The signe thereof solemnlie vsed by the duke of Lancaster,505,b 30. And the priuilege of those that toke vpon them the same,191,a 60. Preached against Manfred, 252,b 10. Séene in the aire long and large, with a crucifix,113,b 30. In Cheape defaced: note,1321,b 30.

Crosses red, white, and greene differences of nations: note, 111,b 10

Crosbie knight his gift to the citie of London, 702,a 50

Crowne established by act of parlement: note, 937, a 60. And what king John did forfeare to be depriued thereof,7, b 30. Intailed, 514, a 20. ¶ Sée Oth, Parlement, Succession.

Crowne of sedges and bulrushes set vpon the duke of Yorkes head in derision, 659, b 50

Crueltie paid with sudden mischéefe,664,b 20. Of the Britans and Flemings, 525, a 50. Beastlie and barbarous, 528,a 30. Restreined by Gods iudgment,147,a 40,50. Without direction of iustice, 173, b 30 Of king John by the preching of Cementarius a preacher,173,b 60. Of duke William against the English, 14,a 20, 8, a 30,40, b 50. Of the Scots,299,a 60. Of king Malcolme against the English,10,b 10. Of the papists in quéene Maries time toward the martyrs, 1363, a 40,50. Joined with victorie,23,a 50. And extremitie shewed vnto gentlemen by rebels,1052,b 20. ¶ Sée Frenchmen.

Culpepper vndermarshall of Calis, 819,b 30

Culuerings seauen, called the seauen sisters,taken from the Scots, 829, a 60. ¶ Sée Guns.

Cumberland sore spoiled by the Scots, 447,b 40

Cumin Robert captein against the Northumbers in a rebellion, 6,b 10

Curcie John winneth Dun in Vlster,100,a 30. His valiantnesse, 100,b 40

Curcie Robert slaine, 67,a 10

Curfue,or couer fue, when and whie first instituted, 6,a 50

Curse of duke William against Robert his rebellious sonne, 12.a 40. Of archbishop Geffrie of Yorke, 170, b 50. Of Thomas Becket for curtailing his horse,79, b 60. Of the pope against the archbishop of Yorke: note.256,b 40. Against the troublers of peace, 273, a 40. Upon the people of the south parts of England,214,b 30. Against the breakers of Oxford statutes,262,a 10. For oppressing of the poore,and how feared: note,175,a 40. Of a legat to Lewis the French kings sonne, 200, a 10. A great peace of ecclesiasticall discipline in old time: note, 35,b 60,36,a 10. Euerie sundaie to be read,31,a 20. ¶ Sée Pope.

Curses of the oppressed heard and reuenged: note, 1066, a 50

Curthose Robert, Henrie the first his brother, dieth for greefe, 44,b 50

Custome that the kings of Englands eldest sons were euer made dukes of Normandie,38,a 30. Of buieng and selling of men like oxen & kine,31,a 10. Of woll,and the augmentation thereof grudged at: note, 304, b 10. Raised to an higher price, 303,a 40

D.

Dareie lord knight of the garter,generall of a power sent against the Moores, 808,b 60. His companie readie at Plimmouth, honourable received of the king of Aragons councell,discontented at a bishops declaration, 809,b 10,40,60. His returne out of Spaine. 810,a 40

Dacres lord arreigned, but found cleere to his great honor,937,b 60. Arreigned for murther, executed at Tiburne: note, 954, a 40, 60. Rebelleth,1213,a 20. Flieth into Scotland, 1213,a 50

Dale pewterer his fault and releasment after long imprisonment: note, 968,b 30

Damiets,202,a 40. ¶ Sée Saracens.

Dampfront pelded to Henrie the fift, 563,a 20

Damport one of the gard hanged for robbing, 953,a 60,b 10

Danes rob the English merchants,and win great prises, 485,a 10. Arriued in England to ioine with the rebels against duke William,and returne doing nothing,11,b 30. Winter betwixt Dale and Trent,7,a 40. Wasted and ruinated religious places in the north parts,11,a 20. Vnder the conduct of Canute,&c preuaile mightilie in the North,6,b 50,7 a 30. ¶ Sée Normans, Sweine.

Darlington knight, lord gardian of London,remoued, 478, a 60,b 10

Daubeneie lord with others sent against the French king,his feats of armes,770, b 10,&c. Henrie the seauenths chéefe chamberleine,779,a 60. Deceaseth, 795,b 10

David of Wales reuolteth, and becommeth a rebell, 280,b 60. Condemned of treason,& executed, 282,a 60,b 10

Debate betwixt the dukes of Lancaster and Brunswike, 381,a 10 Betwixt the townesmen and scholers of Oxford: note,381,b 20. And how it was ended and taken vp,382 a 50,60,b 10,&c. ¶ Sée Contention.

Debt of Henrie the third, three hundred thousand markes, 252, a 20. Henrie the thirds sparing to bring him out of it,242,b 20. Maketh foes of freends: note, 312,a 20

Dedication of churches. ¶ Sée Church.

Deed of gift with the forme thereof in duke Williams time, 7,b 10

Delaies did not William Rufus vse, but exceeding speed: note,23,b 20. Breedeth losse: note, 17,b 60

Demands of the pope of a large tenth,210,b 60. Out of spirituall liuings in England, 208,a 40,50. In a treatie of peace,160,b 20. Moderated, 480,a 60. Hard,that hindered the peace betweene England and France,410,a 60,b 10. Too large,& hinder the concluding of peace,362,a 60. Verie large for a dowrie of gold and siluer,124,b 40. Vnreasonable,233,a 50,60. Presumptuous of the French king concerning peace, 388, b 10

Denie Edward. ¶ Sée Iusts triumphant.

Denmarke king arriueth in England,the citie of London banket him,he departeth into Flanders,878,a 60,b 10. Inuested into the order of the garter, 1348,a 50

Derision of the Englishmen in a time,347, a 40. Of quéene Ione, called Ione Makepeace,347,b 50. Of the duke of Yorke aspiring to the crowne,659,b 50. Lewis his faire, 200,b 10

Derth,381,a 50. Of corne, 473, a 20,204,b 30,292,b 40. Increseth,323, a 30,260,a 10. By means of raine,404,b 60, 58,a 60. By extreame cold weather, 217,b 50. After a wet season,898,b 40. Of victels: note,959,b 50,616,b 10. 237,b 50. For space of three yeares,156,b 60. Made markets déere,284,b 20. Through out all England,150, b 30. Exceeding great, 257, a 40. In Henrie the thirds campe: note, 248,b 50

Derth and plentie, 1133, a 30. without scarsitie and plentie to them that had monie, 1259, b 10. where none néeded,476, b 40

Derth and death,323,b 50,258, a 30,97,a 50,323,a 10, 351, a 40. ¶ Sée Scarsitie.

Desire hard to be brideled: note 576,a 10

Desmond John his miserable end: note,1366,a 10,&c. ¶ Sée more in earle of Desmond.

Desperation, 677,a 10

Destinie cannot be auoided,639 b 10

Deth of great personages, 312, b 30,295,b 60,263,a 10,247,a 20,236,a 50,239,a 60,241,a 50,240,b 10,352,b 10,20,231, b 10,244,b 40,230,b 50,228,b 50,223,b 30,514,b 10,1171,b 50,60,795,b 10,&c,30,791,a 10,950,a 60, 944,b 60,108,a 30,&c,481,a 20,30. In Spain through heat of that countrie, 450,a 60,b 10,395,b 30,237,b 30. And multitudes of people,410,a 30. Of learned bishops,249,a 10. In one yeare, 778,b 20. Of seauen aldermen in London within the space of ten moneths, 1209, b 60. ¶ Sée Aldermen.

Deth preferred before losse of monie, 252,b 40. Great by the flix, 537, a 20. Of people,21,a 30. Desperate of Summerutle,1366,a 20. In Winter,892,b 30. Of much people in London, &c, 825, a 60. By strange diseases: note, 1132,b 10. By the sword preferred before famishment,166 b 20. Of old people,1142,a 50. After a great derth,97, a 50. Of horse and men in the English host, 445,b 30. In the North countries, with spoile done by the Scots, 422,b 60 In Yorke and sundrie other places, 475, b 10. Of men and beasts,called the third mortalitie,404,b 20. After a sort sudden,397, b 50. Most men, few women,395, a 50. Of people betwixt Candlemas and Easter,379,b 30. Lamentable,323,b 50. It endeth discord: note,395, a 60. ¶ Sée Buriall.

Death sudden of sir Thomas Gresham,1310, b 50. Of a woman that forsware hir selfe. ¶ Sée Periurie. Of a sorcerer: note,1271,a 20. Of quéene Anne,the wife of Richard the third, 751, a 40. Sudden and dreadfull of a blasphemous preacher,1128, b 60,1129,a 10. Of a merciles & tyrannicall bishop,1130, a 60. Of the erle of Suffolke: note,440,a 10. ¶ Sée Abbat.

Deth and derth, 323, a 10,258, a 30,217,b 50,953,a 10: note, 1049,a 10,404,b 60,378,b 20, 30. ¶ Sée Mortalitie, Plage, Pestilence, & Sweating sicknesse.

Deuotion superstitious of Henrie the yong prince: note,107 a 20. ¶ Sée More knight.

Diches about London cleansed, 789,b 40,50

Diet of frée cost: note,1425,b 60 Moderated by an ordinance made by the maior and aldermen, 959, b 60,960,a 10. Excessiue restreined,111,b 40 A statute cõcerning it: note, 396,a 50

Digbie Edward. ¶ Sée Iusts triumphant.

Digeon. ¶ Sée Gun.

Dimmocke knight his challeng at Richard the thirds coronation,734,a 40. The kings champion, the manner of his tenure at a coronation, 802,a 20. His championlike office, 1180,a 40

Dinham esquier high treasuror of England,650,b 30. Valiant, 651, a 20. He and baron Carew with their powers come to Excester, 676, a 40.

Diram and Culpepper quéene Katharins paramors,arreigned at Guildhall, executed, 954.b 30,60,955,a 10

Discord what commeth of it, 406,a 10. Vnnaturall of brethren abhorred,30,a 10. Betweene the French king and his nobles,103, b 40. Betweene Henrie the second and the French king,107, b 30. Causing ciuill warre that might haue béene forsséne 83 a 10. Maintained betweene sonnes by the mother,86,b 60 87, a 10. Sowne betwixt Henrie the father and Henrie the son,84,a 20. Increseth betweene Henrie the second and Thomas Becket: note, 69.b 40. Enuious among the christians,134,a 20. Betwixt the pope and the emperor,75, b 10.

b 10. Betwixt the cardinall and the archbishop of Canturburie, 182, a 40. Betwixt king John and his barons, with the causes, 184, b 20. It and concord with their differing effects, 1054, b 20. What it bréedeth, 672, b 40. In an armie the hinderer of all profitable enterprises, 126, a 30. Ciuill, & inconueniences thereof, 636, a 30, b 20. &c, 60. Among the French nobles, 557, a 60. Giueth opportunitie to the enimie: note, 19, b 10. Offereth occasion of inuasion: note, 21, b 20. How inconuenient, 1, a 40, 50. About trifles, and how vnhappie it fell out, 13, b 30, &c. Betwixt Sauerie de Maulcon and the earle of Salisburie, 206, a 20. Betwixt the Norman mariners and them of Waton, 288, b 30. Betwixt Edward the firsts men and the Gantners, 306, a 50. Betwixt préests and friers, 392, a 20. Of thrée or foure peares ended by the death of one man, 395, a 60. ¶ Sée Contention and Malice.

Disme granted of the clergie, 409, a 10. To Edward the first and his brother, 277, b 10. To Henrie the third by the pope, for one whole peare, 271, b 10

Disobedience of the bishop of Norwich to Richard the second punished, 445, a 20. Of the archbishop Thurstane against Henrie the first, 38, b 10. To Richard the firsts commandement, 140, b 50. 10. Mainteined, 86, b, all, 87, a 50. Of erle Robert of Leicester, 89, b 50. In Henrie the sonne to Henrie the second his father, 76, b 10, &c. 77, a 20. To the prince, a sinne most abhominable, 1044, a 40. To the king, is disobedience to God, 1004, b 60. Of a subiect against his king sending for him, 21, b 30. Of the nobles to Edward the first: note, 302, a 60, b 10. Ill and presumption of the bishop of Durham against Edward the first: note, 315, a 60, 99, b 10. ¶ Sée Rebellion.

Dispensation. ¶ Sée Mariage, and Pope.

Disputation of grammar scholers, 1129, b 10, &c.

Dissemblers punished, 203, b 40, 50

Dissention among the Noblemen, 451, b 40. Betwéene Richard the second and the parlement house, 452, b 10. And his nobles, 458, a 30. The fruites thereof, 1052, b 40. In France made the earle of Richmond renew his suite, and put him to his shifts, 752, a 60. He hath men and monie of the French king for hostages, he is gréeued at the newes of king Richard the thirds intended marriage with his néece, 752, b 30, 50, Ciuill among Noblemen, prosecuted with sword and slaughter: note, 672, a 10, 60, b 10, &c. Betwixt the duke of Gloucester and the bishop of winchester, 590, b 60, 591, a 10, &c. Order taken by the lords for the pacifieng thereof, 594, b 30, &c, 595, a 10, &c, 620, a 30, 50, &c. Ciuill and the inconuenience thereof, 645, b 20. Among the Scotish nobilitie, 531, b 40. Betwixt prince Edward and the earle of Gloucester, 262, a 60

Dissimulation of Edward the seconds wife, 336, b 30. To auoid danger: note, 498, b 60, 490, a 10. Of yong king Henrie: note, 106, b 30. Notable of a wench counterfetting a spirit, 1117, b 60. Of Wolsele, 909, a 10. Of the French king, 774, b 40. Of the duke of Gloucester dangerous, 715, b 40. To auoid imminent danger, 124, a 20. Of Richard the first did him no good: note, 135, b 50. Most profound and notable, 721, a 40. Singular of duke Richard the third, 731, b 10, 732, a 30, 40. Of the erle of Warwike, 667, b 20. Of the king of Cipres, 128, a 10. Of Edward the fourth, to passe the countries without danger, and bring his purpose to passe, 679, a 40, &c, b 10, &c. Of the duke of Clarence, 681, b 60. Of the high constable of France, 695, a 50. Of the French king vpon a naughtie meaning, 698, b 30. With other ill qualities: note, 600, b 10, &c. Notable, 548, b 10. Of Perrie notorious, 1393, b 20, 1382, b 10. ¶ Sée Flatterie and Policie.

Diuell appeareth in the likenesse of a frier, 520, a 50

Diuision in a realme, and the mortall mischéefe thereof, 630, b 60

Diuorse sought betwéene honorable personages, 458, a 10. Betwéene Henrie the eight and quéene Katharine. ¶ Sée Quéene Katharine.

Dog in a rochet vnder the name of Gardiner. 1143, a 20

Dolphin of France commended, 560, b 20. Flées eth his old mother of hir treasure, and what mischéefe rose thereof, 560, b 30. Causeth solemne iusts to be proclamed at Paris, 833, a 10, &c. He is hurt in the hand, b 50. His secret malice, 60. Commeth before Bullen with a great power, 969, b 60. Causeth himselfe to be proclamed king of France, 585, b 50. He is tempering with the English, 586, a 10. Sentence against him for the murther of John duke of Burgundie, 578, b 30. Pursued by Henrie the fift, 580, b 60. Whie called king of Berrie, 581, a 10. Calling himselfe king of Sicill, 552, a 40. Deceaseth, 556, a 60. Whie the sunne and heire of euerie French king is so called, 1141, b 60

Dolphins taken in the Thams 1083, a 50. At London bridge 477, a 40

Douer robbed by the French, 295, b 10. A conuenient and perpetuall harborough for ships: 1535, a 10, &c. The castell inuincible, 191, b 50. Deliuered to Henrie the third, 271, b 60. ¶ Sée Castell.

Dowrie verie large demanded: note, 124, b 40

Drake sir Francis knight. ¶ Sée Voiage.

Drake sir Barnard knight, deceaseth, 1547, b 60, 1548, a 40

Drake burning sœne in the aire 277, b 40.

Dragon fierie sœne in diuerse places, 484, b 30. Two sœne fighting in the aire, 216, b 30.

Dreame of a knight that had long haire: note, 46, a 10. Of Richard the thirds, foretelling him of his end, 755, a 50. Of William Rufus: note, 26, b 10. Of a monke concerning William Rufus, 26, b 20

Dreames of Henrie the first, strange and troublesome, 43, b 60. Horrible that vexed Richard the second, after the execution of the earle of Arundell, 492, a 20. Import somewhat to befall, 44, a 10. And prognosticat the true euent of an action, 723, a 30

Dreux besieged and rendred to the Englishmen, 580, b 30

Drie wednesdaie, 818, b 20

Drinke more than ordinarie taken, causeth forgetfulnesse of good aduise, 26, b 30

Dronkennesse the ouerthrow of right and manhood: note, 626, b 20

Drought, 284, a 40. In the spring, 249, a 30. At Michaelmas, 249, a 30. Great, 245, b 40, 785, a 30. Exceeding great 381, a 40. ¶ Sée Summer.

Drowning of a lad in a kenell, 1260, a 10. Of people, cattell, &c, by the breaking in of the sea, 220, a 60. Of aboue a thousand men in one place, and more in others: note, 423 a 60, b 10, &c.

Drurie capteine his good seruice at the rebellion in Norfolke, 1038, a 40. Knight, his militarie seruice, his aduancement, 1216, b 10, 40

Duchesse Katharine, of Suffolke hated of Stephan Gardiner: note, 1142, a 60, b 10, &c, Hir trouble, persecution, and voluntarie banishment, 1143, 1144, 1145. Of Gloucester deceaseth, 514, b 10. Of yorke mother to Edward the fourth, deceaseth, 779, b 10. Of Salisburie beheaded, 703 b 10. Of Bedford deceaseth, 607, b 50 Of Burgogne hir appeale, 578, a 30. ¶ Sée Margaret. Of Saxonie deliuered of a child, 106, a 10, 107, b 60. Of Sauoie, sends for aid to king Henrie the eight against the duke of Gelders, 810, a 50 Best sweeth new cotes on the English souldiors, 810, b 60. Of Angoleme met about a treatise of peace, 909, b 60

Duchmen come into England holding a contrarie opinion to the Romish church, 68, a 50 Two of strange and monstrous stature, 1322, a 10

Dudleie chosen speaker for the commons at the parlement, 791, b 60. ¶ Sée Empson.

Dudleie knight lord admerall setteth forth from London towards Scotland, 961, b 40. went into France to receiue the French kings oth, his interteinment, 975, a 10, &c. Lord Howard impeacheth the French power, 1140, b 60. Lord Henrie slaine at the besieging of saint Quintins, 1134, b 10, 20. Bishop of Durham of honorable descent deceaseth, 761, b 40. Robert, the creation of him baron of Denbigh, and earle of Leicester, 1207, a 60, b 10. ¶ Sée Earle.

Duke Alan of Britain, 52, b 10, 51, b 60. Of Albanie leuieth an armie to inuade England, 875, b 20. Albert of Holland commeth into England, 556, b 60. An earnest mediator for peace, entreth in league with Henrie the fift, 557, a 10, b 20 Albert of Saxonie his policie to get the towne of Dam, he sendeth for aid to Henrie the seauenth to win Sluis, 772, a 20, 50

Duke of Alanson commeth into England, 1322, a 40. Departeth out of England with all the nobilitie and gentlmen attending vpon him, 1329. Attempteth diuerse exploits vnfortunate falling out, 1349, b 60. His ambition spreading like a canker, glad to retire notwithstanding a confident clamor, he sickneth, 1350, a all. Arriueth at Flushing, 1331, a 20. Received at Middleborough, 40. Refuseth to ride on horsebacke, b 60. Goeth to sée the towne of Ermwiden, 1332, b 10. His ships painted with his owne colours, 20. He prepareth to make his entrie into Antwerpe, 40. His roiall interteinment: note, 50. Created duke of Brabant, the states promise their loialtie, an offer of the marquesship of the sacred empire, &c: 1336, all. His pose, & strange habillements, the order of his entring into Antwerpe, 1337, a 10, &c. Saileth towards Antwerpe, landeth at a village in Brabant, a theater erected for him, kissing of his hand, his chaire of estate, obeisance done to him, 1334, all. The states loialtie vnto him, his answere vnto an oration made in their behalf, his promise euen to the shedding of his bloud, he is content to sweare to articles agréed vpon 1335, b 10, &c. Keies of Antwerpe presented to him, a canopie caried ouer his head, 1338, a 10, 60. Readie to take his oth of the magistrats and people, it is read in French, he casteth largesse of gold & siluer among the people, 1342, a 10, &c. The manner of his disease, 1351, a 10. His resolutenes to die, 50. Great hope conceiued of him if he had not bene preuented with death, b 20. Falleth into an extremitie of his maladie and past recouerie, 40. His words vpon his death bed, 1352, a 10, 30. His departure out of this world like a lampe, whose light faileth for want of oile, 30. His death greuouslie lamented, 50, 60, 1353, a 10

Duke Alphonse of Calabrie made knight of the garter, 775, b 20

Duke Arthur of Britaine made knight, 160, a 10. His mistrust in his vncle king John, 160, b 60. Doth homage to K. John, 162, a 20. Proclameth himselfe earle of Anion, &c: 164, b 10. Taken prisoner, 164, b 60. His mother accuseth K. John for the murther of hir sonne, 166, a 10, 20. Committed to strict prison, 165, a 50. His death verie lamentable, 165, b all

Duke of Aumarle constable of England, 495, b 50. Accuse 512, a 10. His answere vnto

Bagots

Bagots bill, he is appealed of treason, chalengeth triall with the lord Fitzwater, 512, a 10, &c.
Duke of Austrich whie he bore king Richard no goodwill, 136, a 10. Threatneth the English hostages with losse of life, 147, a 40. He catcheth a fall beside his horsse, & dieth of the hurt, a 60
Duke Beaufort of Summerset son vnto him that was slaine, 645, a 10. Conan of Britaine deceaseth, 75, a 10. Geffrie of Britaine his homage, 75, b 60. Guilebald of Urbin in Italie made knight of the garter, 795, b 10. John the second & Philip the second aduancers of the state, 1343, a 30. Philip of Burgognie surnamed the Hardie, 1343. Siward. ¶ Sée Siward. William of Aquitaine his feined freendship, 67, b 20. William of Normandie his politike conquest of England, 1, a 10. ¶ Sée William.
Duke of Bauier commeth to K. Henrie the fift with a number of horsemen, 577, a 50. He & his troops departeth with king Henrie the fifts fauor, 578, b 10
Duke of Bedford against the lord Lonell in armes, 764, b 10. Regent of England, 558, b 10. Calleth a parlement, 581, a 60. He relieueth Colnie 582, b 60. Giueth the French a great ouerthrow by sea, 557, a 40. Returneth into France, 596, a 60. His endeuors in France where he was regent, 585, a 40, b 20, &c. His decease: note, 612, a 50
Duke of Britaine pretendeth a right to the earledome of Westmerland, 513, b 60. Sendeth ambassadors to Henrie the fift, 582, b 60. His loue to the erle of Richmond and care of his safetie, 748, b 20. In armes against the French K. 767, a 10, &c: 768, a 10, &c. The battell is tried, he dieth, a 60. Restored to his dukedome 422, b 20. A frend to the Englishmen, 444, a 60. His dissimulation, he & the French K. accorded, 427, b 50, 60. Commeth ouer into Britaine, 408, a 40. Deceaseth, 367, b 40
Duke of Buckingham highlie commended, 737, b 40. Rich arraie, 801, a 10. Enuied & hated of cardinall Woolsie, 855, b 10, &c. Meanes to wind him out of Henrie the eights fauor, 855, b 40, 40, 60. Bils of complaints exhibited to him, he depriueth Kneuet of his office, 856, a 10. He & his companie ioine with Henrie the seuenth against Perkin Warbecke, 784, a 50. His words to M. Elisabeth, 717, b 40. His oration to the maior, aldermen, and commons at Guildhall, 728, a 60, &c. He & Glocester fall out, and whie, 376, a 30. They mistrust one an other, 736, a 50. Conspired against Richard the third, he is a professed enimie to him, his power of wild Welshmen (faiseharted) do faile him, a great water his hindring, his adherents & their power dispersed, 743, a 30, 50, b 10, 30, 60. The principall cause whie he conceiued such inward grudge against duke Richard the third, 739, b 20. His imaginations to depriue Richard the third, 739, b 40, 60. Rewards promised by proclamation for the attaching of him, betraied of his owne seruant, beheaded without arreignment or iudgement, 744, a 20, 50, b 10. Conuinced with others to worke mischiefe, 715, a 30. His resolution not to meddle in seeking to obteine the crowne, but by deposing Richard the third to preferr the earle of Richmond thereto, the summe of his purpose, 742, a 60, b 40, 60. Is sent to the duke of Yorke to know the cause of his being in armes, 643, a 40. Destruction deuised and practised, 862, b 50, 60. He is accused & indicted of treason, 863, a 10, &c: 864, a 10, &c. Arreigned at Westminster, conuinced of hie treason, iudgement giuen vpon him, beheaded on Towre hill, the last lord high constable of England, 865, a 20, 40. ¶ Sée Duke of Glocester.
Duke of Burbons practises to make the Englishmen reuolt from their owne king, 517, b 50. Incampeth nere Rone, slaine at the assalt, 895, b 30, 60. Dieth at London, 610, a 40
Duke of Burgognie chiefe doer in France, 560, b 40. Prepareth to besiege Calis, 528, b 40. Enuieth the glorie of the English, 616, b 10. His oth to Henrie the fift, 572, b 40. Prepareth an armie against Calis, 613, b 40. His armie of 40000 men, b 60. Besiegeth it, his enterprise to der the hauen, his bastile taken, he breaketh vp his siege, & flieth, 614, all. He & Charles of France at peace, and what mischiefe insued it, 611, a 50, 60, 612, a 10, &c. Commeth to king Edward the fourth, 695, a 20. He departeth suddenlie to the kings discontentment, a 60, b 10. Departeth from Edward the fourth in a rage, 698, a 30. Commeth in hast to Edward the fourth, 697, a 50. His behauiour and speech, a 60, b 10, &c. Sendeth ambassadors to Calis, 678, a 60. He inuadeth Edward the fourth, &c: 678, b 60, 679, a 10. Deceaseth, 690, a 60, 702, b 20. Murthered, 571, a 60
Dukes of Burgognie issued out of the house of France, 1342, b 60, 1343, a 10, &c.
Duke of Clarence lord Lionell, 395, b 50. Sent to aid the duke of Orleance, 539, b 60. Marcheth towards Guisnes, 540, a 20. Made a rode into Anion, 579, b 60. He is betraied by Fergus a Lombard, 580, a 10. He and diuerse nobles slaine, a 20, 30. Before Paris with his armie, 570, b 30. Seeketh to make peace betweene Edward the fourth and the earle of Warwike, 682, a 50. Weighing the inconuenience of discord, Warreth wise, & slow to aid the earle of warwike, his dissimulation, 681, a 60, b 10 50, 60. He and the earle of warwike sojourned at Excester to passe ouer the seas, they arriue on the English coasts, 676, b 10, 60. A conspirator against his brother Edward the fourth, he taketh the seas, 674, a 40. His promise to a damsell persuading him to peace, 675, a 10, 20. Drowned in a but of Malmesie, 703, a 40
Duke of Excester his pithie saieng, 546, a 60. Uncle to Henrie the fift, 560, a 30, 40. Captein of Harflue, 556, a 60. His ouerthrow by the French, b 10 with a power at Newarke, 630, b 60. Left for dead but recouered: note, 685, a 60. Deceaseth, 596, b 60, 598, b 50. Found dead in the sea, 694, b 10
Duke of Gelderlands letters to Richard second, 475, b 50. Cõmeth into England, disuadeth Richard the second from peace with the French K. 477, b 30
Duke of Glocesters protestation vpon his oth, 45[illegible], a 10. Arested, 489, a 30. Confesseth all wherwith he was charged, he is smothered to death: note, 489, a 60, b 10. He & Richard second at priuie grudge, talke betweene them, 487, b 40, 50. Excused to K. Richard second by the duke of Lancaster & Yorke, he & the abbat of S. Albons conspire, 488, a 40, b 10, &c. Made duke of Ireland, his iournie thither vnluckilie staied, 479, b 50, 60. His iournie into Prutzenland, in great fauour with the commons, 475, a 60. A seuere man, 464, a 40. His death, the doers therein exempted from king Henrie the fourths pardon, 514 a 50. In question, 525, b 40. His death in part reuenged, 513, b 20 Much adoo about it: note, 512, a 50, 60, 513, a 10. His complaint to Henrie sixt against the cardinall of Winchester, 620, a 50. Liketh well of the kings mariage with the earle of Armenaks daughter: note, 624, b 60. Winneth Rockesburgh castell, 657, a 60. His death, & what mischiefe followed it, 627, a 60. He is commended: note, b 10, &c. Discharged of all gouernment, the saint quarell piked against him, he is suddenlie murthered, 627, a 10. Ill practises against him vnder faire countenances, 612, b 60. Spoileth Flanders, 614, b 60. Calleth a parlement, Henrie the sixt in France, 607, b 10. Articles against the bishop of Winchester, 591, a 60. Mariage in question, he weareth werie of his wife, 590, a 60 He and bishop of winchester at dissention, 590, a 60, 591, a 10, &c. Murthereth Henrie the sixt in the Towre, 690, b 60. Vnenimie to peace, 697, a 10. Proclamation against the lord Hastings, &c: 724, a 20. Marieth another mans wife: note, 586, a 30. His behauiour in the assemblie of lords, 722, b 10. His oration to the lords against the quéne, 717, a 10. His resolution to go through with his diuelish enterprise, 721 b 20 Solicitations tending wholie to trouble and bloudshed, 714, a 60. His & Buckinghams practises, 715, a 30. Made protector, 716, b 50. ¶ Sée duke of Buckingham.
Duke of Guise with a great armie commeth towards Calis, entreth the English frontiers, his policie, 1135, a 20, 40, b 10. His proclamation to bring in monie, plate, &c, 1136, a 10. Marcheth to the towne and fort of Guisnes, 1137, a 40. And monsieur Dandelot with their powers, in a rage with his soldiors, a trumpetter from him to the lord Greie, they haue communication one whole houre, 1139, a 10, 30, b 30 Appointed to be a principall leader and executor of forren inuasion, 1371, b 30, 40, &c, b 60
Duke of Hereford appealeth the duke of Northfolke of treason, 493, b 20. Beloued of the people, honourablie intertained with the French king, 493, b 30
Duke of Irelands passage stopped by the lords, his souldiors reuolt from him, he flieth from his armie, getteth him into Holland, letters found in his trunks, 421, a 10, 50, 60. He and his associats attainted of treason by parlement, 463, b 30
Duke of Lancaster and the Londoners submit their quarels to the kings order, 416, a 20. He & Yorke excuse the duke of Glocester to king Richard the second, 488, a 40. High steward of England at an arreignment, 491, a 60. He & Yorke assemble their powers to resist Richard the seconds dealings, 490, a 10. Returneth into England out of Gascoigne, 467, a 60. Created, 380, b 50. Debate betwixt him and the duke of Brunswike, 381, a 10. Goeth ouer sea with a naule, and two of Edward the thirds sonnes with him, 382, a 30. Is sent to aid the king of Nauarre, 386, b 30. Perswadeth Edward the third to peace with the French king, 393, b 50. Maketh a iournie into France, 404, a 50. Sent into France with an armie, fortifieth his campe, 403, b 30, 50. Commeth to Burdeaux, 408, a 50, &c. In danger by the Londoners: note, 412, a 20. Goeth into Spaine with an armie, 448, b 60. He landeth at Brest, and winneth two bastides from the French, landeth at Groigne, 449, a 50, 60. He & the king of Portingall alied, they inuade Castile, he returneth out of Portingale into Gascoigne, 450, a 20. Reconcileth the king and the lords, 467, b 10. Made duke of Aquitaine, 473, a 10. Commeth to Chester citie, the countrie submit themselues vnto him, Holt castell deliuered vnto him, 500, a 10, 30. He and Glocester sent into France to treat of peace, 480, a 30. The grant of the duchie of Aquitane vnto him reuoked 485, b 10. He marieth a ladie of meane estate, whom he kept as his concubine, b 60. Calleth a parlement in Richard the seconds name, 502, a 10. His behauiour to the king, their meeting, his demand, & receiuing into London, 501, b 10, 20, 50. His bastards made legitimat, 487, b 10. Ambassador for the K. into France, 475, b 30, A prince of great renowme, 477, a 60. Saileth into Aquitaine, 481, a 60. Solicited to expell king Richard the second, b 60. And to take vpon him the regiment, 497, b 60. The duke of Britain his great frend, the commons deme to resist the duke, he landeth in Yorkeshire, his oth to the lords that aided him, the harts of the commons wholie bent vnto him, he marcheth to Wrisbow, 498, a 10, 50, 60, b 10, 30, 60. Feasteth strangers, 474, a 20. Enuied of the rebels: note, 431, a 20, &c. Not suffred to enter into the towne of Werwike, 439, a 10. Chargeth the erle of Northumberland with manie crimes, commeth to the parlement with a great troope of men, 439, a 20, 60, b 10. Sent into France to treat of peace, 446, a 40. Misliking the manners of the court getteth himselfe selfe to Killingworth castell, 419,b 20. He & the erle of Cambridge appointed protectors, 418,a 20. Saileth to Britaine with a great power, 420, a 60. Getteth him to his castell of Pomfret and fortifieth it, 446, b 60. Laieth challenge to the crowne, 505, b 40. He is placed in the regall throne, b 60. King elect, his words to the lords, 507, a 60. His coronation, proclamed by the name of Henrie the fourth, 507, b 10, 30. Invaded Scotland with an armie, 445, b 10. Impeached of treason, 445, b 40. His decease, 395, b 10, 496, a 20. ¶ See Edmund.

Duke of Normandie commeth downe into Britaine, 364, b 10

Duke of Northfolke in armes against Wiat, arriueth at Stroud 1094, b 50. He with the capteine of the gard put to their shifts, 1095, a 10. He and Suffolke elected into the order of S. Michaell, 929, a 10. Ambassador into France, 950, a 50. Henrie the eights lieutenant, 942, b 60. Cõmeth with a power against the rebels in Suffolke, 891, b 40. He & the earle of Surrie on Richard the thirds side, 755, b 20. His constancie & allegiance to Richard third, he is slaine, 759, b 10. Accused of treson, 493 b 20. Obiections against him, 494, a 30. Committed to the Towre, attainted, and the attendor reuersed, 976, b 10, 50. Deceaseth, 514, a 60, b 10, 891, a 60, 1121, b 30. Inuested into the order of S. Michaell, 1209, a 20. Sent to the Towre, 1211, b 60. Remoued from the Towre to the Charterhouse, 1222, a 20. Cõmitted to the Towre, 1226, b 30. Arreigned, condemned, and iudged, 1227, b 60. Beheaded, foren nations write therof, his attire, behauior & speech at his execution: note, 1229, a 50, 60, b 10, &c: 1230

Duke of Northumberlands enterprise against the ladie Marie incouraged, 1085, b 50, 60. His words to the lords of the councell about quéne Jane, who adhered vnto him, he setteth forward with all spéed, 1086, a 10, &c: b 10, 20. Writeth for more succours, 1087, a 30. His sons released out of the Towre, 1127, a 10. Arrested by the earle of Arundell and committed to the Towre with his adherents, 1088, a 60, b 30. Arreigned, his request to vnderstand the opinion of the court in two points, 1089, b 40, 50. His foure requests after his iudgment to die, he with others are executed at Towre hill, 1090, a 10, 50

Duke of Orleance partaker with the duke of Britaine against the French king, 768, b 10. How long prisoner in England, his ransome and release, 618, b 20, 50. Chalenge, 524, b 60 He besieged Vergi in Guien, 525, a 20. Besiegeth townes in Gascoigne, 533, a 50. Commeth to the English armie, 540, b 30. Murthered, 537, a 60

Duke Richard his singular dissimulation, 731, b 10. He speaketh otherwise than he meaneth, 731, b 20. His election hard to be preferred, 730, b 20. Preferred at last by voices of confederacie, 730, b 60. Aduised by bishop Morton, their conference, he openeth himselfe and his secrets to the bishop, complaineth of lacke of preferment in K. Edwards daies, 738, all. His title to the crowne, with the office and dignitie of a king, he is commended to the people as worthie and sufficient, 730, a 20, 30. ¶ See Duke of Gloucester and Richard.

Duke of Richmond a martialist or warrior Henrie the eights base sonne, 929, a 10. Henrie Fitzroie Henris the eights base sonne deceaseth, 941, a 10

Duke of Saxonie in disfauour and exile, 105, b 60. Commeth into England, his goodlie stature, 212, b 40. Pardoned and reuoked out of exile, 108, a 10

Duke of Suffolke created, 627, b 30. Winneth the goodwill of the quéen Dowager of France 836, b 10. They married togither, b 30. Entreth France with an armie, 879, a 50. Breaketh by his armie & commeth to Calis, 881, a 40. Chiualrie & valiant seruice in France, he knighteth diuerse gentlemen, 879, b 60, 880, all. Hope hindered by cardinall Wolsele, 839, a 60, And others sent into France to fetch the French quéne into England, 836, a 50. Incountereth with a strong and tall Almaine, 833, b 60. He foileth the Almaine, 834, a 10. Deceaseth, his iust commendation, 969, b 30. The commons exclaime against him, 631, a 10, 20, 40. Committed to the Towre, his wretched deth, 632, a 10, 50. He with others brought to the Towre, 1099, a b 10. Committed to the Towre and released, 1088, b 40. Goeth downe into Leicestershire, is a fauourer and furtherer of Wiats practises, he is kept out of Couentrie, apprehended, 1095, a 40, 60, b 10. Arreigned, condemned, beheaded, 1100, b 20, 40, 50. What words he spake to the people at his death, b 60.

Duke of Somerset made regent of Normandie, and the duke of Yorke discharged, 625, b 30. Made capteine of Calis, 650, b 60. His valiantnesse, 619, a 30. Reuolteth from Edward the fourth, taken & beheaded, 666, a 40, &c: b 20, &c. Made lord protector, 979, a 40, 50. His returne from Scotland, 992, a 60. Not desirous of slaughter, 988, b 20. With his power against Scotland, 980, a 30, &c: b 30. Sendeth an herald to summon a castell, 981, a 10, 20. Answer to a Scotish herald at armes, 983, b 60. His diligence to further the fortification to Rockesburgh, 995, b 10. His statelie stile with his epistle exhortatiue sent to the Scotish nobles, &c: 998, b 10, &c. He & the earle of Warwike outwardlie frends, 1062, a 50. And others submit themselues to Edward the fourth, 665, b 60. Againe apprehended and committed to the Towre, 1066, b 60 Charged sir Peter Carew with the rebellion, 1022, b 30. He and the earle of Deuonshire comfort quéne Margaret, 685, b 60. Politike & puissant, 687, b 60. More hardie than wise, 687, b 60, 688, a 10, &c. Striketh out the lord Wenlocks brains, 688, a 50. His infortunatnesse, 615, b 60. Arrested, 641, a 20. Set at libertie, made deputie of Calis, 40, 50. Accuseth the earle of Yorke of high treason, 639, a 50. Burthened with all things that happened amisse, 643, a 40. He is slain, b 10. His displacing out of his protectorships consulted on, remoueth in hast with K. Edward first to Windsore, his letter to the lord priuie seale 1057, a 20, 50, 60. His letters to the lords, 1058, a 30. Proclamation with articles against him, b 20, 30, &c. Prisoner, committed to the Towre, articles obiected against him, 1059, b 10, 30, 40, 1060, a 10, &c. Released & restored, 1060, b 10, 20. Deliuered out of the Towre, 1062, a 50. Arreigned both of felonie & treason, contemned of felonie, people murmur at his condemnation, deliuered to be executed, his behauior at his death, 1067, a 10, 30, 40, 50, b 40, 60. His words at his death, a sudden noise & feare among the people assembled, 1068, a 10, &c: 50, b 19, 1069, a 60. Described, b 10. Beheaded, 688, b 60

Duke of Surrie marshall of England, 493, b 50

Duke of Yorke lieutenant generall of England, 497, a 10. Misliketh the court & goeth home, 496, a 60. Noted for crueltie, what maner of man he was, his end, 712, a 10, 20. Plantagenet afterwards Richard third, 595 b 40. Made regent of France, enuied of duke of Summerset, 612, b 10, 617, b 10, 619, a 30. Appointed againe to be regent of Normandie, 625, b 50. A persecuting enimie to the duke of Summerset: note, 630, b 20. Assembleth an armie, his words in writing sent to the K. 642, a 50, b 20, &c: 643: a 10. His coming against the K. iustified, he is made protector of the realme, 644, b 20. Discharged of his office, 645, a 10, 20. Assembleth an armie, 649, b 30. Cõmeth out of Ireland, his strange demeanors bold speech and oration to the lords of parlement, 655, a 30, &c. Crowned with sedge or bulrushes in derision, 659, b 50. He and his complices flie, 650, b 20. He and others atteinted, 652, a 10, &c. Articles that he and the other earles sent to the archbishop of Canturburie and the commons, 652, b 10, &c. Articles of peace and agreement betweene him and Henrie the first, his claime to the crowne, 657, b 20, &c. Proclamed heire apparant to the crowne, he is slaine, 659, a 30, b 10. Tempering about his title to the crowne, 617, b 40. Reconciliation to Henrie the first, he accuseth the duke of Somerset of treason, 639, a 40. Set at libertie and while, his submission to king Henrie the first vnder his oth, 639, b 50. Maketh claime to the crowne, 637, a 50. Raiseth a great power to recouer it, his letter to Henrie the first, 637, a 50, b 10, 50, 638, a 10, &c. Fauourers executed and spoiled, 853, b 20. Seekes the destruction of the duke of Summerset, banded himselfe with Neuils, 641, b 60. Slaine in Agincourt field, 555, b 60. Buried at Fodringhaie castell, 556, a 20. Taketh indenture tripartite of the conspired noblemen out of his sonnes bosome: note, 515, a 20. Deceaseth, 520, b 30. Accused by his sister the ladie Spenser, 527, b 30. His head set on a pole at Yorke, 659, b 60. ¶ See Richard the third.

Dukes of Gloucester infortunate: note, 627, a 50. Of Normandie were the kings of Englands eldest sons, 38, a 30. Of yorks honorable emulation, 776, a 50

Dukes and earles, &c: created, 537, b 60, 546, b 30, 625, a 10, 702, a 60, 1081, a 60, b 10, &c, 1066, b 60, 492, b 40, 448, a 60, 395, b 50. Deprriued of their tities, 513, b 10. Of England from the first to the last, all set downe in a collection, 1230, b 30, &c, to 1238, a 10.

Duncane a Scot wasteth Kendall, 91, b 10

Dunkirke towne & sacked by the English, 442, b 50. Taken and burnt by the French, 1150, a 40

E.

Edmer. ¶ See Archbishop.

Eclipse of the sunne strange, 102, b 50, 348, b 30, 212, b 40, 229, a 10

Eclipse of the moone, 241, a 50. At thirteene daies old, 212, b 40. Of foure houres continuance, 251, a 50. Of the sunne and moone extraordinarie, 44, a 40. Verie strange: note, 128, b 50. Eclipses foure in a yere, 961, a 60

Edenburgh castell besieged, 353, b 40. Entred forceablie by the English, 962, a 60. Deliuered to Edward the first, 300, a 60. Burnt by Richard the second, 447, b 10. Left desolate, 445, b 10

Edgar Etheling where borne, 6, a 30. Pursueth the Normans, 6, b 40. Flieth into Scotland, 7, a 50. Joineth forces with Osborn against the Normans 6, b 50. Should haue beene made king of England, 1, a 40. And while he was not aduanced to the crowne of England, 1, a 50. Sent into Scotland with an armie, and while, 23, a 30. The sonne of king Malcolme to be placed in the kingdome, 23, a 30. In seruice at the warres vnder the Scotish king, 19, b 30. In great account with Robert duke of Normandie, 19, b 50. Deprriued of his honor by William Rufus, 19, a 50. Obteineth licence of duke William to depart the realme, 14, b 10. Groweth in fauour & honor with duke William, 10, b 60, 11, a 10. Capteine in rebellion against duke William after a reconcilement and pardon, described: note, 9, b 60. Second flight into Scotland, 10, a 40. ¶ See Edwin.

Edgar the K. of Scotlands sister wife to Henrie the first, 29, a 10

Edmund son to Henrie the third, 236, a 60. Shewed in parlement as K. of Naples, 255, b 10 Inuested king of Sicill & Naples, 252, b 60. Created duke of Lancaster, 249, a 10

Edmund of Langlie borne, afterwards duke of Yorke, 363, a 30

Edmund the great, sonne to Harold, his exploits, 6, a 60

Edrike Syluaticus rebelleth in the ablence of duke William, 5, a 10

Edward the first proclamed king of England, his coronation and beginning of regiment, 277, all. He entreth into to Wales to rescue his people against the Welsh, 281, a 20. Goeth ouer into France, 279, b 20. His fauour and good-will to the princes of Wales, 279, a 10, &c. Dauid of Wales preferreth him in marriage, 279, a 20, &c. Commeth to Chester, 278, a 20. Surnamed Longshanks (and White) borne, 223, b 40. Sendeth an armie into Scotland, 314, a 20. His prouision for his iournie into France, 303, a 50. Putteth prince Edward in prison, 313, b 30. Answer to pope Boniface proouing the right of Scotland to belong to him, 309, b 60, 310, a 10, &c. Entreth into Scotland to reuenge the death of his people, 312, a 40. Goeth with an armie into Scotland, 309, a 50. Vexeth them, &c: b 30. Goeth to Scotland, 311, a 50. Married to the French kings sister, 309, a 10. His liberalitie towards his nobles, 308, a 40. Earles Marshall and Hereford refuse to go ouer with him into Flanders, 304. Gardians appointed ouer his sonne in his absence, he passeth ouer into Flanders, b 20. Taketh vpon him the crosse, 284, a 20. Passeth ouer into France, 283, b 30. Recognised for superior lord of Scotland: note, 286, all. Summoned to appeare at Paris, 290, b 50. Condemned in the French court, 291, b 20. His request made to the Scots denied, 296, a 30. Entreth into wales 293, b 30. Shift to get monie, 280, a 50. Goeth about to purchase his peoples good-will, 277, b 50. Renounceth the French king, his shift for monie, an excuse that he vsed, 292, b 10, 60. Concludeth a league with the erle of Flanders and the earle Bar, 296, b 50. Fortifieth Berwike, 299, a 30. Summoneth and winneth Berwike, 298, a 20, 50. Planteth his siege about Edenburgh castell, 299, b 60. Passeth forth through Scotland, bringeth the marble stone from thense, the nobilitie submit themselues vnto him, the forme of their homage, his words accepting it, 301, a all. Meant to haue made a full conquest of Scotland as he had don of wales, 317, a 10. The forme of fealtie that Baliol king of Scots did to him, 289, b 60. Appointeth wardens for the realme of Scotland, beareth swaie in the election of their chancellor, the nobilitie sweare fealtie to him: note, 288, a 30, &c. Sickeneth, dieth, is buried at Westminster: his issue, his stature and forme of bodie, his vertues and vices, 316, a 60, b 10, &c.

Edward the second borne, 282, b 20, when he began his reigne, 318, a 10. He & the erle of Lancaster made frends, 324, a 40. Goeth into Scotland, what he did there, his entrance, 320, b 10. Hath his nobles in no regard: note, 318, b 10. Deposed by act of parlement, 340, b 10. Saileth into wales, 338, b 60. His fauour to the Welshmen, 339, a 10. Sought vnto to resigne his crowne, his griefe therat, 340, b 50, 60. Betraied into his enimies hands, brought to Killingworth castell, 339, b 50. Withstood in armes by his wife, 336, 337, 338. Sendeth for his wife and sonne home out of France, 336, b 10, 20. Writeth to the duke of Britaine, 335, b 30. Like to be betraied, the traitors executed, 333, 334. Goeth to Scotland with an armie, 332, b 50. Subdueth his barons, 330, 331, 332, a 10. In armes against his enimies, his proclamation, 329, b 60. Passeth by a ford, commeth to Tutburie, causeth hue & crie to be made, 330, a 30, 50. Durst not but yeeld to his nobles request, 327, b 10. He goeth to Canturburie, talketh with lord chamberleine, besiegeth the castell of Leeds, 327, b 10. Affection and loue to Piers Gaueston, 320, a 10. His request for his life, his displeasure for his death, 321, a 30, 60. Passeth ouer to France, 318, b 50. Doth homage to the French king, marrieth his daughter, returneth, is receiued into London, crowned, 318, b 60, 319, a 10. Goeth to Berwike, 324, b 50. Passeth into Scotland, what issue his armie had there, he escapeth danger of death, 322, a 20, 40. Murthered, 341, b 60. His nature and conditions, his issue, 342, a 10, &c

Edward the third borne, 321, b 10. Beginneth his reigne, 343, a 60. Passeth ouer into Calis, inuadeth France, returneth for want of vittels, the constable of France demandeth battell of him, 383, a 10. Lodgeth his armie neere Berwike, the Scots yeeld vnto him, the realme of Scotland resigned vnto him, 386, a 50, 60. Three kings come vnto him about businesse, 396, a 50. Aduanceth his sons to degree of honor, 395, b 50. Prepareth to make a iournie to France, arriueth at Calis, 392, b 10, 30 Draweth towards Paris, 393, a 60. Returneth out of France into England, 394, b 30. His foure sons take part with the lord maiors, &c: challenge at iusts, 392, a 50. Seare afflicteth the Scots, 386, b 20. His honorable hart to his enimie, 379, b 10, Hath Calis surrendred vnto him. ¶ See Calis. His pitie towards the poore: note, 375, a 20. His voiage, inuasion, and victorie against the French summarilie set downe in a letter missiue, 373, b 30, &c. His words & behauior to his son the young prince after his victorie against the French, 372, b 60. Passeth ouer into Normandie, his armie, landing, & ordering of his soldiors, 369, b 40, &c. His enterprises and atchiuements against towns & people, his spoile & booties, he is in danger, 370, all. Beginneth his enterprise against the enimie with prayer to God, his demeanor before the battell, 371, a 10, b 30. Hath towns restored him, 360, a 60. Taketh into his hands all the profits that the cardinals, &c: held within his realme, 369, b 30. Goeth ouer into Flanders, 367, b 60. Passeth ouer into Britaine, 364, a 40. Returneth by sea out of Britain, he is in danger of drowning 365, a 30. Feasted by the erle of Flanders, he goeth into Zeland, arriueth at the Towre, deleth roundlie with his officers, 360, b 10, &c. Is offended with the archbishop of Canturburie, 361, a 10. Taketh sea, setteth vpon his enimies the French, getteth the victorie, goeth to Gaunt, couenants betwixt him & his confederats, 358, a 50, 60, b 50. 359, a 40. Signifieth his right to crowne of France, taketh vpon him the title and armes thereof, 357, a 20, 30. Taketh vpon him the name of K. of France, 356, b 30, and by what right he clamed it, 40, &c. Besiegeth Cambrie, 355, b 20. He raseth his siege, b 40. Hath Flanders at commandment, he saileth to Antwerpe, 354, b 60. His confederats, 355, a 10. Practiseth to alienat the Flemings harts from obedience to their earle, 353, b 50. Entreth into Scotland with an armie, 351, a 10. Maketh spoile by fier and sword, the Scots ordeine a statute in fauor of him, towns fortified by him there, he studieth to gather monie to mainteine his wars, 352, all. Aideth the K. of Scots and Wale, 350, a 10. Passeth the sea apparelled like a merchant, 348, b 40. Waxeth feeble & sicke, 411, a 20. Deceaseth, his issue, praise, proportion of bodie, and vertues, 412, a 40, &c: 413.

Edward the fourth borne, 623, a 30. Feasteth the maior and aldermen of London, 705, a 10. He and the French king their interview, the maner therof: note, 699, a 30, 40, &c. His shift to get monie: note, 694, a 40, &c. He passeth ouer into France, and sendeth a defiance to the French king, 694, b 10, 40. Returneth into England, 701, a 10. Without interruption passeth forward to Yorke, marcheth to the citie gates, receiueth the sacrament & an oth, the marquesse Montacute suffereth him to passe by, he cometh to Northhampton, 680, a 30, &c. Dispraised and fowlie spoken of by the earle of Warwike, 671, a 20. His communication with the duke of Burgognie: note, 697, a 50, 60, b 10, &c. Shamefull and slanderous words against him, 698, b 30. His politike foresight, 688, a 20. Commeth to Leicester, prouoketh the earle of Warwike to fight, commeth to Warwike, he and his brother the duke of Clarence reconciled vnwitting to the earle of Warwike, 681, a 10, &c. His victorie, and the offering vp of his standard, 685, b 10. Lodgeth with his armie before his enimies, 684, a 10. Set forward against his enimies the nobles of England, 686, a 40. His painfull march with his armie, the ordering of his battels, 687, b 10, 30. Passeth to London, 682, b 30. The Londoners resolue to receiue him, the Towre recouered to his vse, he entreth into London, 683, a 60, b 10. Arriueth on the coast of Northfolke, then at the head of Humber, landeth at Rauenspurgh, the people let him passe hearing the cause of his comming into the countrie, he passeth towards Yorke, 679, a 10, &c. Judged a vsurper, 678, a 10. His frends take sanctuarie, 677, b 10. Received verie honorable into the citie of Excester, 676, b 30. The citizens benevolence to him, how long he continued there, b 30, 50. Commeth to Lin, taketh ship to passe ouer sea, the number that passed ouer with him, he arriued at Alquemarle, 675, b 10, 20, 40. Taken prisoner and brought to Warwike castell, 673, a 60. He is deliuered out of captiuitie, commeth to London, b 10, 20. His proclamation to such as were assembled vnder him, 664, b 10. His title to the crowne, 663, b 60, 664 a 10. Proclamed K. 725, b 10. Notablie slandered and spoken against in the duke of Buckinghams oration, 728, a 50, 60, &c, 729, a 10, &c. His words to his mother about marriage, 726, b 30. Slandered in a sermon, 727, b 50. His flight into Holland, 727, a 50. The cheefest deuise of the conspirators to depose him, 725, b 60. Described, his qualities, 711, a 40, &c. His three concubines, 725, a 10. His last words vttered on his death bed, 708, b 30, 50, &c. Deceaseth, his issue male and female, 710, a 20, &c.

Edward the fift his comming to London, 716, b 50. He and his brother murthered in the Towre: note, 734, b 20, &c, 735, all.

Edward the sixt borne, 944, a 10 Proclamed king of England rideth through London to Westminster, crowned, 979, a 10, b 10, 30. His letter to the citizens of London, 1059, a 10. He rideth through London, 1060, b 40. His princelie speech to doctor Ridlete after his sermon made of mercie & charitie, 1081, b 60. His message to the rebels of Cornewall and Deuonshire, 1003, b 60, 1004, a 10. Founder of the hospitals in London, 1082, b 30. His victories against the Scots, 1161, b 10. His feare and mistrust of three mariages which fell out to be true, he falleth sicke & dieth, 1083, b 20, 30, 60. His praiseworthie qualities, and death reuealed, 1084, a 30, &c, b 10. His buriall, 1089, a 50. Counterfeited, and the partie executed, 1127, a 40, &c, b 10

Edward created prince, 365, a 40. Made knight, 660, b 60. Setteth forward into the holie land, 274, b 60. Traitorouslie wounded, 275, a 20. Getteth diuerse castels, 266, a 60. Escapeth a danger, 269, b 50. He and the earle of Gloucester not suffred to come within the citie of London, 262, b Still interested in manie places, 262, b 60. Goeth against the Welshmen, 264, a 10. Receiueth the crosse, 274, a 40,

40. Taketh monie out of the treasurie of the temple, 264, a 60. Arriueth at Acres, in danger to be slaine by treason, 275, a 20. Hath the rule of London, he appointeth the maior & shiriffes, 274, b 20. Sent to the king of Castile, 249, b 50. He marrieth the ladie Elenor daughter to king Alfonse, b 60. Created prince of Wales. 250, a 10. His wife commeth to London, 252, a 50. Pursueth the Londoners, 268, a 10. Imprisoned for riot, 313, b 30. Made knight, and sent into Scotland, 314, a 30. Goeth ouer into Gascoigne, 382, b 50. His proceedings in Aquitane, 383 b 20, &c. Two bishops sent vnto him from the pope, 383, b 50, &c: 384, a 10, &c. His first sonne borne, 397, a 60. And duke of Aquitaine, 332, a 40. Sent into France, 336, a 60. Inuadeth the French dominions, 387, a 10, His order where he came, his feats of armes, the passages stopped against him, he returneth, lodgeth in the towne of Remorentin, he is followed by the French king, 387, all. Contented to come to a parle, his offer, his exhortation to his soldiors when he saw he must needs fight, 388, a 60, b 10, 60. Noblemen that were with him, the number of his armie, both powers ioine issue, 389. He obteineth the victorie, his meeke oration to the French king his prisoner, he returneth to Burdeaux, bringeth the French king ouer into England, 390, a 10, b 20, 60. Made lord warden of the realme, 339, b 20. Setteth forward into Spaine, 398, a 20. He passeth into Guien, 395, b 60. Put to his shifts for default of monie, he returneth into Gascoigne, constreined to burden his subiects with a sore subsidie, 400, a 10, 30, b 30. Appealed to appere before the French king, 401, a 10. His answer, a letter published by him to appease the Gascoignes, b 40. Diseased with sickenesse, 402, b 20. Deceaseth, buried at Canturburie, his death grieuouslie taken, 410, b 50, 60. Returneth out of France into England, 406, a 60. Married to the erle of Warwikes daughter, 674, b 60. Taken in flight, he is murthered, 688, a 60, b 20

Edward called the Blacke prince borne, 348, b 20

Edward the third, son of Henrie the seuenth christened, 788 a 10

Edwin earle of Northumberland withdraweth from the battell against duke William, 1, a 30. His lands giuen to Alane earle of Britaine, 7. Reconciled to king William, 9, b 40. He and Edgar Etheling resist duke William and his Normans, 6, a 10. He & Marchar submit themselues to duke William, 1, a 50. Slaine of his owne soldiors, 10, a 50. ¶ See Marchar.

Egelsin abbat. ¶ See Stigand.

Egelsin abbat of S. Augustine his martiall mind, vnpatient of forced seruitude, 1, b 50, 2, a 10

Egelwine abbat of Euesham a warrior, 11, a 50

Egelwinus bishop of Durham flieth from Durham: note, 7, b 60. In armes against duke William, taken prisoner, and famished to death, 10, a 40, 50

Egmond countie lieutenant generall for king Philip in the low countries, his valiant onset vpon the French, 1150, a 60, b 20

Egremond knight a capteine rebell, 769, b 50. Flieth into Flanders, 770, a 10

Egremond lord Persie, 647, b 30 committed to Newgate, his escape, 645, b 60

Election & choise of three things 284, b 60

Elenor countesse of Britaine deceaseth, 228, b 60

Elenor prince Edwards wife commeth to London, 252, a 60

Elenor K. Henrie the seconds daughter married to the king of Castile, 98, b 30

Elenor Cobham accused of treason: note, 622, b 60, 623, a 10. ¶ See Marriage, and Quéene.

Elephant sent to Henrie the third from the French king, 252, a 30. Two presented to the pope: note, 837, b 10

Elie held against Henrie the third, 273, a 50. Spoiled & the church: note, 190, a 40

Elisabeth second daughter to king Henrie the eight prisoner in the Towre, she hath beaute enimies of the clergie, 1101, b 10, &c: 1102, a 10, 20, &c. Hir bloud thirsted after by Gardiner, hir life preserued by master Bridges lieutenant of the Towre, 1130, b 20, 30. The whole storie of hir troubles in the daies of queene Marie, and how she was preserued, notable to read, 1151, b 50, 60, 1152, 1153, 1154, 1155. Deliuered out of the Towre, hir words to Beningfield knight hir keeper in the time of durance, 1117, b 40. Proclamed queene the same daie that Marie died, 1160, a 40. And the ladie Anne of Cleeue ride togither in a rich chariot, 1091 a 30. ¶ See Quéene.

Elisabeth wife to Henrie the seuenth hir birth, 668, b 50

Elisabeth Barton hir practises discouered with hir adherents, she is attainted, becommeth a nun, 936, a 20, b 10, 60. Bishops giue credit to hir hipocriticall doings, she is executed, hir confession at hir death, 937, a 10, 20, 30

Emmanuell college at Cambridge founded, 1396, a 10, &c.

Emperor Adulfe breaketh promise with the king of England and the earle of Flanders, 304, b 60

Emperor of Constantinople commeth into England, 239, b 60, 519, a 20

Emperor Ferdinand deceaseth, foretelleth the vttermost daie of his death, his godlie issue male and female, 1208, a 10, 20, 30

Emperor Charles, preparation for receiuing of him into England, 853, a 50. Landeth in England, meeteth with Henrie the eight at Douer, laboureth to hinder the purposed interuiew betweene Henrie the eight and the French K. saileth into Flanders, 856, a 40, b 60, a 20. Commeth to Calis to K. Henrie the eight, 861, b 20. His interteinment: note, b 30, &c. And the French king at wars, 781, a 10. Landeth at Douer, he and Henrie the eight sweare each to other to obserue the league interchangeable made, 873, a 60, b 50. Moderation and temperance at the news of victorie, 885, b 10, 30. And what the French kings mother offered him for the deliuerance of hir sonne, he hopeth to recouer more profit by the French king in peace than warres, 886, a 50, 60, b 60. Departeth out of England into Spaine, 874, a 10. Sendeth Henrie the eight a present, 882, a 40. His answer to the English ambassador, articles sent to them, he releaseth twelue prejudiciall articles to the French king, 898, a 10, 60, b 60. His answer to the English heralds and oration, 201, b 30. Commandeth that the French king, being his prisoner, should be receiued with honour in all places where he should passe, 887, b 10. A truce betweene him and the gouernors of France, 887, b 60. He visiteth the French king in durance, couenants of accord by him to be performed, 888, a 20, b 60. Commeth to heare what the English & French heralds had to saie, 899, He giueth them libertie to speke, a 40. His munificence: note, 921, a 20. Deceaseth, an obsequie kept for him, 1171, b 50

Emperor Maximilian & Henrie the eight meet roiallie, 820, a 10. Weareth a crosse of S. George as souldier to the king of England Henrie the eight, 821, a 50. Inuested into the order of the garter, 1210, a 60. Deceaseth, a description of his qualities, 851, a 10

Emperor Sigismund cometh into England, the strange maner of receiuing him at Douer, 556, b 30, 40

Emperor concludeth a peace with the French king, 965, a 40. Answereth the French kings letters, 904, a 30. Gift to Philip prince of Spaine, 1120, a 20. Woone from the king of Englands freendship, 361, b 50. He offereth to be a meane to conclude a peace betweene the two kings of England and France, 361, b 60. Hath the electing and assigning of the pope, 24, b 20. Commandeth the English herald to leane his oration behind him in writing, his words to the French herald, he giueth him his answer in writing, 902, a 10, b 10, 50. Defied by the two kings, the one of England the other of France, 905, b 40. ¶ See Spanish king.

Emperors. ¶ See Popes.

Empson and Dudlie with their promooters, 791, b 30. Ranening wolues and caterpillers to the commonwealth, 794, b 20, 30. Atteinted of treason, his words to the lords of the councell to find fauour, 803, b 40, 50, 60. Most of the lords of the counsell against him, sometime recorder of Couentrie, indicted and found guiltie, condemned, 804, a 30, &c. Committed to the Towre, 799, b 50. Beheaded, 809, a 10

Empson an obstinat monke, the last monke seene in that clothing in England till queene Maries daies, 952, b 60.

Emulation of the dukes of Yorke, 776, a 50

Engins to cast stones, 312, a 60

England & Scotland like to go together by the eares afresh, 785, a 60. How manie parishes it hath: note, 877, b 50. Prouision for the defense thereof, 946, b 60. It and Scotland made one by amitie, what able to do, 1001, a 50. Reconciled to the catholike church, and what ioie in Rome therfore, 1123, b 30. Gouerned by Normans & French kings one hundred twentie and two yeares after William Conquerors comming in, 116, b 40. Diuided into foure parts, and the gouernors: note, 103 a 60. It & France the armes quartered, 356, b 30. How gainfull to the court of Rome 171, a 40. Became tributarie to the pope, 177, b 20. Shrewdlie vexed, subdued, and spoiled in diuerse places by the French, 192, 193. A great naule of French ships purpole to inuade it, 451, a 20. Manie townes burnt and destroied on the coasts thereof by the French and Spanish. ¶ See Frenchmen, and French king, and Spaniards, 427. In a lamentable case in the time of duke William: note, 5, b 20. Guided by deputies in the absence of duke William, 5, a 10. Without a king and who towards it, 1, a 40. Furnished with armor and munition, 1193, b 60. Inuasion thereof by forren forces intended: note, 1371, a 10, &c, b 30, 40, &c. To be inuaded, and diuerse plots taken by traitors and conspirators for the practise thereof, 1387, b 60. The prosperitie thereof during the popes curses, 1366, a 40. To be inuaded by a Scotish power, 1386, a 10. In a short space brought from a troubled to a peaceable estate, 203, b 20. Subiect to foure and twentie gouernours: note, 259, a 20

Englishmen sore afflicted, 552, a 20. The order of their armie and archers at Agincourt battell, 553, a 50. Giue the onset to the French, both armies ioine battell, 554, a 50, 60. Three great victories within a short time togither, 566, b 10. Take diuers towns and castels in France, 568, b 30, &c. Discomfited vnder the duke of Clarence, 580, a 30. A sore conflict betweene them and the French, 556, b 10. Take castels and townes in Normandie, 559, a 50, &c. Campe greatlie hindered for want of beasts to draw their ordinance, & the king of Navars gentle offer to them, 813, a 30, 40, 50. Their navie & the French incounter ter vpon the coasts of Britaine, their cruell fight, the French flieth, 815, a 60, b 10, 20. Vnrulie behauior being in soldiers seruice, 809, b 30. Manie purposing to set vpon the French in the hauen are defeated by a mischance, 816, a 50. Ouer rash hardinesse turneth them to hurt, 829, b 10. Shamefullie abused of Frenchmen and other strangers: note, 840, a 20, &c. Plate the corragious soldiers in France, 879, all, 880, all. Besieged Heding castell, win a gret bootie from the French 875, a 40, b 10. Negligent for not putting their valiant dowings in writing, 965, b 40. Goods arested in Burdeaux, 872, b 40. God seruice at the taking of Leith in Scotland: note, 962, a 30, &c: 963, a 10. Burne S. Iehans de Lucie, breake vp their campe at Biskaie, dispersed into sundrie villages, vnappeasable rage among them, they return out of Biskaie, 814, a 10, &c. Valiant seruice against the French & Scots, their horsmen discomfited, 994, a 20, b 40. Go by sea and land into Scotland, 980, a 30, &c. The order of the armie in marching forward, 980, b 60. Patient in suffering all wants of releefe, 995, a 40. Manerlie, French vnmanerlie, 699, b 30 In a mutinie & murmuring, 1140, a 20, 30. Lose all by Henrie the sixt, that they got by Henrie the fift. ¶ Compare both stories togither, 601. Shamefullie foiled by the French, 601, b 10. Gaine eightéene standards and one banner, 590, b 40. And French at hot skirmishes: note, 596, b 10, &c. Compassion to a Frenchman an enimie, 628, b 50. Lose all in France, 629, b 30, &c. In a mutinie, committed to prison, 124, a 40. Ouerthrowne at Formigni, 630, a 30. And Frenchmen fight vpon a small occasion, 126, a 30. Victorie against the French & their booties, 144, b 50, 60. Spoile Louthian, 89, a 60. God directeth their battell, fighteth for them, their valiantnesse: note, 372, a 30 Victorie at Haldon hill, 350, a 40. Derided in a rime, 347, a 40. They & Genowaies meet & fight on the seas, 363, b 10. Win the passage ouer the water of Some against the French, 371, a 20. Make forraies and rodes into the borders of France, 374, b 60. Against the Scots, incouraged by the queene, 375, b 50, 60. Obteine the victorie, 376, a 10. Imbateled before Paris, 393 b 10. Lodge with their armie before Paris, 405, b 10. Victorie against the Flemings on the sea, 407, a 20. Burne townes in France, 356, a 10. Discomfited by constable of France, 408, a 20. Flie to saue their liues, a great slaughter of them, and all by the Scots, 322, a 40, 50. Seruice against the French at Leith in Scotland, 1186, a 40, 1187, all. They giue the French the repulse, 1188, a 50. A number of them slaine, 60, their hot skirmishes 1189, all. They win a trench from the French, 1190, a 30, b 10. Giue them the repulse, b 60. Repelled by the policies of French, 1191, a 50. A number slaine & hurt, 60. Slaine in Scotland, 303, b 10. And Flemings vanquished by the French, 180, a 10. Assaile the French ships, 179, a 50. Spoil the Iles of Orkneie, 518, b 10 Plaie the men, they besiege Ard & Sluis, 528, a 60, b 10, Assalt Briake in Britaine, 534, b 30. The fortune of the earle of saint Paule against them, 538, b 40. Die in Spain by reason of the great heat of that countrie, 450 a 60. Prouision to resist the gret power of the French, 451, a 40. Subdue diuerse townes in Flanders and spoile the countrie. 443, b 10. Their armie tournie through France, 426, b 60. Driuen out of Flanders by the French K. 444, a 60. Manie ouermatched & ouercome by the Spanish, 420, a 30. Cruellie abused vnder the pretense of peace, by duke William, 10, a 30. Host entreth into Britaine, 427, a 10. They besiege Maunts, breake by their siege, 427, b 30. Atchiue an exploit against the French 422, a 30, &c. Sailing ouer sea scattered in a tempest, 423, a 60. Ouerthrowne by Scots, 418, b 10. Ouerthrowne by the French, 418, a 10. Cats, not to be caught without mittens 426, b 60. Weapons before the vse of the long bow, 15, b 50. Extremelie hated & handled of duke William & his Normans, 8, a 10, 20, 30, 40. Miserable estate in the daies of Malcolme, 10, b 10. Seruice in forren lands well liked of duke William, 10, b 60. Kept low by duke William and his Normans, 14, a 10, &c. Thaldome in the seuere regiment of duke William, 1, b 10. Fairlie intreated at king William Rufus hands, & why, 17, b 30. Retire to Newhauen with honor, 1397, a 10. Much made of at Utricht, 1431, b 40. Win towns from the French, 207, b 10 Sent to Spaine against the Saracens, 213, a 10. Distressed by the Welsh, 214, a 20 How manie vnder Henrie the third against the French K. 329, b 40. Ouerthrowne by the Welsh, 255, a 20. Distressed by the Scots, 297, b 50. And the French incounter, 229, b 60. And Welsh at grudge, 278 a 60. Distressed by the Welsh, 281, a 10, Taken by French, 294, b 10. Victors by sea against the French, 290, b 30, 40. Stand in doubt of the Welsh, 307, a 60. Vanquished by the Scots, 311, b 60

English gentlemen mainteined by the French warres, 480, b 10. Light & toiesh behauior in the French court, 850, a 10. Discharged of their places & offices vnder queene Marie the French kings wife, 833, a 10. ¶ See Flanders, Flemings, French and Scots.

Enimie bittelled by the enimie, 426, b 20

Enimies domestical verie rarelie dealt withall: note, 459, b 30, 40. ¶ See Forgiuenesse.

Enuie, and that persons indued therewith are readie to forge matters of suspicion, 95, b 10. Of the lords against the Spensers, 325, a 30. Borne for a ladie bestowed in marriage, 164, a 60. Of queene Elenor against Arthur, 158, a 60. Of the Flemings, 64, a 30 At anothers prosperitie, 37, a 50. Of the earle of March at Henrie the fourths aduancement, 511, a 30. The pursuer of vertue and prowesse, 455, a 30. Issue and fruits thereof: note, 422, b 60. Against anothers honorable aduancement, 451, b 60. And spite betweene the lords spirituall & temporall, & what mischiefe insued, 1, a 50. How mischieuous: note, 708, a 50, 60. ¶ See Discord and Spite.

Equalitie in a land how inconuenient, 1043, a 60. How hurtfull and vnconscionable to wish, b 30

Erle Aimer of Penbroke arested, 332, a 50. Blanc. ¶ See Alan. Albericke de Uere an eloquent pleder for K. Stephan, 51, a 30. Slaine in a seditious tumult, 54, a 60. Arundell. ¶ See Iusts triumphant. Auberie de Uere of Oxenford, 480, a 10

Erle Baldwin de Riuers of Ile of Wight, 224, a 60. His oration to king Stephans armie, 52, b 50. Beleisme of Shrewesburie a factious man: note, 32, a 60. Subdued and banished, 30, a 60. Beauchampe of Warwike protector of England, 424, a 40. Of Warwike deceaseth, 519, b 60 405, a 10. Beaulord of Surrie deceaseth, 536, b 10. Bigod of Northfolke a valiant chiefeteine, 47, b 60. Accorded with king Henrie the second, 92, a 60, 51, b 60. Bolinbroke of Derbie afterwards king, 448, a 90. Bourchier of Essex deceaseth, 950, a 60

Erle Charles of Westmerland, sorejudgements of God vpon him: note, 1359, a 40. Charles of Flanders murthered and issuelesse, 43, a 50. Clinton of Lincolne ambassador into France, the maner of his intertainment, 1229, a 10, 20. Courtnete of Deuonshire the first destroier of Excester hauen, 1008, a 40. Created, 1089, a 20. Crispine of Eureux woundeth Henrie the first, and is taken prisoner, 40, a 60

Erle de Gaunt of Lincolne, 192, b 60. Dudleie of Warwike sent into Normandie with an armie, 1195, a 60

Erle Edmund of Lancaster sent into Gascoigne, his seruice in armes, his death, 296, a 50, &c, b 10. Edmund of Suffolke flieth ouer into Flanders, his discontented mind, 780, a 10 Beheaded 816, a 10. Edword of Warwike, sonne & aire to George duke of Clarence, beheaded, 703, b 10. Edwin of Northumberland. ¶ See Edwin, 1, a 30. Eustace. ¶ See Eustace.

Erle Ferreis of Derbie commeth to Chester with twentie thousand men, 269, a 60. Fitzosborne. ¶ See Fitzosborne. Fitzpeter created erle of Essex, 159, b 20, Deceaseth 181, b 10. Foulke of Anion quarelleth with Henrie the first, and whie, 42, a 50. Accords the kings of England and France, 40, b 60. An enimie to Henrie the first: note, 37, a 50, 60. Became allied to Henrie the first, 40, b 20

Erle Geffreie Plantagenet, of Anion married the daughter of Henrie the first, 43, b 10. Putteth awaie his wife, and taketh hir againe, 44, a 40, Had a sonne by Mawd the empresse, afterwards king of England, 44, b 10. Put to flight by king Stephan, 48, a 30. Raiseth commotions in Flanders, 48, a 20. Dealeth vnfaithfullie, 106, a 60 Dieth 110, a 30. Gerald of Kildare deputie of Ireland, apprehended, examined, & released, 779, b 20. George of March flieth into England, 518, a 60. Golpatrike. ¶ See Golpatrike. Guido. ¶ See Guido.

Erle Hastings of Penbroke, as he was learning to iust, is wounded to death, 467, b 20. Helias. ¶ See Helias. Henrie of Essex dishonoured, 67, a 10. Henrie of Huntington his valiantnesse, 50, a 10. Herbert of Penbroke prepareth against the earle of Warwike, 672, a 60, b 10. Holland of Huntington, 465, b 60. A great exploit done by him against the French, 558, b 50, &c. Holland of Kent in fauour with Henrie the fourth, he marrieth a daughter of a lord of Millain, 532, a 40, 50. Sent to the sea with an armie, 534, b 20. Hugh of Chester deceaseth, 105, b 10. Hugh of March commeth ouer to Henrie the third, and offereth him seruice, 209, a 10. Worketh to induce the Normans and Poictouins to fauour king Henrie the third, 210, a 40. Hugh of Montferrat taken prisoner, 42, b 20. Hubert de Burgh created earle of Kent, and whie, 209, b 60. In Henrie the thirds displeasure: note, 211, b 10. Escapeth out of prison, and taketh sanctuarie, 217, a 30, &c. He is brought backe, restored to sanctuarie, rescued, conueied into Wales, discharged of his office of chefe iustice, taks sanctuarie, releeued by the Londoners, apprehended, cast in prison, and banished, 215, a 50, &c. Hubert of Morienne and his daughter sold for monie, 84, a 60, b 10

Erle Iasper of Penbroke, 678, a 60. Beheadeth Roger Vaughan, passeth ouer into Britaine with his nephue, 693, a 50, 60. John of an ambitious nature, 132, a 40. Mo freend to the bishop of Elie, 132, a 10. In armes to vsurpe the kingdome, 137, b 60. Purposed to seize vpon the kingdom in his brothers absence, 134, b 50. Submitteth himselfe to his brother Richard the first, and craueth pardon for his offense, 146, b 60. Pardoned of all his rebellions, 147, a 10. John Scot of Chester poisoned by his wife, his foure sisters, 220, b 60. John of Mortaigne licenced to returne into England, 121, b 10

Erle Lambert. ¶ Sée Lambert.
Lacie of Lincolne deceaseth, his buriall, his requeſt on his death bed, 320,b30
Erle Mandeuill of Eſſex licenced to go into the holie land, 101,a 10. William of Eſſex taken, 56, a20. Marchar of Mercia. ¶ Sée Marchar.
Marſhall of Penbꝛoke his oꝛation in the aſſemblie of peeres, 197,a 40. Reconereth his caſtelles taken by the pꝛince of wales, 205,a30. Killed with a fall from his hoꝛſſe, 228, b 60. Deceaſeth, his burtall, 202,a 60, 213, b60
Mathew of Bullongne, 87,b 10. Wounded and dieth, 88,b 40. Montacute of Saliſburie a politike man and valiant, 598,b 60. Miles of Hereꝛoꝛd, 51, b 10. Deceaſeth, 56,a 10.
Moꝛtimer of Marth his good ſeruice in Ireland, 440,a 30. Slaine by the wild Iriſh, his iſſue, 448, b 10. Laſt erle of March of that name deceſeth without iſſue: note, 590,a 10.
Montgomerie. ¶ Sée Montgomerie. Mowbꝛaie. ¶ Sée Mowbꝛaie. Mulbꝛaie. ¶ Sée Mulbꝛaie.
Erle Neuill of weſtmerland, &c: Pꝛepareth to reſiſt the kings enimies, his ſubtill pꝛicie, 529, b 40, 50. Perſuadeth king Henrie the fift vnto the conqueſt of Scotland, 546,a 40. Neuill of Saliſburie his iſſue, 641,b 60
Erle Patrike of Saliſburie ſlaine, 75, b 30. Perſie of Noꝛthumberland created, 1133,a 60. Warden of the whole marches, 875, b 50. Sent to the ſeas, 455, a 50. Lieutenant of Calis, 475, b 10. Conſpireth with Owen Glendouer, 521, b 50, 522, 523. Reſtoꝛed, 545, a 20. Beheaded at Yoꝛke, 1257, a 20. Murthered himſelfe in the Tower, 1403, b 50
Iquеſt of inquirie vpon the fact, 50, 1404, all. Buried in the Tower, b 20. The whole maner of killing himſelfe, b 40, &c: to. 1419, a 10.
Perſie of Woꝛceſter leaueth the king and flieth to the duke of Lancaſter, 500, a 10. Sent ouer into Gaſcoigne to appeaſe the people, 518, a 10, 20. Petwike of Perch, 67, b 10. Philip of Flanders, 87, b 10. I meane to make peace betweene the kings of England & France, 114, a 60. His deuotion at Thomas Becketts towne, 100, b 60. Doth homage to the king of England, 103, b 60. His releaſe made at Henrie the ſeconds requeſt, 95, a 60. Plantagenet of Warwike ſon and heire to Geoꝛge duke of Clarence committed to the Tower, 762, a 10
Erle Rafe. ¶ Sée Rafe. Raimond of Barzelon, 67, b 10. Of Tripolis, 129. Ranulph of Cheſter taketh his wife the ducheſſe of Bꝛitaine pꝛiſoner, 150, b 20. Laieth ſeege to Montſoꝛell caſtell, 199, a 60. He raiſeth his ſeege, 199, b 20. Returneth from the holie land, 202, b 20. Goeth into the holie land, 202, b 40. Deceaſeth, thꝛiſe married, the partition of his lands, his exploits, 215, b 40. Reinold of Coꝛnwall baſe ſonne to king Henrie the firſt departed this life, 95. b 40. Reinold Gꝛete of Kent, 1227, b 40. Deceaſeth, 1258, a 20. Richard obeieth his father Henrie, 109, a 60. Seizeth vpon his father Henrie the ſeconds treaſure, 111, a 30. Is rebelled againſt, he inuadeth the earle of Tholous lands, 112, a 60. Reuolteth from his father vnto the French king, 113, a 50. Richard of Cheſter vnder king Henrie the firſts tuition, 32, b 10. He & his wife dꝛowned, 41, b 10. Richard of Clares ſubmiſſion, 92, b 20. Richard of Coꝛnwall returneth out of Gaſcoigne, 209, a 40. Departeth from the court ſecretlie, ioineth himſelfe with the erls of Cheſter and Penbꝛoke, 209, a 60. King of Almaine, deceaſeth, his burtall and iſſue, 275, a 60. His ſonne murthered, b 20. Richard of Eſſex, 961, a 60. Richard of Gloceſters ſubmiſſion, 92, b 20. Richard of Gloceſter dieth, 95, b 50. Richard of Poitow king Henrie the ſeconds ſon, his victoꝛie againſt the Bꝛabanders, 98, b 50. His ſharpe aſſait of Talbargh, 104, a 10. Robert of Derbie, 92, a 20. Robert of Gloceſter Henrie the firſts baſe ſonne, 37, a 50. An enimie to king Stephan, 48, b 50. Deſcribed, 53, a 10. Commeth to Gloceſter, 51, a 60. Father in law to John king Richards bꝛother, 117, a 30. Taken pꝛiſoner, 54, a 50. Dieth, 56, b 50. Robert of Leceſter famous and valiant, 134, a 50, 60. Put to flight, 89, a 30. Taken pꝛiſoner, 144, b 40, 90, a 40. Offer foꝛ his ranſome, 146, b 40. Robert Dudleie created baron and erle, 1207, a 60, b 10. Inueſted into the oꝛder of ſaint Michaell, 1209, a 20. ¶ Sée Erle of Leiceſter. Robert of Mellent rebelleth againſt king Henrie the firſt, 42, b 10. Robert of Richmond againſt the Frenchmen, his martiall acts, in danger to be ſlaine, 359, b 10, &c: 60. Robert de Beleſme of Shꝛewſburie rebelleth, 30, a 30. Robert de Uere owner of Hidingham caſtell, 190, b 50. Robert paſſeth ouer into Noꝛmandie, 55, a 20. Roger Fitzmiles of Hereꝛoꝛd, 66, a 10
Erle Saier de Quincie of Winchester 199, a 60. Seimoꝛ of Hereꝛoꝛd lieutenant of the Noꝛth goeth againſt the Scots, 961, b 30. His anſwer to the pꝛouoſt of Edenboꝛough, 962, a 30. Simon of Hampton, 51, b 60, 52, b 20. Dieth, 60, b 10. Simon of Huntington dieth, 108, a 20. Simon of Leiceſter maried with Henrie thirds ſiſter, 222 b all. Maketh his poſſeſſions into monie and goeth into the holie land, 224, a 60, b 10, 225, b 40. Fled ouer into France, 223, b 30. Stanlie of Derbie deceaſeth, his life, death, and qualities, 1257, a 60, b 10. Stephan of Bullongne ſwoꝛne to the ſucceſſion of the crowne, 43, a 10. ¶ Sée Stephan. Strangbow marieth Dermutius his daughter, 81, a 50. Confined, ſeeketh king Henrie the ſeconds fauoꝛ, and is pardoned, 81, a 50, 60. He maketh ſurrender to king Henrie the firſt, b 20. Strangbow of Stꝛaguill, 81, a 10. Sommerſet of Woꝛceſter ſent into France robbed vpon the ſea, 1257, b 40, 50, 60
Erle Talbot of Shꝛewſburie and his ſon manfullie ſlaine, 639, a 60, b 50. Sent into France with an armie, 817, a40. Theobald of Champaigne his deſcent in armes againſt the French king, 39, b 20. His countrie inuaded by the French king, 40, b 20. Theodoꝛike of Flanders, 66, b 60. Tiptoft of Woꝛceſter beheaded, 678. Turketillus. ¶ Sée Turketillus.
Erle Ualeran of ſaint Paule put to flight, 528, b 20. Uere of Oxfoꝛd, his charge to his bands of men, his valiantneſſe, 759, a 10, 20. Yeeldeth himſelfe to king Edward the fourth, ſent ouer ſea, and kept pꝛiſoner twelue yeares, 693, b 20. Made marqueſſe of Dublin, 448, a 60. Created duke of Ireland, 451, b 60. Duke of Ireland, to be ſafelie conducted to the kings pꝛeſence by the ſhiriffe of Cheſhire, 460 b 60. Deceaſeth in miſerable neceſſitie: note, 479, b 60. His coꝛps conueied from Louaine into England and there totallie buried, 485, a 60. Sweareth to be diuoꝛced from his lawfull wife: note, 458, a 10. Sent ouer into Gaſcoigne, 294, b 60. His valiantneſſe, 684. b 20. Getteth out of pꝛiſon, and he with others go to the erle of Richmond, 749, a 10, 20. He leuieth a power & commeth into England, his valoꝛ and chiualrie, a 50, 60. He ſubmitteth himſelfe and yeeldeth to the king, b 50. The erle of Richmond is glad of him and his companie, b 60. Deceaſeth, 950, a 60.
Erle Walter of Eſſex ſaileth into Ireland, 1258, b 60. Deceaſeth, 1263, a 40. The place of his birth, 60. His pꝛaiſe in ſundꝛie reſpects, b 20. Diſpoſed to inlarge his nobilitie, 60 ¶ Sée Erle of Eſſex. Walther of. ¶ Sée Waltheof. Warren, 51, b 60. Warren of Surreie his woꝛds to Edward the firſt, 280, b 10. Of Shꝛewſburie warden of the welſh marches, 42, a 40. William of Arundell ambaſſadoꝛ to the French king, 72, a 50. Dieth, 98, b 20. William of Kent, William de Ypꝛeſſe, 54, a 30. William ſonne to duke Robert erle of Flanders, 43, a 50. Dieth of wounds, 43, b 20. Duke Robert of Noꝛmandies ſon by Sibill, 34, a 10. William named de Longſpee with others go into the holie land, 241, b 50. William of Moꝛtaigne and Bullongne, 68, a 20, 66, b 50. A factious man, 32, a 60. His wilfulneſſe and malcontentment, b 10. William of Saliſburie inuadeth the countries about London, 89, b 30.
Erle of Albemerle, 52, a 10, 52, b 10. Whie ſuppoſed to betraie the towne, 88, b 30. Of Aluergnes lands ſpoiled, 75, a 40
Of Anou, 55, a 20. ¶ Sée Noꝛmandie. Departeth this life, 58, b 20. Of Arminacks daughter affied to Henrie the firſt, he, his ladie, ſonne & two daughters taken, 624, a 10. An open enimie to England: note, 636, b 10. Of Arundels freendlie ſpeech to ladie Elizabeth, 1154, a 50. His exploits in France: note, 609, a 10. His death, 610, a 20. Goeth to ſea with fiue hundꝛed men of armes and a thouſand archers, 454, a 50. His liberalitie: note, 454, b 50. Saileth into Bꝛitaine with a great power, 455, a 10. Returneth into France, 465, b 10. Sent to the ſea with a great nauie in aid of the duke of Bꝛitaine 465, a 50. Joineth with the loꝛds in conſpiracie, 458, a 60. To be apꝛehended by the earle of Noꝛthumberland, 60. Anſwer to his indictment, he is condemned, 491, b 10, 50, 60. Executed, 492, a 10, 20. Diuerthꝛowne in the middeſt of a water, 56, a 30. Pꝛofeſſeth himſelfe ſoꝛie that he goeth not with the duke of Noꝛthumberland againſt the ladie Marie, 1086, b 10. Apꝛehended, 489, b 20. Arreigned, 491, a 60
Erle of Bedfoꝛd and his ſonne the loꝛd Ruſſell deceaſeth, 1413, b 10. Of Blois his ſon made biſhop of Wincheſter, 42, a 60. Of Bꝛitaine aſſiſted againſt the French king, he ſubmitteth himſelfe, 219, a 10, 20. Of Buckingham ſent into Bꝛitaine to aid the duke againſt the French king, 425, b 60. He maketh knights at his entrance into France, 426, a 30. Diſpleaſed with the duke of Bꝛitaine, returneth into England, 427, b 60. Of Bullogne pꝛepareth ſix hundꝛed ſhips to inuade England. 75, a 50
Erle of Caerleill raiſeth an armie, put to death foꝛ treaſon, 333, a 10, b 20. His iudgment and conſtancie at his death, 334, a 60. Of Cambꝛidge returneth out of Poꝛtingale, 441, b 20. His ſonne affianced to the king of Poꝛtingals daughter, 441, b 20, 40. He and other loꝛds apꝛehended foꝛ treaſon, 548, b 10. Executed, 50. The effect of his indictment, 549, a 30, &c. Of Cheſter deſcribed, 53, a 10. His exploits being the kings lieutenant, 212, b 20. Withſtood the gathering of tenths foꝛ the pope, 211, a 50. Bare S. Edwards ſwoꝛd befoꝛe Henrie the third at his mariage, 219, b 40. His oꝛation to the erle of Gloceſter, 52, a 10. His right and title thereto, and pꝛiuileges, his foure barons vnder him: note, 20, a 20. Dieth, 60, b 10. Of Coꝛnwall marrieth the counteſſe of Gloceſter, 213, b 50. Elected emperour, 254, b 10. Stands againſt the K. his bꝛother foꝛ grant of a ſubſidie, 251, b 40. He lendeth the king monie, 252, a 20. Elected king of Almaine, taketh his leaue of the king his bꝛother, 256, a 20. And king of Almaine, his pꝛoteſtation to the Engliſh ambaſſadoꝛs, he commeth ouer into England, receiueth an oth not to infringe the ſtatuts of Oxfoꝛd, 261,a all. An intercessor for peace to be had betwixt the pope and the emperour, 226, b 10

Erle of Derbies exploits in France and his taking of townes, 368, b 40, &c: 369, a 10, &c. Assembleth an armie, winneth townes, and is victorious, 375, a 30, &c. His exploits against the infidels, 473, b 10. Kéepeth Newland bridge, 377, b 20. Ambassador into France, his interteinement, 1380, a 50, 60, &c: 1381, all, 1382, a 10, &c. Of Desmond a rebell and others brought to order by the earle of Surrie & his power, 855, b 60. His strange and miserable end, 1365, b 60. His head set on London bridge, 1356, a 20
Erle of Esser capteine generall of Ulster, in Ireland, 1259, a 20. How he spent his youthfull yeares, 1264, a 10. Perfect in the scriptures, 1264, a 30. A fauourer of preachers, 40. Expert in chronicles, histories, &c: 50. Indued with martiall knowledge and prowesse, b 20. His humanitie, affablenesse, &c: 1265, a 10. His equanimitie, 40. He could not awaie with swearing, chasing, &c: 50. His deuotion in sickneslie, 60. Heauenlie contemplation toward his death, b 10. How his seruants were affected at his speéches, 30. Eternallie blessed, 60. His epitaph geneologicall, 1296, a 10. His death much lamented, b 20. Quéene Elisabeths testimonie concerning him, 60. Why his epitaph genealogicall was added to the sermon, 1267, a 10. His counsell to the yong earle his sonne now aliue, 20. Goeth to Leger, 1431, b 20
Erle of Ew. ¶ Sée William.
Erle of Flanders his oth, 91, a 10. Assisteth king Sweine to inuade England, 14, a 50. Wounded and dead, 40, b 10. Allured from Richard the first to the French K. 126, b 50. His deuotion vnto Thomas Beckets shrine, 152, a 60. Winneth townes, 151, b 50. In armes against the Turkes, 164, a 20. Flieth into Gant, 354, b 40. He returneth and eftsones flieth, 354, b 50. Forced to a promise of marriage, 376, b 30. Dishonorable abusing of Edward the third & his owne people, 376, b 40. He & his wife arrested, inforced to agrée with the French king, released, & returned home, he defieth the French king, till he is accursed, his sonne appealeth from an interdiction, 297, a 10, &c. Pacifieth his people, 306, b 40. Feasteth the king of England, 360, b 10. Sendeth to the bishop of Norwich to know the cause of his inuasion, 442, b 60
Erle of Glocesters answer to the earle of Chesters oration, 52, a 30. Waketh warre on the Welshmen, 281, b 10. Raiseth a commotion, 272, b 60. Confederateth with the earle of Leicester, 262, b 50. Admonished to obeie Henrie the third, the Towre defended against him, 273, a 10. Sworne to the peace by Henrie the third on his death bed, 276, a 40
Erle of Henault defieth the French king, 357, b 60. Of Herefords euill counsell to duke William, 8, b 60. He & Lancaster come, 329, a 40. They flée, come to Pomfret, the one slaine the other taken, 330, a 40, b 60. Of Hertford forraieth the middle marches of Scotland, 969, b 10, 60. Of Huntington politike & wise, 616, b 60, 617, a 10
Erle of Kent a bishop, 18, a 60. Dispossessed of his lands, but pardoned of life, but excluded from libertie, 216, a 60, b 10. ¶ Sée Odo. Of Kildare restored to his deputiship in Ireland, 878, b 10, 20. Made deputie of Ireland, 883, b 30. Committed to the Towre by cardinall woolseis meanes, 855, b 20. Executed, 943, b 50. Of Kime otherwise Angus beheaded, 666, b 40
Erle of Lancaster vntrulie tained to be surnamed Crokebacke, 511, a 50. Canonized for a saint, 472, b 50. A great strife whether he should be reputed a saint or no, 331, b 60, 332, a 10. Arreigned, found guiltie, and beheaded, 331, a 40, 60
Erle of Leicester brother to the earle of Wellent, 58, b 60. Offered to strike the king. 89, b 50. In armes against the French king, 138, a 52. Put to flight by the French, his valiantnesse at a fresh assault, 154, b 20. Put to a hard shift by the Gascoignes, 246, b 60. Seruice in Gascoigne, 242, a 60. Threateneth the earle of Penbroke, 252, b 40. Resigneth his gouernment of Gascoigne, 247, b 60. Danteth his enimies, 245, b 10. Slain, 270, a 60. His sonne raiseth an armie, winneth Winchester, his armie is discomfited, 270, a all. His pride bringeth the barons to confusion, b 10.
Erle of Leicester baron Denbigh, passeth ouer sea to the low countries as the quéns lieutenant, 1419, a 20. Arriueth at Flushing, 1424, a 20. Saileth towards Middleborough, b 40. His interteinment there, 50. Honourablie feasted in Christmasse time of the states, 1425, a 20. He feasteth them againe, 40. Landeth at Williamstat, 60. Entreth into Dort, b 10. Commeth to Rotherdam, 50 Entreth into Delfe, 60. Magnificent interteinment of the quéne, and the bountifull fare he kept for his attendants, in progresse, 1299, a 30. On the right hand of the prince Dolphin, 1337, b 30. Kéepeth saint Georges feast solemnlie at Utricht, 1433, b 20. Inuested with the robes of the order, 60. Commeth to Utricht, and how received, 1431, a 60, b 10. A placard conteining the authoritie giuen him by the states of the low countries, 1428, b 10, &c, 1429, a 10, &c. Lodgeth in the house where the prince of Orange was slaine, 1426, a 10. Remoueth to Donhage, and worthilie interteined, 30. Interteined at Leidon, he rideth to Skeueling, titles of honor ascribed vnto him, 1427 b 60. Commeth to Harlem, and how he was receiued, 1429, b 40, &c, 1430, a 10, &c. Goeth to Amsterdam, and how interteined, 40
Erle of Leicesters onelie sonne & heire deceaseth, 1375, b 40.
Erle of Lincolne proclaimed heire apparant, 747, a 30. Sonne to John de la Pole, duke of Suffolke, a conspirator, 766, a 10. His slight into Flanders, doubted of Henrie the seuenth, he entreth Yorkshire with his power, trieth battell with the king, he is slaine, 766, b 60, 767, a 10. Deceaseth, 1378, b 60, 1379, a 10. ¶ Sée Ladies.
Erle of March duke of Yorke, 659, b 60. The great hope of the people conceiued of him, he is elected king, he taketh vpon him the regiment, 661, a 60, b 10, 40. His badge: note, 660, a 20
Erle of Wellent, 51, b 60, 52, b 10. Discontented with the bishops in an assemblie, 36, a 60, b 10, 20. A councellor to Henrie the first, to hold the title of inuestitures of prelats, 32, a 30. Taken prisoner, 42, b 20. His sonnes praised for their learning: note, 44, a 60. Of Mortaigne taken prisoner, 33, a 40. Mortimer. ¶ Sée Mortimer.
Erle of Northumberland charged by the duke of Lancaster with sundrie crimes, the Londoners are his frends, they are accorded, 439, a 60, b 10. Sent to apprehend the erle of Arundell, 458, a 60. His words to the king, in behalfe of the lords loialtie, 459, a 20. His message to Richard the second, 500, b 20. Cléereth him selfe of much suspicion, 525, b 20, 30. Flieth, 530, b 40. Against Westmerland, he is restored, 524, a 10, b 10. His returne into England, 534, a 30 Slaine, 534, a 60. Murthered by the northerne rebels, 769, b 30, 40. His rich arraie, 791, a 60. Committed to prison by the cardinall Wolseis means, 855, b 60. Arresteth Wolsie, 915, b 20, 30, 40. He and Westmerland rebell, and what ill successe it had: note, 1212, 1213. ¶ Sée Conspiracie, Erle Persie.
Erle of Ormond high treasuror of Ireland, 883, b 30. Of Oxford. ¶ Sée earle Uére.
Erle of Pearch slaine, 200, a 60. Of Penbroke passeth ouer into Ireland, he is taken prisoner, his death, 218, a 60, b 10. In danger of taking, he is rescued, 217, b 40. Lord warden of Scotland, 312, b 10. Diligent: note, 201, a 20. Valiant manhood, 672, b 60. Discontented, waiteth for aduantage, 667, a 60. Conductor of the earle of Richmonds companie, 748, a 20. Generall of quéen Maries armie against Wiat and his companie, they incounter. 1098, a 30, 60. Deceaseth, his epitaph, 1213, b 10
Erle of Richmond causeth his men to put on armor, he setteth them in order, and appointeth chiefteins, 755, b 20, 40. His person described, his cause iust and right, a great motiue to the nobles to assist him, incouragements to his armie to plaie the men, 757, a 50, b 20. His oration by Richard the third to the chiefteins of his armie, 755, b 60. Politike, 758, b 60. Preparation of ships and souldiors to the sea, disparkled by tempest, he seeth all the English bankes furnished with souldiors, 744, b 50, 60. Sendeth to know whether they were with him or against him, arriueth in Normandie, and passeth by land into Britaine, in fauour with the French king, he lamenteth and reioiseth, the lords giue faith and promise each to other for his furtherance, he sweareth to marrie Elisabeth the daughter to Edward the fourth after possession of the crowne, diuerse of his faction apprehended and executed, 745, a 10, 30, 49, 60, b 10, 20, 50, 60. Arriueth at Milford hauen, his power made strong by accesse of the confederats, he sendeth secret word to his mother & frends that he ment a direct passage to London, and desired their conference, he is aided of the Welshmen, 753, a 60, b 20, 40. At Lichfield, remoueth his power to Tamworth, and of a strange chance that happened to him, put to a hard shift, 754, b 10, 30, 50, 60 Informed of his roiall preferment, &c. He maketh the duke of Britaine priuie to the matter, preparation to bring in, receiue and erect him to the kingdome, 742, b 10, 40, 60. Atteinted in parlement, and all other that fled ouer sea to take his part, 746, a 40. Small traine for a policie, apparelled like a page, he attendeth vpon one of his men, he is lanozed of forreine and homebone, he goeth to the French king and requireth succour to recouer the crowne, 748, a 30, 40, b 10, &c, 50. Diuerse Englishmen submit themselues vnto him in France, 750, a 10. Proffereth to incounter Richard the third bodie to bodie, 759, a 40. Deuout behauiour after the victorie, 760, a 30. Crowned by the lord Stanlie in the field, by the name of Henrie the seuenth, 760, a 40, 50. ¶ Sée Henrie the seauenth. Of Rutland put the French armie in danger of an ouerthrow, 1240, b 30. Employed in martiall affaires about Scotland, 1061, a 10. Detecteth the nobles conspiracie to king Henrie the fourth, 515, a 40. Sent ouer ambassador into France, 519, a 40. His follie the cause of disclosing the noblemens conspiracie, 515, a 10, 20. Being yong cruellie murthered: note, 659, b 30, went against the rebels in the north, 1212, b 20 ¶ Sée Manners.
Erle of Salisburie gathered a power, 649, a 20. Charged with treason, his request, he is mainepriled, 513, a 50, b 50, 60. Slaine by the Saracens, 243, a 10. Deceaseth, 150, b 30. Sealicke, deceaseth, 207, b 10. Deceaseth, bruised at the iusts, tuſts,366,b 60. Slaine,599, b 30. Of Shrewſburies great diligence, policie and and true ſeruice againſt the noꝛtherne rebelles, 942,a 30. His lotaltie, what he ſaid to them that talked lewdlie of him,prouided of ill ſouldiors, his oth in preſence of the people neceſſarie, 942,a 30,60,b 10,30,50. Generall of an armie againſt the Scots and French,994,b 60. Commeth to Hadington, and of his dooings againſt the enimie, 995, a 10,20,60,b 10,ꝛc. Of Southampton deceaſeth, 1062,b 20. Of Suffolke in great fauoꝛ with K. Richard the ſecond: note, 454,a 40. Put to his ſhifts and diſtreſſed, 790, a 60,b 10. Grieuouſlie charged by the parlement houſe foꝛ ſundꝛie offenſes,453,a 60. Fleeth ouer into Calis diſguiſed : note, 460, b 30. Sudden death , 440 , a 10. Of Surreie entreth Scotland, defacing caſteiles and towers,his valiant heart, reioiſing at his hap likelie to fight hand to hand with the king of Scots, ambaſſadoꝛs to treat a peace betweene both nations,783,a 20,40. High treaſuroꝛ of England, 781,b 60. Sent with a great power againſt the noꝛtherne rebels, 769,b 60. Valiant determination to incounter the Scots, the oꝛdering of his armie,828 a 10,20. And his ſonne the lord admerall with ioined powers againſt the Scots,825, b 50,60. Their meſſage to the king of Scots,826,a 60,b 10. They remoue their camps to and fro as occaſion moueth 827,b 20,50. High admerall, his attire at the receiuing of the French kings ambaſſadoꝛs,848,a 40. His ſeruice againſt certein rebels,855,b 50 High admerall and his companie come vnto Hampton court,873, b 60. Entereth Scotland,306,b 60. His maner of winning Moꝛleis in Britaine,he maketh knights 874,a 30, 40. Sent with an armie to inuade France,commeth with his power to Calis,returneth into England, 875,a 10,60,b 10. Inuadeth Scotland and preuaileth againſt them,881,a 60,b 10,ꝛc. And Southampton ſent to Calis,953,a 40. Committed to the Tower notwithſtanding his ſubmiſſion, 759,b 50. Beheaded,976,b 40,50. Of Suſſex maketh a iorne into Scotland, his valoꝛous ſeruice,1222,a 40,ꝛc. Inuadeth Scotland,1213,b 60. Wieweth Hume caſtell, 1214,a 40. Went againſt the rebelles in the noꝛth,1212,b 10. Gentle to ladie Eliſabeth, 1153,a 50. Viſiteth madam de Parma, 1210,a 60. His iornies during his abode beyond ſeas,b 10. Interteined of the emperoꝛ,20. Saluted of the duke of Auſtria, 40. Departeth from Vienna,60. Deceaſeth, 1353,b 50. His honoꝛable funerall,60,1354,a 10. ¶ Sée Fitzwater. Of ſaint Giles accoꝛded with king Henrie the ſecond,85,a 20. Otherwiſe Tholouze, 67,b 30. Of ſaint Paule reuolteth to the French,619,b 10. Confedered with the duke of Burgognie, 694,a 30. His counſell vnto king Henrie the firſt,488,a 10 Came out of France to ſée a chalenge perfoꝛmed at Couentrie,495,a 20. Aſſalteth the caſtell of Guiſnes, 538,b 40. His foꝛtune againſt the Engliſhmen,538,b 40. Landed in the Ile of Wight,he maketh ſpoile,521,a 60. Deceaſeth, 608,b 50

Erle of Tholouze lands inuaded by earle Richard, 112, a 60

Erle of Warwike made gouerноꝛ of king Henrie the ſixt, 596,a 50. And others ſent to the generall councell , 547,a 50,60. Denieth that euer he acknowledged himſelfe guiltie of treaſon,513,a 30. Aſſalted,648,b 20. Loꝛd admerall and lieutenant of Calis, he ſcoꝛeth the ſeas and taketh a rich pꝛile,648,a 10,ꝛc. Regent of France,616,a 20. His entrance thereinto,a 60. Anſwer to the duke of Clarence his meſſage, 682,b 10. And Edward the fourth incounter, his manfull courage,684, a 10,ꝛc: b 40. He is ſlaine, 685,a 10. Followeth king Edward the fourth to foile him, 683,b 40. And the duke of Clarence take the ſeas, he is kept out of Calis , landed at Diepe,674,a 50,b 30. The loue which the people boꝛe vnto him, 675, a 40. In a chafe becauſe of king Edward the fourths deliuerie, 673,b 30. In Couentrie , pꝛoꝛoked to fight by king Edward the fourth,681,a 10. His houſekæping, inſtituted gouernoꝛ of the realme , his badge woꝛne in euerie mans cap : note, 678, a 30,40,b 40. Diſcouraged king Edward the fourth , and maketh him flie foꝛ feare out of England, 675,a 60,b 10,ꝛc. His ſtendard , what enſigne it boꝛe, 673,a 10. The fruits of his malice,673,a 30. Beareth a continuall grudge vnto king Edward the fourth, his perſuaſions to his two bꝛethren againſt him,670,b 20,50,671, b 10,ꝛc: b 50. Offended with king Edward the fourths marriage, 668,a 60. He kæpeth his græſe ſecret, b 20. Sent ouer into France about K. Edward the fourths marriage,667, b 60. His coꝛage, a truſtie frend to king Edward the fourth, 664,a 60 b 10. The right one, oꝛder taken foꝛ the ſhewing of him abꝛode,765,b 30. Had in feare & geloſie in foꝛren regions, 787, b 60. Shewed openlie in pꝛoceſſion, 766, a 10. His manlie coꝛage,982,a 50. His pꝛeſence greatlie incoꝛageth the Engliſh ſouldiors, 987,a 10, His requeſt and meſſage to the erle of Huntleie, 984, a 20. Arreigned of treaſon, Confeſſeth it , ſubmitteth himſelfe, is pardoned,492, a 50,60,b 10. In higheſt authoꝛitie,1061,b 10. Commended , he is ſlaine, 727, a 60. Sent againſt the rebelles in the noꝛth, 1212, b 40. Commended,1205,a 50. Deceaſeth,404,b 20. His valiantneſſe,1204, a 60. Shot thorough the thigh with an harquebuſe,b 50. Noble men of France ſent vnto him from the admerall about conference,1199b 30. Landeth at Newhauen,1196,a 20. Anoth taken by him and his officers 30. He and the Rheingraue talke togither,b 10. He appointed to go againſt Noꝛfolke rebels,1034,b 30. Commeth to Cambꝛidge,b 40. He ſendeth an herald at armes to the rebels offering pardon, ꝛc: 1036,a 10,ꝛc. Counſell giuen him to abandon Noꝛwich, goeth ſoꝛth to giue the enimies battell, 1038, a 60, b 70. The rebels yéeld to him, & ſheweth them mercie, 1039, b 20, Counterfet of Warwike ¶ Sée Simenell. Of Wiltſhire and others ſpoile Newberie,he ſaileth ouer ſeas,653 b 20,30. The duke of Buckinghams bꝛother 803,b 20. Of Wincheſter beſieged by his owne tenants, 240,b 10. Reꝛpochfullie executed,339,a 50. Of Woꝛceſter gouernoꝛ to the pꝛince ſlippeth from him, 522,b 30. And others beheaded, 523,b 60

Erles of Cheſter the true and famous genealogie, 221,a 10 Toke end in John Scot, 221,a 10. Of Leiceſter from the firſt to the laſt by ſucceſſion,ſet downe in a collection, 1419,a 40,ꝛc: vnto 1424,b 10. Of Richmond line that firſt bare their title of honoꝛ of the ſaid caſtle and towne, 7,b 20

Erles created,332,a 20,568 a 60 347. b 60. 892, a 50.912 b 50. And dukes created,395,b 50. And barons, 960,a 20. And loꝛds,1061,a 40, 1228, a 60,b 10. At a parlement, 353,a 30. Three taken and beheaded, 183,b 10

Erledome of March purchaſed, 102,a 50.

Erminfred biſhop of Sion oꝛ Sitten a cheefe commiſſioner from pope Alexander, 8,b 60.

Ermingard dicount Beaumonts daughter married to William king of Scots, 110, a 60

Erthquake,217,b 50. In Kent, ꝛc: 1313,a 10. Ouer all England, 109,a 40. Generall in England.11,b 50. In H. the firſts time,39,b 10. Senſible and viſible,44,b 40. That did much hurt, 440,b 40. In the fourteenth of duke Williams reigne,14, a 30. Vniuerſall how frightfull and hurtfull, 1311,a 20.ꝛc : That ouerthꝛew buildings, 239, b 20. At ſaint Albons counted ſtrange, and whie, 243,a 60. That ouerthꝛew houſes, 241, a 60. Generall , did much hurt,278,a 30. In diuerſe places of England,1206,a 20,30 In ſundꝛie places of England, and what harme was thereby done,1260, b 10. After a thunder,204,b 40. With lightening and thunder,ꝛc: 277,b 40: note,

Erth lifted vp it ſelfe like a huge towꝛe,102, b 60. Remoued in Doꝛſetſhire,1353, a 20. And trées ſonke and ſwallowed vp in Kent: note, 1413, b 20,30. Strangelie moouing in the countie of Herefoꝛd, 1224,b 10

Eſcuage demanded: note,213,a 20. Granted,233,b 40, 248,a 40,262,a 10. Paid,283,a 60. Gathered, twentie ſhillings of euerie knights fée, 230, b 50. Termed the great, 229, a 50

Eſpeke Walter, the firſt that bꝛought the oꝛder of white monks into England,26,a 60

Eſſexmen beginers of a ſhꝛewd rebellion,429,b 60. They pꝛoſecute it, 430,ꝛc.

Eſter date fell at the higheſt, namelie on ſaint Marks date 167,a 60

Eſterlings. ¶ Sée Riot.

Eſtouteuille Robert taken pꝛiſoner. 33,a 40

Euill Maie daie. ¶ Sée Rebellion of Lincolne.

Euers, conſtable of Doner caſtell,ꝛc,480, a 20. Loꝛd that now liueth, his noble anceſtrie 412,b 50. Knight his good ſeruice in the Noꝛth, 942, b 30. His pꝛoweſſe and valiant ſeruice, 962, b 30. Slaine, 968,a 60

Eureux citie yéelded vnto the Frenchmen,386,b 50. Taken by treaſon, 619, b 60

Euſtace earle of Bullongne, againſt William Rufus, 17, b 60. Sonne to king Stephan duke of Noꝛmandie,48,a 40. Angrie with his father, 60,a 60. He dieth. ¶ Sée Monke.

Exactions cauſe commotions, 626,b 10. Great, 145, a 40. with ſhifts of extoꝛtion pꝛactiſed, 146, a 10. New and ſtrange: note,496,a 20. Intollerable, 239, b 10. ¶ Sée Couetouſnes, Subſidies,ꝛc. Taxes, Tenths, and Tributes.

Example euill how it pꝛeuaileth,430,a 60. Of great ones what it doth foꝛ imitation, 845,b 60

Execution without iudgement vpon noblemen,673,a 30,693, a 50. Of the duke of Buckingham without arreignment oꝛ iudgement, 744,b 10

Exceſter rebelled againſt duke William,and is ſubdued, 6, b 10. Pꝛeſerued from fier,7 84, a 10. Beſieged,the loialtie of the citizens, 1002, b 40, 60, Citie deſcribed,with the ſundꝛie aſſaults of the ſame,1007 b 10,1008, 1009, 1010, 1011, 1012,1013,1014. Commended foꝛ loue and loiall ſeruice to the king and ſtate: note,1047 b 40,50. Noble & true,1048, a 10. Great pꝛactiſes to pꝛocure the citizens thereof to ioine with the Deuonſhire rebels : note, 1020, a 30, ꝛc. The antiquitie, foundation, and building of the cathedꝛall church of ſaint Peters in Exceſter,1027,a 20,ꝛc. ¶ Sée Clergie, Edward the fourth, and Richard the third.

Excommunication denounced againſt the rebellious barons in king Johns time,188,b 60 Of Romiſh vſurers, and the excommunicatoꝛ called to his anſwer,219,b 10. A dart that made both king and people to quaile,223,b 60. Of pꝛieſt foꝛ incontinencie,242,a 60. And ſuſpenſion threatned againſt the Engliſh clergie,239,a 40. Threatned to ſuch as aſſiſted king John, 181, a 50. Of Lewis the French kings ſonne by name, 192,a 20. By name and in particular,190,a 20.

10. Of king John when it was to be released,178,b 40. Of Guie de Montfort, 277, a 40. Of duke Leopald for imprisoning of Richard the fourth,147.a 50. Extended to the dead & buried: note,392, a 10. Flashed and thundered out against the wicleuists: note,484,a 10,&c: Threatened against attempters of tumults,205,b 60. The feare thereof constreined a contribution,211,a 10. Of pope Sixtus quintus estéemed as nothing: note,1401,a 40,&c: ¶ Sée Legats, Popes, and Prælats.

Excheker,and the officers vnto the same by whome instituted, 8, a 60. Remoued from westminster to Northhampton,173,a 10. It and the kings bench remoued vnto Shrewesburie, 278,b 10.

Excuse of Edward the first to auoid an inconuenience, 308,a 60. Of the clergie to be free from subsidies,&c: 301, b 40. ¶ Sée Couetousnesse.

Exham field. ¶ Sée Battell.

Exton knight a murtherer of king Richard the second 517, a 10. His two late repentance and sorrow. a 20. Extortion of william Rufus made him euill spoken of amongest his subiects,23,b 10. An ordinance against it, 260, b 10. ¶ Sée Oppression & Vsurie.

F.

FActions of Yorke and Lancaster vnpossible to be mingled without danger of discord, 647,a 40

Faire kept at westminster at saint Edwards tide,241,a 30

Fifteene daies togither,,247, a 20. Of Lewis the French kings sonne in derision, 200, b 10. At Brikstow robbed,263, b 50

Faloise beséged and rendered vp to king Henrie the fift,561 b 10,60. ¶ Sée Arlet.

Fallhood betwixt brethren, 32,a 60

Familie of loue, fiue of that sect stood at Paules crosse, 1261,b 30. Proclamation against them: note, 1314,a 60,b 10.

Famine extreme within Rome, 566,b 20. Richard the second died therof,516,b 60. Suffred, 68,b 20. The cause why Rome was surrendred,167,b 60. Refused, and death by the sword chosen, 166,a 20. The punishment of witchcraft, 204,a 10. Lamentable, 323,b 40. ¶ Sée Pestilence.

Farrer an haberdasher of London a sore enimie to the ladie Elisabeth, 1159,b 20,30,&c:

Fast generall proclamed and deuoutlie obserued,1427,b 50

Fasts & processions vsed, 260 a 10

Fauour. ¶ Sée People.

Fecknam. ¶ Sée Abbat.

Fées. ¶ Sée Annuities.

Feare causeth want of speech, 659,b 30. Made king Edward the fourth forsake his kingdome, 675,a 60, b 10. What it forceth men vnto,293 a 20. Causeth restitution of wrongfull detcined townes, 311,b 20. Forceth agreement: note, 114,b 20. Among the people assembled at the duke of Summersets execution, 1068,a 50, b 10. ¶ Sée Suspicion.

Fergusa a Lombard betraieth the duke of Clarence, 580,a 10

Felton ¶ Sée Bull seditious.

Ferdinando archduke of Austrich made knight of the garter, 882,a 60

Ferrers lord of misrule at a Christmas at the court, his behauiour and port, 1067,a 60,b 10,&c:

Ferrers knight william taken prisoner, 33,a 40

Ferrers a traitor. ¶ Sée Treason.

Fescampe William, his deuises of a plaine song whereabout was strife, 13,b 30

Feast rare and royall, 1332,a 60 At quéene Katharins coronation, 579, a 10,&c: Sumptuous and full of rare deuises, 1434, a 30

Fetherston, aliàs Constable. ¶ Sée Counterfet of king Edward the first.

Feuersham abbeie by whome founded, 58,a 20

Fiftéenth granted vnto king Henrie the third by the temporaltie,213,a 10. Of the first penie after the rate of mens goods,312,b 20. Of all the moueables to be found within the realme,207,a 30. Three granted, 402, a 60. ¶ Sée Subsidie.

Fight among sparows,397,b 50

Finch knight drowned, 1202, b 10

Fine for misdemeanor,704,a 60 Of fiue thousand markes paid to king Henrie the third by the Londoners, 208,b 40. For murther,122,b 30. Of a keeper for a prisoners escape. 152,a 20

Fines set on prisoners for their ransoms,144,a 50. Paid for licence to exercise turnements, 145, b 60. Set on the nobles by king John for not aiding him against the French king, 167, a 20. For not comming to the church,1322. Of priests that had wiues, 26,a 30. Extreme leuied vpon the clergie: note, 201,b 60, 202, a 10. Set on the maior of London and the shiriffes,256,b 30: note. Set on shiriffes heads, 254, a 60. Of foure hundred pounds set vpon aldermens heads of London by king Henrie the seuenth, 795,b 60,796,a 10. Sessed vpon them that fauored the Cornish rebels,785, a 10. ¶ Sée Eschuage, Forfeits, and Nobilitie.

Fire bursteth out of the earth, 44,b 40. It & the sword Gods angrie angels, 1001,b 10

Fish monstrous taken in Norfolke,1355,b 60. Of twentie yards long,&c: note, 1259,b 30. Driuen to the English shore,1206,a 40. Like vnto a man, 168,a 10

Fishes of the sea fight, 225,b 60 115, a 10, Monstrous at Downam bridge in Suffolke 1211,a 50. In westminster hall after the fall of an high flood, 1271, b 50.

Fishmongers bound to find foure scholers at the vniuersities,&c: note, 792,b 10. Sore troubled by the maior of London,440,b 30. In act against them within the citie of London, 441, a 50. The statute against them repeled and they restored to their liberties, 442 a 60. Benefited by iustice Randolph, 1354,a 40,50.

Fitzalan William a conspirator 49,a 10

Fitzarnulfe a Londoner procureth the citizens to reuenge their cause by rebellion, he is apprehended and executed, 204,a 40

Fitzbaldrike shiriffe of Yorke, 10,a 10

Fitzempresse Henrie, his returne into England 58, a 20. and is knighted, 40

Fitzfergus Gilbert killed his brother: note, 98,b 40

Fitzgeffreie chamberleine vnto king Richard the first, 128,a 60. His death, b 60

Fitzhammon Robert his tale to William Rufus, 26,b 20

Fitziohn Eustace a conspirator,49,a 10. Slaine, 67,a 10

Fitzleo Peter an vsurping pope, 44,a 50

Fitzmiles Roger. ¶ Sée Erle.

Fitzmoris his miserable end, 1365,b 60

Fitzosbert his vnnaturall ingratitude, and complaint to K. Richard the first against the citie of London, 149,a 40. Whie he ware his long beard, his oration to the people, he is called before the archbishop of Canturburie lord cheefe iustice & president of the realme, he flieth into the church of saint Marie Bow, he is attached, his concubines, 149, all. Is executed, the archbishop of Canturburie euill spoken of for his death, an old whoremonger and new saint 150,a 10,20

Fitzosborne William earle of Hereford, &c: gouernor of England in duke Williams absence, 5,a 10

Fitzroie Oliuer sonne to king John, 202,a 20

Fitzscrope Richard in armes against Edrike the rebell,5, a 10

Fitzwalter lord deceaseth in Spaine,450,b 10. Appealeth the duke of Aumerle of treason,512,a 60. He is mainprised,513,b 60. Earle of Sussex, his seruice against the Scots, he is in great danger: note, 986,a 20

Fitzwilliams recorder of London his wisedome in a dangerous case, 730,b 30

Flanders spoiled by the duke of Gloucester, 614,b 60. Wholie at the deuotion of Edward the third,354,b 60. Interdicted,358,a 10. Diuerse rodes made thereinto by the English, and great spoile done, 454,b 60. Inuaded by the bishop of Norwich, 442, b 60. a great part drowned by an exundation, 34, a 60. ¶ Sée Erle of Leicester, & League.

Flatterie impudent of sir John Bushie to king Richard the second, 490,b 60. Vsed in a sermon: note, 725, b 40 Notable, 727, b 50, 60, 728,a 10,&c. ¶ Sée Dissimulation.

Fleetwod recorder of London made sargent at law. ¶ Sée Sargents at law.

Fleming bishop of Lincolne, founder of Lincolne college in Oxford, 604,a 20

Fleming knight maister of the ordinance, 991,b 50

Fleming lord required to come to parlée with the generall, 1217,b 20. His dishonorable dealing,30. His double dealing,1218,a 10. His letter to sir George Carew, 1218,a 60

Flemings threescore thousand came to the aid of the earle of Henault,359,a 10. Released of debts and interdiction,360, a 50. Besiege Aire, and doo much mischéefe the French 377, a 60. Doo what they might to indamage the French in behalfe of English,376,b 20. Their hearts alienated from the obedience of their erle,353,b 50. Sweare fealtie to Edward the third, 357,a 40. Vanquished by the earle of Arthois, 303, a 60. Set vpon the Englishmen in their lodgings,306,b 10. Banished the land, 313, b 50. Their fleete loseth the victorie to the English naue, 454,b 20. Kill an English herald of armes,443, a 10. Discomfited by the Englishmen,443,a 40. Sent home into Flanders,92,b 10. Their enuie,64,a 30. Comming ouer into England, haue places appointed them to inhabit,34,a 60. Motion to haue Edward the third take vpon him the title to the crowne of France,356,b 10. Slaine through their owne couetousnes, 1151,a 20

Flies in Februarie the number strange,1260,a 60. Manie séene in a yeare, a prognostication naturall of a plague like to follow, 1050,b 30

Flint castell built, 279,b 50

Flix,great death thereby in the English host,550,b 50. By vnwonted diet,and thereupon death,813,b 10. Gotten by excessiue eating of frutes, 476, b 10. Causing a great death, 537,a 20

Flodden field, 826,a 40,&c. 427, a 10,&c,428,a 10,&c.

Flores. ¶ Sée Coine.

Floods and high waters doing much hurt, 1129, b 50. Foretold by astronomie, but falling out false, 882, b 20. Drowning the marishes on Essex and Kent side,&c, 914, b 40. That hindered a great and bloudie conflict,943,a 30. That did much hurt, 480, b 60. In the riuer of Thames, 1207, a 50. High by means of a great thaw, 1208, a 60. High that did much hurt, 1310,b 30. Three without ebbe betweene,540,a 50. High that drowned Westminster hall,1271,b 50. Great and violent,161,a 10,355,b 10. That did great hurt,220,b 50. In the night, 284, a 30. ¶ Sée Bridges, and Riuers.

Floure delices three, and how they come annexed vnto the armes of England, 15,a 10

Flushingers trouble the English passengers, 1262,b 40,50

Folkmote at Paules,262,a 20, 263,a 30,264,a 30

Follie of a couper, 819,b 60

Forfeits,312,b 60. For breaking peace concluded betwixt Richard the first, and the French king,148,b 50. ¶ Sée Fines.

Forgerie of william Rufus to get monie, 20,b 10

Forgetfulnes of dutie in young men aduanced to dignitie,76,

Forgiue-

Forgiuenesse of an enimie, a notable example, 156,a30

Forrest called New forrest, and what waste & desolation was made to make it, 14, a30. Of Shirewod pleased king Richard the first verie greatlie, 142,b10. ¶ See Frier.

Forrests to be severed the new from the old, 207,a50. The perambulations of them appointed to bishops, 308,b30. Seized into duke W. hands, 14,a20. Their gouernement diuided, 108, a30. And ordinances for them, 153,b50. King Johns commandement against the white monks concerning them, 162,a40

Forster doctor of phylicke first reader of surgerie lecture in London, 1349, a20,30, &c: his faithfull and freendlie epitaph vpon doctor Caldwell deceased, 1370, a20

Forswearing. ¶ See Periurie.

Forte scue, and the reason of the name, 749,b30

Fortresse. ¶ See Castell.

Fortune. ¶ See Walden.

Fouks de Brent a man of great stomach and rashnesse, 202,a10. An enimie to rest and quietnesse, 206,a40. His fowle end, 206,b40. ¶ See Erle.

Founteine flowing with blod, 23,b20

Foules tame leaue houses, and waxing wild get them to the woods, 14,a60,b10. Wild forbidden to be taken, 173,a10

Fouquier Rake a valiant man, assistant to prince Henries rebellions, 886,b60. Taken by sir Francis surnamed the Arragonois, 628,b60

Fox, his practise to deliuer certeine christians from the Turks, 1310,b20

Foxleie slept more than fourteene dais & as many nights: note, 972,b20

Fraie at Oxford betwixt legat Othos men and the scholers, 222,a20. Betwixt the English archers and the Hennuiers, 347,a20. In saint Dunstans church in the east, 562,a20. Neere Clerkenwell where the maior of London, &c: was resisted, 641,b10. In Fleetstreet betweene the streetdwellers and gentlemen of courts, 646,b60: note. Betweene Spaniards and Englishmen about whores, 1126b60. On Clift heath two miles from Excester, 644, a30. In London against the maior, 636,a20. Great by night in Fleetstreet, 623,a30. whereby insued murther and execution: note, 954, a20, &c: Betweene the Almans of king Henrie the eights camp and the Englishmen, 821, a60. Betweene the Englishmen and the townesmen of Sancta Maria, 813, b60. Betweene the English and townesmen of Calis vpon a small occasion, 810,a10. Betweene goldsmiths & tailors of London, 274,a50. Betwixt the monks & citizens of Norwich, 275, b60. Betwixt the welsh and English, 307,a60

France interdicted by the popes legat, 160, a60. At diuision in it selfe by ciuill warres, 1195, a20. The troubles thereof touch most the Q. of England, 1195,b30. Disquieted with two factions, 537,a50,60,b10, &c: Inuaded by duke William, and what waste he made there by fire, &c: 14,b30. The power of the English armie through it, 426, a60. Their whole puissance vanquished by the English archers, 373,a60: note and read the order and proceeding of that battell two pages before. The frontiers thereof full of men of warre, 357,b50. And how king Edward the third tooke vpon him the name of king thereof, 356,b30. And by what right he claimed it, 40, &c: 357,a10,20, &c: And great preparation made in England for wars against it, 547, a60. Ciuill discord amongest the nobles thereof, 557,a60. The oth of the three estates, 578,a30. Henrie the fift taketh vpon him to be regent there, 578, a50. And what townes and castelles king Henrie the fift got. ¶ See the historie of king Henrie the fift, 563,564,565. All lost there through ciuill discord at home 636,b30, &c: 60. The English lose all there, 629,b30. The duchie of Britaine incorporated vnto it, 769, b10. The constable thereof a deepe dissembler, 695,a50. His offer to king Edward the fourth, 698 a40. All aslant in whole time, 748,b60, 749,a10. It is concluded in parlement that king Henrie the eight should personallie inuade it, 815, b50. An armie leuied to inuade it, three battels appointed with their seuerall lieutenants, 963 b30,40, &c: Afflicted by the Englishmen and their aids, 879,a10, &c: It is agreed among the lords of England to annoie and infest it, 1061,b30

Francis knight slaine in Deuonshire rebellion, 1024, a20, 60

Francis de Valois, &c. ¶ See Duke of Alanson.

Fratricide, 1270, a10. ¶ See Murther.

Frederike abbat of saint Albons a rich & a puissant prelat: note, 9,b60,10,a10

Frederike the emperor alied to king Henrie the third, 219,a60. ¶ See pope Alexander.

Freendship. 395, and 394. ¶ See Peace. Interteined by affinitie, 586,a40. Feigned of duke William of Aquitane, 67 b20. Found in a forren countrie, 6, a30. Betweene the erle of Cornwall and the erle of Penbroke, 209, a60. Sold for gifts and bribes: note, 361 b50

Freemen of London, 120, a20

Free schole at Wuluerhampton 796, a10. ¶ See Schole.

French king maketh warre against the duke of Normandie, 58, b60. Open warres proclamed against him by Q. Marie, 1133, b10, 20, &c: His son trauelleth in vaine to take Douer, 193, a30. Sendeth to the pope, commeth vnto Calis, taketh the ses, landeth in Kent, the lords do him homage, 191, b10, &c: Goeth to visit Calis, 1141, b20. His sonne mainteineth his pretended title to the crowne of England, 191, a50. Alleageth that king John is not lawfull king of England, 191 a20. His sonne came to fight with king John, 183, a60. Returneth into France, 179, b40. Burneth his ships, 180 a20. Inuadeth Flanders, 179, a10. Displeased for the reconciliation of king John with the pope, he meaneth to proceed in his forreie against England, 178, b50, 60. Prepareth to inuade England, 176, b20. Winneth diuerse things from the king of England, 169, b40. Will not accord to peace with king John 166, b30, 40. Inuadeth Normandie, 160, a10. Demands in a treatie of peace, 160, b20 Maketh warre against king John, 164, a60. Inuadeth Normandie, 166, b10. Winneth towns from king John, 167, b10. Almost drowned being pursued by king Richard the first, 153, b10. Pursued by king Richard the first in danger of drowning, 148, a40 Raileth his liege from Vernuell, 144, b20. Inuadeth Normandie, 141, b30. His and earle Johns offers to haue king Richard the first kept still in prison, 141, a20, His euill dealing and promise breaking with king Richard the first, 133, b60. Entereth Gisors, 151, b60. Confesseth earle John to vsurpe against his brother king Richard the first, 137, b50. Setteth from Messina towards the holie land, 127, a40. Maketh an ouerture for peace, he leaueth his seege, 93, b50. Soweth sedition betweene Henrie the father and Henrie the sonne, 84, a30. Commeth a madding to visit Beckets tome, 103, a60. Entereth the towne of Mauns and maketh spoile, 114, a20. Hideth his head at the arriuall of Henrie the second, 112, b30, 40. His subiects arrested in Normandie, 110, b20. Troubled with a frensie, 519, a50, 60. Picketh a quarrell against England, 551, a30. Inuested with the order of the garter, 1382, a10. Francis the great his court a vniuersitie: note, 1343, a60 b10. Deceaseth, an obsequie for him in Paules, 1259, b50. Commeth to the camp before Newhauen, 1205, a60. Deceaseth, an obsequie kept for him, the cheefe mourners, 1185 a40, 50. Procureth a peace betweene duke Robert and William Rufus, 19, a30. His policie against the English, 426, b50. For monie raiseth his seege, and forbeareth to aid duke Robert, 19, a20. Restoreth townes in Gascoigne to king Edward for feare, 311, b20. With an huge armie driueth the English out of Flanders, 444, a60. The order of seruice at his table, 487, a20, 30. Giueth his daughter to king Richard in marriage, 487, a10. His priuie practises disclosed by the popes nuntio, 475, a10. Two of his ships taken with a great prise in them, 453, b40. Aideth the Scots against the English, 447, a20. Inuadeth Flanders, 303, a50. His vniust dealing, he renounceth what he had said, 292, a40. Sendeth out a fleet against England, 295, a50. Deceaseth, 427, a10. ¶ See Normandie, & Philip. Arbitrateth a matter betwixt Henrie the third and his nobles, and giueth sentence against the barons, 265, b60. Requested by the pope to make warre against England, refuseth so to do, 238, a20. His brother named Charles made earle of Poyuance, 238, a50. Inuadeth the earle of Marches lands, 229, b30. To whom the earle of Britaine submitteth himselfe, 219, a20. His carriages distressed by the earls of Britaine & Chester, 214, a40 Deceaseth, 205, a60. His sonnes armie discomfited, and his gentlemen taken prisoners, 200, a60. Answer to Henrie the third, requiring restitution of his right, 203, b10. Assembleth an armie, commeth to Calis, his lords request to Edward the third, he returneth into Rone, 377, a40, 60. b30, 60. Licenced to depart, goeth ouer to Calis, 394, b10 His oth of peace, hostages deliuered for him, prisoner in England foure yeares, 395, a10. Prisoner, & comforted by the prince, whom he thanketh for his bountie, he is brought ouer into England, 390, a30, b20, 60. He is sorowfull, he is remoued to Windsore, 391, a10, 40. Remoued from the castell of Hertford to Somerton, his allowance, 392, a60. His ransome, 394, a60. Followeth the prince of Wales, 387, b40. His presumptuous demands, 388, b10. Commeth to giue the duke of Lancaster battell, 386, b60. Taken prisoner, 389, b40. Departeth out of the field by constraint: note, 372, b40. His great armie, and the seruice done by them, 360, a10. Prepareth a great naule against Flanders, 358, a40. Not of sound memorie, 557, b10. Consulteth how to deale with the Englishmen, sendeth defiance to Henrie the fift, the number of his armie, 552, a40, &c. Deceaseth, 584, a60. Turneth the ciuill dissention of England to his aduantage: note, 636, a30, &c. Practiseth with a witch, 602, a20 Armed, fled in the night, 602, a60. Deceaseth, 795, b40, 50. Described both for person and qualitie, 775, b40. Dissimulation, a motion for a treatie of peace with the English, 774, b40, 60. Request for aid against the duke of Britaine, 768, a20. Feedeth Edward the fourth with faire words and promises, 704, b30. Large offers to Edward the fourth, 704, a20. Buieth peace with tribute of Edward the fourth: note, 700, b10. Nothing precise in outward shewes of honor, 695, b20. His speech to the English herald that gaue him defiance, 694, b60, 695, a10, &c. Dissimulation vpon purpose and ill meaning, 698, a10. Promiseth the erle of Richmond assistance to recouer the crowne, 748, b50, 60. By benenolence vnto the earle of Rich-

Richmond,745,a40. Francis the first comes to the crowne, his praise worthie properties, 836, a60. His roiall ornaments at an interview, the description of his person, his rich araie at a iusts,858, a50, 60,b50. His and his partners attire at a chalenge,859, a60. His furniture and deuise vpon his ornaments, 860,a40. Afflicted with forren power on all sides, 965,a30,&c. An enimie to all christian princes, his power against king Henrie the eight and the emperor, he retireth backe with his armie,960. His children deliuered when the ransome of their father was paid,914, a20, 40. His sitting in his roialties with his great estates about him,&c: with an oration made to the assemblie, 904,a30,40,&c: b40. His oration before an honorable assemblie at Paris wholie concerning the emperor, and banning of malcontentment, 902,b60. A writing from him directed to the emperor,903,b 20. Receiueth the order of the garter, 898,b20. With the viceroie imbarked,not a little glad of his libertie, not verie hastie to ratifie the accord, complaineth of the emperor to the popes ambassadors,890 a30, 50,b10,30.50. His roialtie restreined,889,a20. The manner of his deliuerie out of prison, 990,a10. Taken prisoner,while he desired to fight in plaine field, the manner how he was banquished and taken, 884,a40, 60,b30,50. Led prisoner to the rocke of Pasqueton, his letter to his mother the regent of France, 885, a50, b30. Marrieth the emperor Charles his sister, 889,b40. Led prisoner into Spaine, extremelie sicke in the castell of Madrill, 887, a50,b60. In durance,is visited by the emperor,his sister the ladie Alanson treateth for him, he is carefull ouer the crowne of France, a treatie touching his deliuerie, 888,a 20, 50, 60, b20. He and king Henrie the eight at variance: note, 872,a60,b10, &c. Attacheth the Englishmens goods in Burdeaux,872,b40. He & the Spanish begin to aspire to the empire, in hope to be emperor as well as the Spanish, builded his hope vpon the humors of the princes of Germanie, resteth vpon the fauour of the pope,851,a40, b 10,&c: His toiefh and light behauiour abrode: note,850,a 10,&c: Deceaseth, the variablenesse of his fortune,835, b 60,836, a10. Procureth the pope to be a meane to Henrie the eight for peace, 831, b50. Hath his hands full of trouble 812,b40. Writeth to cardinall Wolsele,848,a20. Prepareth an armie in aid of the Scots, 993, a60,b10, &c: Purposeth to surprise Gernesee and Jerdsee, but is repelled, ashamed that anie report should passe of his euill successe, persieuereth in his former martiall action,1055,b 30, 50, 60. The causes that made him to breake by his campe, b30. Procéedeth against prince Edward in iudgement of appeale, 402,a 20. Sent to defie the king of England,the countie of Ponthieu taken by him, 401, b 10. Prepareth a nauie, 403, b 20. Decreaseth, 356, a 60 Frenchmen fall to spoiling and rifling of Calis,1136,a10,&c: Melled with the losse of saint Quintines, they take Newnam bridge, and Rie banke, disappoint the Englishmens deuise, they demand a parlee, 1135, a10, 50, b10, 30,60. Shew themselues in their kinds, 192, b30. In king Johns time ouerrun, take, spoile,and subdue diuers places of England, 192, 193. Sent ouer to aid the rebellious barons, 190, b10. Uncommanded of the king, assalt Rouen,93,a60. They & Normans fight, 60, b50. Dw much hart in Wales, burne townes, are slaine, returne home, 531,a30,&c: Their demand of the Ile of Wight,524 b40. Inuade the Ile of Wight,524,a60. Demand a dower for queene Isabell,519 a60. Their practises to make the English reuolt from their owne king,517,b60. Breake the law of armes, 1204, b50. Spoile diuers English ships 1195,a60. Gather cockles to their losse and vndoing,1192, a20,50. Their policie in womens apparell: note, 1188, b 40,50. Repelled by the English,1188,a50,numbers slaine 60. Driuen into Leith, b10. win a trench, 50. Repelled & some slaine, 60. A trench wonne from them, 1190, b10. Repelled by the English, 50, Sent into Scotland to aid the queene Dowager, 1186,b 40. Ships taken by the Englishmen, 445,a10. Burne the towne of Rie, 417, b50. Spoile the Ile of Wight, burne Portsmouth, Dartmouth,and Plimmouth, 417, b60. Their gallies chased from the English costes and banquished,427,a20. They & Spaniards burne and destroie diuerse townes on the English costes: note, 427, a 40,50,&c: Witteli the English for feare: note, 426, b20. Spoile and burne diuerse townes in the west countrie, 425,b40. Their admeral perswadeth the Scots to fight with the English,447,b 20. Subtiltie, 480, b20. Fleet setting forward towards England is driuen backe by contrarie winds, 454, a10. Purpose an inuasion of England with their ships, 451,a 20. Foure hundred slaine besides diuerse taken,304,b 50. Their bloudie victorie,294,b 10. Slaine handsmouth by the English,295, a60. Rob Douer,chased to their ships, discomfited and slaine, 295,b 10,&c. Forced to retire by the English,296,a60. Die thorow pestilence & other wales, 230,a60. Their spite toward the English, 241, b60. Taken at aduantage, 207, b10. Put to flight at Lincolne, 200,a60. Their souldiors in a poore estate,199,b40. Their pride procureth them hatred, 198,a10. Fleet assailed and banquished, 201, a50, 60. Meant not to fight with the English,408,b30. Prosperous successe in Poicton, 407 b30. Withdraw themselues into their forteresses and shire townes,405,a60. Take the king of Nauarre, 398, a40. And English skirmish, the French flie, & submit themselues, 387, a60, b10, 30. Distressed, the ordering of their battell, 388, a10, 40. Seeke to saue themselues by flight,389,b30. Forsake their horses and fight on foot, 379, a50,60. Slaine the date after the battell,373,a30. Discomfited and slaine, 369,a60. Slaine in great numbers, 372,b50. Lose the passage ouer the water of Some, disorder amongest them, 371, a 20,b50. Distressed and discomfited,368,b40. Their armie discomfited by a few English,364,a50. Set vpon the Flemings in skirmish, 359,b30. Inuade the costes of England,355,a50. Discomfited, 554, b10, 10. Incountred by the earle of Huntington, 558, b50,&c. Repelled,996,a10. Harts discouraged with the losse of Rone,568,b60. Their voluntarie subiection,they yeld diuerse castels and townes, 561,a30. Receiued a great ouerthrow by sea by the duke of Bedford, their nauie banquished,557,a40. Rob Henrie the fifts campe,554,b50. The order of their armie,553, a10. Six to one of the English,a30. Take occasion to inuade the English, 645, b 20. Some wearie of the French gouernement, 639, b 20. Discomfited,flie: note,619 a20. Ouerthrowne,slaine,taken prisoners and slaine,608, a60. Breake the peace, and take the town of S. Maleran, 608,a10. Faith and honestie, not to be trusted: note, 607, a 60. Recouered in Henrie the sixts time all that they lost in Henrie the fifts daies: note the course of the stories and compare them together, 601, Commit a foule murther by negligence of the watch at Montargis,597,b60. When inuincible,769, a 60. Their loue,699,b60. Ouerthrowne to their greefe and shame,822, a 20. Land in Sussex,in the Ile of Wight, distressed, the number of their nauie,969,a 10,40.60. And English haue manie skirmishes, 972, 973. Dogged nature for a matter of nothing,894,b20. In London all arrested & put to their fines,873,a 20. Failing in force make supplie by pollicie,880,a60. Scoured of the English, and foiled of the Welsh,874,b20. Insolent saucinesse against the English, 840,a40. Their diuelish nature,a50. Foiled at iusts of their challenge and proclaming: note,833,834,a10,&c. Nauie discomfited by the English,fleeth,815,b20 Armie approching against the power of Henrie the eight, they get the great gun called the red gun by swish hardinesse of the maister capteine, 818,a50,b40. Gallies land in Sussex and burne certeine cotages,817,a 20. Cruelties reported by their owne writers,1056,a60. Assaile Bulognberg,the number of pikes and bils broken vpon them, repelled,fiftéene wagons laden with their carcases,997, a60,b10,40,50. They & the Scots dw resolue to besiege Hadington, 993, a 60,b10. Remoue their campe, 994,b 50. Dislodged frō before Hadington, incamped at Muskelburgh, chased, durst not come forth of their campe, 995,a10,b10. Of name taken prisoners,1150,b 50. Their desperat aduenture and dastardlinesse, 1139,a 20, b10. ¶ See Bullen, Englishmen, and Normans.

French gentlemen weare armour vnder their garments, 1350,a50. Taken prisoners and slaine, a 60

Frier Forrest seditious, his execution,945, a 20,&c. One of Ireland that accused the duke of Lancaster of treason, tormented and cruellie put to death,445,b40,60, 446,a 10.

Fotheshull. ¶ See Fotheshull.

Fotrike. ¶ See Fotrike: note. Randoll committed to the Towre,he is slaine by the person of the Towre,568,b20

Friers beggers, an order for them,521,a40. Greie about London change their habits, 789,b40. Minors when they began and increased, 170, b 60. Obseruants impugne cardinall Wolseis authoritie, 884,a10. Preachers inhabit Dunstable, 261,b10

Friers suborned to treat a peace betwixt Henrie the third and his lords,268,a50. Executed for treason, 220,a 15,&c.

Friaries suppressed, 938, a 10, 946,a30. ¶ See Abbeis and Religious houses.

Frith martyr burned, 937, b 60

Frobishers first voiage for the discouerie of Catais, 1262, a 40. A rumor that he was cast awaie, 50. His second voiage to Catais,1270,a40. His third voiage to Catais, 1271, a 60

Frost extreame,58,a 60. Bitter and nipping,881,a 10. Great and long: note, 612, a 60. Of continuance, 11, b 50. Hindering husbandrie: note, 396,b60,168,b30. After a fore flood,20,b 50. With snow on S. Marks daie, noisome to trees and plants, 238, b 60. With a sharpe winter, 1257, b30

Frost, called the great frost, 1208,a 60

Fuage. ¶ See Subsidie.

Fugitiues practises to execute pope Pius his buls, seditions and nourished in seminaries beyond seas,1359,b10 20,30,&c. ¶ See Practis seminarie. Seditious labour to bring the reime into a war externall and domesticall, 1360,a 60. Furtherers of treasons,1382,b20. ¶ See Parrie and Treason.

Fulco a French preest his admonition to Richard the first: note, 156,b10, G.

Aine. ¶ See Gift.

Game. ¶ See Wrestling.

Games

Games prohibited as vnlaw-full, 111,b40
Gantener & king Edward the firſts men at debate,306,a 50. Mainteine warre againſt the erle of Flanders,448,b30
Gard of the prince. ¶ Sée Yeomen.
Gardens. ¶ Sée Mowrefield.
Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter made lord chancellor, 1089,a 10. An enimie to the ladie Eliſabeth,examined of him,1154 a30,40. Deuided: note, dog in a rochet,1143, a20. The talke betweene the ladie Eliſabeth and him,1158,b20,40. Crowneth queene Marie, 1091,b30. His tale in the ſtar chamber againſt the ladie Eliſabeth,1101,a20,&c. Preacheth at Paules croſſe: note, 1126, a60. His practile againſt ladie Eliſabeth,1101,b 40. His old hatred againſt the ducheſſe of Suffolke: note 1142,a60,b10,&c; 1143,a10, &c: His death,vſited with the ſudden ſtroke of God, a hunter for the life of ladie Eliſabeth, 1130,a40,60,b20: note, Garriſons placed in Wales by king Henrie the firſt, 38,a10
Gaſcoigns refuſe to receiue the king of England for their ſouereigne 481,b10. Send to Richard the firſt, ſignifieng to him that they ought not to be diuided from the crowne, 485, a60. Begin to humble themſelues, 249,a10. Complaine of their ſtreict handling,247,b60. Make warre againſt the Engliſh ſubiects, they are danted,245,a60,b10 they meane to complaine of the earle of Leiceſter,their allegations diſproued,246,a20 40. Ceaſe not to make warre againſt the earle of Leiceſter, 246,b60. Rebell, and whie, 248,a30. Purſue the welſhmen,282,a20. They and other nations how they take the death of Richard the ſecond, 517,b all Gaſton de Bierne noted for vnthankfulneſſe,240,a30. Attempteth to take the citie of Baion,250,a30. Submitteth himſelfe vnto king Henrie the third, 242,a60
Gauaro and others executed for murther, his deſperat end, 1061,a50,60
Gaunt beſieged by the French king, 179,a10
Geffreie ſonne to king Henrie the ſecond, 7,b30
Geffreie king Henrie the ſeconds fourth ſonne borne, 67, b10. Marrieth the ducheſſe of Britaine, 75,a20
Geffreie biſhop of Conſtance in armes againſt the erle of Camber, 11,a50
Geffreie biſhop. ¶ Sée Biſhop.
Geffreie a kings brother rebelleth, 66,a30
Gelderland ¶ Sée Duke.
Gelouſie and cruelnie: note,115, b40
Genowais ſtratagems to abaſh the Engliſh: note, 372,a30, 40. Retained in the French kings wages, they méet the Engliſh on the ſeas & fight, 363,b10,20
Gentlemen more truſtie than the commons, more worthie than yeomen. 1052,b10,60
Gerald. ¶ Sée Erle Gerald.
Gerard de Cambill charged with leaſonie and treaſon,143,a 10
Gernſeie. ¶ Sée Jerdſeie.
Gifford William biſhop of wincheſter commended, 28,b20
Gifford doctor of phyſicke preſident of the college of phyſicians, 1349,b40
Gift of king Henrie teight vnto the citie of London, 976,b40, 50. Of king Henrie the ſecond to Hugh Lacie, 82,b20. Large and bountifull refuſed, 255, b30. Of the new yeare,249,a50. Of erle Edwins lands to earle Alane: note the like,7,b10, ¶ Sée Crokbie. Large refuſed being an vngodlie gaine, 147,b20.
Gifts great giuen for the fauor of Edward the fourths councellors and lords: note, 700,b20. They pacifie anger,procure fauor, 478, b50, 60. And obteine loſt liberties: note, 479,a10. Of roiall magnificence beſtowed by the French,1381, a20. A meane diſh to win the fauour of the nobilitie,16,a10. Not reſpected, but the mind of the giuer: note,1179,b20, 30. Giuen king Henrie the right in his progreſſe into Yorkſhire, 954, b10, 20. ¶ Sée Brides, Preſents,and Rewards.
Gilbert de Gaunt taken priſoner and put to his ranſome,7, a20
Gilbert murthered by Liulfus, 12,b30
Gilbert capteine of Tunbridge caſtell, 17,b40
Gilbert knight his voiage to Mortimbega,it hath not wiſhed ſucceſſe,he is ſeuered from his companie,dead,and neuer heard of, 1369,a50,60,b10
Gilford knight, his meſſage of thanks from king Henrie the ſeuenth to the Kentiſhmen, 780, a10. Maiſter of the horſſe vnto king Henrie the eight, 822,b60
Gilford lord Dudleie executed on the Tower hill, 1099,b30 ¶ Sée Sands.
Gilors beſéged by king Richard the firſt,151,b60. Beſéged by the Engliſhmen, 570,b50
Gita the ſiſter of Sweine king of Denmarke eſcapeth into Flanders, 6,b20
Glaſſe houſe burned, 1261,b50
Glendowers rebellion in wales, what he was,518,b60. The occaſion that moued him to rebell,ouerthrowne, 519,a10 Reputed a conuror: note,520 b20. Conſpireth with the Perſis,521,b50. His daughter married vnto the earle of March, 521, a20. He with his welſhmen full of miſcheef 519,b20. He and his welſh in armes againſt the lord Grey of Ruthen, preuaileth, 519,b60. Taketh the erle of March priſoner, 520, a60. Waſted the Engliſh marches 525,a40. Aided by the marſhall Montmerancie, 531, a 10. His craftie entring the caſtell Aberuſcwith,533, b40. He & fifteene hundred welſhmen taken and ſlaine, 528,a 10. Endeth his life in great miſerie, 536,a10
Gloceſter recouerd & put to fine 266,b10. Whie it was not aſſaulted by quéene Margaret & hir power,686,a40. ¶ Sée Duke.
Goche his valiant ſeruice, 587, b50,60. Taken priſoner by the foundering of his horſſe, 611, b30. A welſhman,his eſcape, 630,a40. Slaine vpon London bridge, 635,a30
Godwine. ¶ Sée Edmund.
Going George. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant.
Goſpatrike earle of Northumberland is ſent againſt king Malcolme of Scotland: note, 10,a60. From whome duke william taketh the erledome of Northumberland, & whie, 10,b50. How he came to be earle of Northumberland,13, a50. ¶ Sée Malcolme.
Gotpell, the ſhamefull end of a contemner thereof: note,935,a 60
Grace of God, words miſconſtrued by the Scots: note, 423,a20,&c.
Graſton Richard ſlandered by a Scot and defended, 112,a 30. Defended againſt Buchanans ſlander,298,b10,&c.
Granado is wone from the Turks or Saracens, 772,b 30, The ſtate and pompe of the ſame, b60
Grandmeſnill Hugh ſet all vpon the ſpoile, 17,a50
Grant of king Henrie the third to his brother,209,b20. ¶ Sée Patents.
Grantham church in Lincolneſhire out of which the people were frighted, 104,b20
Grating inconuenient vnto the commonwealth: note, 862,a 60,b10
Graſſe. ¶ Sée Mice,1315,a60
Gravelin fortified by French for a countergarriſon to Calis, 444,b10
Graueſend burned by the French and Spaniſh, 427,a 60
Greéſe killeth an archbiſhop,6,b 60. Of king John turned into rage, 183, b10. Cauſe of a ſore and dangerous ſickneſſe in king John, 194,a60, Of mind doubled the cauſe of king Johns death, 194,b50. Killed Dauid the prince of Wales,238,a60. Killed king Henrie the ſeconds heart, 114,b50. For loſſe of boties, 194,a60. For an ouerthrow the death of a king, 958,b40. The cauſe of death, 18,a30, 44,b60,50, b30,728,a30,40: note, 1151, b10,20,797,a10. For vnkindneſſe, 88,b50
Grete lord committed vnto the Tower,952, b10. Indicted and beheaded, 953, b60
Grete lord of Wilton deputie of Bullen, the letter of king Henrie the eight vnto him, 875,b40,50,60. His ſeruice verie honorablie accepted of the king,976, a40. His requeſt vnto the duke of Sommerſet, 985,a20. Receiueth poſſeſſion of Hume caſtell,990 b60
Grete lord John duke of Sukfolkes brother arreigned, condemned, pardoned, releaſed,beheaded, 1117,b60
Grete lord capteine of Guiſnes, taketh the French at a ſlaepie aduantage, commendeth his ſoldiors, 1137, a50,60,b50 The danger that he eſcaped ſitting vpon a horſe with two gentlemen, hurt by miſchance, he conſulteth with the Engliſhmen, 1138, a30, b40,50,60. His words to his ſoldiors, being aſhamed of their timorouſnes, agreeth with the enimie vpon articles, 1140, a20,40
Grete lord generall of the quéenes armie in Scotland, 1187,a30. His meſſage to the Frenchmen. 1188
Grete Arthur hurt in the ſhoulder by ſhot, 1189,a10
Grete lord of Wilton deceaſeth, 1198,a50
Grete Henrie. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant.
Greies familie aduanced, 668, a30,40
Gréne, one of Richard the thirds mercileſs inſtruments to murther two innocent princes, 734, b50
Grenfield knight, ſir Walter Raleighs lieutenant for the voiage to Virginia, 1401,b 50. Singled from his companie,arriueth in Hiſpaniola, 60. His valiantneſſe againſt the Spaniards, 1402, a10. In danger of ſhipwracke,20. Chaſeth and ſurpriſeth a Spaniſh ſhip, 50
Grenwich repared, 788,a10
Greſham knight ſuddenlie deceaſeth: note, 1310,b50
Gret Harrie. ¶ Sée ſhip.
Gret Oneale. ¶ Sée Oneale.
Greuill Fulke. ¶ Sée Iuſts triumphant.
Griffin ap Rées doth much hurt on the marches, 38,a60
Griffin king of wales departeth this life, 152,a60
Griffin of wales breaketh his necke, 228,b20
Griffin beheaded at Towre hill, 928,a10
Grotes and halfe grotes. ¶ Sée Coines.
Ground. ¶ Sée Earth.
Guido earle of Britaine his father and his three ſonnes erles of Britaine, 7,b20
Guenhera and the nobles of wales make a league with Henrie the third, 226,b50
Guie of warwike deceaſeth, 323,a10
Guildhall inlarged, the chappell, 540,b10
Guines. ¶ Sée Guiſnes.
Guiſnes, Henrie the eights palace roiall there deſcribed: note,856,b40,b50,&c,857,all. ¶ Sée Grete lord capteine of Guiſnes.
Guiſe. ¶ Sée Duke.
Gun called Digeon, 614, b50, Called the red gun ouerthrowne, & recouered of the French, 818,b30,40
Gun ſhot into the court at Grenwich, 1132,b50. By caſualtie diſcharged at the quéenes priuie barge, ſhe being therein, and ſome hurt done: note, 1310,b10,&c.
Guns of how ancient an inuention,453,b50. Of iron when firſt made,960,a20. Gained from the French, 968, a10. Called handguns and bearing of weapons forbidden by proclamation, 1117, b60. ¶ Sée Culuerings.
Gunpowder blowes vp a houſe and killeth fifteene perſons, 1081,a60. Shaketh houſes in Bucklerſberrie,1208,a50. Strangelie ſet on fier doth much hurt, 1348,b10
Gurguint builder of Norwich caſtell,1288,a10. His ſpech. touch-touching antiquitie, 1289, a 40, &c.

H.

Hair at a double price, 785, a 30
Hailstones which made men amazed, 39, b 10. Of the bignesse of hens egs, 166, a 60. Of sundrie strange shapes, 1313, b 60. Great, the like not seene, 284, b 20. A mightie storme that did much hurt, 250, a 50. That slue both men and horses: note, 393, b 60, 394, a 10. Square and of sixteene inches about, 1258, b 50. Fashioned like mens heads, 968, b 50
Hales blond and who brought it into England, 275, b 10. Shewed at Paules crosse, 946, a 40
Hales knight will not assent to the new succession of the crowne, 1083, a 40, 50, 60. In trouble for religion, 1092, b 10. Grievously tempted, drowneth himselfe, 1092, b 10, 30, 40
Hambleton castell lost, summoned, rendered vnto the French king, the number that came forth thereof, 1057, a 30, 50, b 10
Hamblethew fortified by the Englishmen, 972, b 60
Hamont burned. ¶ See Heretike.
Hangman hanged, 945, b 40
Harding Stephan monke of Shireborne, 26, a 60
Harolds sands, 967, b 60
Harflue besieged, 549, b 60. The people desire a parlee, yeelded and sacked, 550, a 30, b 10. Besieged by the French, & rescued by the English, 557, a 10, 60. Wone by the English, 615, b 50. Besieged, 629, b 60. Yeelded to the French king, 630, a 10
Harleston knight his notable exploit: note, 422, a 20
Harlots cause manie murthers, 953, a 10. ¶ See Murther and Whore.
Harold king of Man knighted, 238, b 60. ¶ See Canutus.
Hatred of the English against the Normans, and contrariwise, 14, a 10. Borne to the Jewes, 121, b 50. Irreconciliable betweene the dukes of Summerset and Yorke: note, 630, b 20. Great betweene the duke of Buckingham and cardinall Wolsey, 855, b 20. Against Richard the third, 738, b 10, &c: 739, 740, 741. Of the earle of Gloucester against king Stephan, 48, b 50. ¶ See Envie and Malice.
Harvest sore hindered by continuall raine, 210, b 50, 322, b 50. Wet and raine, 249, a 30, 397, b 50. Late, 348, b 30: note, 260, a 10
Harvie de Yuon his surrender to king Henrie the second, 75, b 60. ¶ See Bishop.
Hastings, the originall of the name, the manner of their armes, 467, b 60. Their grant for exchange of lands, the record by which they executed the office of panteler, 469, a 10, 60. The order and number of clothes laid at the kings table, and how the Hastings had them in fee, 469, a 20. Record wherbie the said office of panteler is claimed, the petition for the second sword, which the earle of Arundell also claimed, the bill exhibited for the golden spurs, 471, a 10, b 10, 50
Hastings lord his counsell to all his acquaintance, 675, b 10. Chamberleine maligned of the king and queene, 713, a 30. Described, 723, b 60. His life and deeds laid open, 714, a 40, &c. Beheaded, 723, a 20
Hastings lord discharged out of the Towre, 1088, b 30
Haskings castell, 6, a 40
Hauteclord knight his practise to kill himselfe, 677, a 10, &c.
Hed of war wrought by necromancie speaketh, 484, b 20
Heding castell besieged by the Englishmen, 875, a 40
Hedgecote field, 672, b 30. ¶ See Battell.
Hellas the pretended earle of Mans his bold words to William Rufus, 23, b 60
Henrie the first when he began his reigne, 28, a 10. Glad to seeke the peoples favour, and why, 28, b 10. Wone the favour of the people from his brother Richard, 28, a 20. His wives, concubine, and children, his vertues, & vices, 45, a 50. In danger of drowning, 44, b 10. His promises to purchase the peoples favour, 28, b 40. Reconciled with his brethren Robert and William, 19, a 60. Besieged by his two brethren Robert and William, 19, a 40. His base sonne to whome married, 37, a 40. Passeth over into Normandie and taketh diverse cities, 32, b 30. Perswaded to renounce his title to the investiture of prelats, 32, a 40. Consulteth with his nobles where to get him a wife, 28, b 30. Hurt in battell against the French king, his valiantnesse, 40, a 60. Against the consecration of archbishop Thurstane of Yorke, 40, a 50. He and pope Calixtus come to an interview at Gisors, 40, b 30. Passeth over into Normandie to aid and assist the earle of Champaigne against the French king, 39, b 40. Placeth garrisons in Wales, 38, a 10. He and pope Innocent meet at Chartres, 44, a 50. His sonnes and daughters drowned by shipwracke, 41, b 10, Without issue, he marrieth againe, 41, b 60. Goeth over into Normandie and createth his sonne William duke, 38, a 30. His passage into Normandie and never returneth alive, 44, b 30. Departeth this life of a surfet, 45, a 10
Henrie the second crowned king, where and by whome, 65, a 10. Offended with the bishops, 70, a 30. Knighteth the king of Scots, 76, a 30. Invadeth the earle of Aluergnes land, 75, a 40. Invadeth Wales, 73, b 10. He and the French king haue an interview at Colcæ, 69, a 40. His & Thomas Beckets first falling out, 68, a 20. He and the French king meet at Gisors, 95, a 50. He and his sonnes are accorded vpon conditions, 94, a 40. Returneth out of Normandie, 93, a 20. His offer to his sonnes, 89, b 10. Knowth not whom he may trust, 86, b 50. Purgeth himselfe of Beckets death, 83, b 60. Seeketh to appease the quarrell betwixt his sonnes, 106, a 60. Passeth into Normandie, he and his sonnes reconciled, 105, b 40. He and the French king come to an interview at Vadum S. Remigij, 104, b 50. Rideth all night to meet the French king at Douer, 103, a 60. He and the French king meet at Yurie, 101, b 40, 60. His sonnes wife is brought to bed of a sonne, 101, b 20. Against the Scots, 66, b 30. Goeth into the north, 66, a 20. Negligent in aiding the Christians against the Saracens, 116, a 10. Not so favourable to the church as he might haue bene, 115, b 60. His vices, 115, b 20. His sonnes and daughters, his base sonnes, the constitution of his bodie, his stature, his qualities of mind and bodie, 115, a 20, &c. He and the French king at strife, they talke together, 107, b 20, 40. His words of displeasure to his sonne earle Richard, 114, a 40. He and the French king come to a treatie of peace, 113, a 20. Invadeth France and maketh wast and spoile, 112, b 60. He and the French kings interview betwixt Trie and Gisors, 111, b 10. Passeth into Normandie to talke with French king, 110, b 40. His subiects arrested in France, 110, b 20. Nothing sorie for the death of Hugh Lacie, 110, a 30. He & the patriarch passe over into France, 109, a 50. Message to his sonne earle Richard, 109. His gift to Hugh Lacie, 82, b 20. Sorie for Thomas Beckets death, 80, a 30. Taketh his crowne on the altar, 67, a 40. Landeth in Ireland and what he doth there, 81, b 10. Becommeth seruitor to his sonne, 76, b 10. Made his last will, 77, a 10. His sonne crowned at seuenteene yeares old, 76, a 60. He and the French kings interview at Gisors, 74, a 60. Whie called Shortmantell, 115, a 10. Sickeneth and dieth, 114, b 50. His dead bodie late naked a long time, 114, b 60, 115, a 10. His epitaphs, 116, a 40
Henrie the third borne at Winchester, 171, b 60. The beginning of his reign, 197, a 10. His coronation and annointing, b 20. The presumptuous proceedings of the barons against him, 263, a 50. Asked counsell how to proceed in his warres against the French king, 232, b 20. Maketh hard shift for monie to hire soldiors to assist him, he remooueth towards Windsore, commeth to Stratford, 273 a 60, b 10. Late at Cambridge, 273, a 50. He & the lord wardens of the cinque ports reconciled, 271, b 50. The barons that rose against him, their cheefe captains, 264, b 20. Aided by his two halfe brethren, he incampeth at Lewes, the barons send him letters, his answer, he defieth them, the battell betweene them, 267, b all. The scholers of Oxford fight against him, 267, a 10. His protestation against the articles at Oxford, 265, b 30. Licenced to passe over into France, 263, b 20. He falleth sicke of a feuer quartane, 263, b 20. In his time manie gouernours ouer the land pernicious to the commonwelth, 263, a 60, b 10. Asketh licence to passe ouer sea, 262, a 30. Saileth into France, compoundeth all differences with the French king, 262, a 40. Sore sicke and in despaire of life, 208, a 40. His charges and wastfull expenses, 255, b 60. Passeth himselfe into wales, 255, a 30. Lacketh monie, 254, b 40. Assaieth to get monie of the lords temporall, 246, b 60. Maketh great shift for monie to send vnto the pope, and sendeth the pope a warrant to take it by, 250, b 40. His charges to Gascoigne, 250, b 10. Demandeth a subsidie, 249, b 20. Offended with them that refused to helpe him with monie, b 40. His debts three hundred thousand marks, 252, a 20. Purposeth to go himselfe into Gascoigne, taketh the sea, ariueth at Burdeaux, 248, b 10, &c. Invadeth Wales, buildeth a castell at Gannoke, 236, b 10. Returneth out of wales, 237, b 40. Flat against the pope his demands and decrees, his proclamation inhibiting monie to be sent to the pope, 238, b 60, 239, a 10. His halfe brethren come to see him, 239, b 60. Being in solemne procession at Paules: note, 240, a 30. Disgraced by his nobles in a solemne parlement, 240, b 50. His eldest sonne created duke of Aquitaine, 246, b 10. Goeth into wales with an armie, 226, b 40. Rather hindered than helped by the countesse of Wierne, 230, a 40. Spareth to set himselfe out of debt, 242, b 10. Driuen to sell his state for lacke of monie, 241, a 20. Procureth an inhibition to the pope, 242, b 10. His mother departeth this life, 239, a 50. Taketh vpon him the crosse, 242, a 40. Highlie offended with the bishops, 246, b 60. Euill spoken of, 231, a 30. Passeth ouer into France against the French king, 229, b 20. His sundrie meanes of impositions to gather monie: note, 229, a 50. His halfe brethren depart the realme, 258, a 50, b 50. They are pursued, and send to the French king for safe conduct, 258, b 60. His seuere sentence against a bishop taking iustice, 243, b 50, &c, 244, a 10. Goeth with an armie towards Scotland, 233, b 40. He and the king of Scots made friends, b 60. Lieth in wait for mens goods, 253, a 10. Favoureth not the citie of London, 274, b 20. ¶ See London. Put to flight, 268, a 20. Returneth into England through France 250, a 60. Goeth ouer vnto the French king, 266, a 40. Like to haue bene destroied at Woodstocke in his bed: note, 223, a 40. Crowned the second time, and why, 202, b 30. His marriage, 219, b 30. Entreth into wales with an armie, hath but sorie successe, returneth, 217, a 60, b 10, 20. Goeth against the Welshmen but with ill successe, 214, a 10. Gathereth monie towards his iournie into France, 211, b 60. Saileth ouer into France, hee taketh diverse townes and castels, getteth the victorie, returneth into Britaine, saileth home into England his owne realme, 211, b 60, 212, all. Prepareth to passe ouer into France, 211, a 60.

Is constreined to agree with the Welshmen, 210, b 30. In kauor with Normans & Pictoulins, 210, a 50. His grant to his brother, 209, b 10. Glad to appoint a date of treatie for pacification betweene him & his nobles, 209, b 10. And whe he wold not admit Walter de Hamelsham archbishop of Canturburie, 210, a 10. Will in no wise bind & indanger his late fee to the church of Rome, 208, b 20. Demandeth restitution of parcels of inheritance belonging to the crowne, 205, b 60. Purchaseth a bull of the pope for his sufficiencie to gouerne, 205, b 10. Deposeth all the magistrats of the citie of London, &c: 204, b 10. His summons to raise him an armie, the capteins of the same, 199, b 50, 60. He requireth restitution of his right of the French king, 203, b 10. Put in full possession of the realme, 201, b 60. His practise to get monie, 241, b 20. Sickneth, 275, a 10. Extreame sicke, his death, buriall, issue, proportion of bodie, conditions good and bad, 176, a 40, &c.

Henrie the fourth duke of Lancaster, proclamed king, 507, b 30 Plantagenet his stile or title, the beginning of his reigne, 509 a 40. His coronation, 510, all. His title to the crowne, 511, a 10 Went to haue made a tournie against the infidels, he is vexed with sickenesse, 540, b 60. Of an apoplexie, his death, buriall, issue, stature, &c: 541, a 10, &c. His suspicious gelousie toward his son prince of Wales, 539, a 10. Taketh vpon him to defend the Orleanciall faction, 538, b 30. The faction of Orleance sue to him for aid, 537, b 60. Articles of couenants which they offered him, the conditions which they requested of him, 538, a 10, 60. A fauourer of the clergie, 536, a 50. In danger to be taken by the French pirats, 525, b 10. His comming to Berwike, he preuaileth against the Scots, he passeth into Wales, loseth his cariages, returneth, 530, b 50, 60 Wanteth monie & can get none of the lords, 527, b 60. Goeth to Yorke, 524, a 10. Charged with periurie, his answer to the messengers that brought the lords articles, he offereth pardon to his aduersaries, his manhod against them, 523. His answer to the Perlies libell, his spedie diligence against his enimies, he troubleth them with his sudden comming, 522, a 60, b 40. In armes against the Welshmen, he loseth his labour, 520, b 20, 30. His suspicion grounded vpon a guiltie conscience, his daughter maried into Germanie, 520, b 10 In danger to haue bē destroied in his bed: note, 519, b 20. Inuadeth Scotland, making gret wast, 518, b 20. Causeth Richard the second to be put to a violent death, 516, b 50. Commeth to the Towre of London, the lords make towards the citie against him, he goeth forth against them, 515, a 60, b 10, &c. A plot laid for his destruction, at a solemne iusts, 514, b 60. In his time intaileth the crowne, 514, a 10, 20. Suspected not to be well affected towards the church before his cōming to the crowne, 511, b 50, 60. His funerals kept at Canturburie, 543, b 50

Henrie the fift, his title, the beginning of his reigne, his coronation date verie tempestuous, he altereth his life & maners, 543. His iustice in a progresse, 579, b 40. The king of Scots in his armie, 577, a 10. The duke of Bauier cōmeth to him with a number of horsemen, he and monsieur Baubalon fight hand to hand, 577, a 50, 60. The bishop of Winchester lendeth him 20000 pounds, 580, b 10. He saileth into France againe, the Scottish king serueth him, he pursueth Dolphin, b 20, 30, 60. Returneth into England with his new wife, 578, b 50, 60. Receiued into Paris, 578, a 10. Taketh vpon him the office of regent of France, 578, a 50. He & the French king at peace, the articles of the same, 572, a 20, &c: 573, a 40, &c. The effects of his oration to the French king, 576 a 10. Condescendeth to a treatie of peace with the French king, 572, a 20. Commeth to Trois to the French king, taketh the French kings daughter, b 20, 30. Plaieth the porters part, 570, a 20. Accursed, his enimies deliuered into his hand, executed, his entrance into Rone, his behauior & others, a legue betweene him and the duke of Bzitaine, remaineth at Rone, sendeth his capteins abrode to subdue castels & townes, he remoueth to Uernon, 568, a 30, 40, 60. A rare & worthie example of equitie in him, 560, b 60. His iustice and charitie, 566, a 60, b 40. His wise answer to a presumptuous French orator, 567, a 60. Aided by the king of Portingale, 566, a 20. Towns in Normandie yelded vnto him, 562, b 50. His exploits in France, his victories, & surrenders to him, 561, a 10, &c: 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567. Arriueth in Normandie, how he preuailed against his enimies, and taketh castels and townes, 559, a 10. His roiall modestie: note, 556, a 40. Wise and valiant chalenge, an example in him what is to be done after victorie, 555, a 10, 20. His valiantnesse in slaieng the duke of Alenson, 554, b 20. His campe robbed, b 50. His policie against the French horsemen, his oration to his men, his wish & noble courage, 553, b 30, 40, 50. Passeth the riuer of Some with his host, the number of his armie, his iustice in warre, his answer to the French kings defiance, he rideth forth to take view of the French armie, 552, all. His standard recouered from the French, 551, b 10. Saileth ouer to France with his host, 549, b 20. His charitable proclamation, his besieging of Harflue, 30, 60. He taketh and sacketh it, his mercifull dealing with the French prisoners, 550. all. His words to certeine traitors of the nobilitie, 548, b 30. Wise answer to the archbishop of Bzugesse, 547, b 60. His policie in the time of a commotion, 544, b 10. His roiall port, he falleth sicke. 582, b 30, 50. Is brought sicke to Bois de Uincennes, 583, a 10. His aduise vpon his death bed, his decease, his commendation in diuerse respects, 583, all. The maner of his burial, 584, a 10, &c.

Henrie the sixt borne, 581, a 60, b 10. Crowned in Paris, 606, a 40. His coronation at Westminster, 602, b 60. The beginning of his reigne, 585, a 20. Goeth against Kentish rebels with a power, 634, a 50. The maner of his burial, a description of his person, his canonization to be a saint laboured for, his qualitie, 691, a 10, &c. Sheweth himselfe to the Londoners, he is deliuered vp to the hands of Edward the fourth his enimie, 683, a 30, b 10. Fetcht out of the Towre and restored to his regiment, 677, b 50. His saieng concerning Henrie of Richmond, after king Henrie the seuenth, b 10. Commended by the earle of Warwike: note, 671, a 10. Assembleth an armie against Edward the fourth and his adherents, 664, a 20. His power exceeded king Edwards, b 30. His part discomfited, he withdraweth to Berwike, 665, a 10, 40. Maketh a solemne feast at the reconcilement of the nobles that were at strife: note: createth dukes and knights, 595, b 40, 50, In person goeth with an armie into France, 605, b 20. Returneth out of France into England, 607, b 40. His receiuing into Excester, the clergie there against him, 637, a 20, 90, &c. Practises to put him beside the crowne, letters interchangable betwixt him and the usurper, 637, a 60, b 10, &c. 638, 639. In armes against the duke of Yorke, his answer to the dukes letters, 642, a 60, b 10, 50. The armies come, the kings part vanquished, 643, all. Part discomfited, he is taken, 654, b 30, 40. Articles of peace and agreement betweene him & the duke of Yorke, 657, b 20, &c. Letters kept from him of purpose, 644, a 60. He to reigne in name, but not in rule, he to reuoke certeine grants agreed vpon: note, 644, b 20. His power discomfited, flie, 660, b 10. Raiseth an armie against the duke of Yorke, 649, b 50. Present in habit roiall at a solemne procession in Paules, 648, a 60. Flieth, 666, b 20. He is taken, and laid vp in hold, 667, a 30. His deposition described, 1234, b 40. Set vp againe as king, 727, a 60. Sicke, 642, a 20. Murthered in the Towre, 690, b 60. And by whome, 712, b 20.

Henrie the seuenth, his birth, age, descent, bringing vp, and port that he bare, & king Henrie the sixt his saieng concerning him, 678, a 60, b 10. One of the bloud of Henrie the sixt, his life a greefe to Edward the fourth, 701, b 10. He taketh sanctuarie, note, 70, b 10, &c. His wife the ladie Elisabeth when borne, 668, b 50. Crowned by the lord Stanlie in the field, 760, a 50, 60. Doth some honour to Richard the third after his death, in respect of his burial, 761, a 20. Banisheth all Flemish ware out of his dominions, 778, a 20. He and Maximilian agree to plague the French men, 774, a 50. Desireth the king of Castile to haue Edmund earle of Suffolke deliuered into his hands, 793, a 30. His progresse into Lancashire, 779, Wanted policie, 790, a 20. His chapels at Westminster burnt, 790, b 30. His policie against sir Robert Clifford, 778, b 20. He is in a quandarie, 779, a 10. Purposeth warres against France, and openeth the first cause in parlement, 771, b 50. Sendeth espials into Flanders for a subtill policie, 777, b 30. He & the quēn dined at sargeants feast kept at Elie house, 779, a 40. Requesteth a prese of six thousand marks, & goeth into the north, 764, a 30, 50. Maketh out a power against Perkin Wardecke 784, a 20. His gratious pardon to a great number of miserable rebels, 784, b 30. Couetous in his old age, 791, b 20. Saileth to Calis, he and the duke of Burgogne meet at saint Peters church without the towne, 788, a 10, 30. Is loth that the French king should marrie the duchesse of Bzitaine, 771, a 60. Sendeth the lord Daubnie and the lord Mowlete against the French, 770, b 10. Borroweth a great summe of monie of the chamber of London, 770, a 20. Sendeth with his armie against the French king, 769, a 40. His returne out of the north countrie, his offer to make an attonement betwixt the French king and the duke of Bzitaine, his loue to quēne Elisabeth, 768, a 10, 40, 60. Assembleth an armie, his power sone increased, his encounter with the conspirators, he ouercommeth, 766, b 10, 20, 30, 60. All the capteines against him slaine, he giueth thanks to God after the victorie, 767, a 20, b 30. Commeth to London, he is crowned king, 762, a 30, b 10. He aduanceth his frends, redeemeth his hostages, performeth his promise touching the mariage of Edward the fourths daughter. 763, a 20, 60, b 30. His decease, what children he had, he is described, his qualities roiall, his sepulture, executors of his last will, 797, a 20, 30, &c. Roialie buried, a description of the whole pompe: note, 800, a 30, &c.

Henrie the eight, duke of Yorke, and afterwards king, his birth, 775, b 60. Proclamed king, his councellors, and riches, 799 a 20, 30. His coronation with the pompe thereof, 801, a 30, 40, &c. God at tennise plate, 809, a 10. He and the duke of Suffolke defendors at tilt against all commers, he receiueth a cap of maintenance from pope Julie, 830, a 60, b 10. A notable good horseman, 837, a 20. He rideth westward in progresse, a 20. Sendeth for the quēne of Scots & hir husband to his court, 838, a 40, &c. Buildeth a castell at Tornaie, 838, b 40. Sitteth in the starchamber in iudgement, 852, b 60. Intituled defendor of the faith, he writeth against Luther, at variance with the king of France, 872, a 30, 50, 60. His minions removed out of the court, 852, b 10. Glad of the French kings deliuerie out of prison, 889, b 60. Procurer of his libertie, 890, a 60. Alledged by the French king as a president of humanitie in case of a captiuated king, 890, b 40. Borroweth 20000 pounds of the citie of London, 874, a 20.

Receiueth

Receiueth a golden rose for a present from pope Clement, 883, a 60. What moued him gratiously to receiue the ladie regents ambassadors of France, 887. Passeth ouer to Calis, and returneth betweene him & the French king, 928, b 40, 60. His base son made erle and duke in one day, 892, a 40. Sweareth for performe the league concluded, 893, a 10. His articles for the reforming of religion, 920, b 60. His louemaide executed, 928, a 10. Proclaimed K. of Ireland, 955, a 60. Taketh a iourney in mind, 957, a 10. His munificence to the earle of Angus, archbishop of S. Andrews his deuise to, 959, b 10. Sendeth a power ouer against French king, 960, a 60, b 10. His message to the lord Grete by sir Thomas Palmer: note, 975, b 50. Passeth the seas to Bolein, 964, a 60. Entreth into the towne, returneth to England 965, a 10, 20. Goeth in progresse into Yorkeshire, gifts giuen him, 954, b 10, 30. A good archer and full of actiuenesse: note, 806, a 40, 50, 60, b 10, 20, &c. Breake more staues at iusts than the best, & had the prise giuen him, 809, a 50. Runneth at tilt, diuerse passages wherein he was a principall actor, he runneth at the ring, 805, a 10, &c: b 60. Forced to take terms against the Scots, 957, b 30. Magnificent and manificent to the French kings ambassadors, &c. 841, a 10, 20, &c. 843, a 10, &c. Purposeth in person to passe the seas to see the French K. his brother, 835, b 60. Receiueth the order of S. Michaell, 898, b 10. He commeth to Westminster hall & there sitteth in iudgement himself vpon the riots of ill Maie date, his graunous & generall pardon, he and the duke of Suffolke run at iusts, 844, a 20, 30 50, b 30. Riding to Portesmouth, appointeth captains ouer his ships, 815, a 40. His name setteth out, included in parlement that he should personallie inuade France, 815, a 50, b 10, 50. Taketh the popes part against the French K. 611, b 10. He and French K. their interview in the vale of Andren, they two make challenge to all commers at iusts, his sumptuous furniture at the said iusts, 838, a 30, b 30, 60. He runneth against monsieur Grandemill, the partners of his challenge, 859, a 30, b 10. His band of men with their deuise on their apparell, his intertenement of the French queene, 860, b 20. He departeth from Guines to Calis, and from thense to Grauelin to visit the emperor, his stately maske, himself a special actor, 861, b 10, 60. He returneth into England, 862, a 40. In person passeth ouer to France, 817, b 60. The order of his armie, 817, a 10. Incampeth at Arbes, commeth to the siege, 819, a 20, 30. His power united with the emperor Maximilian his soldiors against Terwine: note, 821, a 50. Entreth into Terwine, the citizens are sworne vnto him, marcheth on with his armie to Tornaie, goeth to Lille to visit the young prince of Castile, 822, b 40, 50, 60. His pompe & port, 823, a 30. Maketh certeine gentlemen knights for their good militarie seruice, 823, b 30. Faileth reuolted to be ready at his traine to go out of the waie to his campe by means of a mist he besieged Tornay, 823, a 60. Returneth to England, 1819, a 60. Weareth the emperor Maximilian his harnesse and furniture, his speech to a Scotish herald, his answer to the Scotish kings letter, 820, a 20, 50, &c. Intituled Christianissimo by the pope, 831, a 30. His gift to the citie of London: note, 876, b 40, 50. First named supreme head, 917, a 30. And what thereupon followed, his voluntarie inclination to pardon the premunire of the clergie, 923, b 10. His marriage in question, & how determined by diuerse vniuersities, b 30, 40, &c. His oration in the parlement house: note, 971, a 20, &c. He & his queen at Hauering in the Bowre, 852, b 30. Setteth forward into France, he and the emperor Charles meet at Douer castell, keepe their whitsuntide at Canturburie, landeth at Calis, lodgeth in his palace at Gualtres, 856, a 20, 50, 60, b 30, 40. His affablenes with his young courtiers made them to laugh & bord: note, 851, a 60. Thanksgiuings to his militarie seruitors, 829, b 50. The portion intended to be giuen with his daughter Marie in marriage, 850, b 10. His marriage by consent of all vniuersities iudged vnlawfull, 912, b 60, 913, a 10, His marriage with his brothers wife in question, 897, a 60. Is desirous to be resolued by the opinions of the lerned touching his marriage, 906, b 50. Confesseth that the sting of conscience made him mislike of the marriage, 907, b 60. Submitteth himselfe to the censures of the learned, mistrusteth the legats of seeking delaies, his affection to the ladie Anne Bullen, 907, a 20, 50, 60, b 60. Marrieth the ladie Anne Bullen, 929, a 60, Marieth the ladie Jane Seimor, 940. Commeth to see the ladie Anne Cleene at Rochester, 948, b 10. Welcommeth her to Greenewich, 949, b 60. Remarrieth her, 950, a 10, &c. His marriage with the ladie Anne of Cleene iudged vnlawfull, 951, a 60. Marrieth the ladie Katharine Parr, 960 a 30. Maketh his last will & testament, his executors 976, b 60. Deceaseth, described, commended, 977, a 10, 20, &c.

Henrie the prince is sent against Robert of Northumberland, 15, b 40. His disorder of life, 77, a 20. Seeketh to seize vpon the gouernment out of his fathers hands, 86, a 60, b 10. New practises to put his father beside the crowne, 99, b 10. Falleth sicke, 106, a 60. He sendeth to his father, his repentance before his death, his death & buriall, 107, a 10. Reuoked to his father, 539, a 10. Goeth to the court with a great traine, his strange apparell, his cunning to vse kings presence, the words they both vsed, his request to haue his accusors answer their wrongfull accusations, 539, all. Taketh about the crowne before his father was dead, he is blamed of his father, his answer, 540, a 10, 541, a 30.

Henrie, the first sonne to Henrie the eight deceaseth, 808, b 50.

Henrie Fitzroie, K. Henrie the eights base son: note, 892, a 20.

Henrie the couragious his son lord Henrie came into England to see his mother, 55, b 50. Knighted in England, 58, a 40. Marrieth the duchesse of Aquitain, 59, b 60. Returneth into England, he besiegeth Ogalmelburie castell & is forced to raise his siege, 59, b 60. Passeth into Normandie his puissance, a peace betweene him and the French king, 54, a 60, b 10.

Henrie son to the erle of Cornwall, and king of Almaigne murthered, 575, b 50

Henrie the emperour dead at Vtrecht, 42, b 60.

Henrie grace de Dieu, a great ship otherwise called the great Henrie, 815, b 40

Here long how it was to be worne, 30, b 60. In the court reuersed, 41, b 30. The doubt thereof, 44, b 60: note, 46, a 10

Heraclius patriarch of Jerusalem, 108, b 10

Herald at armes words from the Scotish king to Henrie the eight, & how courteously vsed 820, a 40, 50, 60, b 10. Of Scotland richly rewarded of Henrie the eight, 821, a 30. From the K. of England & France to the emperor, the speeches & behauiors, 898, b 60, 899, all, 900, all. Defiance intimated, 901, b 10. Killed, & the deed diuer executed as a traitor, 390, a 10. Not suffered to enter in France: note, 960, a 60, Scotish his message to the duke of Summerset, 983, b 40, &c. English his intimation to the Edenburghers, 707, b 20, &c: 708, a 10, &c. His office, & how the French king rewarded an English herald giuing him defiance, 695, a 10. Insufficient from the French king to the king of England & his speech, 695, b 30, 40, &c. Well rewarded at Henrie the fourths hands, 518, Slaine, 443, a 10

Herbert bishop of Thetford why deprined of his bishops table 21, a 40. He came to it by simonie, 26, a 50

Herbert knight of great power among the Welsh: note, 752, b 60

Hereford castell deliuered vnto Lewis the French king his sonne, 198, a 50

Heremit of Pomfret or Wakefield his prophesie to king John: note, 180, a 30

Heretike burned at Norwich, & what opinion he held, 1299, b 20, 30, 1354, b 60

Hereward partaker with the English rebels against duke William, 10, a 50

Herlowin a nobleman in Normandie husband to William conquerors mother, 20, a 10

Hertfordshire men sworne vnto Richard the second, 438, a 30

Historie writers blamed, 112, a 20

Holie land otherwise called Palestine, 120, a 40. In danger, 104, b 50. Wherein Richard the first goeth like a pilgrime, 123, b 10. Pardon granted to the people thereof, 111, b 20. ¶ See Jerusalem and Sarazens.

Holie maid of Kent. ¶ See Elisabeth Barton.

Holland in Lincolneshire spoiled and made tributarie vnto the French, 193, a 10

Holland beyond seas commended, 1416, a 30

Holland knight killeth the lord Stafford, 447, a 30. Made earle of Huntingtone, 465, b 60

Hollocene countie hes secretarie hanged, 1411, b 30

Homage done to king Henrie the second by his sonnes, 93, b 40. Of a thousand pounds yearelie, 87, b 20. Done vnto king Henrie the third by the archbishop of Rome, 141, b 40 By the earle of Sauoie, 138 b 50. Of rebels to a forren prince intruding himselfe vpon the crowne of England, 191, b 30. Of king Henrie the second vnto the French king, 307, b 50. Of king John to the French king, 161, a 60, b 10. By king Edward the first vnto the French king, 383, b 30. Of the Scotish king, &c. vnto the kings of England, 69, a 60, b 10, 20, 95, b 60, 162, a 60, 554, a 40, 50, 290, a 20, 345, a 40, 350, b 20, 587, a 20. Of the Scotish lords vnto king Edward the first, with words of his accepting it: note, 301, a 30, &c. Of the nobles of Scotland vnto king Edward the first set downe to receiue words: note, 287, b 60, 288, a 10. ¶ See Erle of Flanders, Malcolme, and Scots.

Homilies, when and whie instituted to be read in churches, 979, b 50. Commanded to be had in churches, 992, a 60

Honors change manners: note, 543, b 10, 76, b 10

Hope vaine a fruitfull, 193, b 50

Horne. ¶ See Bishop.

Horsse flesh powdered and serued in at a banket, 1192, b 60.

Horsse stealers, ten hanged at once in Smithfield, 1356, a 10

Hose. ¶ See Apparell.

Hospitall of saint Leonards in Yorke wher and by whome founded, 17, a 10

Hospitals builded by archbishop Lanfranke, 18, a 50, ¶ See Sanctc.

Hospitalitie of Richard the second: note, 508, a 10. Of the erle of warwike: note, 678, a 40

Hostages English threatned to lose their liues, 147. Executed for promise broken, 597, b 10. Of France had great loue and libertie shewed them, 396, a 20. For the assurance of the French kings ransome, 394 a 60. Their number, 395, b 60 Deliuered by the Scotish lords on the kings side, 1217, a 10. During the time of a parlee betweene enimies, 1139, b 50. French for the deliuerie of Tornaie, &c. in beauines and sorrow courteously dealt with and totallie: note, 850, a 30. ¶ See Pledges.

Howard knight lord admerall, 811,

812,b 60. Goeth to Biskaie, his arrivall,813,a 10. Abused of the English soldiors, goeth to Britaine, burneth diuerse places, knighteth diuerse gentlemen, the lords of Britaine request vnto him, 814,a 50,60, b 10. He would haue Henrie the eight present in person at the incounter and is rebuked, he commeth into the baie where he pmor Ienan lait, 816, a 60, b 60. Drowned, 817,a 10

Howard knight made lord admerall in his brothers rome, 817,a 10, 20. Incountereth with the earls of Leneux and Argile, 818, b 20. Attainted of treason, dieth prisoner, 940, b 50. In the Towre, 944, b 60.

Howard lord gentle and honourable to the ladie Elisabeth, 1158, b 10. Diuine seale decreteth, 1257, b 40. ¶ See Earle of Surrie.

Hubert de Burgh assaileth the French fleet, 291, a 60

Hugh earle of Chester his exploits against the Welshmen, 28, b 40. Despaireth of life, 28, a 10

Hugh earle of Shrewesburie & Arundell his exploits, 23, a 40. Slaine by a router: note, 23, a 50

Huldorne captaine rebell executed, 572, a 30

Hums castell besieged, yelded vp, yolleth of the English, 990, b 10, &c.

Hun hanged in the Lollards towre, his death lamented, & why, 835, a 10, 20

Hunger when people did eat horses, 1022, a 60

Hungerford lord executed for hungerie, 952, b 10

Huntlich pined, 792, a 10

Huntdon lord his descent, he presenteth the order of the garter to the French king, 1206, a 60. He with others go against the rebels in the north, 1212, b 20. Made lord chamberleine, 1413, a 50

Hunting fatall of william Rufus, 26, b 30, 40. Priests were not to vse it, 97, a 60. A statute made concerning it, 238, b 20

Hunting roiall, 473, a 20, 30

Huntington earldome by whom and to whom giuen in dowrie, 11, b 20. Scotish, 66, b 50. The castell wonne, 92, a 60

Husbandrie hindered by frost, 396, b 60. Diminished wherebie, and how remedied: note, 862, a 60, b 10. ¶ See Frosts, and Raine.

I.

Iacke Cads rebellion in Kent, 632, a 60. Is at his wits end, disguiseth himselfe, is forsaken of his adherents, proclamation out to take him, he is apprehended and executed, 635. Slaieth the Statelords, 634, a 60

Jacke Straw & his adherents executed, 436, a 50. His confession at the time of his death, 438, b 10

Jane the daughter of K. John married to the erle of March, 182, b 60

Jane de Valois sister to the French K. treateth for peace, 360, a 30

Jane ladie Gilford proclamed quéne, 1034, b 10. Hath the kéeping of the keies of the Towre, 1087, a 40. Committed to the Towre with hir husband the lord Gilford, 1088, b 50. Hir behauior at hir execution, the words which she spake on the scaffold, 1099, b, 40, 50, 60, 1100, a 10, &c.

Jaques Arteueld, purposeth the destruction of Gerard Denile, his house beset, & he slaine, 368, a 30, &c.

Ibtenelle & meat of other mens seruice, what they be, 1049, b 20

Iennie a notorious knowne traitor & conferrer with Francis Throckmorton, 1371, b 10

Ierolme. ¶ See French king.

Jerusalem taken by Saladine prince of the Saracens, 110, b 50, with more part of all other townes taken from the christians, 111, a 60. The king thereof doth fealtie to Richard the first, 117, b 60. The king thereof commeth to England, 305, a 50. ¶ See Holieland.

Iest of Philip the French king at duke william lieng sicke: note, 14, b 20. Of Richard the first at the castell of Chaterous Gaillard builded, 155, b 10. Of king John concerning the maile, 196, b 20. Of Edward the fourth and a widow that gaue him monie, 694, a 60. Iest concerning the strict keeping of ladie Elisabeth, 1156, b 40. Merie at the rood of Dawles, 1121, a 60. Of a cat hanged in Cheape, and of a dog clothed in a rochet called by the name of Gardener, 1143, a 20. Against scripture, iustlie rewarded, 1323, a 50. ¶ See Derision and Mocke.

Iesuits & massing priests proclamed against, 1315, a 40. Sent ouer seas and banished the realme: note well, 1379, a 30, &c: 1380. ¶ See Priests seminarie.

Iew, and of a good Iewes answer to william Rufus, 27, a 60, b 10. Striken by a christian, 118, b 50. Hath his teeth drawne out, 174, a 40. At Tenkesburie falleth into a lakes: note, 261, b 60

Iewes and christians dispute, 27, b 20. Burnt to death, 119, a 10. Sute to William Rufus against Iewes become christians: note, 27, a 40. Brought into this land by duke william, 15, a 10. At Lincolne slaine and spoiled, 272, a 20. Inhabiting London slaine for treason, 267, a 60. Slaine at London, & why, 263, b 40. Accused & executed for crucifieng of a child, 253, a 50. Charged on paine of hanging to paie Henrie the third 8000 marks, 252, a 10. Robbed in Oxford, 238, b 10. Cõstreined to helpe Henrie the third with monie, 241, b 30. Released out of prison, 254, a 20. Punished by the purse for a murther committed, 224, a 30. Meant to crucifie a child in spite of Christ, 219, a 30. Generallie imprisoned thorough out all England, hated: note, 283, b 20. Banished out of England, and why, 285, a 50. Drowned, b 10. Giue Henrie third, the third part of all their moueables, 211, b 60. Indicted and punished for abasing the kings coine, 279, b 30. Crucifie a child, 56, b 20. Grieuouslie taxed, tormented, and imprisoned, 174, a 30. And where they buried their dead, 103, b 20. Amounted to inroll all their debts, pledges, &c: 145, b 20. Exechangelie hated and murthered: note, 121, b 50, 122, all. Hanged on ger at London, 112, b 60. Beaten & abused by the people, 113, b 60. Meant to present king Richard with a rich gift, 118, b 40

Iewell John. ¶ See Bishop.

Iland discouered. ¶ See Sebastian.

Images taken awaie & removed from their places: note, 945, b 10, &c. Removed out of churches, 979, b 50. Through out the realme pulled downe and defaced, 992, b 20. Taken downe & burned in the streets 1184, b 60, 1185, a 10

Impost. ¶ See Customs and Subsidie.

Implecation: note, 248, a 60

Incest of king John, 184, b 20

Inclosures of the fields about London cast downe and ouerthrowne by archers of London, 830, a 10. A proclamation for the laieng of them open, 1002, a 10

Incontinencie of Henrie the second, 115, b 30

Inденture tripartite of conspired noblemen: note, 514, b 60, 515, a 20. Tripartite touching conspiracie, 521, b 60

Indulgences biennals & triennals liberallie granted, 428, b 60

Infection. ¶ See Murren.

Infidelitie suspected in william Rufus, 27, b 20

Ingratitude: note, 862, b 60. Shrewdlie practised and seuerelie punished, 743, b 50. 744, a 50. A notable example thereof, 605, b 40. Of Fitzgelbert vnnaturall, 149, a 50. Striketh dead, 50, b 30. In all estates towards Richard the second, 508, a 50, 60. For good seruice vnrewarded, and what followed, 21, b 30. Of Odo for his restitution: note, 17, a 10. Of cardinall Pole to Henrie the eight that brought him vp, 1165, a 10

Iniurie done and no reuenge sought: note, 1117, b 40. ¶ See reuenge.

Iniustice, 173, b 30

Innocencie no barre against execution, 1066, a 10

Innocent hanged for the nocent 173, a 30

Inquisitions taken of diuerse matters: note, 153, b 30. Taken by a iurie of sundrie matters, 145, a 60. Of the losses euerie bishop had and sustained, &c: 180, b 60. Called Traile baston, 312, b 60. Taken of the misdemeanors of iustices, 312, b 40. For abusors of the kings coine, 279, b 30. For the separating of forrests, 207 a 50. What were the liberties in times past of K. Henrie the thirds grandfather: note, 205, a 10. For washers & clippers of monie, 241, a 10. For the valuation of benefices perteining to strangers, 236, b 40. For offendors abusing clergie men strangers, 214, b 40

Insurrection about the taking vp of corne, 944, a 60. Of wast, 1093, b 10. Wherein note what mischeefs vprores & commotions do chance in a commonweale in or rebellion, 1094. ¶ See Rebellion.

Interdiction, 175, a 10. Threatned by the pope against the king & his clergie, 171, a 30. Of the land solemnlie cursed, 183, a 10, 360, b 30

Intertainment, what hindereth malcontentment, 10, b 60. Of the emperor Sigismund strange: note, 556, b 40, 50. ¶ See Friendship and Hospitalitie.

Interview. ¶ See Edward the fourth & other kings of England, as French king &c.

Inuasions punished and other offenses against the kings peace, 312, b 60. ¶ See England and Scots.

Inuestitures of churches two dales togither argued vpon, 34, a 30. Of prelats. ¶ See Bishops and Consecration.

Iohannes Cremensis his heresie & legat: note, 42, b 40

John of Gaunt borne, 357, a 60. Maried, 392, a 20. Duke of Lancaster, 395, b 30. Buried, and his daughter Blanch, 405, a 10

John the king proclamed king of England, 157, a 20, b 40, 158 a 10. Made king of Ireland, 109, a 20, 101, a 30. Married 117, a 30. His vnpatiencie to see himselfe bridled by his subiects, 186, b 20. Taketh diuerse castels, 189 all. Aided by forren soldiors against his barons, 187, b 60. Disquieted, departeth into the Ile of Wight, 136, b 50. Crowned K. of England the second time, 165, a 60. From whome the Poictoins reuolt, 164, b 10. Commeth vpon his enimies vnlooked for, 164, b 40. Diuers Wales molesteth the white monks, 163, a 10. Diuorsed from his wife Isabell the daughter of earle Robert of Glocester, 161, b 60. He & the French king come to a parlee 160, b 10. Passeth ouer into Normandie, 160, a 40. Returneth out of Normandie, 161, a 40. Inuested duke of Normandie, 158, b 20. Commeth out of Normandie into England, 158, b 50. Wanting aid against the French K. commeth backe to England, 166 b 60. Prepareth an armie to go into France, 168, b 40. Goeth to the sea, returneth, chargeth certeine of his nobles with treason, 169, a 10, 20, 30. Taketh the sea, maketh war against the French king, 170, a 10, 20. Repareth Angiers, 170, b 30. Writeth to the pope touching the archbishop of Canturburies election, 171, a 40. Threatned with interdiction, he & his realme put vnder the popes curse, 171, a 10. Passeth into Ireland, 174, a 50. Goeth into Wales with an armie, 174, b 60. Punisheth diuerse that refused to go with him into Wales, 175, a 40. His destruction put in practise by means of the popes legat & the French king, 175, b 40. Delivereth his crowne to Pandulph, and hath it againe restored, 177, a 60, b 10. His words of fealtie made to the the pope,178,a60. What caused him to agree with the pope,180,b10. His lords refuse to follow him into France 181,a10. Commended to the pope for an honorable prince, 182,a10. Remoueth to Angiers, 183, a60. Inuadeth Britaine,183,a40. Taketh vpon him the crosse to go into the holie land. 184 Subscribeth to his barons notwithstanding his oth, 186. b10. Cõmeth to his lords to talke of some pacification, 185,b50 Left desolat of frends, 185,b30. Maketh hauocke on the possessions of his aduersaries 193,b50. His noblemen reuolt from him to K. Lewes,192,a10. His children male and female, the description of his person, his fortune, his fatings & dwings, 196, a10,&c. Incestuous & couetous: note, 184,b20. The popes vassall, 191,a19. Assembleth a great armie against the French K. 176,b40. Kneeleth downe to the archbishop of Canturburie,& besought him of forgiuenes,810,b40. His son named Oliuer Fitzroie, 202, a50 By whose means his nephue Arthur lost his life,& white,7, b30. Falleth sicke of an ague, his raging,194,a50,60. His death diuerslie reported by writers,194, a60,ball. Reported to an ill purpose, 190,b 20. His buriall,and corpulencie, 194,b60

John Ball. ¶ See Ball.

John a Chamber a notorious notherne rebell,769, b40,&c. 770,a10,&c. Hanged like an archtraitor, 770,a10

John Tiler. ¶ See Tiler.

Ione de Arc pusell de Dieu, 600, 10,&c, 603,b59. Taken prisoner,&c: note,604,a50,60,b10,

Ioie immoderat the cause of death, 955,b20

Ipswich besieged, 60,b40

Ireland diuided into seuerall estates,or kingdoms,80, a50. Woslie conquered by Henrie the second,109,b60. Foure Irish kings submit themselues to Richard the second, 481,b 30. The pearelie reuenues thereof in Edward the thirds daies,481, a50. Englishmen sent thither to inhabit the Brys in Vlster, 1257, a20 Soldiors transported thither 1314, a30. Inuaded by the popes meanes, 1366, b60 ¶ See John and Soldiors.

Irish do destroie Englesie, 237,b50. Rebelling, kill the English,275,a10. Frier appeacheth the duke of Lancaster of treason,445. b40. Miserablie tormented and put to death,446,a10. Conuoid into their owne countrie by proclamation,481,a40. With the lord of Kilmaine arriued at Harflue, 565, b60. Their good seruice, 566,a10. Wild spoile the earle of Kildars countrie, 914,a10. Nobilitie submit themselues to Henrie the eight in England, 957. a 10. Seuen hundred in warlike manner passe thorough London,& muster before king Henrie the eight: note, 963,b 20,30. Bowes, bagpipes, and darts among them,1259,a10.

Iron gret want within Scotland, 323,a20

Isabell daughter to the earle of Glocester maried vnto John K. Richards brother,117,a30

Isabell the second wife of king John,& what issue she brought him,161,b60. Crowned,162,a 30

Isabell Henrie the thirds mother deceaseth, 239,a50

Isabell countesse of Cornwall deceaseth, 225,b60

Isabell wife to emperor Frederike, deceaseth, 229,a10

Isabell de Boulbec. ¶ See Countesse.

Isac. ¶ See Cipriots.

Isleie knight, all his apparell not worth foure shillings, 1099,b20

Isoldune where seated,146,b10

Judge Morgan fell mad: note, 1099,a60. ¶ See Justice.

Judges and other officers committed to the Tower: note, 360,b40,&c. ¶ See Justices.

Judgement rash in an holie father, 109,a20

Judgement secret of God vpon Wanister & his children after the attaching of the duke of Buckingham, 744,a50,60 ¶ See Reuenge.

Judith, duke Williams neece, whose daughter & to whome married,& how indowed, 11,b 10

Jurie of twelue men ancient, when instituted, & how matters by them should be tried,8 b20. That went vpon sir Nicholas Throkmorton,appeere in the starchamber, excessiuelie fined,1121,b40. Extremelie dealt withall,1122,a 10. ¶ See Throckmorton knight. At Excester assise eleuen dead: note, 1548,a60

Justice chiefe of England giueth ouer his office & becommeth a canon,103,a50. An office imposed vpon priests. ¶ See Archbishop.

Justice of Henrie the fift: note, 560,b60,566,a60. A notable exemple of Edward the first vpon his son,313,b30. Mingled with mercie, 797, a60. And the commendable care of K. Henrie the second thereof: note, 115, a60. Without regard of kinred,315,a20. And what followed vpon the neglect of the same,13,a10. Bastlie pretended,734, a60. Peruerted when one is hanged for another, 1007, a20. In warre: note the force therof, 552,a30. Corrupted. ¶ See Bribes.

Justices of peace when & whie instituted,8,a60. Itinerants the diuision of their circuits, 97,b60. Their oth, 98, a10, Die of infection, 1547, b40. 1548,a40. Chefe of England elected & others deposed,119,b 10. Itinerants cause inquisitions to be made in their circuits, 145, a60. Abuse iustice: note, 225,b20. Keepe the terme for plees at S. Saniors, 259,b30. Begin to go their generall circuits, 282,b 20. ¶ See Sickneslie at Excester and Oxford. Complained of to Edward the first, & punished: note, 284,b60.285, a10,&c. Fined,312,b50. Sat neither in the tower nor elsewhere for a whole yeare, 361, b20. Restreined from fees, briberie,& gifts,&c: note,369, b20. Iurors,&c: brought to blockham feast by the rebels, 430,a60. Compelled to subscribe, 458, b10

Justs at Wlle where P. Edward began to shew proofe of his chiualrie, 254,a20. At Wrackleie, 242, a10. In Cheapside,348,b50. At Chalons where prince Edward behaued himselfe worthilie, 276, a20. At Dunstable, where king and queene were present,363,a40. At Greenewich with gaudie shews,815 a10. At Greenwich before the emperor Charles, 873,b10. Where sir Francis Brian lost one of his eies, 892,b60. At London, the maior and aldermen chalengers, &c,392,a40, 50. In the Tower of London & Greenewich,646,b60. Roiall in Tuthill field for the space of eight daies,220,a10. Deuised to be holden at Oxford where Henrie the fourth should haue beene murthered, 514,b50.60. Within the kings palace of Shine for the space of a moneth, 774, a30. In Smithfield,366,a10,395,b60 Roiall,473,b30,40,&c: 474,a 10,&c, 535,b60. At Westminster with the shews and triumphs there,807,a50,60,&c: And some hurt done,940,b60 1225, a30. And much hurt done among the people, 1315, a60. By gentlemen of name, to delight nobles of France note,1316,1317,1318,1319,1320 1321. At Windsore, 366,a50. Against all comners,497,a10 Iet & turnie appointed by the lords and by Henrie the third disapointed,236,b60. Handled in a rougher manner than in these daies,245,a10. Where at sir Arnold Montensie was slaine: note,246,b20. Prohibited by proclamation,311,b10. Betwixt the bastard of Burgogne & the lord Scales,669, a20. With manie a proper deuised shew,802,b10,&c: 803,a 10,&c. Solemne wherin Henrie the eight himselfe was a chalenger,835,b10. Kept for honor of his sister the French queene,838,a60,b10,&c: Betweene Henrie the eight and others,844,b10,950,a30,850 a60. Proclamed in sundrie nations,950,b60,951,a10,&c Roiall in France: note,858,a 60,b10,&c:859,a10,&c:860,a 10,&c. At Paris, the nobles go thither, decrees for the same, how long they lasted, with the maner thereof: note, 833,all. At Tornaie for disport of the prince of Castile & the duchesse of Sauoie, 825,a 20,¶ See Tilt and Turnies.

K.

Kalendar. ¶ See pope Gregorie.

Katharine daughter to the earle of Huntleie maried to Perkin the rebell,780, a40. Presented to Henrie the seuenth, 784,b10

Katharine the daughter of Ferdinando sent ouer into England out of Spaine,788, b40, &c. Married to king Henrie the eight, 801, a10. ¶ See queene Katharine & Henrie the eight.

Kelwaie Thomas. ¶ See Justs triumphant.

Kendall wasted, 91,b10

Kentishmen do lie in wait in woods for the comming of duke William,2,a10, Cannot awaie with bondage, and determine to fight with duke William for their lawes and liberties, 2, a10. The heir of England, 2, b10. Send a message to duke William, 2, b10. Had duke William at aduantage, 2, a20, b10, &c. Make an hurlie burlie and commit much mischefe, 677,b10. Executed for rebellion,693,a60. Haue thanks of Henrie the seuenth for their good seruice,780, a10 Rebellion vnder John Tiler. ¶ See Tiler.

Ket, his rebellion, a capteine there,1028,b50, 60, to 1042, &c. He meant to haue talked with the earle of warwike, 1037,a60. Power increaseth, 1032,b60. Apprehended, examined,1039,50,60. Both brothers executed,1240, a50,60.

Killingworth castell beseged, deliuered to Henrie the third, 272,b10. Fortified against Henrie the third, 272, a30. Holden against Edward the second, 329,b10

King of Armenia. ¶ See Armenia. Of Cipriots. ¶ See Cipriots. Of France. ¶ See French king. Of Ireland. ¶ See Ireland. Of Portingall. ¶ See Portingall. Of Spaine. ¶ See Spaine, &c.

King can abide no peere in his owne realme: note, 25, a50. In name but not in fame: note,465,a40. What kind of person he is or should be, 910, b40. Office hard to discharge 740,a40. Best kind of gouernment,1052,b30. Iurisdiction absolute in their owne realmes, & that the pope hath nothing there to do, 24,b20, &c. Election & aduancement referred to the people, 1, a40. Oth at his coronation,1, b30.

Kings college in Cambridge founded: note, 691, b40,&c.

Kingdome to obteine what promises are made, but not kept. ¶ See Promises & People.

Kingston knight is sent to fetch by Woolsie arested of treason to Henrie the eight, talke betwixt the said sir William and him, 916, b 30, 50. Pronost marshall, execution of marshall law: note, 1006, b 60, his ill iustice,1007, a10. Accused of treason, his decease, 1132, a40.

Kiriell sir Thomas, a valiant capteine, 630, a20.

Kisse the pax would not the K. with Becket, 78,a10. ¶ See Reconciliation.

Kneuet surueior deprriued of his office: note,856, a10. An instrument to bring the duke of Buckingham to destruction, 862,b60

Kneuet knight arreigned for striking in the court, iudged to lose his hand, he is pardoned, 953,b10,&c.

Kneuet sir Henrie knight deceseth, 974,b60.

Kneuet Edmund knight, his seruice in Norfolke rebellion 1031,b30.

Knewstub. ¶ See Sermon.

Knights of the Bath, 511, a10. 733, a20. 931, a50.

Knights order of the Rhodes dissolued, 951, a40:

Knights

Knights of the round table first founded. ¶ See Order of the garter.

Knights templers apprehended, and what laid to their charge 319,a 10,&c

Knights three hundred of men of armes to be found,153,a 10 Two hundred fiftie and two besides demilances taken prisoners by king John,165, a 20. Made by Henrie the third,240,a 60. According to the value of their lands,248,a 10. To be made according to their reuennes, 254, a 30. Fees, how manie in England in king Henrie the third his time, 262,a 20. Foure score made at once, 263,a 20. Made by the duke of Buckingham at his entrie into France, 426, a 30, 40,b 30 Made of captains for good seruice in warre, 551,a 40

Knighthood,595,b 50. To dangerous gentlemen in seruice of warres,814,b 20. For good militarie seruice, 824, b 50, 874,a 50,880,b 40. Urged,or else to make fine,929, b 40. For seruice done against the enimie,962,b 40,&c. 991,b 40 992,a 20,1216,b 40,1222,a 60

Knolles knight sent with an armie into France, 405,a 20. Borne in Cheshire, his counsell not followed, 405, b 60. The feare that the enimies had of him, 406, b 50. His seueritie, 445, b 10. Deceaseth, remembrances of him, 533, b 40

Knolles Francis knight sent ouer to view the state of Newhauen, 1202,b 30. His foure sonnes in a triumphant shew, 1319,b 60. ¶ See Auxerre, and Iusts triumphant.

L.

Labrers,an act of parlement for the drawing of them in order, 835,b 20

Lacie Hugh, and of king Henrie the seconds gift vnto him,82, b 30. Slaine in Ireland,109 b 60. His puissance and contempt, his diligence to inlarge his possessions in Ireland, 110,a 10

Lacie Robert constable of Chester hangeth two for spite,133 b 40

Lacie Roger a Norman, 17,a 60

Lacie walter in armes against the rebels, 11,a 50

Lacies constables of Chester by inheritance, their estimation and credit,215, b 60,217,a 10,20,&c. Erls of Lincolne of whense they had their original, 20,a 30

Laignie on the riuer of Maine besieged, 608,a 10

Lambe esquier, a good common wealths man, deceaseth, his acts and deeds full of charitie: note, 1311,a 60,b 10,&c:1312, his epitaph, 1313,a 40

Lambert earle of Lens, 11,b 10

Lambert Simenill. ¶ See Simenill.

Lamperdenaux castell builded, 279,b 10. Taken, 281,a 10

Lancaster and Yorke house, and the vniting of them in one intended,740,b 40. Furthered 741,a 10,&c: 742,a 10,&c:743, a 10, &c. Some matter concerning both worthie the reading, 761,a 20,30

Lancaster house, and how malicious Margaret the duchesse of Burgogne was therevnto,765,b 10. Enuied 776,a 10

Land,and how manie acres an hide conteineth, 13,b 10

Lands let out for pearels rent in duke williams time,8,a 40 Morgaged for monie, 17, a 30. Of the church defended and recouered by archbishop Lanfranke: note 18,a 60,b 10

Landoise corrupted with rewards betraieth the earle of Richmond into Richard the thirds hands,747,b 10,20,30, 40, 50, 60. His expectation disappointed by the prince and vnknowne departing of the earle, 748,a 60

Lanfranke an Italian the three and thirtith archbishop of Canturburie,9,a 20. His authoritie great among all the lords of England, 16, a 30. His counsell to William Rufus to winne the nobles fauor, 16,a 10. Diligent care for the safetie of william Rufus,17,b 20. In fauor with pope Alexander, 9,a 40. Assisteth duke William in armes against the rebelles, 9, b 50. Calleth a councell of the clergie,11,b 60. Praised for holding with the monks, 18,b 10. Enuied for his prosperities sake,17,a 10,20. His death,18 a 40,with a description of certeine his qualities, and diuerse of his acts and deeds,18 40,a 50

Largesse of william Rufus at his coronation: note, 16,a 40

Law marshall a burthen intolerable, 1052, b 10, Executed, 1199, a 50. 566,a 60, 1007,a 10, &c. ¶ See Soldiors.

Law salike, 836, a 60, 545,b 40

Law of armes: note, 669,a 60, 577, b 40. Violated by the French,1204,b 50. Touching heralds violated, 984, a 40

Law of duke William against such as forced ante women, 15,b 50

Law to be quite abolished at the rebelles request, 432,a 50

Law against buieng and selling on the sundaie, 624,a 20

Lawes penall of duke William: note,14,a 20. Confessed to be vnequall,8,b 40: note. Of S. Edward supposed most equall and indifferent,10, a 20. Of William Rufus sharpe, rigorous, and peremptorie, 20,b 10. Of king Henrie the first commanded to be vniuersallie obserued, 181,a 30

Lawes written in the Norman tong not vnderstood of the English: note, void of conscience and equitie,8,b 10. Of England ancient abrogated and established, 8,a 60. Remaine in Kent onelie, 2,b 30

Lawes and liberties sought for, 2,a 10

Lawiers to plead their cases in English,&c:396,a 20. Brought to blockham feast by the rebelles,430,a 60. Fraudulent punished, 950,b 30

Lecture. ¶ See Surgerie.

Leeds castell besieged,327,b 60, And yelded, 328,a 10

Legat Anselme with his authoritie from Rome, 39,b 60 Ferentino gathereth much monie in England, 170,b 10 Gualos practises to get monie,193,a 20. John de Anagnia from Rome to procure peace betweene kings, 113, b 60. Otho cardinall,and what dutie he gathered of the clergie, 208, a 30. Pandulph, ¶ See Pandulph: note.

Legat from the pope about reformation,a bawdie knaue,42 b 40. with the archbishop of yorks pall,36, a 50. ¶ See archbishop: note,29,a 40. A shift by forbearing the name, 239, b 50. ¶ See Cardinall.

Legats from Rome to reconcile the bishop of Elie and the archbishop of Rouen,137,a 50 They practise for their owne aduantage,100,b 10. Authorised to celebrate a marriage, 98,a 50. Not regarded, they excommunicate, 37, b 30. From the pope about Becks death, 82,b 50

League betwixt England and Flanders,354,b 30. Concluded,396,b 50. Renewed, 160, a 50. Betweene England and France,897,b 50. Renewed,193,b 60: note, 768,b 60 Confirmed,1229,a 40,1238,a 30. Betweene England and Scotland, 1402, b 30. with the Scots and French to annoie the English, 296,a 10. Betweene the emperour and king Henrie the fift, 557, b 20,&c. Betweene king Henrie the eight and the emperor 959, b 60. Betweene king Henrie and the duke of Britaine, 568,a 60. Betweene king Henrie the fift and the duke of Burgogne, and how articulated, 575,b 30. With king Henrie the third and the welsh nobilitie vpon certeine articles, 226,b 50,&c. Secret betwixt the pope and certeine states of Italie, 893, a 10

League of peace to breake, an euill deed, 820, b 60. ¶ See Peace and Truce.

Leicester wone by force, 89, a 40. The Wals and the castell raced, 98,b 20

Leigh knight. ¶ See Iusts triumphant.

Leith burned,990, a 30. More riches found there than was looked for in ante towne of Scotland,962,a 30. Entred by the English armie, and by them possessed and spoiled: note,962,a 30. Assailed on the seuenth of May, 1191, a 20. The great skirmishes betweene the English & French there in queene Elisabeths time,1186,b 40,&c.1187,1188. 1189. The French men driuen into it,1188,b 10. A fire in it, and augmented with shot of ordinance and windie wether,1190,a 50. Mantpoles set vp therein on May daie, b 10. While the describing of the siege thereof is so largelie set downe,1193, a 20. Peace concluded thereabouts, a 40, &c. Burned to the ground, 963,a 20

Leofwins malicious mind against Liulfus: note, 12, b 30

Leolin prince of wales summoned to come and do his homage, 278, a 10. And the welsh rebels accursed, 281, a 20. His wife taken from him, he beginneth to make warre, maketh sute for peace,278, a 50, 60. Restored to his husband,279,b 10. He sueth for peace, 278, b 10. Beginneth new warres, 279,b 60. Inuadeth Edward the first's frends,281,b 10. Discomfited,205,a 30. Inuadeth the English borders, 213, b 60. His courage,214,a 10. Spoileth the marches of England,217,a 20. Made cuckold and how he reuenged it, 211, b 60. Wasteth and spoileth all the marches betwixt wales and Shrewesburie, 218, a 30. Deceaseth,224. Slaine,his head presented to Edward the first,281,b 40,60

Leopald, ¶ See duke of Austrich.

Lerning in the earle of Wilents sonnes: note, 44,a 60

Letter of king John to his nobles of England, touching his victories, and taking of duke Arthur prisoner,165, a 10. Of the proud bishop of Elie to the shiriffe of Kent,130, b 30. Of the pope to the clergie of England for the celebrating of a holie daie, 85, b 10. Of king Richard the first to the states of England for the deposing the bishop of Elie,132,a 30. Of the emperor to the states of England, touching his deliuerance, 140,b 20. Of Richard the first to the archbishop of Canturburie, touching his deliuerance out of prison,140, a 50. To the duke of Austrich, claiming Richard the first of the death of the marquesse of Montferrat,136, a 50. Of Henrie the fourth to pope Gregorie and the cardinals, 535, a 40, &c. Of William Northbourgh the kings confessor describing the kings voiage into France,373,b 50, &c. Seditious of a priest, 437, b 30. Of E. W. concerning the earle of Essex walter Deuereux,1166,a 60,b 10,&c. Of cardinall Como to Parrie for resolution to kill queene Elisabeth, 1588, b 10. Of Creitchton to sir Francis Walsingham touching Parries intended murthering of the queene, 1588, a 10. Of Boner vnto cardinall Pole, concerning persecution, 1184 a 10. Of the councell to Edmund Boner as touching queene Marie conceiued with child,1123,b 60. Of the ladie Marie, touching hir chalenge vnto the crowns, 1084, b 50. with an answer of the lords, 1085, a 40. Of the king to the lord Cheinie, at his going into France: note,1123. Right excellent of the duke of Summerset to the Scotish nobilitie touching the marriage betweene Edward the first and the queene of Scots,998,b 10 &c. 999, 1000, 1001,a 10. Of defiance from the Scotish K. to Henrie the eight, 820. Of the French king prisoner to his mother the regent of France,884,b 50,60. Of Gesserie the kings base sonne to Richard archbishop of Canturburie, canburie,104,b10. Of Gardiner to Boner,touching the celebrating of pope Julius funerals,1128,a60, b10. Of yong king Henrie touching the disappointment of archbishop Richards consecration,86,a10. Of Henrie the second touching the pacification betweene him and Thomas Becket,78,a20. Of the popes. ¶ See Pope.

Letters of the duke of Summerset and the lord Russell, 1057,a60,b20. Of Henrie the sixt to the duke of Yorke, 638, a60. Of the duke of Yorke to Henrie the sixt,637, b60,638, a10,&c. Of the duke of Gelderland to Richard the second: note,475,b60,&c.476,a10, &c. Concerning prince Edwards doings and proceedings beyond sea,384,a10, &c. Of Parrie to quéene Elisabeth & lords of the councell after his voluntarie confession: note, 1387, a20,b10. Of submission and sute of one Francis Throckmorton traitor against quéene Elisabeth and the realme, 1373, a60,b60,1374. He is executed, 1375, b30. Missiue taken from the quéenes ambassadors seruants, 1195, b20. Seditious of a bishop sent into a forren realme: note, 17,a10. Treasonable, 428, a60. Of protraction from the French king to the king of England, 102,a60

Letters intercepted, 329, b10,

Letters patents reuoked, 526, b50

Lewin a Welshman hanged: note his treacherie,299,b60, 300,a10,&c.

Lewis the French king inclineth to peace with Henrie the third,201,b10. Deceaseth 208,b60,209,a10. His sons intituled to the kingdome of England,201,b20. Sendeth to his father for aid,200,b60. An armie prepard in France to succour him,201,a10. His laire,200,b10. Maintaineth his title pretended to the crowne of England,191,a50 ¶ See French king.

Lewis le grosse, 34,b60

Lewis. ¶ See Physician.

Libell against cardinall Wolsie, 895,a30. Seditious against Henrie the seuenth, and the libellors executed, 778, a60. Causing losse of life,746,b10 Set on the duke of Northfolks gate forewarning him of trecherie against Richard the third,and of his owne safetie, 759, b10. Against the quéene and realme are false,1363,a40. Published in Italian against quéene Elisabeth, and the same answered, 1418,a40. Printed against quéene Elisabeth, 1370,b60. Against the clergie, 558,b20. ¶ See Bookes seditious.

Liberalitie of Richard the first wonderfull,126,b30. Of the earle of Arundell: note,454,b50. Of Edward the first to his nobles,308,a40. Of sir Thomas Dackuill to the French,1224,b60,1225, a10. Of William Rufus,27, a20. Repented: note,20,b10. In a prince commended, 16,b10

Libertie preferred before a kingdome,726,b60. Obteined by gentle language,673,a60,b10. Bought with monie, 140,a20, b60. ¶ See Ransome. Obteined by great words and proud brags,23,b60,24,a10. Desired aboue all things: note, 1046,a30,60

Liberties. ¶ See Lawes, Londoners, Priuileges, and Southworke.

Licence to build castels, 47,a30 Of king Richard the first to gather riches,120,a60. For the English iusts and turnie: note,145,b60. Asked of Henrie the third of the commonaltie to passe ouer sea, 262,a30. To burie the bodies of the rebels,335, a60. And that without it none should depart the realme,20,b40. To depart the realme,sought and obteined, 14,b10

Lie, & how dangerous to credit: note, 587,a50

Life to saue what shifts noblemen can be content to make, 460,b30

Lightening. ¶ See Thunder.

Limerike a kingdome, 101,b10

Limoges besieged, taken by force, 406,a10,40. Rendered to king Henrie the second, 107,b20

Lincolne besieged,56,b10. Taken, 272, a10. Wonne by the French, 192,b60

Lincolne castell, 6,a40

Lincolne John the author of the insurrection on ill Maie date, the grieues particularised in his bill for the cities behoofe, a great enimie to strangers,prosecuteth his information of greeuances by specialties, 840, b10, 20,40, 50,60. Indicted,& what laid to his charge, he is executed in Cheapside, 843,b40,60

Lincolneshiremen throw awaie their cotes the lighter to run awaie,674,a20. In armes against Henrie the eight, 941, a50,&c. They giue ouer their rebellious enterprise, 941, b10. Submit themselues and receiue a new oth of fealtie, 941,b20,30

Lisle yelded vnto the French king, 304,b40

Littleton a iudge of the common pleas, 702,b10

Liulfus slaine, and what mischiefe thereof insued, 12,b30

Loialtie of the citizens of Rouen vnto king John: note, 167,b40. ¶ See Oth.

Loiterer described, 1050, b20

London the onelie place for the Jewes to burie their dead, 101,b20. when their burgesses were chosen commonlie called their councell,164,a40. The bailiffes thereof committed to prison, and why, 171, b40. Bridge repared, 172, b10. Consumed with fier,176,b10. Bridge on fier, 791, The kings especiall chamber,729,b20. Wall part thereof newlie built,702,b60. Sore vexed,assalted,& in sundrie places spoiled, & burnt, 689,b10,&c 690,a10,&c. When it first began to receiue the forme and state of a commonwelth,120,a20. Of how manie wards it consisted, 120,a30. Men of armes & archers lie round about it twentie miles compasse as it were in campe,451,b50. The armes thereof augmented by addition of a dagger, 436, b20. Liberties seized into king Edward the firsts hands, 282,b60. Confirmed,the rent of the farme of the shiriffes increased,274, b40. The liberties thereof seized into Henrie the thirds hands, the shiriffes imprisoned,251,b40,&c. Wals decaied and newlie repared, 256,a40. The custodie thereof committed to the constable of the Towre: note, 256,b20. Under the rule of prince Edward, &c: he appointeth the maior and shiriffes, 274,b20. In charge of the bishop of Excester, 338, a40. Bridge and the towre there taken downe, 1270, a30. Serued with Thames water by pipes brought into seuerall houses, 1384, b50. Where much hurt was done with wind, 19,b10. A great part of it burned to the ground, 14,b10. And of the charter granted vnto the citizens by duke William, 15,a60

Londoners prouident and pitifull in the time of scarsitie, 476,b60, 477,a10. Pursued by prince Edward, 268, a10. Refuse to lend the king a thousand pounds, 477, b50. Reuolt from the duke of Northfolke going against Wiat, 1094,b60. Take Wiats part, 1095, b40. Receiuing of the duke of Summerset at his returne out of Scotland, 992,a60. Keepe S. Barnabes date holie date, 1062,b10. Readinesse to assist Edward the first in a motion & worke of charitie, 1082, a10, 40. They & gentlemen of courts by the eares,623,a30. Skirmish with Jacke Cade and his rebels vpon London bridge,635,a10. Prouidence for safegard of peace,647,a50 Loiall and disclosers of treasons,428,a60. Are spited and enuied at,421,a20,30. Abused of strangers whereof followed the riot of ill Maie date, 840,a20,&c: b10,&c: 841,842, 843,844. Interteine and banket the king of Denmarke, 878,b10. Hated of cardinall Woolsie, 895, a30,40. Set forth a power into France, 969,b10. Lend Henrie the eight 20000 pounds,874,a20 Glorious receiuing of Henrie the eight,and the emperor Charles,873,b10,20. Statelie and gorgious muster before Henrie the eight: note, 947,a40,&c:b10,&c. Conspire to take the empresse Maud, 53,b60. Sue to king John for a maior and two shiriffes, 172,b30. Sore afraid of the Cornish rebels,782,a50. Resolue to receiue Edward the fourth, and reuolt from Henrie the sixt, 683, a60. Grant fiue thousand marks to Edward the fourth,which were seized of the fine and twentie wards, 704, b60. Loiall to Edward the fourth: note, 689, b20. Riot against the Jewes at king Richard the firsts coronation,118, b10,&c: 119,a10, &c. Malicious,& among them of two aldermen,690, a50, b20. Present monie to king Richard the first, 119, b60. Large priuileges and liberties. 119,b60. And the priuileges of their communaltie by whom granted, 131, b30. Triumphant receiuing of king Richard the first into the citie, 141, b60. Hardlie reported of by an Almaine lord, 141, b60. Serue Richard the first in his butterie at his coronation: note,143, b40. Fowle disorder noted, and complained of to Richard the first, 149,a40. Refused to fight against the lords,459, a10,60. Speciallie afraid of the French forces, 451,b30. In perplexitie whether to take part with Richard the second or with the nobles, 462,a60. They incline to the lords,462, a60. Receiuing of the duke of Lancaster, 505, b40,50. Fauourers of wicliffes doctrine,440,b20. Met the K. and quéene on Blackheath, 487, a60,b10, &c. Seale to blanke charters, &c: to win Richard the seconds fauour, 469, a10. Euill reported of for their vnstableneste,457, b20. Commended themselues to the fauour of Richard the second before the death of Edward,415,b40. They submit their quarell with the earle of Lancaster to the kings order,416,a10. Frends to the earle of Northumberland, 439,b10. Aiders of the rebels of Kent and Essex, 430, b60. The lords of the land stand in doubt of them, 426, b30. Pretilie cousened of a thousand markes by king Henrie the third, 247, b50. Gift to the duke of Bedford at his returne from beyond sea,491, a40. Sued vnto to make choise of two to be their king, 1, a40. Appointed to keepe the subsidie granteth by the parlement, 418, b60. Banished the citie, 283, a60. Their magistrats deposed & new ordeined in their towne, 204,b10. Haue free warren granted them of king Henrie the third, and other liberties,208,a10. They & the constable of the towre at variance, 263, b60. Outrage whetted with ill counsell,204 & 40. Haue free libertie to passe toll free through all England,208,b30. Pare Henrie the third 5000 marks for a fine,208,b40. Haue a grant to die a common seale, 210, a40. Good deuotion towards the earle of Kent, 215, a60. Terrified with thunder,216, b10. Seruice at the marriage of Henrie the third, 219, b40, 60. Cast in prison and depriued of their liberties, 270, b50,60. Sworne to be true to Henrie the third and his heirs,264,a30. Riot vpon the bishop of Salisburies men, 478, a20. Grieuouslie complained of to the king, their liberties seized vpon,a gardian appointed to gouerne them,their liberties in part confirmed in part condemned, gifts presented by them to pacifie the kings displeasure, 478,all. More gifts giuen by them to the king,their liberties ratified,479,a10,20. In great disorder, 265, a60. Curstlie handled, their citie com-committed to a gardian or custos: note, 271, a 30, 40. Pardoned by Henrie the thirds charter, 271, b 20. Pardoned for receiuing the earle of Glocester into their citie, 273, b 40. Goldsmiths and tailors togither by the eares, 274, a 50. Rob the house of the lord Gzete, 264, a 60. Buie Henrie the thirds plate to his great losse, 241, a 20. They and the abbat of Westminster at strife, 241, b 60. Receiuing in of the countesse of Pzonance, 231, a 50. Paie a tallage and are grieued, 238, b 10 Fined at fiftæne hundzed marks for receiuing a banished man into their citie, 236, a 30. Helpe Henrie the third at a pinch, 247, a 10, 20. Haue their liberties restozed vnto them, 252, a 60. Called barons in derision, 247, b 60. Gzædie dealing to the hurt of the commonweith, 257, a 60 Agrée with the barons, 266, b 20. Spoiled at Croidon, 269, a 30. In an vproze chose new officers, 273, a 30. Glad to submit themselues to Henrie the third, put to their fine, 271, a 10. Game of wzestling, and what tumult followed, 204, a 10, &c. Take part with the quæne & hir adherents, 338, all, 339, a 10. Unrulie & giuen to sedition: note, 338, b 10. Set prisoners at libertie out of the Towze, 338, b 50. Loialtie, auouching to kæpe traitozs out of their gates, 338, a 10. Behead a citizen & a bishop in a riot, 338, b 10, 30 Will not permit king Edward the thirds iustices to sit within the citie, 361, b 20. Haue their franchises confirmed, 343, a 40. Lent Edward the third monie to be paid againe out of the subsidie monie, 357, b 40. In armes against the duke of Lancaster, ment to haue slaine him, 412, a 20. Outrage for wozds spoken to their bishop, 412, a 20. Commended, 1402, b 10. Foure thousand trained vp for seruice in the field, 1402, a 60, b 10. Muster before quæne Elisabeth at Gzænewich, 1184, b 10. Their thzæfold plague, 1206, a 20. Honshold stuffe sold by a common crier or belman, 1207, a 50. Trained vp in the field, 1228, a 50, 60. Loue and hartie goodwill towards quæne Elisabeth, 1377, a 20. Withstand duke William, 1, b 10. Loue to quæne Elisabeth manifested on the daie of hir cozonation: note & obserue it well, 1171, 1173, &c: Their farewell vnto hir, going out at Temple bar 1178, b 60, Hir last wozds to them by waie of pzomise, 1179 a 30

Lone of monie taken by Henrie the eight, 957, a 10

Longchampe. ¶ See Bishop of Elie.

Longland doctor misliketh of Henrie the eights marriage with his brothers wife, 906, b 20

Lozds created and made, 480, a 20 Conspiring against Richard the second. ¶ See Noblemen.

Lozds and ladies put out of the court, &c. 463, a 50, &c.

Lozds of misrule. ¶ See Ferrers.

Losaunge. ¶ See Herbert.

Losecote field, 674, a 20

Lotterie at London called the great lotterie, 1211, a 60, b 10

Lou Hugh how he became earle of Chester, 20, a 10, His death and what issue he had, 20, a 40

Loue that Edward the second bare Pzers Gaueston, 320, a 20. ¶ See Pzers Gaueston, and Edward the second. Of the people to the lord Cobham: note, 544, b 30. Of Henrie the seuenth to his wife ladie Elisabeth, 768, a 60. Of a mother naturall and kind: note, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721. Of the duke of Britaine to the earle of Richmond incozruptible, 747, b 10, &c: 748, b 20. Unlawfull of Richard the third towards his neece, 751, a 50. Of naughtie men conuerted into deadlie hate, 739, b 10, &c. Wanton misleadeth and brædeth discord, 672 b 40, 50. Of the people to the earle of warwike: note, 679. ¶ See Earle of warwike in Henrie the sixts time, & Edward the fourth. Of a concubine to hir paramour, 149, b 60. Of king Richard the second to the earle of Oxford, & earle of Suffolke: note, 454, a 10, 20, 30, 40. ¶ See moze in Earles. Of the father to the children, preferment to the mother, 486, a 10. Betweene man and wife exemplified, 481, a 20. Of a Jewish woman made a decon, plaid the apostata, 203, b 60. Gotten by liberalitie and profit, 454, b 60 Blind & vngodlie, 586, a 30. And lust with the danger & mischiefe of both, 545, a 40, 50, &c. Unlawfull, with the shamefull end thereof, 937, b 40. Therein is losse euen of life: note, 41, b 30: note, 423, b 20

Loue French, 699, b 60

Louell William held the castell of Carie, 48, b 60. Lord, his rebellion, he escapeth, 764, a 60 b 30. Arriueth in Flanders, continueth conspiror against Henrie the seuenth, 766, a 20. Knight, sent ouer to Calis with a power, 831, b 40, 50

Louiers besieged, 609, a 20. And pælded vp, 564, a 60, b 10

Louelace Thomas. ¶ See Punishment.

Louthian spoiled, 89, a 60

Low countries. ¶ See States.

Lucie Richard lozd chiefe iustice of England deceaseth, 103, a 50

Ludlow swone by king Stephan, 50, b 10

Lumleie lozd founder of surgerie lecture in London: note, 1349, a 20

Lupus. ¶ See Lou.

Lust of william Rufus, 18, b 10 ¶ See Loue.

M.

Magdalen counterfeted to be king Richard the second, 115, a 50

Magistrats authozitie great & peremptozie, 1042, b 10. Are to be honozed both in speech & maners, 1043, a 50

Magna charta, 308, b 10, 306, a 40, 185, b 60. Pzomised to be mainteined, 248, a 40 Confirmed, 307, a 40, 312, b 20

Magnanimitie. ¶ See Quæne Elisabeth.

Magnus, admerall of rouers his exploits, 23, a 50

Maid smiteth a maioz in the face, 1021, b 10

Maie daie the euill. ¶ See Rebellion of Lincolne.

Maidstone, esquire, offereth to fight in his ladies quarell, 527, b 40

Maigame roiall, 806, a 30, 809, a 20, &c.

Mainpzise, 144, a 50, 513, b 60

Maioz or Maire, and what the wozd signifieth, 172, b 50

Maioz of London swozne to be true to Henrie the third, 264, a 30. An information against him to king Henrie the third, 256, b 10. Discharged of his place for a while, 256, b 20. Condemned to pzison and all his goods confiscat, 446, a 50. A seuere punisher of adulterie in his time, 440, b 10. Fiue aldermen knighted, 436, b 10. His wozds at the rebellion of Wat Tiler, 432, b 60. And thirtie six imprisoned at Windsoze, 478, a 50. Commended for his carefull pzouision of cozne from beyond the seas in the time of dearth, 476, b 10. His rash and bnaduised answer, 458, b 60. Justlie commended, 452, a 40. And his bzethzen challenge all commers at iusts, 392, a 40, 50. Forced to take an oth, 338, b 10. And what ozder he toke to sæ the kings peace kept: note, 326, b 60. Swozne, and went home in a grete cloke, 795, b 60. He and aldermen feasted by Edward the fourth: note, 705, a 30. Accused of treason: note, 670, a 40. Departeth from sargeants feast discontent bicause he sat not highest in the hall: note, 667, b 30. His office and authozitie, 129, a 40. One for the space of twentie and one yeares, 172, b 40. And shiriffs the first that were chosen, 172 b 20. And bailiffes chosen out of the number of fiue and thirtie burgesses, 164, a 40. And shiriffes resisted at Clerkenwell, 641, b 10. And welcomming home of Henrie the fift out of France, 556, a 30. That first ware a rich collar of gold and of whose gift, 961, b 10. Of councell vnto Henrie the eight, 961, a 60, b 10. In a gowne of crimson veluet, 931. And aldermen of London in blacke mozning arraie come to Henrie the eight with a heauie sute of ill Maie daie, 843, b 60, 844, a 10. Sometime an officer: note, 764, b 60. Feast first kept at Guildhall, 789, b 30. ¶ See Contention, London, and Soldiors.

Maiors feast none kept at Guildhall, 1206, a 30, 1211, b 60, 1260, a 10, 1262, a 10

Maioz of Bodmin in Cozne-wall hanged, 1007, a 10. Of Excester smitten on the face by a maid, 1021, b 10, 20. Of Nozwich his ozder of receiuing the quæne Elisabeth, 1287, a 30, 60, 1288, a 10, &c. Oration in English which he made to the quæne, 1288, a 50, 60, b 40, &c. His gift presented vnto hir 1289, a 10, 20. Purposing to make another oration to the quæne, is willed to kozbeare, & while, 1298, b 20. He is knighted, 30.

Malcolme king of Scots destroieth manie places in the north parts, 10, a 60. Sendeth to duke William to treat of peace, 10, b 40. Doth homage to duke William for Scotland, 10, b 50. Marieth Edgar Ethelings sister, 6, a 30. Commeth to Glocester, 20, b 60. Did fiue times waste Northumberland: note, 21, a 10. Enioyeth the earldome of Huntington, 66, b 50. Inuadeth England, sueth for peace, 19, b 20, 20, b 60. He and his sonne slaine, 21, a 10.

Malcontentment, 738, b 60, 790, a 10. Grew to a conspiracie, 941, a 20, 30, &c. Of the earle of Montague: note, 32, b 10. Of Parrie because he might not haue preferment to his liking 1383, b 60. ¶ See Counsell, Parrie, and Rebellion.

Malcus made and consecrated bishop of waterford, 22, b 60.

Malice of duke William against the English, 9, a 10. ¶ See William. of Leofwin bzeketh into murther, 12, b 30. Betweene the two dukes of Burgogne and Orleance, and the cheefe cause thereof, 529, a 40. Of the earle of Cornwall to the citie of London, 251, b 50. Between king Richard the second, and the duke of Glocester, 487, b 40. Of cardinall Pole against king Henrie the eight, 1134, b 60. Afresh betwixt Edward the fourth and the duke of Clarence, bzethzen, 703, a 30. Of the earle of warwicke against Edward the fourth: note, 670, b 10, 50, &c. Of Richard the first and the French king one against an other, 146, a 60. Of the French king against Richard the first: note, 141, a 20. Betweene dukes of Summerset and Yozke: note, 625, b 40, 50. Of the duchesse of Burgogne to the line of Lancaster, 776, a 10. ¶ See Margaret. Betweene the duke of Summerset and the duke of Yozke: note, 612, b 10, Of the cardinall Wolsie mortall against the duke of Buckingham, 855, b 10, 66. Of the Frenchmen and their bogged stomachs, 840, a 20, &c. Against Henrie, breaking out into an intent of murther, and the partie executed, 223, a 40, &c. Of the lords against the earle of Cozne wall increased: note, 319, b 10. Betwixt great estates about matters of marriage, 774, a 60.

Malice inconuenient vnto the malicious: note, 17, a 10. Cloked bursteth out, 264, a 40. Inkerreth murther: note, 489 a 60, b 10. Thirsteth after reuenge: note, 304, b 30. And the nature thereof, 1418, b 60, 1419, a 10. Bursteth out into murther: note, 673, a 30. wherevpon arise slanders, 63, b 60. Trauelleth still to reuenge, 641, b 60. To awele, a labour dangerous, 646, b 60. In a realme, the mortall mischiefe thereof, 630, b 60. Notablie dissembled: note, 622, b 60. How mischieflie it worketh to reuenge, 962, b 40, &c: note, 590, b 60, 591, a 10, &c.

10,&c. Content with no reuenge,431,a20,&c. ¶ Sée Enuie, Hate, and Reuenge.

Man Ile taken by Robert Bzuis,318,b10. ¶ Sée Harold.

Manners knight lozd Ros created earle of Rutland,892, a50

Manners Thomas knight his militarie seruice in Scotland, 1216,b40,&c. ¶ Sée Erle and Rutland.

Manwod lozd Chefe baron of the exchekers good commonwelths man: note his deeds, 1377,1378

Mallet William chiefe of Yozke and his familie taken pzisoners and put to ransome,7, a20

Marble stone wherevpon kings of Scots sat at their cozonation, transferred to Westminster, 301,a10,20

Marches a valiant capteine, 154,b30,155,b40. A good seruitoz in warres, 158,b30

Marcher earle of Mercia flieth into Scotland,6,a30. Imprisoned by William Rufus,16, a30. Reconciled vnto king William,9,b40. Withdraweth from the battell against duke William,1,a30. Flieth into Erie foz defense against duke William, 10,a40

Margaret Dowglasse pzisoner in the Tower,940,b 50. Pardoned, released,945, a10

Margaret the wife of K. Henrie white not crowned,76,b60

Margaret sister to earle Hugh of Chester, married to John Bohune, 20,a40

Margaret and Chzistine, the sisters of Edgar Etheling,6, a30

Margaret the daughter of king William of Scotland maried to earle Conan, 7,b30

Margaret daughter to the queene of Scots and of the earle Angus borne, 838,a10

Margaret daughter vnto the French king affianced vnto Henrie the kings sonne of seuen peres old,68,a50. Crowned quæne, 82,b60

Margaret duchesse of Salisburie beheaded, 703,b10

Margaret sister to Edward the fourth, sent ouer to the duke of Burgogne: note, 669, b 30,&c.

Margaret countesse of Leneux sent to the Towze,1208,b20, Deliuered out of the Towze, 1209,b60

Margaret duchesse of Burgogne, sister to Edward the fourth, malicious to Lancaster house,765,b10. Hir malice against the line of Lancaster,776,a10. Hir new counterfet of Richard Plantagenet, 775,a60

Margrave of Baden and his wife great with child come to London,1208,b40. She is deliuered of a child, b50. The quéne giueth the name, 60. ¶ Sée Marquesse.

Marie the eldest daughter vnto Henrie the eight borne,838,a 30. Remoueth to Fremingham castell, 1085, b40. To Kreninghall in Northfolke, hir letters to the councell, with hir chalenge vnto the crowne by right of succession, 1084,b30,40. with their answer, 1085,a40. Assembleth hir powers against the duke of Northumberland, 1086,b 40,50,&c. Wind and wether helpe hir 1087, a20. Proclaimed quæne by the nobilitie, for feare of afterclaps,1087,a 50. ¶ Sée Quæne.

Marie quæne of Scots. ¶ Sée Quæne of Scots.

Marie countesse of Perth, Henrie the first his daughter, drowned, 41,b10

Marriage of kings, and first of king John after his diuorse, 161,b 60. Of Edward the first to the ladie Margaret, sister to the French king,309, a10. Of Edward the second and the French king his daughter, ladie Isabell,318,b 50. Of Edward the thirds sister to the duke of Gelderland, 354,b60. Of Edward the fourth to Elisabeth Greie being an offensiue mariage: note,667,b 60. 668, a10,&c. Of Henrie the third with Elenor daughter to the earle of Prouance,219,b30. Of Edward the first and the yong Scotish quæne Marie, 959, a40. Newlie moued, proceedeth not,980,a10,20 &c. Written of to the nobles of Scotland: note,999, a20, &c. Of Henrie the fift to ladie Katherine, the French kings daughter, crowned quæne, 578, b50, 60. Solemnitie thereat,579,all. Of Henrie the first to the earle of Armenaks daughter concluded, note,614,a10.614,b60. To the ladie Margaret daughter to Reiner king of Sicill and Jerusalem,625,a40. Of Henrie the seuenth vnto the daughter of Edward the fourth,764,b 40. Of Henrie the eighth and the duchesse of Alanson the French kings sister reported,897,a 60. with his brothers wife yet againe in question,906,b20. Thought vnlawfull, and commeth vnto iudgement, 908, a 60, b50, Common argument in sermons,928,a20. Yet againe in question with the determinations of diuers vniuersities concerning the same, 923, b 20,50,924,925,926. Debated 906,b60. By consent of all the vniuersities in christendome iudged vnlawfull: note, 912,b60,913,a10,&c. With the ladie Anne Bullen, 929,a60. with the ladie Anne of Cleue concluded,947,b60. Solemnised, 950,a10,&c. Iudged vnlawfull,952,a60. With the ladie Katharine Par, 960,a 30. Of Richard the second to the French kings daughter, 487,a10. With the emperors sister,439,b50. And the Emperor of Germanies daughter,428,b50. Of Richard the third vnto the ladie Anne, daughter to Richard earle of warwike,733,b60. Betwixt Richard the third and the earle of Richmonds neece, offensiue, 752,b50.

Marriage of princes, and first of Edward the first his eldest sonne and Philip daughter to the earle of Flanders, offensiue,296,b60 297,a10. Of Edward prince of wales and the ladie Marie daughter to the earle of Hensult, 337, b 30. To the earle of Warwike daughter,674,b60. Betwixt Henrie the kings sonne seuen yeares old,&c:68,a50. Of Richard, Henrie the thirds brother to the ladie Sancia, 231,b50. Betwixt Henrie the thirds sonne and the king of Spaines daughter,248, b 40. Of Edward, Henrie the thirds sonne, vnto king Alfonsus daughter,249,b60. Of Edward the thirds second sonne lozd Lionell, vnto the duke of Milans daughter, 400,a60. His intertetnment at Sutrie, his receiuing into Millan, b10

Mariage of honourable men, and first of the erle of March and the daughter of Owen Glendouer,521,a20. Of the lozd Mountdenlies daughter, to William de Valence Henrie the thirds halfe brother, 240,a20. Of the lozd William Greie with the wife of Paule Penter,244, b60. Of earle Thomas of Flanders, and Jone the widow of Ferdinando, 224, a60. Of earle Rafe of Chester vnto three wiues,215, b40. Betweene the emperor Frederike, and Henrie the thirds sister,219,a 50. Of the earle of Cornewall and the countesse of Glocester,213,b50. Of the duke of Lancaster with a ladie of meane estate: note,485, b60. Of the duke of Lancasters daughter to the king of Portingall,450,a10,20. Of earle Bolenbzoke of Derbie to the daughter of earle Bohune of Hereford,448,b20. Betweene the prince of Spaine and the duke of Lancasters daughter,450, b40. Of Ambrose Dudlie earle of warwike to the earle of Bedfords eldest daughter,1208,b60. Of Edmund earle of Cambridge to the ladie Constance daughter to the king of Spaine,406, b 60. Of John of Gant duke of Richmond, to the duke of Lancasters daughter, 392,a 30, Promised by constreint of the earle of Flanders and king Edward the thirds daughter, 379, b30. Of Piers de Gaueston and the daughter of the earle of Glocester,318, b40. Of the lozd Courtneie with king Edward the fourths daughter, 790,a40. Betwixt prince Arthur and the ladie Katharine daughter to Ferdinando not fullie concluded, and whie 787,b60,788,b30. ¶ Sée Katharine. The solemnitie of the same, 789, a30. Of the lozd Courcie and the king of England king Edward the third his daughter, 397,a60. Betwixt the king of Castile and the ladie Marie the king his daughter of ten yeres old, 795,b50,60. Moued betwixt the king of Scots and Margaret the eldest daughter of king Henrie the seuenth,785, b60. Of the earle of Kent to a daughter of lozd Barnabe of Millane: note, 535,a40. Betwixt the earle of Glocesters sonne and the daughter of the lozd Gme of Angolesme, 247, b30. Purposed foz the earle of Richmond with walter Herberts sister, but disappointed,752,b60. Concluded betwixt the prince of Rothsate and the duke of Suffolks daughter,747,a40. Of the king of Scots and king Edward the fourths second daughter treated vpon, 705,a40. Betweene the king of Scots sister and the yong prince of Wales, 665, a60. Betwixt the duke of Burgemes sonne and heire with ladie Margaret sister to king Edward the fourth,668,b10, 669,a10,&c. Of the duke of Clarence with the earle of warwikes eldest daughter, 671,b60. Of duke Arthurs mother to Gwie de Towers by a dispensation,160, b60. Of the duke of Bedford with the erle of S. Paules daughter,607,b60. Of the duke of Glocester with the wife of the duke of Brabant, he aliue: note,586,a30. Betweene the earle of Richmond and king Edward the fourths daughter accorded vpon by oth,745, b20. Betweene the duke of Bedford and the sister of the duke of Burgognie,586,a40.

Mariages of quænes and honorable women, and first of the countesse of Kent of hir owne chosing: note, 534, b30,&c. Of king Henrie the fourths daughter to the king of Denmarke,532, a10, 20. Of quæne Isabell to king Richard the second, widow to the duke of Orleance his son, 519,b20. Of king Henrie the fourths sister vnto sir John Cornwall,518,b50. Of king Henrie the fourths daughter Blanch to the duke of Bauier,520,b10. Of the countesse of Penbzoke sister vnto king Henrie the third to Simon Montfort,222,b10. Of ladie Jone king Henrie the thirds sister vnto Alexander king of Scots,203, b30. Of quæne Isabell Henrie the thirds mother to the earle of March in France,202,a60,b10. Of the ladie Jone de Courtneie king Richard the second his halfe sister to the earle of saint Paule,424, a60. Of two of Edward the firsts daughters to two noble men, 285, a50. Of Elisabeth countesse of Holland king Edward the firsts daughter and the erle of Hereford,311,b10. Of the ladie Elen king Edward the firsts daughter, to the duke of Bar a Frenchman, 290,a 60. Of Elisabeth king Edward the firsts daughter vnto the earle of Holland,301,b 50 Of the countesse of Glocester with sir Rafe Monthermer, 295 b60. Of Marie quæne of Scots with Henrie Stuard eldest sonne to the erle of Leneux,1208, b10. Of the countesse of Arthois married to the duke of Burgundie 401,b60. Of the countesse of Kent a widow and the prince of wales: note,395,a50. Betweene the ladie Jane sister vnto king Edward the third and the king of Scots,347,b 50. Of an earles two daughters to two bze thzen,322,a10 Of the ladie Margaret daughter to king Henrie the seuenth to James the fourth king of Scots, 788,b30,789, b10. Of an earles daughter to an errant rascall and traitorous rebell, 780, a 40. Of the duchesse of Britaine and Charles the French king 771, b 40. Of the ladie Margaret vnto duke Charles how beneficiall to king Edward the fourth, 676, a 10. Of the French ladie Bona to the duke of Milain, 668, a 50. Of quæne Marie with Philip prince of Spaine, of some liked, of most misliked: note, 1093, a 40, &c: b 10. Agreed vpon in parlement, 1102, b 10 Solemnised, with an abstract of the conditions of the same, 1118, b 10, 40, &c: 1119, a &c: 10, 1120, a 10. Of king Johns daughter ladie Jane vnto the earle of March, 182, b 60. Of Isabell to king John got him enuie, 164, a 60. Of quæn Katharines mother to Henrie the 1zt, with Owen Teuther, 615, a 60. Of the ladie Elisabeth vnto Edward the fourth, 615, b 30. Of the quæn of Scots and the Dolphin of France, 1056, b 60. Betwæne the ladie Marie Henrie the eights daughter, and the king of Scots, purposed, 883, b 50. Betwæne the ladie Marie eldest daughter to Henrie the eight, and the Dolphin of France pretended, 848, b 10. Of quæne Katharine and Henrie the eight, 801, a 10. Of the ladie Elisabeth, now quæne, to a Spaniard solicited, 1157, b 10. Wounded in the parlement, and how answered by hir selfe, 1181, a 20, 40, &c: Sued vnto out of Denmarke, 1185, b 10, 20. Of a gentlewoman in sight to a king, 6, a 30

to

Marriage forren, and first betwæne the king of France and the ladie Margaret, eldest daughter to Henrie the seuenth, 795, b 10. Betwæne the French kings daughter and Richard the second treated of, 485, b 30. Betwæne the Dolphin of France, and Edward the fourths daughter treated vpon, 703, b 60. 704, all. Betwæne the French king and the ladie Marie sister to Henrie the eight, who should haue bæne wife to the prince of Castile, 832, a 60, b 10, 20, 30, 40, 50, 60. Betwæne the French kings daughter and the king of Englands sonne, 94, b 30. Betwæne the Dolphin, and the princesse of Scots, 1141, b 40, 60. Of Lewes the French kings sonne and Blanch the neece of king John, 161, b 10. Of the French king and the emperor Charles his sister, 889, b 40. Made alliance betwæne the pope & the French king, 847, b 30

Marriage in generall, and first of one offensiue: note, 222, b all. Fatall, 211, b 60. Confirmed from Rome with money, 222, b 60. within the degrees of consanguinitie, dispensed withall by the pope, 392, a 30, Not to be forced: note, 376, b 40. Malice betwixt great personages as touching the same, 774, a 60. One intended, another begun and ended: note 667, b 60, 668, a 10, &c. A spirituall thing, and how it should be made, 726, b 30. Purchased with money, 84, b 10, within the seuenth degree of consanguinitie dissolued, 30, b 60, 31, a 10. Broken off & reuenged, 636, b 10. Infortunate and vnprofitable to the realme of England, 675, a 60. Betwæne children to compose strife, and establish amitie betwæne the parents, 1062, a 50 Of princes is not a matter to be trifled in, 980, a 10, 20, &c. Vndertaken without the kings assent, made treasonable: note, 940, b 50

Marriages two or all, 788, b 30. Thre betwæne honourable estates: note, 1803, a 60. Mistrusted to fort to an euill end: note, b 10. ¶ See Contracts.

Mariners of the cinque ports at deadlie debate: note, 304, b 30. Commended, 281, a 40. Myrtle the archbishop of Canturburie and the earle of Penbroke, 169, a 10. ¶ See Seakering men.

Martich the traitor executed: note, 330, b 10

Marleswine and Golspatrike nobles of Northumberland, flie into Scotland, 6, a 30

Marquesse of Baden returneth into his owne countrie, 1109, a 30. Valiant in chiualrie, 833 b 60. Henrie the eight and he make a chalenge at iusts, 835, b 10. Entreth into Scotland, and burneth diuers townes, 875, b 60. Receiueth the emperour Charles at Graueling, 873, a 60. Forsaketh the earle of Richmond, 752, b 10. Committed to the Towre, 766, a 50. Deliuered out of the Towre, 768, a 60. Of Excester condemned, executed, 946, a 20, 50. Montacute suffereth Edward the fourth to passe by him, 680, b 20. Slaine, 685, a 20. Of Northampton sent into Norfolke to represse the rebels, 1033, a 20. Maketh shift to escape danger, 1034, b 60. Of Suffolks request, 625, b 60. Chekest in fauour with king Henrie the 1zt and the quæne, 626, b 40. Created duke, 627, b 30

Matt of all English commodities kept at Calis, 778, a 20.

Martine Sward a valiant captaine of the Turcans assistant to the erle of Lincolne against Henrie the seuenth a perelesse warrior, 766, a 60, b 50. Is slaine, 767, a 10

Marton college in Oxford built, 282, b 60

Martyrdome, marke the causes thereof, 253, b 20

Martyrs in quæne Maries time, the number great that were executed, 1363, a 40

Martyrs fit for the popes kalendar, 1363, b 50, 65, 1366, a 10, &c.

Maske, 848, b 60. Royall, 806, b 62, 812, a 40. 835, a 40. Both the kings of England and France, 861, a 40. With intended mischæfe, 515, b 50. Before quæne Elisabeth, at hir being in Norwich, 1296, a 40. In the French court of English lords, 860, b 30. Of graue and ancient courtiers, and likewise of youthfull, 852, b 40, &c Of lords and ladies, 850, a 50, &c. And a banket, Henrie the eight in person present at the cardinals house, 921, b 60. Statelie to solace the emperor and his companie, 861, b 60

Mason knight, his friendlie part towards the duchesse of Suffolke, 1144, b 60. Secretarie vnto the French king, 1184, a 30

Masse, from the which a bishop and his deacon could not be feared by a tempest, 111, b 50. whereat king John gaue a priestly reiect, 196, b 10. Concerning the celebrating of the same, &c: note, 484, a 40, &c. Abolished, 996, b 10. ¶ See Iesuits and Priests.

Mathild. ¶ See Maud.

Matreuers lord, captaine of Calais, 560, b 60

Maud borne, afterward empresse, 30, a 30. Besieged in Oxford, 55, a 60. She escapeth, b 10. Flieth by night out of London, 54, a 10. Armie put to flight, 54, a 30. Goeth to Bristow, 51, b 30. Followeth the victorie, she commeth to London, 53, b 40. Besieged in Arundell castell, 51, b 10. Landed in England, and what power she brought, 51, a 50. Married to the earle of Anion, 43, a 50. True to the crowne of England, 43, a 10. Committeth hir selfe to be naught of hir bodie, 63, b 50. Hir decease, 75, a 60

Maud duke williams wife, the daughter of earle Baldwine, earle of Flanders, 15, a 60. Crowned quæne, 6, a 60. Hir decease, 15, a 40

Maud daughter and heire to Robert Fitzhammon, Henrie the first his base sonne, 37, a 50

Maud the wife of Henrie the first, a professed nun, 29, a 10

Maud Henrie the first his daughter affianced to the emperor Henrie, 35, a 10

Maud quæne deliuered of a daughter after hir own name, 30, a 30, ¶ See Quæne.

Mauns a citie in Normandie besieged and deliuered, 23, b 20. Besieged and taken, 158, b 10. Lost by treason of the citizens, recouered, 598, a 50, b 30 Yelded to the French king, 114, a 40

Maunt citie in France burnt by duke William, 14, b 40

Maupalle. ¶ See Vernon.

Maximilian king of Romans, prisoned at Bruges by the townesmen, 770, a 40. He and Henrie the seuenth agree to plague the Frenchmen, the cause of his malice, he dealeth dishonestlie with the king of England to his great detestation, breaketh promise with him, 774, a 60, b 10, 30. Incourageth his men to plaie the men, 821, a 40

Meaux besieged by the English men, taken by assault, 581, a 50, b 50. The conditions of the surrender thereof vnto Henrie the fift, 582, a 50

Mekins burnt in Smithfield, 953, a 40

Mellent. ¶ See Erle.

Melune discount discouereth the purpose of Lewis and the English barons, his death, 193, b 10

Melune besieged by king Henrie the fift, 576, b 60. Yelded vp to Henrie the fift, 577, b 20

Men barbarous brought from the new found Ilands, 789, b 60

Mendmarket. ¶ See Vmfreuill

Mendoza the Spanish Ambassador. ¶ See Chrocamaton Francis.

Mercia an earldome, 1, a 30

Mercia in warrio, note, 549, b 20. 550, b 60. ¶ See Charles.

Merchant of London hanged at Nottingham for murthering a merchant stranger of Genoa: note, 428 b 30

Merchants of England receiued into Antwerpe with generall procession, 783, b 40. Sore hindered by a restraint, 778, a 30. Restrained out of Spaine, 1264, a 10. Euill intreated in Dutchland, 1263 a 10. Sustaine great losse by sea, 1262, b 10. Complaine vnto quæne Elisabeth of their wrongs, 1262, b 40. Proclamation for their free traffike as before, &c: 1267, b 10. Robbed of the Danish pirats, and haue great prises taken from them, 483, a 10. Murther a stranger Genoa, 422, b 60 Stoned in Spaine, 905, b 60

Merchants strangers fauoured of king Richard the second, their goods restored, 453, b 60. A proclamation concerning them, 917, a 50. Stoned in England, 905, b 60. Two of the stilliard leu penaunce for hereste, 891, b 60. ¶ See Strangers.

Measure of one length vsed throughout England, 28, b 30 ¶ See Weights.

Meta incognita. ¶ See Frobisher.

Meulane a strong towne yelded to the English, 571, b 60

Meutas Hercules. ¶ See Iulls triumphant.

Mice deuoure graine in Danis hundred, and how deuoured: note, 1315, a 60, b 10

Michaels mount how seated, a great fortification, 19, a 40

Middleton knight proclameth himselfe duke, 323, a 60

Midsummer watch, 1206, b 10, 1208, b 30. Maintained, 1210 a 50. ¶ See Watch.

Mildmais knight founder of Emanuell college in Cambridge: note, 1396, a 10

Mile end greene why so called, 1271, b 60

Miles Coverdale preacher in the time of Deuonshire rebellion, 1023, b 60

Miles, vicar of saint Brides slaine, and the partie executed, 914, b 30

Millain won and ruled by Richard the first, 146, b 50

Millers man hanged for his maister, 1007, a 30

Milnall in Suffolke burned, 1210, a 10

Mines of gold & siluer in England, 413, a 40. ¶ See Siluer.

Ministers more fauoured than other men, 1201, a 40

Minsterworth knight executed as a traitor, 411, b 10.

Miracles of Fitzolbert whereby he was thought to be a saint, 149, a 20. Whereby Robert duke of Normandie was made king of Jerusalem, 29, a 60, wrought by Wolstane to his aduantage, 12, a 10. Seen (forsooth) in the date of Campians execution, 1329, a 60

Miracles of the holie maid of Kent, 936, b 50

Mirth

Wirth, & that after it commeth braunneſſe: note 26, b 40, 50 41, b 10

Wiſerie vpon miſerie, 422, b, 60 423, a 10, &c. ¶ See Derth and Deth.

Wift thicke and blind, 373, a 20

Wade Henrie the eight and his ſouldiers vnable to find the waie to his campe, 823 a 60

Wiſtruſt in murtherers one of of another, 1063, b 60. Cauſeth carefull cuſtodie, 586, a 60 b 10. On all ſides, of all eſtates and degrees: note 173 a 20. An enimie to peace, 457, b 10, 60. Of king Henrie the third in his officers, 216, b 40 That the earls of Hereford & Marſhall had of Edward the firſt, 307, a 30. Of the Flemings in the earle of Richmond, 359, b 20. That the dukes of Buckingham and Glocester had in each other, 736, a 50. Of duke Arthur in his vncle king John, 160, b 60. ¶ See Suſpicion.

Wocke of Henrie the firſt againſt his brother Robert Curthoſe, 44, b 60. At the maior of Norwich, 1032, b 60 ¶ See Derriſion and Jeſt.

Wolineux conſtable of Cheſter caſtell, 460, b 60. Knight ſlaine: note, 461, b 10

Wonaſteries erected in the north parts at the ſute & trauell of three monks, &c: 11, a 20. When none left in all the north parts, 11, a 20. ¶ See Abbeies and Religious houſes

Wonie, two falles thereof, 1066, b 50. Henrie the ſixts priuie ſeales for ſome, 653, b 30. Refuſed to be lent purchaſeth diſfauor and reuenge, 162, a 40. Largeſſe giuen to maintaine war againſt the Turks, 164, a 20. Carried out of the realme by a legat: note, 170, b 10. Notes preferred for it, 187, b 20. And what practiſes Gualo vſed to get it, 193, a 20 A perpetuall order of an hundred and foure pounds lent pearelie by courſe to certeine townes: note, 1092, a 60, b 10 Wurth liberties and priuileges, 119, b 60. And what ſhifts king Richard the firſt made for it, 120, b 40. And of inquiſitions to get it: note, 153, b 40. Gotten with extortion to procure Richard the firſt his ranſome, 139, a 60, b 10. To make it, offices ſet to ſale by Richard the firſt, 142, b 40. Great ſummes gotten by Richard the firſt without making of recompenſe, 143, b 60, 144, a 10. The practiſes of Richard the firſt to get it: note, 144, a 10, 20. Much gotten for licences and grants of iuſt and turnie, 145, b 60. The meanes practiſed to get it: note: 145, a 60. Purchaſeth erldoms, 102, a 50. Maketh marriages betweene great ſtates, 84, b 10. Purchaſeth fauor to a murtherer, 98, b 40 what ſhifts Edward the fourth made for it, 694, a 40, 50. The want thereof procureth peace, 696, b 50. The deſire thereof an occaſion to offend againſt dutie and honeſtie, 743, b 50, 744, a 50. The meanes that Henrie the ſeauenth practiſed to get it, 792, b 20. Scant, but vertuous abundant, 353, a 10 Lent Edward the third by Londoners, 357, b 40. Imployed vpon the commonwealth, 1354, a 40, 50. Wale and fall thereof, 1183, b 50. Well imployed, 1321, a 40 Gathered by cardinals, 235, a 20. Edward the firſt his ſhifts to get it, 280, a 50. Forren forbidden to go as tirant, 309, a 20, 30. Edward the firſt his ſhifts for it, 282, b 30. Purchaſeth the princes fauor, 496, a 10. Of practiſes to get it by Henrie the third, 208, b 60, what couſening ſhifts the pope vſed to get it out of England, 211, a 40. Gathered to confirme a marriage, 222, b 60. To get it, practiſe againſt practiſe, 243, a 50. And what indirect meanes to get it practiſed by the Romiſh clergie, 226, a 10, 20, &c. What ſhifts Henrie the third made to get it, 241, b 20. Procured to the procurers loſſe, 241, a 10. What ſhifts Henrie the third made to ſend it pope Innocent, 250, b 40, &c. Of the biſhop of Herefords deuiſe to get ſome of the biſhops, 251, b 10. More eſteemed than life, 252, b 40. For lands mortgaged to haue it, 22, a 60, b 20. Purchaſeth fauor when nothing els would: note 25, b 40. Received to inforce an abiuration of chriſtianitie, 27, a 40. Giuen and taken of the French king to raiſe his ſeige, 19, a 20. The ſhamefull ſhift of William Rufus to get it, 20, b 10. Purchaſeth peace, 21, b 10. ¶ See Cardinall of Prayed, Couetouſnes, Gifts, Inquiſitions, Riches.

Wonſieur. ¶ See duke of Alanſon.

Wonſieur Thermes capteine of Calis, his ſeruice, his determination to ſpoile king Philips countries, ſicke of the gowt, 1150, a 10, 30, 50

Wonmouth caſtell taken, 270, a 30

Wonſter borne of a woman, 1083, a 40. Maried, 1314, a 40 Of fourſcore yeres old, 1313, b 60, 1314, a 10. Of a ſow that brought out a pig of ſtrange ſhape, 37, a 40

Wonſters bred and brought forth in diuerſe places of England, 1195, a 10

Wonſtreau beſieged and taken, 576, a 50

Wontargis recouered by the Engliſh, 606, b 10, ¶ See Frenchmen.

Wonument. ¶ See Antiquities.

Wone in eclipſe ſeene of king Henrie and his traine, 103, a 60, New appeered before his time, 247, b 40, A ſtrange wonder touching the ſame, 245, b 30. Turned into a bloudie colour, 39, b 10. Strange ſights about it, 102, b 30. Fiue ſeene in yorke, 163, a 50

Wonke Euſtace what he was, 201, a 60, Taken priſoner and beheaded, 201, a 60 Malcus. ¶ See Malcus. Samuell. ¶ See Samuell. When a wonder among the northeren people, 11, a 30. Carthuſian apprehended, and an enimie vnto the pope: note, 225, a 60. Conference with the duke of Buckingham his treaſonable practiſes, 863, a 60, b 10, &c. The laſt that was ſeene in monks clothing till quarne Nantes daies, 952, b 60

Wonks, when and how they ſhald in ſom penance, 30, b 50. Should not be godfathers, 30, b 50. Should not hold nor occupie farmes, 30, b 60. At whoſe hands they ſhould receiue parſonages, &c, 30, b 60. Hindered by the comming of the friers preachers, 26, b 30. Of ſumptuous ſtoutneſſe, 154, a 60. Diſplace the ſecular prieſts at Durham, 13, a 50. Life, order, and profeſſion what it ſhould be, 18, b 60. Supported by Lanfranke, 18, b 10. Two ſtriuing for preferment diſanulled by a third, 18, b 60. Three purpoſed to reſtore religion in Northumberland, 11, a 10. Citizens to whom the emperor was bountifull, 147, b 20. Couened by Richard the firſt, 144, a 10. Of Glaſtenburie diſperſed into diuerſe religious houſes, 13, b 50. Plaie the men againſt the abbat and his adherents, 13, b 40. Of Couentrie diſplaced, 129, a 20. Placed in the church and ſecular canons diſplaced, 152, b 50. Of Canturburie without knowledge of king John chooſe a new archbiſhop, 169, a 60. Baniſhed, 171, a 30. Of the Charterhouſe executed, 938, a 60. Of Chriſts church complaine to the pope of their archbiſhop, 153, a 20, Called Monachi de charitate, 27, a 10 white when and by whome begunne and brought into England, 26, a 60. Not priuileged as other churches couentuall were, 173, a 60. Dealt hardlie withall by king John, 162, a 40. Molested by king John diuerſe waies, 163, a 10. Of Norwich. ¶ See Friers.

Wore knight late vnderſhiriffe of London, now of Henrie the eight his priuie councell, 841, b 50. The paines he tooke to appeaſe ill Maie daies riot, 842, a 10, 20. Speaker for the commons, his oration and behauiour in parliment, 876, a 50, 60. Anſwereth the oration of Faber in Henrie the eights behalfe, 895, a 10. Lord chancellor, his oration in the parlement, 910, b 10, &c. An enimie to proteſtants, 913, b 60. Deliuered by the great ſeale, 928, b 10. Beheaded, a ieſter and ſcoffer at the houre of his death, 938, b 10, 30. In ſome ſort commended, deuoutlie giuen, in his kind, 939, a 20, 40.

Wore Edward. ¶ See Juſts triumphant.

Wore fields, ¶ See Archers.

Worgage of a dukedome for monie, 22, a 60. ¶ See Lands

Worgulſon the midwaie betweene Bullen and Calis, 1061, b 20

Woris his deuiſe for conueiance of Thames water, &c. 1348, b 50

Worleie lord appealeth the erle of Saliſburie, 513, a 50. He is mainpriſed, b 60. Slaine in battell againſt the French, 770, b 50

Worleis in Weſtaine ſworn by the earle of Surrie, 874, a 30.

Wortaigne. ¶ See Erle Wortaigne.

Wortalitie of people verie greuous: note, 157, a 10. ¶ See Derth and Deth.

Wortmaine ſtatute eſtabliſhed, 289, a 10. Required to be repealed, 293, a 30

Worton doctor an old Engliſh fugitiue, a ſtirrer vp of rebellion in the north, 1361, b 30. His ſecret ambaſſage from Rome, 1362, a 30. ¶ See Biſhop Worton, & Archbiſhop.

Wortimer and Iudeleie baniſhed, 269, b 10

Wortimer Hugh againſt Henrie the ſecond, 66, a 10

Wortimer king Henrie the thirds lieutenant in Wales, 475, a 30. His reuenge againſt the Welſhmen, 263, b 50

Wortimer lord of Wigmore proclaimed traitor, 338, a 30. In what fauour with Edward the ſeconds wife, 340, a 50

Wortimer earle of March proclaimed heire apparent to the crowne, 448, a 60, b 10. He ruleth all things at his pleaſure 347, b 60. Enuieth Henrie the fourths aduancement, 511, a 30. His good ſeruice in Ireland, 440, a 30. Apprehended in Nottingham caſtell, 348, b 50. Beareth the blame of euill counſell, 347, b 20. Attainted, and fiue articles obiected againſt him, 349, a 40. Committed vnto priſon in the Towre, 349, a 10. Breaketh out of the Towre: note, 334, b 60. Shamefullie executed, 349, a 60

Wortimers reſtored to the title and poſſeſſions of the erledome of March, 381, b 60

Woubraie earle of Northumberland, 17, a 40

Wountacute. ¶ See Erle.

Wountcaſter, now Newcaſtell, 11, a 10

Wountfort Robert, combatant, 67, a 20

Wountgomerie Roger earle of Shrewſburie, his ſpaſking and ſpoiling, 17, a 50, 60. Reconciled to K. William Rufus, 17, b 30. Knight paſſed ouer the ſea vnto the French king, his reward. 701, a 50, 60

Wountiole lord made generall of Cornate, 837, b 40. His ſtratagem, 965, b 50

Wountſorell betwixt Leiceſter and Loughburrow, 189, b 10. the caſtell beſieged, 199, a 60

Wulbraie Robert earle of Northumberland highlie commended, 13, a 40, 50

Wummerie roiall, 806, b 60. ¶ See Maske.

Wunition for warres, and of king Henrie the ſecond his ordinance in that behalfe, 104, a 40. ¶ See Armour.

Wurcherdach king of Ireland, 22, a 30. His reuerence to Henrie the firſt: note, 45, b 30

Wurren of cattell, 14, a 60. 21, a 30. 324, b 30. 249, a 60: note, 245, b 60. Vniuerſall, 43, b 60. Made fleſh deere, 323, a 40

Wurther committed in Suſſex by certeine gentlemen, and they executed: note, 954, a 10, 20. Of two capteins, notablie puniſhed by iuſtice in the deed doers, 1061, a 60. Moſt ſhamefullie shamefullie committed by the meanes of a gentlewoman whoare being a wife: note, 1062,b 40,&c. Mercifelle vpon the yong erle of Rutland: note, 655,b 50. Most lamentable of the lord Scales, 654, b 60. Shamefull committed by the lord Sturton, & he hanged: note, 1133,a 10,20. Intended against quæne Maries person, and the offenders executed, 1117,a 60. Of the marquelle of Montferrat, 134, b 40. Cruell of prince Edward, and how iustlie plagued and afterwards reuenged vpon the murtherers, 688 b 20. Of Henrie the first by the duke of Glocester, 690, b 60. Of the yong princes Edward the fift and his brother in the Tower, how dispatched, and how reuenged: note, 734, b 20, &c: 735, a all. Done vpon the prior of Shæne, 790, b 60. An earle arreigned for the same, 790, b 60. Committed vpon the king of Scots, 1109, b 60. Of a man by his premisse, 1213, a 10. Mercifelle done vpon a merchant, and the offenders executed: note, 1228, b 20, &c. Committed on the gaoler of Horsham, and the offender hanged in chaines, 1258, a 10 Most horrible committed by Anthonie Browne vpon George Sanders merchant, and the offenders executed: note, 1258, a 20, &c. Jt & other mischeefes by Peter Burchet, and he hanged, 1259, a 30 &c. Committed on a prentise & the offenders hanged, 1353, b 20. Of an vnnaturall brother committed vpon his brother naturall, 1270, a 10. Committed vpon a sargent, & the offender hanged vp in Cheape, 1310, b 60. Another at Tiburne for the like offense, 1311, a 10. Committed vpon a sargent and the partie hanged in Fleetstreet, 1348 a 10. Of one cost manie liues, 263, b 40. Heinous of a merchant stranger, 422, b 60. Done vpon Richard the second how abhorred of forren nations, 517, b all. Of Linlus how infortunatlie it fell out: note, 12, b 30. Committed at the high altar by an Jtalian: note, 275, b 30. For the which a yeoman of the gard was hanged vp, 812, b 10. Through couetousnes committed and punished, 937, b 50 Most vnnaturall: note, 605, b 40. Without mercie vpon a light cause, 118, b 40, &c 119, a 10, 20. Punished with a fine, 122, b 30. Jt & fellonie combined, 1228, b 30. Committed and the partie hanged on Mil-s end, 1271, b 50. Punished by the purse, 224, a 30 Most cruell committed in Westminster church, 420, b 10 &c, 60. Wilfull, & an act against mediation for the same, 472, b 60. Reuenged with murther, 13, a 30. Punished with hanging in chaines, 914, b 30. Will not be concealed: note, 944, a 30. Reuenged by women: note, 605, b 60. Cannot be concealed: note, 1065, a 60, b 10, &c. Not redæmable with monie: note, 1121, b 30. Henrie the eight refused to beare it, but put it ouer to triall by common law, 855, a 10. ¶ See Slaughter and Burning in the hand, Reuenge, Temptation.

Murther of ones selfe to preuent iustice: note, 1356, b 10. Desperat of the earle of Northumberland vpon himselfe being prisoner in the Tower: note, 1403, b 50, 60. The whole storie of the maner and order thereof, 1404, b 40, &c, to 1419. Desperat of ones selfe. ¶ See Halbe sword: note.

Murthers cõmitted by prests, 169, b 60.

Murtherer of his brother receiued into fauour, 98, b 40. Motions. ¶ See Blacke will.

Murtherers to be hanged by law, 115, b 10. Of Thomas Becket came to an euill end, 79, b 40.

Muscleburrow field. ¶ See Battell, Leith.

Muscouie a cold countrie: note 1083, a 60.

Musgraue a rebell, 943, b 60.

Musket of horsemen before king Edward the first at Grænewich: note, 1081, a 60, b 10, &c. Of Pensioners before quæne Elisabeth, 1211, a 60 Of Londoners before quæne Elisabeth at Grænewich, 1402, a 60, b 10, 1228, a 60. Merie triumphant before Henrie the eight, 947, a 40, &c, b 10, &c. At Grænewich before Q. Elisabeth, 1184, b 10

Mutinie in the English armie 250, a 40 973, a 40. 880, b 50. 1237, b 50. Towards, among seruingmen, 1017, a 40. Of souldiors against their captaine, 1140, a 30, Betwixt the Englishmen and the townsmen of Lisbone, 124, a 40, Betwæne the English souldiors and the people of Messina, 124, b 60. 125, a 10. Among souldiors with outragious disorder procuring execution, 1431, b 30 ¶ See Frate, Riot, and Souldiors.

Muttrell besieged by the English, 965, a 30, 60, The siege thereat broken vp, 966, b 10.

N

NAuar, the king thereof his gentle offer to the English, 813, a 40. His kingdome gotten to the K. of Spaine, b 40. King without a realme, and whie, 821, a 10. Hath Cherburg restored vnto him that was ingaged, 480, b 60. Taken by the Frenchmen, 398, a 40. Commeth ouer into England, his constancie suspected, 406, a 10. His rotall answer to the excommunication of pope Sixtus quintus: note, 1401, a 40, &c.

Naule rotall sent forth, 814, b 60 815, a 30. ¶ See Englishmen.

Naunts besieged by Edward the third, 364, a 60. By the Englishmen, 427, b 20.

Nauntwich in Cheshire burnt, 1356, a 30

Neal baron. ¶ See Mawpasse.

Necromancie. ¶ See Hed.

Neuill bastard Faucombridge, 689, a 50. A maister of mischeefe, 60, b 10, &c. Beheaded, 693, a 30

Neuill knight executed for rebellion, 953, a 60

Neuill discouereth the intended treasons of Parrie against quæne Elisabeth, 1585, a 10, b 50. &c. 1384, a 40, &c

Newes of heauinesse to Henrie the fift, 41, b 10. That sad duke William in a furie, 6, b 30. That made the people in a great feare, 6, b 60. From the east, 111, a 60

Newarke castell built by the bishop of Lincolne, 50, b 20. Restored to the bishop of Lincolne, 202, a 30

Newberie spoiled by the earle of Wiltshire and others, 653, b

Newholt a yeoman of the gard hanged, 812, b 10

Newcastell vpon Tine when founded, 12, b 10, Burnt by casuall fire, 241, a 60. ¶ See Montcalter. 11, a 10

Newgate builded, 540, a 60. Set on fire, 1132, a 10. The keeper whereof a stranger would haue murthered: note, 1132, b 30.

Newhall in Essex called Beaulieu, 852, b 30

Newhauen, the English fleete commeth afore it, 960, b 60 The French appoint to go out of it, 1200, a 60, b 10. A supplie of souldiors out of Essex arriue there, 1197, a 60, b 10. And out of Deuonshire, b 30. Greatlie infected with the plague, 1204, a 50. Articles of agreement touching the surrender, b 60. A new supplie of souldiors out of Northfolke, Suffolke, Wiltshire, and Glocestershire, 1203, a 10, 50. A fresh supplie of souldiors arriue there, 1202, b 20. An alarum thereto. 1196, a 60. Prises taken & brought thither, 1197, a 10, 20. A proclamation forbidding resort of souldiours thither without licence, 1202, b 40. The French king commeth to the campe lieng before it, 1205, a 60. The cheefe cause why it was yelded, b 10. Speciall persons that died of the plague there, b 20, 30. Pestilence transported thense to London, b 50

Newport besieged by Frenchmen, 771, a 10. Sacked and burnt by the Englishmen, 444, a 10.

Newyeares gift. ¶ See Gift.

Nicholson alias Lambert burned, 946, a 10

Nigell. ¶ See Neal.

Nightingale parson of Crondall in Kent, his blasphemie in the pulpit, punished by God: note, 1128, b 60, 1129, a 10

Noble. ¶ See Coine.

Nobilitie of England rooted out and beggered by duke William, 9, a 10. Faine to flie, because of duke Williams tirannie, 10, a 40. Their liuings taken awaie by duke William, 5, b 10. In arms against him and his Normans, 6, a 10 Hated of him and his people, 6, a 20. Forsake their natiue countrie, 6, a 20. In seruitude to the Normans, 1, b 50. Grieuouslie fined by William Rufus, 20, b 10

Nobilitie true described, 1266, b 10 Compared vnto a riuer or flood, &c: note, 1263, b 30

Noblemen and king Richard the second at debate, 458, a 30. Indicted of diuerse offenses, 457, b 20. Appeale one another of treason, 512, 513. That conspired against K. Henrie the fourth, 514, b 30. They come to Circester, the bailife setteth vpon them in their lodgings, they set fire on their lodgings, their discomfiture and shamefull end, 515, b 10, &c. They doo paie themselues, 516, a 30, 40. Beheaded for conspiracie, 516, a 50, 60. Conspiracie, namelie of the Nerfles against Henrie the fourth, 521, b 10, &c. 522, 523. Executed, 530, b 30. Complaine to king Henrie the third of the popes collections, 232, b 10. Reuolting from Lewis the French kings sonne, 199, a 30. Taken prisoners, 200, a 60. That rebelled, in what perplexitie they were, 198, b 40, Their minds drawne from Lewis the French K. sonne, 197, b 40. Offended at Henrie the third, and not without cause, 216, b 60. That tooke part with and against Henrie the third, 264, b all. Proclamed traitors by Henrie the third, 217, a 10. That reuolted from Henrie the third, 266, a 20. Disgrace Henrie the third in a parlement, 240, b 50. Of rare qualities, 1257, b 10. What fort and the wals of a realme, 1263, b 10. That went with the duke of Alanson ouer sea, 1329, b 50, 60, 1330, a 10, &c. Their vantgard distressed, they discomfited and executed, 688, a 40, &c. b 10. Diuers that stood against them executed, 464, a 20. At dissention, 451, b 40. Appointed to come in warlike maner to the parlement, 489, b 60. Apprehended imprisoned, and also indicted, 489, a 20, &c. At variance come to the parlement in armour, 439, b 10. Roughlie handled by Richard the second, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493. Against the duke of Summerset to displace him, 1057, a 20. 1058, b 10. Consult and also practise to diuert the succession of the crowne, and how euillie it proued, note: 1085, a 60, b 10, &c. 1086, 1087. Imprisoned for eating flesh in lent, 960, a 10. At doggers drawing and bloudshed within the Towre note, 722, b 10, &c. 723, a 10 Conspirators executed, 688, b 60. In armes against Edward the fourth vnder quæn Margaret, the place of their incamping, the ordering of their hoast, 687, a 60, b 40, &c. Conspire against Edward the fourth: note, 670, b 30, &c. 671, &c. At deadlie malice in Henrie the sixts time: note the whole storie, called to a treatie, brought to agree, 647, a 20. proclamed traitors, 650, b 60. Their letters excusatorie to Henrie the sixt, 651, a 60, b 10, &c. Atteinted, 652, a 10. That continued true and loiall to king John, 175, b 60. Begin to mislike the match which they had made with Lewis, 193, b 40. Dealing with Richard the second as touching his deposing, 502, a 20, &c. ¶ See duke of Lancaster. Reuolting from king John to king Lewis, 192, a 10. Mistrusted and charged with treason, treason,457,b10,60. Conker how to preuent the perils prætended against them, counsell taken how to deale against them, their messengers to the king, 458, a40,60, b20,50 The Londoners refuse to fight against them, the lords take an oth togither to prosequute their purposed enterprise, seeke the fauour of the Londoners, come before the kings presence in westminster hall, their answer and grieses, 459, a10,50,60,b30, 40, 60. The king represseth their doings, cleered of treason by proclamation,460,a10, 20,30. Temper to far with the kings matters, and impeach his royaltie, 452, b10, &c. Thirteene lords appointed to haue the gouernement vnder the king, 453,a10,60,b 10. Come to London with a great armie, 461,a40. Sent to the maior and citizens of London to vnderstand their meaning,462,a50. Enter into London, the kings words touching their procéedings, they refuse to come vnto the Tower, but after serch made they come before the kings presence, they open their grieses to the king, 472, b10, &c. Drowned, 41, b10. Die, 108, a20,230,b50, 228, b50 ¶ Sée Death, Shipwracke.

Noise, ¶ Sée Sound.

Norham castell besieged by the Scots, rescued by the English,782,b50,60. Diliuered vp to the Scottish kings hands, 825,b40,50

Norimbega. ¶ Sée Raleigh.

Normandie morgaged to William Rufus and for what, 22, b20. Townes therein yelded to Henrie the fift, 561, b20 Brought into Henrie the fift his subiection, hauing béene a long time from him deteined, 571,a30. Wonne by the earle of Anion, 55,a20. Inuaded by the French king, 39, b50 Subdued vnto England on that day fortie yeres past that William Conqueror subdued England to Normandie, 33, b10. Interdicted, 160,a60 137, a60. By the archbishop of Normandie,151,a60. Recouered by the French king after three hundred and sixtéene yeares keeping: note, 167,b60. Lost the state thereof, and the causes of the losse, 630,b50

Normans that came with William in the conquest of England, 2,b40. Rebell, but are subdued to their smart, 612, b 30. Willinglie sworne English,561,a10. Attend at Henrie the fifts his arriuall, 559, a 40. Vnder duke Robert vanquished, 33,a20,30. Inclined more to Henrie the first than to D. Robert,32,b10. Their rule and the Frenches ouer England ceaseth, 116, b40 Set vpon by the English admerall,290,b10. Their possessions confiscated, 232,b40 whie disherited, 232, b50 write to Henrie the third to take their part against the French, 210,a50. Preferred to clergie mens romes and liuings,9,a10. Rebell against duke William beyond the sea and soone subdued, 10, b60

Their fashion and guise taken vp of the English, 5, b10 They hate the nobles euen in the time of peace, 6, a20. Lieng in garrison at Yorke and their dismall date, 6, b60, 7, a 10. Pursued and slaine by the English, 6,b30. Giue the Danes the discomfiture, 7, a 40. Haue the nobilitie & communaltie in bondage, 1, b50 Plaie the diuels in wasting & spoiling, 17, a60. Slaine by the English at Worcester, 17, b10. Their line touching the heires male in whom ceased, 46, b10. ¶ Sée William duke of Normandie.

Norris generall with three and twentie ensignes, 1350, b20 Taketh the sconse of Lire, 1431, b60. Other exploits by him done against the enimie, 1432, a10, &c. 30

Northhampton besieged, 185, a 50. Taken by force, 266, b50

Northcountries pitifullie wasted by duke William, 7, b40

Northerne men discomfit the Welshmen, 672, b20. Spoile the towne of saint Albons, their valiantnes: note, 660, a 50. Rebellion and how suppressed, 942, a10, &c. 943, a10

Northerne pickers plaie the men, 818, a60

Northumberland an erledome, 1, a30. Rebelleth against duke William, & is subdued, 6, b10 Taken in possession of the Scots, 53, b30. ¶ Sée Malcolme.

Northumbers ouer whom duke William placeth and displaceth diuerse nobles, 13, a20 Kill Robert Cumin and his companie, 6, b30

Norton. ¶ Sée Rebels of the north.

Norwich how ancient, 1289, a 40. Besieged by the Normans, 11, b30. Sacked, 272, b 10. Sore defaced with fire, 796, a10. In commotion, their liberties seized into the kings hands, 626, a60, b10

Nottingham taken by the erle of Derbie, 92, a20. The castell, 6, a40. How seated, 60, b50

Nogent court yelded to Richard the first, 146, b10

Nowell Henrie. ¶ Sée Iulls triumphant.

Nun. ¶ Sée Chastine.

Nuns incontinencie, and displaced out of their house, 100, a10. Not to be godmothers, 30, b50

Nunries. ¶ Sée Abbeis and Religious houses.

O.

OBedience and what rigorous means duke William vsed to reduce the English therunto, 5, b10, &c. 6, a40

Oferie Richard to his father Henrie the second, 109, a60. Of the church of Scotland to the church of England, 97, b10

Occasion taken to inuade England: note, 19, b10 Taken of an inuasion, 212, b40, 50

Odo bishop of Baieux, gouernor of England in duke Williams absence, 5, a10, In armes against the earle of Cambridge, 11, a50. Conspireth against his nephue William Rufus, 17, a20. Erle of Kent, 13, a60. 18, a60. In armes against king williams friends in Kent, 17, a30. Is sent into Northumberland to reuenge Walthers death, 12, b20. Glad to submit himselfe for lacke of victels, 18, a10 Loseth his liuings in England and returneth into Normandie, 18, a10

Offendors couer their faults with contrarie causes, 1358, b 60

Offense. ¶ Sée Punishment.

Officer of the maior of London chosen shiriffe and lord maior, 764, b60. ¶ Sée Porueior, Sargent.

Officers called to accounts, and of their fraudulent dealing, 149, a10. Go beyond their commission: note, 139, a60 Of king John oppresse the people, 183, b50. About Henrie the seuenth abuse the common people extremelie, 792, b 10. The cause of manie mens vndoing and other trouble, 794, b10. Changed throughout the realme, 645, b60. Chosen by found abuse, 543, b40. Of the king of Spaine full of tyrannicall lordlinesse & villanie, 1335, a50. New made, 189 b40. Called to accounts, and restitution made out of hand with interest, 215, a30. In displeasure with king Henrie for their deceit, 216, b40. Called to accounts how they had spent the kings treasure, 218, b50. Punished for negligent looking to prisoners, 228, b30 Appointed in an vprore, 273, a 30. Displaced and others placed, 466, b40, 60. Committed to the Tower, and new made in place of old discharged: note, 360, b 40, 50, 60. Complained of to king Edward the third and punished, 369, b10. ¶ Sée Exchéker and Justices, Offices set to sale for monie, 142, b40. Claimed at the coronation of Henrie the fourth, 510, a20

Oldcastell knight accused of heresie, escapeth out of the Tower, 544, a20, 50. Shifteth from place to place, hath laid in watt for to be taken, 560, a60. Taken and wounded, executed, 561, b20, 40

Oneile the great of Ireland made knight, 808, a50

Opportunitie taken by the welshmen to inuade England, 21, b10. Not to be neglected, 694, a30. ¶ Sée Occasion.

Oppression punished: note, 256, b20. Of the poore communaltie whereto it grew. ¶ Sée Curses, Empson, Extortion Officers.

Orange prince commeth into England, 1126, b20. Taketh order for the intertainment of the duke of Alanson, 1330.

Oration of the earle Baldwine to king Stephans armie, 52, b50. Of the French king to a great assemblie he sitting in his royalties, 904, b 40, &c. Of the duke of Yorke made vnto the lords of parlement, 655, b20. Of prince Edward to the French king taken prisoner, 390, a30. Of the archbishop of Canturburie after the deposing of Richard the second, 506, a10, &c. Of the bishop of Elie lord chancellor to the lords of the parlement house: note, 419, b 40. Of earle Marshall of Norfolke in the assemblie of peeres, 192, a40. Of quéene Elizabeth why she made to the parlement house: note, 1395, a50, &c. Of the deputie of the states of the low countries vnto quéene Elizabeth: note, 1411, a60, b10, &c: 1412, a10, &c. In Latine and English of a Dutch minister to quéene Elizabeth being in Norwich, 1293, a40, b50. Of quéene Elizabeth to the vniuersitie in Latine, 1206, b60, 1207, a10, &c. Of quéene Elizabeth by waie of answer in the parlement house touching a motion of marriage, 1181, a 40, &c. Of Henrie the fift to the king of France, 576, a10. Of the duke of Buckingham to the maior of London, aldermen, and commoners in the Guildhall, 728, a60, b10, &c. Of Henrie the seuenth to his armie, 757, a60. Of king Edward the fourth lieng on his deathbed: note, 713, a50, &c. 708, b50. Of a French herald to Edward the fourth vttered with boldnesse of face and libertie of tong, 695, b40 Of the French king to an English herald, giuing him defiance, 695, b60, 696, a10, &c. Of Faber summarilie set downe, 894, b50. Of Empson to find fauor, 803, b60. Of Henrie the eight in the parlement house, 971, a20, &c. Of the French king before an honorable assemblie, and sauoring of displeasure, 902, b 60. Of sir Thomas Moore in the parlement house, 910, b 19, &c. Of two heralds to the emperor Charles, 899, a50. Of sir Thomas Moore in the parlement, 876, a50, 60. Of Tunstall made to the parlement, 876, a20. Of the archbishop of Canturburie in the parlement summarilie touched, 812, a60. Of Perkin Warbecke the counterfet vnto the king of Scots, 780, a50. Of cardinall Pole in the parlement house 1122, a60, b10, &c. Of quéene Marie in Guildhall to the Londoners, 1096, a60, 1097, Is touching the restitution of abbeie lands, 1127, b10, &c. Of archbishop Hubert of Canturburie vnto the lords at the crowning of king John, 158, b60, 159, a10 Of the bishop of Durham to his souldiors, 49, a60. Of the earle of Chester to the earle of Gloucester, 52, a10. In Latine & English of Stephan Limbert scholemaister in Norwich to quéene Elizabeth at hir being there, 1294, b40, &c. 1295, a10, &c. The same highnie commended by the quéene, 1296, a20

Orator proud & presumptuous, 567, a40

Order of the round table, the feast kept, 280, b60. Of the garter founded: note, and the cause thereof, 366, a50, &c.

Ordinances. ¶ Sée Clergie Ex officio.

Orkenie. ¶ Sée Englishmen.

Orleance besieged, a bulworke there taken, 599, a20, 40, The siege broken vp, 601, a50

Osborne with a navie out of Denmarke

Denmarke attrueth in England, and why, 6, b 50. Her is proffered great kindnesse of duke William to depart out of the north countries, 7, b 40, 50
Osmond bishop of Salisburie, made the service after Salisburie vse, 15, b 50
Osnete abbete when founded: note, 1080, b 20
Osseltrie town in Wales burnt thrise in three yeas, 1210, a 10
Osuike strongene slaine by a theefe, 13, a 30
Oth for the confirmation of peace between the two kings of England & France done by proxe: note, 675, a 10, &c. b 10. Of observing the league interchangable made and taken of Henrie the eight and the emperor Charles, 873, b 50. Most wicked and disloiall of noblemen against their king, 674, b 60. Falsified by the lord Granuill, 586, a 10
Of fealtie to prince Edward, 226, a 10. Not to infringe the statutes of Oxford, 261, a 50
Corporall received upon the holie mysteries and sword of Thomas Becket, 303, b 40. Of fidelitie to Edward the third, taken of the Flemings, 357, a 40. Concerning the peace betweene the king of England and France, solemnlie taken in parlement of the states: note, 395, b 10. Solemn of the second K of England to see peace performed, 394, b 40. Of the nobles to be true to prince Richard after his fathers decease, 411, a 30
Of rebels ministred unto all passengers, 430, a 50. Of the commons of Hertfordshire to Richard the second, 438, a 30
Of the gentlemen of Northfolke forced by the rebels, 435 a 30. Of the duke of Lancaster & Hereford combattant touching the iustnesse of his quarrell, 495, a 10. Taken of the two kings of England & France for the assurance of both their faithfull meanings 486, b 40. Of Richard the second to performe the noblemens orders, 465, a 40. Of the lords banded against the king, 459, a 50. Received of Leoline prince of Wales to Edward the first: note, 279, a 10. Of Edward the first in his anger to one of his nobles: note, 302, b 10. Of the French king to aid the sonne against the father, 87, b 10. Forced upon the lord maior of London, 338, b 10. Of Edward the second at his coronation, which hee said hee would not unswear, 326, b 50
Nothing regarded of Edward the second: 321, b 30. Exacted of Henrie the third by his nobles, 258, b 20. Of Henrie the third at a parlement with an imprecation: note, 248, a 60. Of Thomas Becket wherof he repenteth him: note, 70, b 10. Of the earle of Flanders 91, a 10. Of a cardinall not to prejudice the realme, 239, b 60. Given to the earle of Glocester by Henrie the third on his death bed, 276, a 40. Of the maior, aldermen, and communaltie of London sworne to Henrie the third, 264, a 20, &c.
Nothing regarded of the French king, 205, b 10. Of Lewes urged upon him by Henrie the third, 205, a 60. Of the traitor Parrie in a treasonable action, 1386 b 40. Interchangeable of the duke of Alanson and the people, 1342, a 50, 60 b 10. Of the duke of Alanson read openlie to the people, 1337, a 10. Of K. Richard the first at his coronation, 118, a 60. Received of the earle of warwike and other officers at Newhauen, 1196, a 30. Taken of the bishops & barons for their loialtie, 1, b 20. Of duke William at his coronation, 1, b 30. Of duke William solemnite taken and cruellie broken, 10, a 20. Of William Rufus by saint Lukes face, 27, a 60. Of the three estates of France, 578, a 30. Of the duke of Burgoigne with others to Henrie the first, 572, b 40, &c. 573, a 10. Iust and submission of the duke of yorke to Henrie the first, 639, b 60. Of the duke of Northfolke kept with the losse of his life, 759, b 10. Corporall of the earle of Richmond to marie Edward the fourths daughter, 745, b 10
Of the French king at an interuiew, 699, b 60. Taken of the nobilitie in Henrie the firsts time for their fealtie, 38, a 60. Taken of the lords touching the succession of the crowne, 43, a 10. Of Lewes the sonne of the French king when hee laboured to get the crowne of England, 191, b 60
Of pope Innocent died upon a complaint, 187, b 10. Of allegiance to be true to K. John against all other persons, 184 b 10. Of diuerse erls and barons of France to K. John to assist him, 160, b 30. Of K. John when his nobles were up in armes against him, 185, a 40, 50. Of the earle of Boicton Richard the first his nephue, 150, a 40. Of allegiance received of the people to Richard the first in his absence, 137, b 40. Of allegiance to K. Richard the first at a councell, 120, b 20. Of Lodoners to be true to king Richard the first and his heires, 131, b 30
Of the king of Cipres to Richard the first, and broken: note, 128, a 10. Of king Richard the first, & the king of France and their barons, 125 a 40. Of iustices of itinerants 98, a 10. Taken about a place of meeting, 113, a 20. A dispensation for the same, 66, a 60. Of purgation taken solemnelie: note, 83, b 30. Over all the realme to observe the kings peace, 148, a 20. Of fealtie, Saluo semper ordine suo &c, a 60. Of allegiance newlie taken, 173, a 50. Taken and broken for preferment: note, 43, a 10. Touching an act of establishing the crown taken of euerie person of lawfull age, 937, a 60, b 10. At & the sacrament taken but not ment to be observed, 680, a 60. Cruellie made and cruellie kept: note, 723, a 10. Of allegiance broken and notablie punished by God: note, 659, b 60. Added to a promise and the same performed, 14, b 30. Taken to be true to the king and his heires, 14, a 60. Of a noble man by his honor: note, 1214, b 30. Upon the euangelist to stand to the iudgement of holie church, 201, b 30. For restitution of heritages, rights, liberties, &c. 201, b 40. Inforced, absolued, 313, b 60. Made, broken, and punished, 418, b 50. With protestation in a case of innocencie: note, 458, a 10
Of allegiance confirmed by writing, 496, b 20
Oths that the dukes of Brabant were accustomed to take 1336, a 10. Corporall received for performance of agreements, 30. a 20 Of obedience willinglie taken to K. John, 157, b 30. Outragious order & discipline for them, 111, b 30 ¶ See Periurie, Promise and Vow.
Otwell an earls sonne, tutor to K. Henrie the firsts children 20, a 40
Ouse riuer: ¶ See Trent.
Owen Glendouer: ¶ See Glendouer.
Owen prince of wales slaine, 39 b 10
Owles deuoure mice: note a wonder, 1315, a 60, b 10
Oxford forsaken of the scholers 173, b 30. Verie forward in preferring queene Maries religion, 1102, b 10. Queene Elizabeths progresse thither, 1209, a 60, b 10. The strange sicknesse there at the assise, whereof iudges died, &c. 1270, a 40, b 10. Their maner of intertreining Albertus de Lasco, 1355, all. The maisters of the vniuersitie summoned to the parlement about the conclusion of a peace, &c, 255, a 60
The scholers thereof fight against Henrie the third, 167, a 10 ¶ See Debate, Frais, Statutes, Treason, & Variance.

P

Pckinton strangelie murdered, 944, a 20
Pagenels: ¶ See Painell.
Pagents and shewes sumptuous and sightlie, 849, a 10, &c. At queene Annes coronation 930, a 60, b 10, &c. Upon the sudden at a Candlemas tide, 853, a 60. At the coronation of Henrie the eight, 802, b 40, &c 803, a 10. Of neat deuise, 835, a 40. At queene Maries coronation, 1091, a 10, &c. In London at the comming of Philip and Marie through the citie, 1120, b 60. 1121, a 10
Of pleasant inuention, 808, a 60, b 10, &c. At the receiuing of queen Elisabeth into Norwich, 1289. 1290, 1291, unto 1299. In Antwerpe at the receiuing of the duke of Alanson, 1332, &c to 1344, a 10. Of triumph at the coronation of queene Elisabeth, 1172, 1173, 1174, 1175, 1176, 1177, 1178, 1179. At a triumphant iusts holden at westminster, 1316, 1317, 1318, 1319, 1320, 1321. at Christmas, 816, a 20. 812, a 20 807, a 40, &c 839, b 40. On a maidale, 809, a 20, &c. ¶ See Sights.
Paget lord. ¶ See Throckmorton Francis, and Erle Persie of Northumberland.
Painell kept the castell of Ludlow, 61, b 60
Palace of Henrie the eight at Guisnes described: note, 856, b 40, 50, &c. 857, all.
Palatine of Siradia, ¶ See Albertus de Lasco.
Palestine. ¶ See Holie land.
Palmer knight beheaded, his words at his death, 1090, a 50, 60
Palmesundaie field. ¶ See Battell.
Palsgraue of Rhene, his traine come to receiue Henrie the eight, 823, a 20. He and others come ouer into England, 947 b 60
Pandulph the popes legat, a practiser of much mischiefe against king John, 175, a 10, b 40. 177, a 10. Made bishop of Norwich, 202, a 60
Papists cruelitie against the martyrs in queene Maries time, 1363, a 40, 50. Their obiections that priests executed are but scholers and vnarmed, 1367, a 40, 50. They call the protestants heretikes and enimies to the crosse of Christ euen as Achab called Elias the disturber of Israell, himselfe being the onlie disturber 1125, a 60. Their prayers, & of what little effect they be, 1125, a 10. Animated by rebellion, 1054, a 10. By rebellion haue an ill opinion of Gods holie truth, 1054, b 10. Such as were neuer charged with capitall crimes, 1360, b 60. 1361, a 10, &c.
Paraphrase of Erasmus commanded to be had in churches 992, a 60
Pardon offred to conspirators and traitors, 650, a 10. Upon mistrust refused, 650, a 10. Offered to rebels: note, 431, b 60
At a parlement 396, a 10. Of six yeares and one hundred daies preached, 240, a 60. To Appletree hauing the halter about his necke, 1310, b 20. with exceptions at queene Maries coronation, 1091, b 80. Generall to all rebels conditionallie published, 1056, b 50. To the liuing, pitie on the dead, 688, b 30, 40. Generall proclamed, 942, b 20. No offense excepted, 765, b 20. By proclamation dispersed the Kentish rebels, 635, a 60. At a pinch for treason: note 627, a 50. Upon submission, 146, b 60 147, a 10. For prisoners at a womans suite obteined, 378, a 20. ¶ See Forgiuenesse and Parlement.
Pardoners two set on the pillorie: note, 774, a 40
Parrie sueth for licence to trauell beyond sea, 1385, a 30. Iustifieth himselfe in religion before the inquisitor of Millan, 40. Reioined in the vile plot of his trecherous demise 60. With what enimies vnto God he linketh himselfe, b 10. He boweth to vndertake the killing of the queene, 30. And resolued himselfe so to do, 60. Committed unto the custodie and examination of sir Francis Walsingham, 1383, a 40. Denieth with protestations whatsoeuer was demanded of him, 60. Examined before certeine lords of the councell, b 20. Committed to the Tower, 40. His discontentment because he might not haue preferment to his owne liking,60. Confesseth himselfe guiltie of all things conteined in his indictment,1389,b 20. His confession of treasons openlie read by his owne assent,1390,a 30. Iudgement giuen against him, 40. He chargeth the lords of the councell with vntruth, b 50. Reproued,60. His exclamation of outrage and vnpatientnesse,1391,a 40. Abuseth the assemblie with termes and words vncouth, 60. The forme of iudgement pronounced against him,b 60. Desperat,1386,a 60. How long his practise was in handling per it was detected,b 10. His oth in that ill matter,40. He chargeth Neuill with grieuous speeches of cursed disloialtie, 60. What moued him to attempt the murthering of the queene,1384,a 10. He counteth it a deed meritorious, 20. His pestilent humor of malice against hir, 50. How his traitorous practise should haue béene done,b 10. His resoluteneste to do it, 40. His voluntarie confession in the hearing of certeine lords, 60. Certeine obseruations out of his words and writings: note,1394,all. A dilemma proouing that hée died a pertured traitor,1395, b 10. An epigram of fit deuise for so vile a wretch,b 30, &c. Rageth at the iustice barre without all reuerence,1392,a 10. Euen at his execution hée seeketh to cleére himselfe,20,30. A description of him by linage and life verie lewd: note,50,60,b 10,&c.1393. His letters vnto queene Elisabeth and to the lords of the councell,after his voluntarie confession, 1387, a 20,b 10. His treasons practised against queene Elisabeth at full declared,1382,a 50 Described, reconciled to the pope,60. His malice groweth to an extremitie of mischiefe against queene Elisabeth, b 60. Saith and vnsaith, to shift of the heinie charge of his treasons, 1388, a 60. Conuicted,b 60. Arreigned,1389,all.

Paris, where Henrie the sixt was crowned,606,a 40. Henrie the fift received in there, 578, a 10. Edward the third draweth neare it with his power, the Englishmen lie before it, the suburbs burned, 393,a 50,b 10,30. For multitude of people it passeth, 1333, b 50. The duke of Bedfords entrance thereinto, and executing certeine conspirators, 586,a 60. The treason of the inhabitants,613,a 40. Yeelded to the French king, 613,a 60

Paris garden. ¶ Sée Slaughter.

Parishes. ¶ Sée England.

Parker afterwards archbishop of Canturburie, preacheth to the rebels of Northfolk,1030 b 30,40, 50. They threaten him, he conueieth himselfe from among them, 1032,a 10 ¶ Sée Archbishops of Canturburie.

Parkin. ¶ Sée Perkin.

Parlement holden at Blacke friers, 876,a 10. At Cambridge,465,b 40. At Couentrie,652,a 10. Made frustrate 659,a 30. At Gloucester, 421,a 30. In Ireland,481,b 40. At Lambeth,215,b 40. Leicester 591,a 40. London, 261, a 50. 251,b 30. 257,b 10. 250,b 60. Adiorned,251,a 20. 248,b 40. 238,b 20. 240,b 30. 246,b 30, 265,b 20. 274, b 10. 220,a 10. 202, b 10. 308,a 60. 280, b 40. 321,b 20. 351,a 10. 43,b 40. 54, b 20. At Marleburrough,274 a 20. At Merton in Surrie, 220,a 50. At Northampton, 97,a 60. 318, b 30. 428,b 20. 347,b 20. 143, a 40. At Nottingham,142, b 30. At Oxford,101,a 30. 209,b 50. 167,a 20. At Rone by the duke of Bedford,603, a 30. At saint Edmundsburie,301,b 30,627 a 20. At Salisburie,445,b 30. 302,a 60. At Shrewsburie, 282,a 60. At Westminster,278 a 10,283,a 60. 210,b 60. 220,a 60. 214,b 60. 229,a 50. 233,a 40 1225,a 20. 270,b 60. 208,a 20. 262,a 10. 207,a 30. 272,b 40. King Richard the second being in Ireland,481,b 40, 50. Crownes of England and France intailed to Henrie the sixt, &c: 678,a 20. with an atteindor and a pardon generall 762,b 20. Wherevnto queene Elisabeth and hir lords did ride,1377,a 20. 1315,a 50. At Winchester,259,b 30. 480,a 10 270,b 50. At Windsor, 96,b 40. 103,a 50. At Yorke 309,a 10. 332,a 10. 306. 350,b 10. Called by the duke of Bedford, Henrie the fift being in France,581,a 60. It and Richard the second at dissention 452,b 10. Called, Richard the second being prisoner in the Towre, 502,a 10. Called by the duke of Gloucester, Henrie the sixt being in France, 607, b 10. Dissolued, queene Elisabeth making an oration to the whole house,1396,a 50, &c. Wherein church liuings are restored: note, 1130, a 20. Whereat Philip and Marie are present, 1122, a 10. Of White bands,326, b 60. Parlamentum insanum, 258,a 60. Iniurious and offensiue,493, a 50,60. Determination concerning the intaling of the crowne,657,a 60. Of seuen weekes continuance,521,a 30 Called the laimens parlement,526,a 10. Long,536,b 10. That wrought wonders, 463,b 10. Of three estates of the realme,781,a 60. Whereto noble men are appointed to come in warlike maner,489,b 60. Summoned, and new lawes for the common welth enacted,764,a 40. Called the great parlement, 490, a 60. Called mercilesse, & of a head that spake then, 484, b 20. The lords sit in the house in their armour,439,b 10. Held on that time fiftie yeares that Edward the third was born, 395,b 60. 396,a 10. For the order of knighthood, 254, a 30. Prorogued,258,a 10. Maie hée deceiued,1124,b 60. And that the king of Scots came thither,97,b 60. Adiorned from place to place,631,a 30. At diuision: note,911,a 30,&c. 912, a 20. Great and solemne,255, a 60. Called the mad parlement,258,a 60. The first vse thereof in Henrie the first his time,38,a 60,b 40,39. The authoritie thereof, 1005, b 30, The causes and conditions thereof: note, 452, b 20,30. The authoritie of both houses granted to certeine persons,493,a 20. ¶ Sée Burgesse, Councell, Priuilege.

Parsonages with a decrée touching the same, 30,b 60

Pase doctor described, 871,b 60. His oration in praise of peace 848,b 40. Falleth out of his wits, 907,a 10

Pasport giuen to Anselme to depart the land,26,a 10. ¶ Sée Safe conduct.

Paten. ¶ Sée bishop Wainfleet.

Patents resumed into Richard the firsts hands by act of parlement, 143,b 50

Pate shall a frier Augustine & a wicklenist, forsaketh his profession, preacheth openlie against his order, publisheth a libell against his brotherhod, his fauourers,455,a 60, b 10.

Patience of the Englishmen in suffering all wants of releefe, 995,a 40

Patriarch of Jerusalem commeth into England, 108,b 10

Patrike an Augustine frier, seditious, and an enimie vnto Lancaster house, 787,a 20

Pauia besieged, and how the battell was tried,884,a 40,50 60,&c.10, &c.885,a 10

Pauier a contemner of the gospell and his shamefull end: note, 935,a 60

Paule abbat of S. Albons commended, 18,a 60

Paules church in London dedicate,225,b 50. The gates blew open with a tempest,1209,a 20 Church steeple finished, 204,a 10. It late at anchor, 979 b 30. Upon the wethercocke whereof stood a Duchman holding a streamer, &c. 1091, a 60. It is burnt by lightning: note,624, a 50, 14, b 10. Meanes made to repare it,1194,a 40,&c. Ten thousand pounds insufficient to repare it as it was at first, b 10

Paulet sir Hugh knight his answer vnto the constable of France, at the siege of Newhauen, 1203,b 10

Paulet William lord treasuror deceaseth, his ancient & honorable seruice, blessed in his children, 1228,a 30

Peace betweene England and France,1206,a 50. Concluded, 261,a 60, 832,a 60,b 10 Difficulties about the practise thereof, the French councell accord for it, the contents of the capitulation for it, 834, a 60,b 10,&c. Proclamed,892, b 10. Concluded & proclamed, 973,b 20. Moued,774,b 60 Commissioners sent ouer to Calis about the same, whie the English preferred it before war, a conclusion thereof betweene both nations,775,a 10,30,60. Treated of at Towres,624,a 60. Treated but not concluded, 568, b 10,&c. Conditionallie concluded: note, 1061,b 40,50,60. With a mariage, 161,a 50. After werie wars,146,b 50,60 40,b 60 480,a 40. In memorie wherof the chapell of our ladie of peace was builded: note,486, a 50,&c. b 20,60. Perpetuall treated, 474, b 40. 445,a 40 Treated but not obteined, 362,a 50,60. Treated by the ladie Jane de Valois, 360,a 30. Had articles drawne, 391, b 50 Commissioners appointed to treat thereabouts, 409, a 30. Concluded for one whole yeare,379,b 40. Conditionall at the moderation of the queene of England,336,a 30. 40. Treted by a cardinall, 295,a 10. Decreed by the pope, 308, b 40. Treated vpon by two duchesses: note,909,b 60 910, a 60,&c. Betweene the French king and the emperor treated but not concluded, 1129,a 50,60. Procured betweene the king of Spaine and France at the sute of the duchesse of Lorrane, 1151,a 60. Broken by the French king,&c. 402,a 60. Hard to be made betwixt Henrie the second and the French king, 113,b 60. Concluded betweene Henrie the second and the French king with much adw, 114,a 60. Treated betweene Henrie the eight, and the French, king by a legat from Rome, 882,b 40. Betweene Edward the fourth, and the French king & the same articulated,696,b 30,50,&c. Said to be made by the Holie ghost: note, 700, a 60. Betweene Henrie the sixt & the French king solemnelie treated at Paris, 611, a 20. Betweene Henrie the fift & the French king, & the articles of the said peace, 572, a 20, 60. 573, a 40, &c. Betweene king John and the French king after war, 160, b 40. Said to be moued by the popes Nuncios, 166, b 30. Betweene Richard the first and the French king, 121, a 30. Betweene Edward the third and the French king, after manie bloudie skirmishes, and vpon what articles, 394, a 10, &c. Betweene William Rufus and his brother Robert for monie, 21, b 10 Treated and proclamed after long troubles betweene Henrie the third and his barons: note, 268, a 60, b 10, &c. Painefullie procured by the countesse of Wales betwixt the king and the duke of Lancaster, 446, b 60. Betweene Robert and Henrie the first, brethren, 30, a 10. Of brethren, namelie Edward the fourth and the duke of Clarence, 682, a 10. Betweene Henrie the second and his sonnes, 89, b 10. Betweene the king of England and Scotland, 47, b 30. 50, a 60. with king John compounded for by the king of Scots, 173, b 10. With the Scots, 607, b 10. Betwixt Edward the first and Leolin prince of Wales vpon articles, 278, b 20, &c. 279, a 10 Betweene the king of England and the Scots with the charters of the same, 96, a 10 Sought by king John, but withstood of the French king, 167, a 40. Betweene the king of France and the king of Spaine solemnelie celebrated, 850, b 40. Betweene Lewis and Henrie the third after sharpe wars, 201, b 10. Of queenes by them procured: note, 291, b 50. Betweene the king of France and the duke of Britaine, with the articles thereof, 427, b 50 betweene king Stephan and Henrie Fitz empresse, after their long warres, 61, a 60. Betwixt the two factions of Burgogne and Orleance, 538, b 60. Sought for of Soldan Saladin to Richard the first, and concluded, 135, a 0, Betweene Charles of France & the duke of Burgogne, 611, b 50. And what mischeefe came thereof, 612, a 10, &c. Betweene the emperor Charles and the French K. 888, b 20, 30, &c. Henrie the eight, & the prince of Orange included in the same, whereat set all Christendome in a wondering, 889, a 40, 60, b 10 20. Treated vpon betweene the emperor Charles and the French K. 870, a 60. Betwixt the K. of Spaine & France, treated of, 1183, b 50. The articles thereof, 1184, a 10. Betweene France & Scotland proclamed, 1192, b 10, 20, 30. Articles of the same peace, the end thereof, with the commendation of the same, 1193, a 20, 40, 60. The praise and benefits thereof, 1054, b 60. A treatise thereof before an encounter, 10, b 40. Granted vpon mutuall conditions, 10, b 50. Made a pretense to execute inward malice, 10, a 30. Concluded to one partie dishonourable, 19, a 20. Sought but not wrought, 226, b 10. Contemned, and reuenge pursued, note, 204, a 40, 50. Concluded after much trouble, 273, b 40. And what a foule end an enimie thereto had, 206, b 40. Hindered by hard demands, 410, a 60, b 10. Solemnitie made, and rechiefly broken, 402, b 20, Wrought by the grace of the Holie ghost: note, 393, b 60. Dishonourable, 347, b 20. Hindered with stoutnesse, 352, a 20. Offensiue, 427, b 50, 60. Sought for but not admitted: note, 494, b 20. Sought but not obteined: note, 32, b 40. Persuaded, nothing preuailed, 146, b 10. Disaduantageable, 161, b 10. Displeasant, 30. After sharpe wars, and victorie: note, 572, b 20, &c. Sought for the supplanting of ciuill discord: note, 657, b 10. Procured by want of monie, 696, b 50. Begun betweene two, an occasion thereof betweene manie, 682, a 20. Sought after much malice & bloudshed betweene persons of great honour, 681, a 50. Called the womens peace: note, 909, b 60, 910, a 10, &c. Treated vpon at Cambrie, executed: note, 914, a 20. Concluded vpon articles, 98, a 40. After great troubles vpon conditions: note, 94, a 40, b 30. Broken of set purpose: note, 112, a 10. ¶ See Parlement.

Pœrs Alice is banished the realme: note, 418, b 50. ¶ See Perers.

Pœrs Gaueston earle of Cornwall, 318, b 40. Edward the seconds lewd companion, 318, 50. Married, 318, b 40. Accursed, 319, b 60. Hated of the noble men, and whie, 319, b 10. Banished the realme, b 60. The king his fauour towards him, made deputie of Ireland, placed in Banburgh castell, banished into Flanders, 320, a 10, 40, b 60. His sawcie abusing of the nobles, they assalt and take him, hee is brought vnto Warwike and beheaded, the king displeased at his death, 321, a 20, &c.

Penance at Pauls crosse, note, 943, b 40. 936, a 40. Of Anabaptists, 946, a 40. 1260, b 20. Of a most horrible offendor: note, 1558, b 50. Of fiue persons of the familie of loue, 1261, b 30. At Paules crosse by a spirit in a wall without Aldersgate, 1117, b 60. Of two wenches counterfeiting themselues to be possessed with the diuell, 1259, b 60. Of bishop Herbert, 26, a 50. That the regents and rulers of Oxford did at cardinall Otho his curse, 222, a 50. Inioined vnto the burgesses of Oxford: note, 181, b 40. Of the ladie Cobham for hir intended treason against Henrie the sixt, 623, a 10. Of doctor Barnes and two merchants of the Stilliard for heresie, 892, b 60. That a wrongfull iustice did, 284, b 60. With penaltie for murder: note, 562, a 52. Ridiculous: note, 484, a 30

Penbroke conjuror. ¶ See Sorcerer.

Pendleton doctor preaching at Paules crosse hath a gun shot at him, 1117, b 50

Penker doctor lost his voice in his sermon, &c: note, 725, b 40

Pensioners muster before the quéene Elisabeth, 1211, a 60

Peoples fauour fired when it is once gotten: note, 149, all. 150, a 10, 20. Is Henrie the first glad to seeke, and whie, 28, b 10. Great vnto the duke of Summerset, 1068, b 40. Sought by faire words, 17, b 30. Their furious reuenge for the death of one whome they loued: note, 12, b 60: What promises to purchase it, 8, b 40. ¶ See Commons.

Perers Alice Edward the third his concubine: note, 410, b 20 Banished the realme, 418, b 50

Perkin Warbecke was a long time taken for the yonger of the two princes whome Richard the third murthered, 734, b 10. The counterfet duke of Yorke, his redie wit to learne all that made for his preferment vnto honour, hee arriueth in Ireland, saileth into France all aflant, returneth vnto the ladie Margaret his first founder, named by hir the white rose of England, 776, a 10, &c. Counterfeteth the duke of Yorke verie cunningly, his true linage, his conspiring fautors, 777, a 20, 40, b 50. Sir William Stanlie his fauourer, 778, b 40. He attempteth to land in Kent, his men discomfited, his capteins taken and executed, he reculeth into Flanders, 779, b 40, 60. Saileth into Ireland, and is in sundrie opinions, hee marrieth the earle of Huntlies daughter, saith that he is Edward the fourth his lawfull sonne, telleth the Scotish K. how he was preserued & kept aliue, calleth the ladie Margaret his aunt, craueth aid of the Scotish K. toward the recouerie of the crowne of England from Henrie the seuenth 780, a 20, &c. His counterfet compassion, 781, a 40. Hee is faine to packe out of Scotland, his three counsellors, hee assalteth Excester, 783, b 50, &c. He taketh sanctuarie, his wife presented to Henrie the seuenth, all his partakers in their shirts with halters about their necks appeare before Henrie the seuenth, he is assalted in sanctuarie, submitteth himselfe to the K. and is strictlie seene vnto, 784, a 60, b 10, &c. Escapeth from his keepers, his confession as it was written with his owne hand, and read openlie vpon a scaffold by the standard in Cheape 786, a 10, 20, &c. 787, a 10. Hee corrupted his keepers, he is executed at Tiburne, 787, a 10, b 30

Periurie punished, 46, b 20. 680, a 60. By God 1262, a 20. Laid to William Rufus charge by his brother Robert, 21, a 40. ¶ See Oth & Promise. Laid to Henrie the fourths charge, 524, a 10. ¶ See Bassuling.

Perot sir Thomas knight. ¶ See Iusts triumphant.

Persecution in England ceaseth, and the protestants returne out of exile, 1181, b 50. ¶ See Martyr, Religion, Priests seminarie.

Perlie lord sent against the Scots, 303, b 60. Put to flight by the king of Scots, 315, a 10. ¶ See Conspiracie and Erle.

Personall ¶ See Maior and Officer.

Peson. ¶ See Wonder.

Pestilence, 473, a 20. In Calis, 803, b 30. Followeth famine, 1049, b 40. In manie places, specialliein London, 787, b 60. In diuerse parts of the realme, 704, a 60, That deuoured wonderfull multitudes: note, 703, b 20. Hot in London, 1211, b 60. In London, 961, a 40. 525, a 60. Among the soldiors at Newhauen, 1204, a 50. The cause that Newhauen fell into the hands of the French, 1205, b 10, 20, 30. Transported from thense to London, 1205, b 50. And what a consumption of people it wrought in the citie and suburbs: this was called the great plague, b 60. Like to haue increased, 1260, a 10, 20. In Germanie whereof three hundred thousand died, 1206, b 10

Peterburrough spoiled, 194, a 30

Peter pence forbidden to be anie more gathered in England, 397, b 20

Peter Landoise. ¶ See Landoise.

Peters William knight deceaseth, his charitie, 1227, b 50

Petitions three that quéene Philip made to hir husband on hir death bed: note, 404, a 20, 30, &c. ¶ See Demands and Requests.

Peto cardinall became a begging frier: note, 1365, b 10

Peuerell William disherited, 65 b 40

Philip his preparation to come into England, the English ambassadors meete him at saint James of Compostella, his arriuall in Southhampton, receiued of the nobilitie, interteined of quéene Marie, married vnto hir, what nobles were attendant on him, the conditions of their marriage, 1118, all. Installed at Windsor, he and she go through London to Westminster, 1120 b 50, 60. Passeth ouer into Flanders to incounter the French king, 1133, b 20, 1129 b 40. His returne into England, 1133, a 40.

Philip the hardie and whie so surnamed, 401, b 60.

Philip of Austrich, afterwards K. of Castile or Spaine, landeth in West parts of England, 792, b 40. His honorable interteinment, his vow inuiolablie kept, his death and description, 793, a 10, 50, 60

Philip the French king hired to procure peace betweene William Rufus and Robert, 21, b 10. Setteth Robert the sonne against his father William, duke of Normandie, 12, a 30. His iest at duke Williams lieng sicke, 14, b 20. His death, 34, b 60, 205, a 60. ¶ See French king.

Philip king Richard the firsts base sonne, slue the vicount of Limoges, 160, b 60

Philip quéene of England: ¶ See Quéene.

Philpot a worthie citizen of London and alderman, 419, b 60. Discloseth treasons, 428 a 60

Physician Lewes sheweth to quéene Elizabeth the whole conceit and deuise of knitting the house of Lancaster and Yorke in one, 741, b 50

Physicians counsell neglected dangerous to the death, 45, a 10, 20

Piemount prince commeth into England, 1126, b 10

Piers Exton. ¶ See Exton.

Pilgrime his scrip and staffe, 123, b 10

Pilgrims robbed and the theefe hanged: note, 122, a 20

Pilgrimage closed, 183, b 50 The holie pilgrimage, 942, a 20

Pilgrimages. ¶ See Images.

Pipes of lead vnder the ground to conuey water, and when the casting of them was inuented, 944, a 60. ¶ See Water.

Pirat Barton. ¶ See Barton, Campbell.

Pirats on the west seas taken and executed, 1258, a 10. Hanged at Wapping, 1258, b 40 1271, a 60, 1354, b 10, 20 ¶ See Clinton, &c.

Pirats had like to haue taken Henrie the fourth, 533, b 10 Followed so that they durst not peepe out, 537, a 30. To the number of twentie and two condemned and iudged to die, 1262, a 10

Pittie of Henrie the second to the poore: note, 115, a 50. Of Henrie the seuenth on a companie of haltered rebels, 784, b 40 b 40. Of Henrie the first notable: note, 691. b 20. Of king Henrie the fift: note, 560. b 60 Of Hubert de Burgh toward duke Arthur of Britaine in prison, 165. b 10. Of Edward the third towards the poore notable, 375. a 20. Of a queene of England vnto six burgesses of Calis: note, 378. a 20. Of captaine Randoll notable, 1205. b 10. Foolish in bearing with pardoning offendors: note, 1049. a 60. Of one the casting awaie of another: note, 41. b 30. On the dead, pardon to the liuing, 688. b 30. 40. Procureth perill. 423. b. 10. 20. ¶ See Charitie.

Plage called The great plage, asswaged in London, 1262, a 10. Threefold to the poore citizens. 1209, a 20. A natural prognostication therof, 1050. b, 30. Great in Essex, 480. b 60. In diuerse places of England great, 805. a 10. ¶ See Pestilence.

Plaie publike, and conference there to further the rebellion in Northfolke, but note the issue, 1028. b 20. 30. 1029. 1030. Of a tragedie in Oxford with misfortune. 1209. b 10.

Plaies and enterludes forbidden for a time, 1184. a 50.

Planets superiors coniunction, 484. b. 40.

Plantagenet the true earle of warwike a verie innocent, he is executed: note 787. b 20. 50

Knight deceaseth in the tower, the cause of his trouble, 955. a 60. b 10. &c. The last of the right line and name, 953. a 60. In whome that name rested. 703. b 20. A counterfet of the ladie Margarets imagining, 775. a 60. ¶ See Arthur and Earle.

Pledges that duke William led ouer with him into Normandie, 5. a 10. Scottish appointed to passe into England 1187. b 40. ¶ See Hostages.

Plentie and abundance: note 284. a 40. And dearth, 1123. a 30. Of vittels, but scarsitie of monie, 353. a 10. See Vittels.

Plimmouth burnt, 355. a 60.

Pocks wher of manie died 397. b 50.

Poer Ranulfe slaine, 106 a 20.

Poictiers battell when it was, 390. a 10

Poictouins reuolt from king John. 164. b 10. Send king Henrie the third word of their readines to reuolt from the French king, 207. a 10. Suspected to haue poisoned the English lords, 259. b 50 Discomfited, 217. b 40

Pointings knight lieutenant of Turnate, 825. a 10. Discharged of keeping it, 837. b 40 A valiant captaine sent into Flanders, 772. a 60. Sent into Ireland with an armie, his valiantnes and successe, 779. a 60. b 10. &c. His decease 969, b. 20.

Poisoning, a woman burnt for it at Tunbridge. 1262. a 60. And also at Maidstone, 1226. 40. Punished with boiling to death in hot water. 926. b 60. Practised, and the parties punished with standing on the pillorie, 1258. b. 40. For the which a wench was burnt in Smithfield, 1434. b 10. And execution for the same, 259. b 60. 260. a 10. Bewraied by the sweating of precious stones, 194. b 20. Of earle Scot of Chester with his wife. 220, b 60. Of the earle of Deuonshire, 646. b 60. In Italie practised: note 795. a 10. &c.

Polander, ¶ See Albertus de Lasco.

Policie whereby Compiegne was surrendered to the English. 587. a 60. Of the Parisiens to outreach the duke of Bedford, 586. a 6. Of the French in taking Pont de Larch, 629. a 20. In bueing peace of the English, 700. b 10. &c. Of Edward the fourth against his enimies, 684. a 50. Of Richard the third mischiefous and incestuous, note, 350. a 60. Ungratious & tending to the slaughter of princelie innocents, 739. a 20. Of the earle of Richmond in getting the sun at the backe of his souldiers, 758. b 60. To auoid a danger 748. a 38. Of Henrie the seuenth against sir Robert Clifford, 778. b 20. In sending forth espials into Flanders, 777. b 30. To preuent an intended mischiefe: note 536. b 20 Of duke Albert of Saxonie to get the towne of Dam, 772. a 20. Of the English archers against their enimies shot, 770. b 40. Of Henrie the seuenth to match suspected persons especiallie if they fled, 780. a In surprising the towne of Pont Meulan, a 10. b 10. For a bridge, 617. b 60. Of sir Francis the Arragonois, 619. b 10. Of Henrie the fift in the time of a commotion, 544 b 10. Oftentimes passeth force, 648. a 60. Of the earle of Huntington 617. Of Henrie the fift against the French horsemen, 553. b 10: note 564. b 50. For rediz bridges, 571. b 40, Of a priest fauoring conspirators: note 516. a 40. Of the earle of Westmerland, 529 b 40. 50. 530. a 10. Of the English against the Flemish 454. b 10. Of the French king against the English, 426. b 50. 422. a 60. Dastardlie of the French king to make Edward the third raise his siege from Calis, 375 b 30. Of the Scots discomfiting the English, 324. b. 60. Of a captaine against the welshmen, 236. a 60. a 60. Of the English, 295. a 60. Of the duke of Guise against the English, 1135. b 20. Of the French to make bridges 1138. b. 60. To restraine the people at the duke of Summersets execution, 1067. a 60. b 50. Of a yeoman of the gard a rebell whereby he gat pardon. 844. Of Scattergood a guner to deceiue the French 1192. a 60. Of Frenchmen disguised in womans aparell, 1188. b 50. Of warre by the Kentishmen, 2. a 20. Of the French to giue the English a repulse, 1191. a 50. Of duke William in making a part of England waste, 11. a 40. Of the French king to get possession of Vernueil. 8. 88. a 50. ¶ See Dissimulation, Stratagem.

Pomfret castle rendred to Edward the second, 331. a Pontoise surprised by the Englishmen, 570. a 30. Recouered by them, 17. a 40. Besieged by the French king but valiantlie defended, b 20. Gotten by French, 618. a 30

Pont Meulen surprised by entrance of a common priuie, 610. b 10

Pontorson rendered vnto the Englishmen, 895. a 30.

Poole Cardinall. ¶ See Cardinall Poole and Pope.

Pope Adrian, 274. a 40. An Englishman borne. 66. a 50, His election to the popedome wondered, and why, he commeth to Rome, 871. b 30 50. His creation, corruption of the cardinals in his election corrupted with manie vices, 767. a 40, 50. b 21. His pride: note, 69. a 40. His grant to make John king of Ireland, 101. a 30. Maketh profit of his great pardon or heauenlie grace, 788. a 60. Letters for the relefe of the Holie land, 104. b 50. Fatherlie words to archbishop Lanfranke: note 9. a 50. Depriueth bishops and restoreth them, 9 a 40. Heareth the contention for the primasie betweene the archbishops, 9. a 30. Sent commissioners into England, 8. b 60. He and the emperor Frederik at debate, 75. b 10. His answer to Beckets complaint, 73. a 30.

Pope Bonifface prohibiteth Edward the first further to vex the Scots, 309. b 30.

Pope Calixtus held a councell at Reimes, and consecrateth the archbishop of Canturburie with his owne hands. 40 a 50. A suror for archbishop Thurstane 40. b 40. His curse against both archbishops of Canturburie and Yorke. 42. a 10.

Pope Celestine a friend to archbishop Geffreie of Yorke, 130. b 20. Maketh an archbishop of Canturburie legat of all England, 147, b 50.

Pope Clements reformation in England, 315. b 40. And what summes of monie are had of the archbishop of Yorke: note 315. a 30. Procureth a peace for one yeare betwixt the two kings of England and France, 379. b 40. Sent two cardinals to accord the two kings of England and France, 377. b 50. Letters in fauor of the bishop of Elie, and how he defendeth his chapleins, 132. a 60. Sendeth Henrie the eight a golden rose. 883. a 60. Pretended a title to the realme of Sicill, 124. b 60. Requireth Henrie the eight personallie to appeare at a generall councell, 930. a 10. Taken prisoner by the emperors armie. 1365. a 30. Deceseth, more infortunat than fortunat, 935. b 10. His death preiudiciall, 131. b 60

Pope Eugenie sendeth a legat to treat a peace betweene the two kings of England and France, 607. a 50

Pope Gelasius the second his death. 40. a 10.

Pope Gregorie sendeth the bishop of Rauenna to treat a peace betwixt England and France, 408. b 50. Messengers sent to him about reseruations of benefices, b 60. 409 &c. Denied to be true pope: note, 225. a 60. Sendeth cardinall Otho into England, 221. b 30. His meanes to moue the people to a iornete against the Saracens, 209. b 40. Disgraced by the cardinall of Burges, 514. b 60

Pope Hadrian his plaine song, wherevpon was great strife, 13. b 30. His bull against the hearing of a married priests masse, 11. b 60 Deposed by king Henrie the seuenth, 1364. b 10. His faculties granted to Parsons and Campian for England, 1362. b 60. Parrins letters to him, & wherto they tended, 1389. a 50. A lewd sermon and full of papisticall adulation made at his funerals, 1397. b 40. &c, 1398. &c. vnto 1400. Deceaseth, 1397. a 20. His new kalendar touched, 30. 40. &c.

Pope Honorius, his legat a bawdie knaue sent into England about reformation, 42. b 40. His legat to king Henrie the third, 208. a 10. Maintainer of king Johns cause, 193. b 50

Pope Hildebrand the first that made warre against the emperor, 1364. a 40

Pope Innocent summoneth a generall councell, 236. b 20 His request for maintenance of the warres against the Turks, 164. a 20. Offereth to king Henrie the third the kingdome of Sicill, 250. b 20. And hath England tributarie, 177. b 20. Would not confirme archbishop Reignolds of Canturburies election. and why, 169. a 60. His answere to the English ambassadors, 187. a 60. b 10. His licence to king Richard the first to gather riches, 120, a 60. Commandeth that the church of Lameth should be raced, 154 a 30. His councell held at Cleremont, 44. a 50. He sindeth fauor at king Henrie the first his hands, and is thankfull, 44. a 50. Sendeth cardinals about a treatie of peace, 391. a 30. Aided with monie by king Henrie the third against the emperor, 224. b 30. Deceaseth, 193. b 50. 274. a 30

Pope Julies election, a description of his qualities, and how he came to the popedome, 811, b 30. &c. Sendeth king Henrie the eight a cap of maintenance, &c. Compared to Anteus, his purposes and death, a malcontent, 830. b 10. &c. Intituleth king Henrie the eight Christianissimo, his daughters request, a description of his properties, 831. a 20. 50. 60. Gaue cardinall Poles authoritie apostolike. 1123. b 10. Dieth, a porkish pope, his monstrous blasphemie against God about a peacocke, 1128. a 10. &c, 50.

Pope Leo the tenth his creation, 831. b 60. His coronation, a poore prisoner on the same dale twelue moneth of his election and inthronization, 832. a 10. 30. He soliciteth all the princes of christendome against the Turke, 846. a 10. Receiueth two elephants for a present: note, 837. b 10. His craftie feare, 845. b 30. His decease supposed by poison, the maner and order of his death. 871. a 40. &c

Pope Martine legateth the bishop of Winchester & vnlegateth him againe, 602. a 60. b 60

Pope Otho bone named Adrian the fift, 274. a 40

Pope Paschall his bulles vnto Anselme of Canturburie, 27. b 60. Grieued because his authoritie is not regarded in England, 37. b 20. Courteouslie receiueth the English ambasambassadors, 31. b 20. Authoriseth Anselm to order things to his owne liking, 34. a 10. His stout words to bishop Warwast touching the inuestiture of churches, 31. b 50. Hath the determining of the strife about bishops inuesting and consecrating, 31. b 10. Writeth most courteouslie to king Henrie the first in Anselms behalfe, 32. a 10 Sicke at Beneuento, dieth, 40. a 10

Pope Paule a Romane borne created, 935, b 60

Pope Pius, an ambassage to him out of England, certeine notes concerning him, 794. b 50. 60. His bull against queen Elisabeth, the effect thereof, 1359, a 60. The practises of traitors to execute it, b 10. 20. Harts confession of the interpretation thereof, 1363. a 10. His bull seditious hanged on the bishop of Londons gate, 1221. a 20. &c. A treasonable action, 1366. b 20

Pope Sixtus Quintus successor to Gregorie the thirteenth, excommunicateth princes, and is by them defied, 1401. a 10

Pope Urban in mislike with king William Rufus, and why: note, 24. b 30. His legat for the crowning of erle John king of Ireland, 110. b 20. Why he could not redresse the English enormities, 18. b 40. Calleth a councell at Clermont and why, 22. a 40. Giueth faculties to a frier Carmelite, 455. a 60. His beneficiall pardons to such as would fight against Clement antipape: note, 441. a 60. b 60. 442. a 40. Sendeth to Richard the second for aid against an antipape, 421. a 50

Pope Wibteth aduanced by the emperor against pope Urban, 24. b 20

Pope sendeth a frier minor into England to restore Henrie the thirds halfe brethren to their possessions, 261, b 50. His nuncio commanded to auoid the realme, & sent awaie, 237. a 10. 30. Allowed eleuen thousand marks among them of the spiritualtie, 239. b 50. Out of fauour with the lords temporall of England, 211. a 10. Sendeth his legat to pacifie Henrie the third and his nobles, 271. a 20 Complaineth to Henrie the third, and blameth him, and commandeth offendors to be cursed, 214. b 20. Requireth maintenance for his warres against the emperor, 210. b 60 His demands out of spirituall liuings in England, 208. a 40 50, &c. Lacketh monie to maintaine his estate: note, 208 a 40. His chapleine inhibited to leuie monie, 315. b 30. Exhorteth king Edward the first to make war against France, 311. a 60. His decree of peace betwixt the king of England and France, 308. b 40. His request for the releasing of John Baliol, b 40. Intermeddleth in princes matters, 297. a 10. 20. Destroys of peace betweene the kings of England and France: note, 388. b 40. His pretended right to be iudge for the title of the realme of Scotland answered: note, 309. b 60. 310. a 10. &c. His letters & the deliuerers of them hanged, 392. a 20. Sendeth two bishops to the prince of Wales, 383. b 50. Interdicteth Flanders, 358. a 10. Taketh vpon him to bestow and deale in benefices at his pleasures: note, 365. a 60. b all, 366. a 10. Sendeth a bull for the apprehension of Wicliffe, 419. a 20. Two at diuision for the dignitie of S. Peters chaire, 484. b 50. Sendeth his nuntio to Richard the second: note whie, 474. b 60. A disputation betwixt diuines of Oxford and Cambridge for their obedience to him, 534, b 50. 60. Beareth out the monks against the king & the archbishop of Canturburie, 155. a 50. Offended at king Richard the firsts imprisonment, 138. b 40. Into what a lamentable case he brought king John and his nobles, 186. b 20. 30. 40. His messengers to perswade the K. of England & the French king to peace, 146, b 10. Sendeth to take awaie the interdiction vpon conditions, 181. b 20. He & king John reconciled, 178. b 40. His decree and inhibition contemned, 187. b 30. Threateneth interdiction against king John and the clergie, 171. b 60. 172. a 10. Dismisseth two archbishops at strife, and electeth a third, 170. b 60. His dispensation for a marriage: note, 160. b 60. Giueth sentence with the monks of Canturburie against the bishops, 170. b 10. 20. Interdicteth France and Normandie, 160 a 60. Sendeth his nuncio to France, 166, b 30. He dispenseth for an oth of allegiance broken by the duke of Yorke, 659, b 60. Sendeth Lionell bishop of Concordia to the French king, 771. b 10. Poisoned with the wine that his owne sonne had sent to poison another, 795, a 40. He and the states of Italie in a league, abandoned of all hope, compoundeth with the imperials a hard article and to be marueiled how he might breake it, the castell where he was prisoner infected with the plague 893. a 20, 50. 60. b 20. He & the emperors agents at accord, a heauie paiment for him to discharge, the manner of his going out of prison, 902. a 20. 30, 60. He by the instigation of cardinall Pole intendeth mischeefe against England, 946. b 60. His supremacie denied in sermons, 937. b 10. Curseth Henrie the eight & the realme: note, 936. a 60. His authoritie banished out of England by proclamation, 914. b 40. He with certeine cardinals flie to the castell of S. Angelo, 896. a 50. His legats scrape and rake monie togither for him: note, 226. a 30. &c. Hath Henrie the second in a seruile subiection: note, 83. b 50. 84. a 10. His forces vanquished in Ireland, 1367. a 40. The cause of rebellions in England and of treasons: note, 1366. b 10. His curses no hinderance of Englands prosperitie, 1366. a 40. Not to be suffered to make rebellions in England, 1365. b 40. Kings of christendome neuer suffer him to abridge their titles or rights though they suffer him to haue rule ouer their people, 1365. b 10. And that kings of France, Spaine, and England haue beene against him: note, 1365. a 40, 50. 60. Haue cruellie persecuted emperors: note, 1364. a 60. His title of vniuersall bishop is a preamble of antichrist, 1364. b 60. His authoritie not warranted by Christ or his two apostles Peter and Paule, 1363, b 60. His bull & the maintainers thereof onelie condemned of treason, 1361. b 20 Supremasie, no person for the onelie maintenance thereof charged with capitall crime 1361, b 10. Sendeth aid to the earle of Desmond, his banner erected: note, 1314. b 40. His bull, a full proofe that the maintainers thereof are directlie guiltie of treason: note the words of the bull, &c. 1362 a all. His dutie what it is not, and what it should be, 24. b 40 His decree for confirmation & benediction, 256. a 50. Mens deuotion to him waxeth cold, 253, b 50. He is liberall of another mans purse, 250. b 60. Offereth the kingdome of Sicill to earle of Cornwall, 247. a 40. Complained of to Henrie the third, the king writeth vnto him, 232. b 10. A collect to be said for him, another for his election, a woman imprisoned for not praieng for him, 1128. b 20. 40. 50. In enimie to peace except he might haue his owne will, 226. b 10. Sendeth for monie to maintaine his wars against the emperor 233. b 20. His letters intercepted & staied, 236, b 30. He & French king allied, 847. b 30. His decree that all spirituall men dieng intestat their goods should remaine vnto him, 238 b 60, 237. &c. Requireth the French king to make war against England, the French king refuseth so to do, 238. a 20 Sendeth for the third part of one yeares profit of euerie beneficed man resident, 239. b 10. Maketh void the election of archbishop Mepsil, 213, b 30 Sueth to Henrie the third for licence to soiorne at Burdeaux 243. a 60. His presence more like to impaire than amend things, b 10. His bull read at Paules crosse, 263, a 10. His grant authorising the bishop of Lincolne to institute vicars in churches impropriat 246. a 40. 50. Hath six thousand marks giuen him for a moderation: note, 244. a 40. Consecrateth William Raleigh bishop of Winchester, 231. b 60. He and king John at strife, and why, 171. all. Two die in one yeare, 229. a 10. Sueth vnto Henrie the third for his good will in benefices to bestow on his friends. 238. b 40. ¶ See Antipape, Cardinals, Legats, Mariage, Rome.

Poore of three degrees, which to be cherished, & which to be punished, 1082. a 50. &c. And in what places, b 10. &c. Their necessitie relieued by Gods prouidence, 1129. a 60. b 10. Prouision of corne for them, 1092. a 50. Prouided for in time of scarsitie, 381. a 50. 60

Portingall prince commeth to London, 589. b 60

Portingall king sendeth aid to Henrie the fift, 566. a 20. Aided with an armie out of England against the king of Castile, 429. a 40. He with duke of Lancaster inuade Castile, 450. a 30. Sendeth six gallies to king Richard the seconds aid, 448. a 10. Deceaseth, an obsequie for him, 1134. a 10

Portgreaues, and the reason of the name. 120. a 10

Posie of the duke of Flanson, 1337. a 10. &c. Interpreted, 1340. a 10

Praier and inuocation to God before battell enterprised: note 371. a 60. Of queene Elisabeth as she went to hir coronation, 1180. a 10. Superstitious of the Scots in a time of mortalitie among the English. 423. a 20

Praiers vsed by housholders in the suspicious & troublesome time of duke William, 5. b 50. 6. a 10. For queene Marie being with child that she may be safelie deliuered, 1125. a 20. 50. &c. 1126. a 40. ¶ See Collect, Papists, and Saints.

Preacher at Paules crosse hath a dagger throwne at him, defended by the gard, 1089, a 60. b 10. 20, 1090. a 20. Hath a gun shot at him, 1117. b 50 Popish blasphemie in the pulpit, and how seuerelie punished by God, 1128. b 60.

Preaching of pardon at the shew of a relike, 240. a 60. To moue christians to make a iorneie against the Saracens, 209. b 40. Of a cardinall, 316. a 10. Of the archbishop of Canturburie at the deposing of Edward the second, 340. b 10. Of Cementarius incensing K. John to crueltie, 173. b 60. God wanting, was the cause of rebellion in Deuonshire, 1015. a 10. ¶ See Recantation and Sermon.

Preferment without looking or seeking obteined, 18. b 60

Premunire statute begun, 409. a 60. Whereof followed losse of goods, 951. a 50. A cause of malcontentment: note, 927. b 60, 928. a 10. ¶ See Woolsele.

Prentise hanged in London for killing his maister, 1213. a 10 Killed, & the offendors hanged, 1353. b 20. ¶ See Riot.

Present of Cambridge vniuersitie to queen Elisabeth. 1299 a 10. Of a Dutch minister to queene Elisabeth at Norwich, 1293. b 30, 1294. a 60. b 10. Of white wine and a bull offered to king John, 174. b 10. Sent by the Rhengrane to the earle of Warwike, 1197. b 50. That the emperor Charles sent to Henrie the eight, 882, a 40. ¶ See Gift.

Presents rich & sumptuous sent to Henrie the third, 212. a 30

Priest excommunicated for incontinencie, 242. a 60. Committed a shamefull murther, 173. a 30. Killeth a frier being prisoner, 568. b 20. Executed for treason, 947. b 50. Hanged for fauouring of rebels, 943. a 60. b 10. Murthered, and the murtherer hanged in chaines, 814, b 30. A beliant soldior, 988, a 10. Hassling ridiculouslie scorned, 1102, b 50. Seditious. ¶ See Simon.

Priests that were hunters an act against them, 97. a 60. Their concubines forbidden christian buriall, 207. b 30. 40 &c. Religious men hardie souldiers, 443. a 60. Their sonnes not to succeed in their fathers benefices, 30. b 30. Marriage forbidden & why, 30. b 10. 20. Prohibited to marrie and to keepe women, 37. a 20. Sequestred from their wiues, 34. b 20. Married in what respect to be excommunicated, 30. b

Should

Should not haunt alehouses, and of their apparell, 30.b 30. To weare crownes, 30. b 40. Ill in Normandie excommunicated and whie, 37.b 30. Unchast how punished, 43.b 40. Of Rome taken in bed with a whore: note 42.b 60. Favoured by the establishment of a statute, 54.b 50. To be arrested offending in forrests, 153. b 60. Used for privie messengers, 68. b 40. Hated of king John: note, 172.a 60. Their children legitimated by parlement, 1062 a 60. ¶ See Ball, Clergie, Monks, and Policie.

Priests seminarie as Campian, Sherwin, Kerbie, Rishton & others indicted of high treason: note well, 1322. a 50. 60. Condemned, 1326. Their behaviors at their execution, 1328.b 60. 1329. a 10. Of a miracle (forsooth) on the daie of their death. ¶ See more of them, pag. 1357. a 60. &c. to 1368. 1413 a 50. Banished, and how courteouslie used, by their owne report, 1413.b 50. 60. Executed at Tiburne, 1434.b 50. 1559.b 60. Died for treason and not for religion, 1361.b 40. Not to be compared to the martyrs that died in Q. Maries time in number, 1363. a 40. 50. Their practises to execute the popes bull, nurseries erected for them, their secret comming into the realme to induce the people to obeie the said bull, 1359.b all. Ford, Short, and Johnson, arreined and condemned, with their behaviors and speeches at their death, 1344. 1345. Of Kirbie, Filbie Cotcham and Richardson, 1345. 1346. 1347. ¶ See Jesuits, Scholers & Treson.

Prest monie demanded of the citie of London for queene Maries behoofe, 1090, b 50. Of twentie thousand pounds to queene Marie out of London, 1142, a 30.

Presumption of the archbishop of Yorke, 98. 20 Of Anselme 24. And of Ramulfe bishop of Chichester, 26. a 20. Of cardinall Otho, 224. a 10. Of an oration in French to Henrie the fift: note, 567, a 40. Of a cardinall, 182. a 20. Punished in posteritie, 41. b 40. ¶ See Pride.

Pride of Henrie, crowned and served of his father, 76, b 10 Of prelats misliked by king Edward the first, 316. b 20. Of the erle of Leicesters sons bringeth the barons to confusion, 270. b 10. Of the French procureth them hatred, 198. a 10. Of the duke of Orleance, 524. Of Hugh Crelhingham, 305. a 20. Of Pandulfe the popes legat notable, 177, a 10. Of pope Alexander, 99. a 40. Of great ruffes reproved and reformed in a seruingman, 1315. a 20. 30. Hath a fall, 147. b 40: note, 132. a 10. ¶ See Ambition, Contention, 133. a 60. Presumption, Wolsele.

Primasie. ¶ See Archbishops.

Prince of Wales alwaies the kings eldest sonne, 1141. b 60

Printer executed for seditious bookes, 1357. a 40.

Printing first inuented, 648. b 60

Prior Jehan bringeth aid to the French king, 815. b 40. Lieth in Blanke sable baie with his power, he loseth one of his best soists, a consultation about the assaulting of him, the admerall roweth into the bate where he lieth, 816. a 60. b 30 40. 50. 60. Landeth in Sussex with the French gallies, he is driuen to his gallies, 817. a 10. Driueth on the borders of Sussex, burneth the towne of Brighthemstone, with other mischiefes, he is shot into the eie with an arrow, 831. b 20. 50.

Priors executed for treason, 938. a 30. ¶ See Abbats.

Priories suppressed, 948. a 10.

Prise rich taken by the earle of Warwicke, 648. b 50. Of wines to the quantitie of two hundred tun, 1196. a 50. More 1197. a 20. Of foure hundred tun of Gascoigne & French wines, 1211. a 20

Prises taken by Frenchmen of about fiftie thousand crownes value, 1199. a 10. 30, 40. Of French goodes taken by the westerne ships, 968. a 20. ¶ See Greenfield.

Prisoner shifting to escape breaketh his necke, 228. b 20. Escaped and the shiriffe of London is punished, 251. b 60 Rescued by an officer, and the rescuers punished: note, 260. a 50. Carefullie seene vnto: note, 376. a 60. Faithfull, a notable example, 423. a 50. Chained in gieues made of siluer, 128, a 10. That should haue bene hanged his good seruice, 770. b 30. Brake from the sessions house: note, 906. b 10

Prisoners French mercifullie vsed: note, 550. 60. Pittifullie slaine, 554. b 60. Taken in wars and slaine, 608. b 60. Discharged, 1088. b 60. Slaine by French as they were taken, 601. b 10. Of the Marshalsei breake out, 792. a 10. Sold in open markets: note, 819. b 40. Scottish of name taken by the English, 989. a 40. Deliuered out of the tower, 1127. a 10. Released, 95. a 20. Set at libertie by duke William before his death, 14. b 50. Released in an vprore, 273. a 30. Arraigned for not comming to the church, 1322. a 40. Proclamations for the lawfull taking of them in warre, 1200. b 10. 40. Set at libertie at William Rufus coronation, 16. b 10. Taken diuers nobles & gentlemen of France, 200. a 60. Beheaded, 133. a 30. Released without ransome, 201. b 10. Set at libertie out of the tower by the Londoners, 338. b 50. 60. A conspiracie to set them at libertie, 333. a 30. Honorable intreated by the prince of Wales: note, 390. a 10. &c. Taken in the warres how honorable intreated by Edward the third, 379. b 10. 20. Set at large by rebels, 430. b 50. Saued from the gallowes at a womans sute, note, 378, a 20. ¶ See Fines.

Priuilege of the parlement. ¶ See Burgesses.

Priuileges and freedomes reuoked by duke William, 8. a 20. Ecclesiasticall defended against Henrie the first & his nobles, 637. a 20. 30. ¶ See Liberties.

Procession in English, 963, b 30

Proclamation against the popes authoritie in England, 914. b 40. &c. Traitorous read and the reader apprehended, 1132. b 60. Beaute and precious, 664, b 40. Of Henrie the first for the taking of Jacke Cade the rebell and his fellowes, 635, b 10. &c. For the lawfull assise of bread, 166, a 20. That all English beneficed men in Rome should returne into England. 474. b 50. 60. Clearing the lords of treason, 460. a 40. For the auoiding of Irishmen, 481. a 40. Touching monie: note, 309. a 20. To auoid strangers. 202, b 40. Against purueiors, 259, b 20. That none should depart out of the realme 20. b 40. Against the familie of loue, 1314. a 60, b 10. For the free traffike of merchants as before, &c. 1267, b 10. ¶ See Inclosures.

Prodigalitie of duke Robert of Normandie: note, 32. b 20. Of William Rufus, 26. b 10. noted .27, a 10.

Progresse of queene Elisabeth. ¶ See Quene Elisabeth.

Promise to purchase the peoples fauor, 8. b 40. In sicknesse broken in health, 20. a 50. And what slacknes in performance thereof procured: note, 19. b 40 Of Edward the first urged by his nobles: note, 308. a 50. 60. b 10. Verie dishonorable broken, 304. b 60. Made against lotaltie, & withstood by casualtie, 295, a 30. Made to a request and performed: note, 320. b 40. Made solemnelie, wickedlie broken by the K. king, 133. b 60. Broken, and the hostages executed, 597. b 10. Of Edward the fourth made by proclamation broken 688. b 10. Broken with Henrie the seuenth by Maximilian verie dishonorable: note, 774. b 20, 30. Breaking punished with great forfeture, 765 b 40. Of queene Marie made to the gospellers broken, 1161 a 50. Of queene Elisabeth in the parlement house, howsoeuer God inclined hir heart, 1181. b 20. Of queene Elisabeth to the citie on the daie of hir coronation: note, 1175. a 20. b 60. 1179. a 30. Of the duke of Alanson, euen to the shedding of his blood, 1335. b 40

Promises of William Rufus to the English clergie, but not kept: note, 17. b 30. Large proue light in performance, 28 a 40. Faire of king Stephan 47. a 10. Great and mountein like, 704. a 20

Promoters cause of murmuring &c. among the people, 794. b 10. &c. Troublesome beasts, 791. b 40. Punished, 800. a 10

Prophesie of death naturall fell out true in proofe, 1208, a 10. Of a cardinall: note, 388. b 50 Of Ball a seditious preest. 437 a 50. Of the reuolting of the subiects from their prince. 493 b 60. Of the decay of the Persies stocke, 534. a 60. Of an heremite of Wakefield to king John, 180. a 30. Of Henrie the fift touching Henrie his sonne the first: note, 581. b 10, Of winning France, 546. a 50. Betokening the translation of the crowne, 655. a 40. Concerning the duke of Clarence his name beginning with a G, 703. a 40. The memorie whereof appalled Richard the thirds spirits: note, 746. a 10. Of a moonke vnto the duke of Buckingham false 863, a 30. 864. a 30. Fantasticall and fallible of the northerne men, 1240. b 60. Touching Calis, 1141. b 20: note, 314. b 20. Fulfilled, 281. b 60 282. a 10. 945. a 50. 678. b 10. Vaine: note. 521. b 60

Prophesies of astronomers false in event: note, 1356. b 10. 20. &c. Diuelish fantasies, 703. a 50. Deceiptfull to the Norfolke rebels: note, 1038. b 40. ¶ See Dreames, Signes, and Tokens.

Prophet false serued right, 440 a 60

Protection. ¶ See Letters, Pasport, and Safe conduct, 102. a 10

Protectors of England from the first to the last collected, 1069. b 30. &c. 1070, to 1081.

Prosperitie persecuted with malice, 17. a 50. 20. Unstable, 412. b 40. 413. a 10. Of king Henrie enuied, 37. a 50

Prouerbe, Ill will neuer said well, verefied, 626. b 60. 627. a 10. &c. Man purposeth but God disposeth, verefied, 230. a 60. 316. a 60. 317 a 10. 541. a 10. 835. b 60. Lectus piscator sapit applied, 113. a 50. The more knaue the better lucke, verefied in a bucher: note, 113. Proffered seruice stinks, verefied, 1331. b 60. Haste makes waste verefied, 1202. b 10. He falleth into the fire that flieth frō the smoke, verefied, 228. b 20 When I lend I am a friend, when I aske I am a foe, verefied, 312. a 10. 20. It is good sleeping in a whole skin, verefied, 444. b 40. Necessitie hath no law, verefied, 426. b 20. Soone hot soone cold, verefied, 444. b 40. One mischiefe asketh an other, verefied, 446. a 30 Wit or cunning dearlie bought, verefied, 467. b 20. One soweth but an other reapeth, verefied, 36. a 40. Haste maketh waste, verefied: note, 41. b 30. As good neuer a whit as neuer the better, verefied, 538. b 40. Pitch and paie, verefied, 532. a 40. 50. Looke per you leape practised: note, 519. b 30. Set a beggar on horsse backe and he will ride full gallop, verefied, 192. b 30. He is an ill cooke cannot licke his owne fingers, verefied, 193, a 20. He makes a rod for his owne taile, verefied, 193, b 10. 20. Plaine fashion is best practised, 695. b 20. Marriage for pleasure repented by leasure, proued true, 667. b 60. &c. Marriage goeth by destinie verefied, 667, b 60. Ill will neuer said well, verefied, 727. b 10. 729, &c. The lambe betaken to the woolfe to keepe 716. b 50. To giue roscmeat and beat with the spit, verefied, 715, b 40. Crooked of bodie crooked of qualitie, verefied, 712. a 60. b 10. One ill turne requireth another, verefied, 778, a 20. After mirth commeth mone, 808. b 50. Proffered seruice stinkes, verefied, 852. b 50. 853, a 10. He that gapeth after other mens goods loseth his owne, verefied, 819. b 60. What the eie beweth the hart rueth, verefied, 975. b 20. Too much familiaritie breeds contempt, verefied, 852 a 60. b 10. Delete breedeth danger, verefied, 1086. b 40. To come a daie after the faire verefied, 1136, b 20. Truth purchaseth hate, verefied, 332. a 40. In trust is treason, verefied, 743. b 50. 60. 744. a 50.

He

He hath made a rod for his owne taile, vereſied, 464. a 10.
Faire words make fooles faine, vereſied, 191. b 60. 144. a 20.
Pulpit at Paules croſſe all beraied and beaſtlie, 1182, a 20
Punishment ſeuere vpon Welſh men, 73. b 10. Of Thomas Louell for counterfetting letters: note, 1556. b 60. &c. Ridiculous for a great offenſe: note, 314. a 10
Punishments according to the offenſe, 115, b 10
Purſeuant of Henrie the third had his hand cut off, 272, a 30
Puruetor of king John for wheat reſiſted, and the reſtors puniſhed: note, 171. b 40
Puruetors puniſhed, 369. b 20.
Proclamed againſt, 259. b 20.
A ſtatute againſt them, 396, a 10. Set in the pillorie: note, 1181, b 60

Q.

QVarrell betwixt the biſhops and monks of Canturburie about the archbiſhops election, 169. b 30. That the French king picketh againſt England, 518. a 30. Faint picked againſt the duke of Glocester, 627, a 10. Upon a ſmall cauſe, 126, a 30. Proſecuted vnto great miſcheefe: note, 304. b 30. Ended with murther, 568. b 20. ¶ See Debate, Frate, Mutinie, Riot and Warres.
Queene Adelicia ſecond wife to Henrie the firſt, deſcended of the dukes of Lozaine, barren, 41. b 60
Queene Aldgitha ſent to Cheſter, and whoſe ſiſter ſhe was, 1. a 30
Queene Annes coronation proclamed, & the ſame celebrated with great pompe, 930. a 40. &c. 931. 932. 933. 934. With child. 929. b 40. Brought a bed of queene Eliſabeth, 934. b 20. Committed to the tower, hir imprecation at the towre gate, ſhe is arreigned, hir words at hir death, 940. a 10. 20. 60
Queene Anne wife to king Richard the third and daughter to Richard earle of Warwike, 733. b 60
Queene Anne wife to king Richard the ſecond deceaſeth, 481, a 20
Queene Berengaria crowned, the wife of Richard the firſt, 128. a 40
Queene Elenor Richard the firſts mother returneth home into England, 127. a 50
Queene Elenor king Johns mother an enimie to hir nephue Arthur, 158, a 60. Brought a bed of a daughter, 69. a 40. Sendeth for ſpeedie ſuccour to king John, 164. b 10. Studieth to mainteine the ſtrife betwixt hir ſonnes, 86. b 60. 87, a 10. Committed to cloſe priſon, 92 b 50. Set at libertie after long impriſonment, 117. a 50. Deceaſeth, 167 b 60
Queene Elenor the wife of Henrie the third, 219. Paſſeth into Normandie, 158, b 10. Forſaketh the world, and becommeth a nun, 283. b 50. Deceaſeth, hir praiſe, 285. b 30. Hir buriall, 288. b 20
Queene Eliſabeth crowned and annointed queene, 768. a 60. Deliuered of hir firſt ſonne, 769. b 10. Forward and redie to further the vniting of the two houſes of Lancaſter and Yorke, 742. a 10. 20. 30. Taketh ſanctuarie, 715. b 60. Hir deſolat eſtate, 716. a 30
Queene Eliſabeth, late wife to Edward the fourth, 615. b 30 Adiudged to forfeit all hir lands for promiſe breaking. 765. b 40. She liueth a miſerable and wretched life, ſhe erected a college in Cambridge, b 50. 60. Inconſtant, ſhe allureth hir ſonne the marqueſſe Dorſet home out of France, 750. b 20. 30. The cardinall thought the fitteſt man to deale with hir for the ſurrendring of hir ſonne, reaſons whie it was thought meet to fetch him out of ſanctuarie, the duke of Buckinghams words vnto hir, 717. a 40. b 10. 40. Hir anſwers to the perſuaders, ſhe is loth to part with hir ſonne, hir miſtruſt of the lord protector, ſhe faleth to a reſolution touching hir ſonnes deliuerie, 719. a 60. b 10. 30
Queene Eliſabeth Greie, wife to Edward the fourth, 668. a 40. Hir father and brother beheaded: note, 673. a 30. Deliuered of a prince, the ſame chriſtened like a poore mans child, 677. b 10
Queene Eliſabeth ſurnamed the good deceaſeth, 791. a 10
Queene Eliſabeth of Caſtile dieth with iſſue male, 792. b 20
Queen Eliſabeth ſecond daughter to Henrie the eight, borne and chriſtened, the ſtatelie order thereof: note, 934. b 20. Proclamed queene, the beginning of hir reigne, hir remoue from Hatfield, the flouriſhing eſtate of this land vnder hir reigne, 1170, b 10. 20. 40. 50. Hir remoue to the Tower, to Summerſet houſe, 1171. a 10. 20. Hir praier as ſhe went to be crowned, 1180. a 10. Crowned, 1180. a 30. Deſirous to know the meaning of the repreſentations of the pagents, 1173. b 30. Liſteneth to a childs oration, 1174. b 40. Hir promiſe with thanks to the citie of London, 1175. a 20. b 60. Remoueth from Weſtminſter to the Tower by water, from thenſe to Weſtminſter through London, ſaluteth them that ſalute hir, pagents and ſhewes of reioiſing, 1172. all. Hir words vnto the lord maior of London, 1176, a 30. She receiueth Verbum Dei, kiſſeth it, and laieth it in hir lap, b 50. She thinketh vpon the cities charge, how willing ſhe was to heare a childs ſpeach, 1177. b 20. The cities farewell vnto hir, going out at Temple barre, 1178, b 60. Hir laſt words to the citie by waie of promiſe, 1178, a 30. Notes of hir mercie &c. a 60. Hir humilitie in receiuing merie trifles thankfullie, b 30. Not forgetfull to glorifie God who glorified hir, b 60 A motion made to hir in the parlement houſe touching mariage, with hir anſwer therto, hir promiſe, 1181, a 20, 40. &c. b 20. Determineth to aid the Scots ſuing for aid, 1186, b 40. 1187 a 10. Sued vnto out of Denmarke about mariage, 1185. b 10, 20. Furniſheth hir land with armor and munition, 1193. b 60. Greeued with the loſſe of Paules ſteeple, hir beneuolence towards the repairing thereof, 1194. a 40. And what cauſes moued hir to ſend a power into France, 1195. a 30. b 10. 30, 40. Hir progreſſe to & through Cambridge, hir oration to the vniuerſitie, 1206. b 20: &c. To Oxford, ſhe maketh an oration to the vniuerſitie, 1209. a 60. b 10. Hir owne words importing how deerelie ſhe loueth hir people, 1221. b 30. Hir manifold vertues, b 50. Goeth to the Burſſe being finiſhed, nameth it the Rotall exchange 1224. a 60. Hir deſtruction deuiſed to be practiſed. ¶ See Prieſts ſeminarie, and note it well. Hir anſwer to the maior of Norwich his oration, 1289. a 20. Incouraging words vnto Stephan Lambert redie to make an oration vnto hir, 1294. b 30. She highlie commendeth it, 1296. a 20. Hir behauiour after all hir welcomming, 1297. a 20. Hir departure from the citie beautifie taken, 1298. a 10. 20. Hir words at hir parting with water in hir eies, b 40. Hir progreſſe into Suffolke and Northfolke, with the whole manner of the ſumptuous ſights, and whatſoeuer elſe was deuiſed for pleaſure and delight, 1287, a 30, 1288. &c: to 1299. In danger of gunſhot being in hir priuie barge, 1310. b 10. The place of hir abode during the time of hir tarriance in Norwich, 1291. a 60. Accompanieth the duke of Alanſon to Canturburie, 1330, a 30, 50. In intention to murther hir, and the partie executed, 1356. a 50. She giueth aid to the defenſe of the low countries, & why ſo moued to do, 1414. a 50, &c. to 1419. a 10. Shamefullie ſlandered by hir enimies, and the ſame anſwered: note, 1418. a 30. &c. Hir oration to the parlement houſe note, 1396. a 50. &c. Hir magnanimitie knowing Parries vowed treaſons againſt hir & yet concealing it, 1391. a 60. Parries treaſonable practiſes to kill hir and vndo the whole realme: note well 1382. a 50. 60. &c. to 1385. Hir magnanimitie in ſuffering a knowne and ſworne traitor againſt hir to haue acceſſe vnto and talke with hir, 1383. a 20. Conſpired againſt, and hir depriuation ſought by traitors: note, 1370. a 40. 50. 60. b 10. &c. to 1375. ¶ See Eliſabeth and Babington.
Queene Jane proclamed with ſound of trumpet queene of England, 1084. b 10. ¶ See Jane.
Queene Jane deceaſeth, 544 b 40
Queene Jone late wife to king Henrie the fourth arreſted by the duke of Bedford and committed, 568. b 10
Queene Iſabell the wife of king Edward the ſecond, 318. b 60 319. a 10
Queene Iſabell the ſecond wife of king John. 162. a 30
Queene Iſabell wife vnto king Richard the ſecond tranſported into France, 519. a 60. And conueied to Paris, hir ſecond marriage, b 10. 20
Queene Iſabell married vnto Hugh Brune erle of March 202. a 60
Queene Katharine, hir coronation, the wife of king Henrie the fift, 578. b 60. Solemnitie thereat, 579. a 10 Daſſeth into France, 581 b. 60.
Queene Katharines coronation, traine, and ſumptuouſneſſe, 801. b 20. &c. Deliuered of hir firſt ſonne named Henrie 807. a 20. Chooſeth lawiers in hir behalfe to iuſtifie hir mariage, hir lamentable ſpeech in preſence of the court, ſhe auoucheth the coniunction good, ſhe departeth out of the court & is called againe, 907. a 10. 50. 60. Procureth a curſſe againſt king Henrie the eight and his realme from the pope, 936. a 60. Hir words vpon the motion of a diuorſe, ſtandeth ſtiffe in the lawfulneſſe of hir mariage, 927. a 10. &c. b 60 Accuſeth cardinall Wolſeie, hath communication with the cardinall in hir priuie chamber, refuſeth to make ſudden anſwer to a diuorſe, 908. a 30. b 10. 20. Is diuorſed from king Henrie the eight, 929. b 60, 930. a 10. Princeſſe Dowager, 929. b 30. Deceaſeth, 939. b 20
Queene Katharine, hir paramors detected of incontinent liuing, 954. b 30. 40. &c. She is atteinted by parlement, ſent to the Tower and beheaded. 955. 30. 40 &c. 50
Queene Marie commeth vnto London, 1088. b 50. Proclamed queene, 1088. a 30. Hir coronation, pompe, and traine 1091. a 20. Hir mariage, diuers diuerſlie affected therabout, and what they did, 1120. a 60. b 10. A report that ſhe was with child, 1123. b 40. And what curious order is taken for the yong prince yet vnborne: note, 1124. all. Talke betweene hir and hir ſiſter the ladie Eliſabeth: note 1159. a 10. Hir ſtout courage and kind of manhood, 1099. a 10. Hir death conſpired, and the parties executed, 1117. a 60 She & cardinall Poole reſiſted the pope, 1365, a 60. Hir oration in Guildhall to the Londoners, 1096, a 60. Is compared of the papiſts to queene Judith, 1125, b 20. Hir oration touching the reſtitution of abbeie lands, 1127. b 10. &c. Great preparation & triumph for hir lieng in childbed, 1130. b 50. 60. What became of hir child no man can tell: note, 1131. a 10. &c. Proclameth open wars againſt the French king, the captains of hir forces, 1133, b 10. 30. With what indignation ſhe tooke the loſſe of Calis, 1149. b 40. Penſife for the loſſe thereof, ſickeneth and dieth, 1151. b 10 20. Had neuer good ſucceſſe in anie thing ſhe went about, 1161. a 10. How long and when ſhe proſpered, hir promiſe to the goldſmiths broken. 50. 60. Hir ill lucke in the loſſe of Calis, b 10. In hir childbirth, 20. With hir huſband, 50. Hir finall end and death. 60. The time of hir reigne, 1162. a 10. Hir death, the maner thereof, thought to be for the loſſe of Calis, more bloud ſpilt in hir reigne than manie kings daies before, how vnproſperous it was vnto hir and hir realme in all reſpects, 1160. b 10. &c. Buried and the maner thereof, 1178. b 49
Queene Marie king Henrie the eights ſiſter crowned queene of France: note, with what pompe, 833. a 60. b 10. &c.

Dowager of France. ¶ Sée Duke of Suffolke.
Quéene Marie Dowager of Scotland deceaseth, 1192, a 10
Quéene Margaret the wife of Henrie the sonne of Henrie the second, 81, b 60. Brought a bed, 101, b 20
Quéene Margaret wife to Edward the first, deliuered of Thomas Burtherton hir first sonne, 309, a 50
Quéene Margaret Henrie the sixt his wife lieth at Couentrie, she is a better capteine than hir husband the king, 654, a 50. Described, she taketh vpon hir the gouernement, & discharged the duke of Glocester, 626, b 40, 60 With hir sonne goeth into Wales, 665, a 60. She returneth out of France, 666, a 10 Fortunat in hir two battels: note, 660, b 50. Sendeth to the maior of London for vittels, some sent by the maior & staid by the commons, she returneth northward, 661, a 10, 20, &c. Hir flight, she is robbed, 655, a 10. Commeth to Imbois to sée the earle of warwike, 674, b 50. She with hir son prince Edward land with a power out of France, 685, b 20. She is comforted by the nobles of England, b 60. The feare which she had for hir sonne, 686, a 10. Taken prisoner, 688, b 60
Quéene Maud deliuered of a sonne called William, 31, a 30 Departeth this life, 39, b 10
Quéene Maud wife to king Stephan sueth for the release of hir husband to the emperor, 53, b 50
Quéene Philip wife to king Edward the third, 348, b 20 Deliuered of John of Gaunt hir fourth sonne, 357, a 60 Brought a bed of Edmund Langleie afterwards duke of Yorke, 363, a 30. Deceaseth, hir three petitions of the king, hir praise, 404, a 20
Quéene of England with hir sonne goeth into Heinault, 337, b 10. They both arrive in Suffolke, she is assisted by the prelats, hir proclamation, 338, a 10, 30. She followeth the king to Oxford, the bishop of Hereford maketh an oration to hir armie, she goeth to Glocester and Bristow, the lords cleane to hir, 339, all. In danger of drowning, 265, a 10 Deliuered of a daughter, 249, a 40. 230, b 10, 378, a 50. 362, a 30. Deliuered of Edmund, 236, a 50. Hir request & letters withstood by a subiect: note, 376, a 60. Hir liberalitie towards king Henrie the third, 249, a 50. Out of fauour with Edward the second hir husband, 332, a 40. Sent ouer into France to talke with hir brother, 336, a 30
Quéene of Denmarke was the daughter of king Henrie the fourth, 513, b 10. She is sent ouer to hir husband, 532, a 20
Quéene of Scots and the erle of Angus hir husband come into England, 838, a 20. She commeth vnto the English court, how interteined, 50, 60, &c. Returneth to Scotland, 844, a 20. Conueied into France and maried vnto the Dolphin, 1056, b 60
Quéene Dowager of Scotland doth what she can to procure war against England, 1142, a 10. ¶ Sée Agatha, Francis Throckmorton, Margaret, Maud.
Quéene mother gouernor of the realme, 548, a 40
Quéenes of France and Hungarie decease, 1171, b 60
Quéenes three in the English court at once, 838, a 60
Quéenes college in Cambridge founded by the ladie Elisabeth wife to king Edward the fourth, 765, b 60
Questions in law demanded of the iustices: note, 456, b 20 457, a 10, &c.

R.

Radington knight lord warden of London, 478, b 10
Rafe earle of Cambridge or Northfolke marieth erle Rogers sister, 11, a 40 His wife besieged in Norwich, 11, b 20
Rafe the kings collector or proctor his extortions or pollings of the people, 24, a 20
Rafe bishop of Durham committed to the Tower & white, 28, b 30. Brake out of prison, and his persuasion to duke Robert, 29, b 40
Rafe Willord. ¶ Sée Willord,
Raier founder of S. Bartholomews by Smithfield, 31, a 30
Raine whereof grew a dearth, 58, a 60. 284, b 20. And death, 404, b 60. That did hurt harnest, 322, b 50. That hindered séed time, 355, a 50. Corne from ripening, 348, b 30. Continuall for a long time: note, 239, b 30. From midsummer to christmasse, 378, b 20. That did hurt vnto houses, trees, corne and other things, 241, b 40. Of great continuance and no lesse abundance, 220, a 30 For the space of foure moneths togither, 224, a 10 Continuall causing a derie wet season, 895, a 20. Glutting and continuall in the spring, 163, a 50. Excessiue. ¶ Sée Floods.
Raine of bloud, 101, a 30. 278, a 30. 649, a 10
Raine artificiall of rose water, and haile of suger confects, 1355, a 60. ¶ Sée Floods.
Raleigh esquire in danger of the Deuonshire rebels, 1016, b 40
Raleigh knight his voiage for the discouerie of that land which lieth betweene Norimbega and Florida, 1369, a 20. His preparation for a second voiage, 40. He sailed as far as Cape de Verde, and arriueth in safetie at Plimmouth, 60. His chargeable voiage to Virginia, 1401, b 40 &c. An English colonie established there, 1402, a 50. His resolution vpon an other voiage for the supplie of those that were left there, 50
Ramelius ambassador out of Denmarke honorable interteined both in court and elsewhere: note, 1561, b 20
Randoll a pitifull capteine, 1205, b 10
Randolph iustice. ¶ Sée Chartie.
Ransome of Richard the first out of the emperors hands, 138, b 60. Amounted to the summe of an hundred and fiftie thousand marks, 140, a 20 Three thousand marks therof giuen to the white monks and white, 147, b 20. Of Robert earle of Leicester, 146, b 40. Of the king of Scots Dauid, 391, a 60. For the monke Eustace would not be receiued, 201, a 60. Of Q. Margaret, 684, a 10. Of the French king paied and his children deliuered, 914, a 20, 40. Of the French king, 394, b 60. Of a lord by exchange, 606, b 30
Ransoms sought for gaine, 7, a 20. For townes, 193, a 60. ¶ Sée Fines.
Ranulfe bishop of Chichester onlie held with Anselme against the king: note, 26, a 20
Ranulfe de Meschines how he came to be earle of Chester, 20, a 10
Ratcliffe knight a fauorer and coadiutor of Richard the third, 725, a 60
Ratcliffe Thomas. ¶ Sée Iusts triumphant, and Erle of Sussex.
Rauishment of anie woman how punished in duke Williams time, 15, b 50
Rebellion of Henrie the sonne against his father to put him from the crowne, 99, b 10. Of nobles against erle Richard, 112, a 50. Of Welshmen, 66, b 60. Of Richard against his father Henrie the second, note 94, a 10. Of Geffreie, 66, a 30 Of the welshmen against king John, and the successe thereof, 176, a 30. Of lords banded against king John: note, 185, a 10, &c. Of the lords against king John, notwithstanding the popes decree, 187, b 30. Of the earle of Shrewesburie Robert de Beleime, 30 a 30. In Yorkshire, and what euent it had, 672, a 20. In the north pacified, 689, a 30. In Northfolke furthered at a publike plaie, 1028, b 10, 20. In Deuonshire, & capteines names, their number, their hope in others failed, their end: note well, 1002, a 50, 60, b 10, 30 vnto 1026. In Yorkshire the causes thereof, 1240, b 40, &c. Afresh in Suffolke and Essex, and the principals executed, 1062, a 40. In Kent and the causers executed, 1062, a 60. Of Jacke Cade in Kent, verie mischeefous: note, 632, a 60, b 10, &c. 633, 634, a 10, &c, And what end it had, 635, a 50, 60, b 60. In Ireland, 629, a 30. Of Owen Glendouer in Wales, 518, b 60, 519 a 10. In the north for a tax or subsidie granted by parlement, 769, b 50. In Flanders, 770, a 30. In Cornwall for the paiment of a subsidie, 781 b 20. Of the lord Louell, and the end thereof, 764, a 60 b 30. Of John Lincolne, the cause of ill Maie daie: note, 840, b 10, &c. 841, 842, 843, 444 In the north proceeded from the pope, 1366, b 40 In Suffolke by the grieuousnesse of a subsidie, pouertie and necessitie capteines therof, it is suppressed and the offendors punished, 891, b 10, 20, 30, 40, &c. New in Northfolke intended and bewraied by one of the conspiracie before it burst out, 441, a 20. In the North notable, 942, a 10, &c. The same suppressed, 942, a 10, &c. Of the Lincolnshire men, 941, a 20, 30, &c. In Westmerland, and the capteines executed, 943, b 60. Practised in Yorkshire, & the offendors executed, 953, a 60. Of the earle of Aubemarle, 202, a 60. Of the Gascoignes and the cause thereof, 248, a 30. Of the Welshmen, & what caused it: note, 254, b 30 Of the earles of Northumberland & westmerland, 1212, and what euill end it had: note, 1213. Of Normans against duke William, some suppressed, 10 b 60. Of two earles against duke William punished: note, 11, a 50, 60 Of the sonne against the father procured by the French king: note, 12, a 20. Of Edzike Stinaticus in the absence of duke William, 5, a 10 Of lords with their adherents executed, 330, b 60, 331, a 40, 60, b 30. Of the welshmen chastised, 284, b 10. Of Dauid, 280, b 60. He pursueth his enterprise, 281, a all. Condemned, executed, 282, a 60, b 10. Of the Irish against earle Mortimer, 448, b 60. In Scotland by meanes of one William Wallase, 303, a 60, b 10, In England 1358, b 60, 1359, a 10. In diuerse parts of England by reason of a great subsidie and other oppressions, 429, a 60, b 10, &c. vnto 435. Note the whole course of the storie of Henrie the second, 94, What it procureth vnto rebels: note the words of vicount Melune, 193, b 10. The hurts which it doth: note in the storie of king John, 190, 191, 192, 193, &c. The benefit thereof in one respect, 1051, b 10. What inconueniences flow from it, 1053, a 10, &c. b 10, &c. Bringeth the breeders of it to a shamefull end, 777, b 50, 60, ¶ Sée Perkin Warbecke. The fauorers thereof executed: note, 942, a 60, b 10. That it is all princes duties to repell the practises thereof, 1360 b 10. Attempted but with euill successe: note, 9, b 50. What a mischeefous reuenge it wrought vpon the innocent, 5, b 10. The reward thereof, 281, b 40, 60: note, 534, a 20, 30, &c. Note in Robert Bruse 314, a 10, &c. It and execution 316, a 20, &c. 315, a 10. Orders taken to preuent it, 439, b 60. ¶ Sée Acton, Commotion, Excester, Glendouer, Insurrection, Ket, Meuill bastard, Normans, Northumberland, Rebels, Riot, Sedition, Wiat.
Rebels would giue awaie the crowne from their soureigne to a stranger, 190, a 50, 60. Excõmunicated by name, 190 a 10. How rewarded, 693, a 30, 60. Their bodies buried by a licence obteined, 335, a 60 Of Essex vp a fresh, scatered and slaine, 436, b 10, 20. Executed in euerie lordship, b 60 Of saint Albons and Suffolke their outragious behauiors, 434, a 40, b 10. Of Kent

Kent vp againe, 436, a 40. Of Northfolke and their outrages, 435, a 20, 30, 40, &c. In Kent and Essex, 429, b 20, 60, They minister an oth to all passengers, they kill lawiers, iustices, &c: an huge number of them, their capteines and ringleaders, they send to Richard the second to come and speake with them, they spoile Southworke & set prisoners at large, aided by the Londoners, they pretend a reformation, 430. They burne the Sauoie, their strange deling, their iustice, they put lords to deth, make a pastime to kill men, respect no place, but spoile all, the K. offereth them their pardons, 431. They would haue all lawes abolished, the K. perswadeth them to be quiet, 432. Quite discouraged, throw downe their weapons, 433. Generelie executed & punished by duke William, 6, b 40. Of the North executed at Tiborne, 1221, b 60. In Ireland their strange & miserable end, 1365, b 60, 1366 a 10, &c. Most dangerouslie couer their faults, 1358, b 60. Vanquished by the queenes power, fled into forren countries, pretend religiõ for their defense, their ringleaders, 1359, a 10, &c. Of the North, Hall and Wilkinson executed at Tiborne, 1257, b 20. Executed at Durham, 1213, a 10 At Yorke, a 60. Disherited by parlement: note, 270, b 60 Against their prince in a perplexitie, 198, b 40. Notable pardoned and tw well rewarded, 942, b 20. Of Suffolke pardoned after their appearance in the starchamber, 892 a 20. How miserable and pet mercifullie pardoned, 784, b 40. Fauorers fined, 785, a 10. Of Deuonshire their articles sent to Edward the sixt, with an answer therevnto, 1003, a 30, &c. Executed: note, 944, a 50, b 10. ¶ See Conspirators, Fugitiues, Noblemen, Sandwich and Traitors.

Recantation of certeine Anabaptists at Paules crosse, 1260, b 50. Of Cranmer how detested of him at his death, 1131, b 60. ¶ See Barnes, and Crome, Smith & Sermon.

Reconciliation signified by kissing of the pax, 78, a 10

Rées king of wales slaine in battell, 20, b 50

Rées ap Meridoc accused and executed, 288, b 30

Reformation ought to be no priuat mans, but the princes action, 1051, b 20, 60

Register for christening and burieng, &c, in euerie church to be kept, 945, a 40

Religion altered, 1090, b 40, 1123, b 30. Trouble & persecutions for it, 1127, a 20. Professors therof persecuted, 1132, a 10. It goeth not by age but by truth, 1143, a 60, Aduanced: note, 992, a 60. Weareth the blame & is counted the cause of rebellion: note, 1054, a 10, 20. Reformed in Edward the sixts dates, 979, b 40, 50, &c. A booke touching the reformation therof published, 940, b 60. Laid open to great danger, 256, a 50

A conference thereabouts with the clergie on both sides 1182, a 40, &c: 1183 a 10, &c. Restored into the English tong, 1172, a 10. Commissioners sent abrode to establish it, 1184, b 50. None charged with capitall crimes being of a contrarie religion, and professing to withstand forren forces, 1360, b 30, 50, 1361, a 10, &c. Of Rome established by act of parlement: note, 519 a 30. ¶ See Monks, Treason.

Religious houses giuen Henrie the eight in parlement, 992, b 10. Giuen to Henrie the eight, 939, b 40. Visited, 939, a 60. Henrie the eights promises for the well disposing of them, 971, a 60. Suppressed, 1184, b 60. ¶ See Abbeies.

Reliks, ¶ See Becket, Christ, Hales.

Remes besieged, 392, b 60. The citizens thereof saue their corne fields from destroieng, by sending vittels to the Englishhost, 426, b 10

Remelie, ¶ See bishop.

Remelins. ¶ See Ramelius.

Remigius bishop of Worchester deprined of his crosier & ring 9, a 40.

Remission of sins granted to as manie as would fight against Clement the antipape: note 441, a 60, b 60, 442, a 40

Rent for a mans owne lands by the peare pated, 8, a 40

Repentance of yong king Henrie before his death, his superstitious deuotion, his death & buriall, 107, a 10. Of rash aduancement: note, 76, b 30. Of an act past, 128, a 10 Of a deed done not forseeing losses to insue, 170, b 30. Too late, 193, b 40: note 32, a 60, 1104, a 30, 517, & 50. Of william Rufus in his sickenesse: note, 20, a 50. Of duke William for his crueltie against the English, 14, b 60. Despised of a desperat malefactor at his death, 1061, a 60.

Report that Richard ment to peeld vp Calis to the French kings hands, 462, a 10. False of Henrie the eights death, 823, a 30. Occasion of rebellions, 941, b 40. Of great disquietnesse, 777, a 10. How hurtfull and troblesome, 1006 b 10. 47, b 50. In the starrechamber, against ladie Elisabeth, 1102, a 10, 40

Request granted vpon necessarie constraint, 2 b 20. Of the commons denieng a subsidie, 410, b 10. ¶ See Demands and Petitions.

Reuenge of the Londoners, 338, b 50. Of the people for the death of one whome they fauoured, 12, b 60. Against the dead bodie of duke William for iniurie past, 15, a 50. Of the duke of Austrich vpon king Richard the first, 136, a 10, 20. Of king John vpon the white monks, 162, a 40. Of Richard the first a bastard for the death of his father being a king: note, 160, b 60. Sought by the French king for the death of duke Arthur, 167, a 60. Of sir Robert de Ewing vpon the Romans, 214, b 60. Of the lord Mortimer against the Welshmen, 263, b 50. Of Edward the first vpon the Scots, 312, a 40. Of duke William for the losse of his subiects, 10, b 30 Of a bishop in a riotous maner, 247, a 60. Of Henrie the third vpon the bishop of Elie, 247, a 10 Of wrongs & iniuries multiplied, 170, a 10, 20, Of iniuries, 137, b 10. Of remembred grudge, 1089, a 40. A notable example to forbere it: note 1117, b 40. Of an old grudge: note, 636, b 10. Vpon reuenge: note, 840, a 20, 841, a 10, &c. Counselled and pursued: note, 204, a 40, 50, Of an old grudge, 210, a 10 Interchangeable, 204, b 10, For cuckoldrie, 211, b 60. For wast, 257, a 10. Noble taken: note, 447, b 60. Vpon reuenge 446, a 30. with murther, 447, a 50. Neglected where it might haue bene executed: note, 459, b 30, 40. Of murther with murther, 368, a 50, Taken as occasion serued, 340, a 30. Sought for murthering a bishop, 12, b 20. Of almightie God vpon lasciuious & disordered liuers: note, 424, a 10. ¶ See Enuie, Malice, and Murther.

Reseruations and prouisions apostolike, 365, a 60

Resignation by compulsion recompensed, 1134, b 40

Restitution of townes to king Edward the third by the French king, 360, b 60

Rewards how they preuaile and worke with a wicked mind, 747, b 30, 40. Merie large offered to the duke of Britaine to betraie the earle of Richmond into Richard the third his hands, 747, a 60 b 10. Corrupt a keeper of a prisoner, 152, a 20. ¶ See Bribes, Gifts, Monie.

Rhodes taken by Soltman Ottoman, the Turke, 876, b 10, &c: Rendered vp vnto him, 877, a 10, 20

Rice ap Thomas sweareth fealtie and seruice to the earle of Richmond, 753, b 40. ¶ See Rées.

Rich lord saileth into Ireland, 1258, b 60

Richard the first crowned king of England, 117, a 10. In armes against the French king, 146, a 60. His bastard sonne Philips reuenge: note, 160, b 60. His practises to get monie, 143, b 60. 144, a 10, 20 Marieth the ladie Berengara, 128, a 40. His letter to the states of England for the deposing of the bishop of Elie, 132, a 30. Like to haue bene deliuered into the French kings hands, 140, a 10. He & the French king in armes, they talke togither, the emperor disuadeth Richard from peace, the war is renewed betwixt them, they talke togither againe, a peace conditionall concluded, 148, all. Offended with the bishop of Elie lord chancellor, 145, b 30 He transporteth ouer into France, 144, b 10. Crowned king anew, 143, b 30. His grant of allowance to the king of Scots when he came to England, 143, a 50. His commandement not obeied, 140, b 50. Winneth Nottingham castell, 142, a 60. Released out of captiuitie, 141, a 10. Returneth into England, his triumphant receiuing into London, 141, b 40, 50. Raiseth his siege from Gisors, 152, a 10. He and the earle of Tholouse agreed, 151, b 30 His lands wasted by certeine Gascoignes, 137, a 60. Setteth things to sale for his going to the holie land, 120, a 40 His three daughters and how he bestowed them in mariage, 156, b 20. Charged by the emperor with iniuries done to the Sicilians, 138, b 20. His wisedome in making his answer, 30. Cleared of the murthering of the marquesse of Montferrat: note, 136, a 40, 50. Is deliuered to the emperor, he is committed close prisoner, 137, a 30. And the cause of displeasure betwixt him & the duke of Austrich, 136, a 20 The confession of his lewd life in a chapell, 126, b 10. Vanquisheth the Cipziots & chaseth them out of their campe, 127, b 60. His navie setteth forth towards the holie land, 123, a 20. Returneth home out of the holie land, 135, b 20 Slandered for the death of the marquesse Montferrat, 30 He commeth to Vienna, 50 Submitteth himselfe to the duke of Austrich, 136, a 10 Discomfiteth the Saracens neere to port Japh, 134, a 30 Fell sicke at Cephas and recouereth, 135, a 50. His talke with king Tancred, 126, b 50 His expenses out of reason & measure, 126, b 30. What were the causes of grudge betwene him and the French king, 126, a 30, &c. He and the king of France receiued a solemne oth, 123, a 40, His demands for the dowrie of his sister, wife to king William, 124, b 40. Arriueth at Messina, 124, b 10. Blameth the court of Rome for couetousnes, 123, b 50. Setteth forward to the holie land, his fleet staied by contrarie winds, 123, b 10, 20 Taketh a castell and hangeth the owner, 123, a 20. Passeth ouer into Normandie, 121, a 20. Destroits of monie, and of his shifts, 120, b 40. Findeth his fathers treasure, the order of his coronation, 118, a 20 30. He and the king of France determine to go into the holie land, 117, b 30. Besiegeth Chalus, he is wounded, despaireth of his life, ordeineth his testament, 155, b 30, &c. His bequests and legacies, his death, his stature & shape of bodie, his disposition of mind, the vices that were in him, 156, all

Richard the second borne, 397, b 60. Counterfeited: note, 515, a 50. Created prince of Wales, 411, a 10. Prince of Chester, 492, b 40. Beginneth his reigne, the Londoners commend themselues to his fauour before the death of king Edward, 415, a 40, b 40. The solemne maner of his coronation: note, 416, a 60. &c. Married, the solemnitie therat, 487 a 10, 50, 60, &c. His euill gouernement, 493, a 60. The emperor agreeth with him for his ransome, 139, a 10. Lands assigned vnto him, 30. Order taken taken for leuieng of monie for his ransome, 50. Leaueth Conwaie castell and betaketh himselfe to his enimies, 500. b 30. His cognisance or badge, 500, b 60. The parlement house at dissention, he absenteth himselfe for the space of fortie daies: note, 452, b 10, 50

Loued earle de Være of Oxford exceedinglie, 453, b 20
¶ See Earle Være. His inordinat affection towards the duke of Ireland and the earle of Suffolke, 454, a 20. Betideth sould iors on all sides against the iords, 457, b 60. His maner of greeting and speaking to the iords that were banded against him, 459, b 30, 40, 50, 60. 460, a 10. A report that he ment to yeeld vp Calis into the French kings hands, 462, a 10. Keepeth his Christmas in the Tower of London, 461, a 50. Brought to his wits end, 462, b 60. His inconstancie, he is compelled to the nobles request, 463, a 10 30. Ruled not but was ruled: note, 465, a 40. His question to his iords in the counceil chamber, taking vpon him the gouernment of all things, he displaceth diuerse officers, 66, 466, b 10, 40. Kept open housholde in the bishop of London his palace, 474, a 10. Passeth ouer into Ireland with a mightie armie, 481, b 20
Knighteth the foure Irish kings and others, 481, b 30 482, a 20. Openeth his greeuances in the parlement, 490, b 10. Saileth ouer into Ireland with a great armie, 497, a 10. Letteth the realme to farme, 496, a 60. A gard of Cheshire men about him, 489, b 50. Victuallie received into London, and his fauor recouered with gifts, 479, b 50, 60 479, a 10. Taketh the death of queene Anne his wife greeuouslie, 481, a 20. Goeth ouer to Calis, the interuiew betweene him and the French king, both their oths, 486, a 60 b 20, 40. Expenses at the interuiew betweene him & the French king, 487, a 40, 50. He and the duke of Glocesters priuie grudge, 487, b 40. Conspireth the death of the duke of Glocester, 489, a 60. He and the dukes of Lancaster and Yorke reconciled, 490, a 50
He beareth saint Edwards arms, 492, b 60. Greatlie vexed in his sleepe after the execution of the erle of Arundell, 392, a 20. Procureth the popes bull against the breakers of his statutes, 493, a 50
His dome betweene the dukes of Lancaster & Norfolke, 495, a 60. Affianced and maried to the emperors sister, 439, b 50. Sumptuous in apparell, he is committed to the Tower, 501, b 40, 60. Articles obiected against him, wherby he was counted worthie to be deposed, 502, a 20, &c. He is perswaded to resigne the crowne to the duke, 503, a 50. A copie of the said voluntarie renunciation, b 10, 504, a 30. His resignation is confirmed, 505, a 10. The publication of the same, a 30. Returneth out of Ireland and landeth in Wales, 499, a 60. He despaireth of his safetie, stealeth awaie from his armie & taketh the castell of Flint, b 20, 30. He and his queene in progresse, 444, b 30. Appointed to be kept in perpetuall prison, 513, a 10, 20. He and his nobles at dissention, 458, a 30. Goeth with an armie against the Scots, 447, a 30
Burneth Edenburgh castell, b 10. Returneth out of Ireland, his dealing against the Wicklewists and their fauorers, 482, a 20, 40, b 30. 483, a 50, &c. Remoueth to saint Albans to see execution done vpon the rebels, 437, a 20
Calleth in his letters of infranchising granted vnto the bondmen, 437, a 10. Calleth in all such letters of manumission as the abbat of saint Albans had granted vnto his bondmen, 438, a 10. He and the duke of Lancaster accorded, 446, b 60. Maketh an agreement betweene the duke of Lancaster and the earle of Northumberland, 439, b 20
Depriued, he deliuereth to king Henrie the fourth all the goods that he hath, his death, personage, fortune, 507, b 50 60. His noble housekeeping, and exesse in apparell, the state of the reime in his time, 508, a 10, 20. The commons request against him, 513, b 30
His desperat manhood in prison, he is murthered, he is brought to the Tower, he is buried at Langlie, foren princes abhor to heare of the shamefull murthering of him, how the Gascoignes tooke his death, 515, all. The sundrie reports of his death, 516, b 50, 60. Reported to be aliue againe, 525, a 60, b 10, 520, a 10 533, a 60. 522, b 20. And what harme it did, 525, a 60
Richard the third described, the maner of his nativitie, his qualities, 712, a 60, b 10. Dispraised, 737, b 60. Beginneth his vsurped reigne, 732, a 20, b 20. He createth seuentene knights of the Bath, what peeres and estates were attendant on him at his coronation, the solemne ceremonies vsed thereat, his wife queene Anne and hir traine, 733, all.
Practiseth the murthering of his nephues, 734, b 20, 30, &c.
Proclameth promises of rewards for the apprehending of the duke of Buckingham, sendeth forth a naule to scowre the sea ouer against Britaine, 744, a 10, 40. Commeth to Excester and is receiued with presents, 746, a 10
Attempteth the duke of Britaine to deliuer the earle of Richmond into his hands, 747, a 60. His deuise to infringe and defeat the earle of Richmonds purpose, his leud practise to beguile him, 750, a 20. Casteth his loue on his neece purposing to marie hir, 751, a, 50, 60. What noble men he most mistrusted, whie he gaue licence to all in Hames castell to depart in safetie with bag and baggage, b 30, 50. His offenses and euill qualities summarilie touched, a notorious tyrant, 758, a 10, 20. Contemneth the erle of Richmond and his power, sendeth to his freends for cholen men, the ordering of his armie, 754, a 20, 50, b 10
His forged complaint against his wife to be rid of hir, 751, a 10. His purpose in the case of coniuration against him, his drift in disposing his armie, he preuaileth, 743, a 10, 60, b 10, &c. Calleth home his ships of war from the narrow seas, his pretended mariage offensiue to the erle of Richmond, 752, a 10, b 50. The principals of his power fall from him, his dreame foretels him of his end, bringeth all his men into a plaine, his oration to the chieftens of his armie, 755, a 30, 40, b 10. His vaine confidence and bootlesse courage, 757, a 10. His armie discomfited, sleeth, what persons of name were slaine on his side, he himselfe taken and how he might haue escaped, 759. The shamefull cariage of his bodie to Leicester, his badge and cognisance euerie where defaced, the description of his person and certeine of his behauiors, 760, b 20, 40 50. Honor done him after his deth by the erle of Richmond his enimie, 761, a 20
Richard the second sonne of K. John, 173, a 10
Richard the base sonne of king John beheadeth monke Eustace, 201, a 60
Richard Henrie the second his sonne affianced to earle Raimonds daughter, 67, b 20. Prepareth to resist his father, 94, a 10. Despaireth of good successe, 94, a 10. Submitteth himselfe to his father, 94, a 10
Richard, king Henrie the third his brother maried, 231, b 50
¶ See Archbishop of Canturburie.
Riches, and what means king Richard the first had to gather them, 120, a 50, 60. Of London great, what then of all England: 141, b 60. They and inheritance, from whom, to whom, and to what end giuen, 1043, b 10. The right waie therunto, b 50. Of Henrie the eight, 799, a 50. ¶ See Monie.
Richmond built, and whie so named, 788, a 10. On fire, 792, b 20
Richmont castell neere Gillingham when built, 7, b 10. ¶ See Erle.
Ridlie doctor perswadeth the people in a sermon at Paules crosse in the title of queene Jane, 1087, a 40. He and Latimer examined for their doctrine, 1129, b 60. 1130, a 10. Whie he was more rigorouslie handled than the residue of the bishops, 1089, a 40. His sermon of mercie and charitie before Edward the first how effectuall: note, 1081, b 20
Rie burnt by the Frenchmen, 417, b 50. The ships thereof sum a good prise, 440, a 60
Riot at king Richard the first his coronation, 118, b 40, &c.
By the Suffolkmen: note, 343, b 10. 344, all. 345. Of the people against the Iewes: note, 121, b 50. 122, all. Of the Kentishmen: note, 677, b 30.
In the citie of London betweene strangers of diuers nations and the Londoners, 645, a 30. Made on the Easterlings by the Londoners, 778, a 40. Of prince Edward punished by imprisonment, 313, b 30. Of the Londoners vpon the bishop of Salisburie his men, 478, a 20. Betwixt the earle of Warwike, and the tenants of the abbat of Euesham, 411, a 30. At Calis vpon the cutting of a purse, 879, b 10. Committed vnder pretense of wrestling, 204, a 20. Toward in west Smithfield, and the principals punished, 1321, b 30, 40. Brought within the compasse of treason by a statute, 842, b 50, &c.
¶ See Traie, Rebellion.
Rithwall king of Wales partaker with a rebell, 5, a 20
River that suddenlie ceased his course, 493, b 60
Riuers that ebbed and flowed became shallow, 38, a 40. Ouerflowing and drowning the land, 20 b 30. ¶ See Thames.
Riuers lord and others beheaded, 715, b 40. 725, b 10
Riuers Richard. ¶ See Welsent.
Robert generall of the Normans slain by the Northumbers, and whie, 6, b 30
Robert rebelleth against his father duke William, and how it came to passe, 13, a 20. Duke of Normandie, solicited to come into England to claime the crowne, 29, b 20.
Arriueth at Portsmouth, his mild nature, 29, b 60. Commeth into England to visit his brother Henrie the first, 32, a 50. Proclamed after the decease of his father, 16, b 20.
Arriueth at South hampton 17, b 50. How he might haue easilie recouered England from his brother, 17, b 60. Returneth out of the holie land, and laboureth to recouer England from Henrie the first, 29, a 60. Ingageth a part of his dukedome for monie, and whie, 17, a 30. His valiantnesse in fight, 33, a 10.
Maketh earnest sute to his brother Henrie for peace, 32 b 40. Prisoner in Cardiff castell and there dieth, 33, b 30
More credulous than suspicious, 30, a 20. In displeasure with the English nobilitie and commons, 28, a 20. Chosen K. of Jerusalem by reason of a miracle, 29, a 60. Mortgageth his duchie of Normendie to his brother William Rufus, 22, a 60. It was he whome the nobles would haue had for king being the elder brother, 16, a 30. Returneth into Normandie displeased with his brother William Rufus, 19, b 40. It discordeth fresh with his brother William, 21, a 40. His desire and desire to bereaue william Rufus his brother of the kingdome of England, 16, b 40. To whome married, and his issue, 34, a 10. Taken prisoner, 33, a 40 Described, and his lamentable end, 33, b 49. 60
Robert earle of Northumberland refuseth to come to king William Rufus, 21, b 30. Inuironeth king Malcolme, 20, b 60. Taketh sanctuarie, 21, b 60. Prisoner in Windsor castell, ſtell, and the cauſe of his conſpiracie, 22, a 10

Robert the baſe ſonne of Henrie the firſt married, & made earle of Glocester, 37, a 50. ¶ Sée Erle.
Robert the onelie ſonne & heire of Robert earle of Leiceſter deceaſeth, 1375, b 40
Robbers. ¶ Sée Theeues.
Roch knight ſent to the Fléet: note, 968, a 40
Rochester beſieged, 267, a 60. The caſtell fortified, and by whom, 17, a 30. Beſieged by K. Rufus, 18, a 10. Beſieged & yelded to king John, 188, a 10 40 Reſtored to the archbiſhop of Canturburie, 186, b 10. The bridge when builded and by whom, 1377, b 60. How it began to decaie, meanes to kéepe it repared by act of parlement 1378, a 10, &c.
Rochford lord condemned and beheaded with others, 940, a 50
Rockesburgh, and the ſituation thereof, in what ſort to bée fortified, 991, a 10, 30, b 10. The ſame burned by the Scots, 420, a 50
Rodorike king of Ulſter vanquiſhed, 100, a 30
Roger earle of Hereford conſpireth againſt duke William, 11, a 40
Roges burnt through the eare, 1218, b 10. ¶ Sée Vagabonds Roiall exchange. ¶ Sée Burſe.
Roiſton ſet on fire, 531, b 20
Rood of grace ſhewed at Pauls croſſe, 945.
Rood of Pauls erected: note, 1121, a 50, 60
Rokeſbie ſhirrife of Yorkeſhire, his hardie courage to fight, 534, a 40
Rome blamed by Richard the firſt for couetouſneſſe, 123, b 50. what gaines it had out of England, 171, a 40. Henrie the third would in no wiſe bind and indanger his laie ſée to it, 268, a 20. Beſieged 895, b 60. Taken and ſacked, 896, a 30, 50. Compoſitions with the ſoldiors to ſaue certaine places vnſpoiled, b 60. The ſpoile herre rich, 897, a 50. Sacked, 1364, a 30. Beſieged by the duke of Alua and king Philips armie, 50. ¶ Sée Pope and Legats.
Romans. ¶ Sée Triumphs.
Rone beſieged by Henrie the firſt, 565, a 20. Inuironed with enimies and inccourteſſe, the number within the towne, extreme famine within it, 566 a 20, 30, b 10. They within the towne demand parle, a truce for eight daies, articles concerning the yelding vp thereof, 567, b 60. King Henrie the firſt his entrance therevnto, 568, a 40. A conſpiracie of the Frenchmen againſt the Engliſhmen, 568, b 60. The caſtell like to be taken by treaſon of the captein, 608, b 20. yelded vnto the French king, 629, b 50
Roſamund the faire, concubine to Henrie the ſecond, where buried, 196, a 30. Hir coſer, hir death and epitaph, 115, b 50
Ros lord reuolteth vnto the Scots, his brother continueth faithfull vnto the king of England, 197, b 40
Ros a noble man of France accuſed, 251, a 30, &c.
Rouen beſieged by the king of France, 92, b 60. Through famine ſurrendred vnto the king of France, 167, b 50
Round table. ¶ Sée Windſor caſtell.
Rous knight, a valiant captein, 421, b 30
Routs ¶ Sée Brabanders.
Rufus William his promiſes to purchaſe the peoples fauour, 8, b 4 ¶ Sée William Rufus.
Rugemont caſtell: note, 1007, b 60
Rulers ſundrie in a land weakeneth it, 81, b 30
Rumors falſe ſpread to worke an alteration, 190, b 20. ¶ Sée Report.
Running at the quintine, 247, b 50. At the ring, 805, b 60. At tilt, 805, a 10
Ruptarij, 99, a 10. ¶ Sée Brabanders.
Ruſſell knight his ſober and diſcréet vſage in ſeruice commended, 879, b 50
Ruſſell lord deliuerer of the citie of Exceſter: note, 1022, a 60, b 10. Diſtruſteth himſelf and is vpon departing out of Deuonſhire, he matcheth againſt the rebels towards Exceſter, 1023, a 20, &c. 1024, L. primate ſeale his letters to the L. protector, 1057, b 20, a 10 He ſueth for peace betweene the lords, 1058, a 10. ¶ Sée Erle of Bedford.
Rutland earle lord Edward ambaſſador into Scotland: note, 1562, a 40
Rutland caſtell built, 279, b 50 Beſieged, 280, b 60. Taken, 278, b 10.
Rutters, 99, a 10.

S.

Sabboth, a ſuperſtitious and ſhurtfull obſeruation thereof, 262, b 60
Sacrament of baptiſme how the rebels would haue it miniſtred, 1063, a 40
Sacraments forbidden to bée vſed of the clergie, 76, b 10. Contemned, and how the offendor puniſhed, 203, b 60
Sacrilege and no ſacrilege, 22, b 10. Sacrelie puniſhed, 704, b 50
Sackuill knight ambaſſador to the French king, 1224, b 30. His intertainment verie honorable, 40. The firſt place of his audience, his liberalitie, 60. His return into England 125, a 10, 20. ¶ Sée Buckehurſt.
Safe conduct ſued for of the king of Armenia, and denied him, 453, b 30. Granted vnto ſoldiors, 21, b 10. And the force thereof, 459, b 30. Preuaileth not, 103, b 20. ¶ Sée Licence, Protection, 104, Cardinall Mutino.
Sadler ſir Rafe knight, treaſuror of the Engliſh armie, 980, b 40. His ſeruice againſt the Scots commended, 988, b 30
Saie lord treaſuror beheaded at the ſtandard in Cheape, 634, b 30
Saint Albons deſtroied, 199, a 10
Saint Anthonies. ¶ Sée Church.
Saint Bartholomewes by Smithfield when builded, 31 a 30. The hoſpitall builded in part, 540, b 60
Saint Marie Oueries made a parith church, 950, a 60, Burned, 176, b 10. Repared. 172, b 10
Saint Quintins beſieged and taken by the Engliſh, 1134, a 60, b 10
Saint Thomas hoſpitall erected, 1082, b 10
Saints, and praieng to them miſliked by William Rufus: note, 17, b 20
Saladine cauſeth the chriſtian priſoners to be beheaded, 133, a 30. ¶ Sée Jeruſalem, Saracens, Turks.
Salike. ¶ Sée Law
Salisburie made a citie, 202, b 60
Salisburie the traitor. ¶ Sée Babington.
Salt called Bale ſalt, deer, 1260 a 50
Salute. ¶ Sée Coine.
Samſon. ¶ Sée Biſhop.
Samuell monke of ſaint Albons made biſhop of Dublin, 22, a 30
Sanctuarie and of ſuch as flie for ſuccour therevnto: note, 33, b 60. No ſafe harbour for rebels, 784, a 60. Fléet for traitors: note, 764, b 40. ¶ Sée Robert of Northumberland, 21, b 60. and Weſtminſter.
Sanctuaries their vſe and abuſe: note, 718, a 10, &c. Reſtreined, 790, b 10
Sanders murthered. ¶ Sée Murther.
Sanders doctor a maintainer of the popes bull, 1361, b 30. His miſerable end, 1365, b 60
Sands knight a whip vnto the Frenchmen, 874, b 10
Sands doctor his trouble, perſecution, and voluntarie baniſhment, 1145, b 50, &c. 1146, 1147, 1148, 1149
Sandwich kept by rebels, they ſue for pardon, 693, a 10. Spoiled by the French, 645, b 30
Saracens diſcomfited by Richard the firſt, 134, a 30. Vanquiſh the chriſtians and kill the earle of Saliſburie with others, 243, a 10. Called Arſacides, their generation and deſcending with prince Edward, 275, a 30, &c. Againſt whom went diuerſe nobles of England, 225, b 30. Make ſore war vpon the chriſtians in Spaine, and are vanquiſhed, 213, a 10. Had the whole land in poſſeſſion, 205, a 60. Beſeege the citie of Damieta, 202, a 50. Win the ſame from the chriſtians, 204, b 50. A iourney againſt them, 473, a 40. Out of whoſe hands the whole land ſhould to be recouered, 22, a 60. Win lands from the chriſtians, 108, b 10. Traitorouſlie kill the marqueſſe of Montferrat, 134, b 40. yeld Acres into the chriſtians hands, 132, b 50. Make war againſt the Portingals, 124, a 10. ¶ Sée Chriſtians, Granado.
Sargent murthered, and the offendor hanged in Cheapſide, 1310, b 60. Slaine, & the murtherer hanged in Fléetſtréet. 1348, a 10. ¶ Sée Officer.
Sargents at law their feaſt kept at Elie houſe, whereat Henrie the ſeuenth and his quéene were preſent, 779, a 40. In the archbiſhop of Canturburies palace, whereat were preſent Henrie the ſeuenth with all his nobles, 791, b 50. At Greies inne, 1210, a 10. At the new temple, 1314, a 60
Saturne and Jupiter. ¶ Sée Planets.
Satisfaction that Henrie the ſecond ſware to make for the death of Becket, 83, b 50
Sauage knight ſlaine at the ſiege of Bullongne, 775, a 50
Sauage the traitor. ¶ Sée Babington.
Sauerie de Mauleon, and the earle of Saliſburie at diſcord, 194, a 40. 206, a 20. He reuolteth to the French king, 40. In aſſiſtant of king John againſt his rebels, 187, b 60, 188, a 30, 190, b 10. Sore hurt and wounded, 190, b 60
Sauoie burnt by the rebels, 431, a 20. The hoſpitall, 796, a 50
Sawtrie a prieſt burnt for religion, 519, a 30
Scales lord his chiualrie, 669, a 20, &c. Slaine moſt cruellie: note, 654, b 60
Scaliot a blacke ſmith. ¶ Sée Workmanſhip.
Scarſitie, prouiſion thereagainſt for the poores behoofe, 476, b 60. ¶ Sée Dearth.
Scattergood. ¶ Sée Policie.
Schiſme betweene two popes for the dignitie of ſaint Peters chaire, 484, b 50. In the church, and whereupon, 24 b 20
Schoole of ſaint Anthonies in the citie of London, 779, a 50
At Tunbridge, 1062, b 20.
At Oxford in Shropſhire, 1060, b 60. At Briſtow and Reading, 1092, a 30. At Holt in Northfolke founded, 1131, b 10. At Sandwich erected, 1377, a 60, b 10. At Sutton Valens in Kent, 1311, b 10. Founded by archbiſhop Parker, 1261, a 40.
In Bedford founded by William Harper, 1194, b 40.
Of the merchant tailors erected, 1194, a 10. At Ratcliffe builded, 945, b 60. At Walthamſtow builded, &c. 830, a 40
Scholers diſputations, 1129, b 10, &c. Tried from traitors by ſix queſtions: note, 1368, a 10, &c. ¶ Sée Oxford.
Schoolemaiſters to teach ſcholers to conſtrue their leſſons in Engliſh, 396, a 20
Scot ſir Thomas knight, of Kent, a good politician, exceedinglie beloued of the people, &c. note, 1539, b 30. 1541, a 20. 1546, b 40, 50
Scot. ¶ Sée Erle of Cheſter.
Scotland, Henrie the firſt is counſelled to the conqueſt of it, 546, a 40. Inuaded by the lords Ros and Dacres, 874, b 50. Sore ſpoiled by the erle of Surrie and his power, 878, b 30. Inuaded, and diuerſe townes burned by the Engliſh, 875, b 60. Iſt and England at wars, the cauſes of the ſame, 957, a 20, &c. And what townes, villages, &c: the Engliſh armie burned and ſpoiled, 963, a 50, 60. The middle marches therof forrai-

ed, 969

ed,969,b 10. The countrie inuaded by the erle of Hertford, 969,b 60. An English armie goeth against it, their number arriueth in the land,961,b 40, 50, 60, An harbour for rebels and malcontents: note the whole storie of duke William & page, 10,b 20. Trouble there, Frenchmen sent thither, the lords thereof that were confederes against the French, 1180, b 30, 40, 60 The earle of Sussex maketh a tournie thereinto, wasted by fire and sword, 1222, a 40, 50. Inuaded by the erle of Sussex, 1213,b 60. Wasted and spoiles by fire and sword,1214,1215,1216,1217, 1218, 1219, 1220. Wonne fiue times by one king of England, 999, a 10, Diuerse places therein burned, besieged and otherwise dealt withall by the English, 990,a 10, &c. Inuaded on the west side, 992, a 30, Places gained there by the English, 992, b 10, 20, &c. An English power both by sea and land sent thither, chiefteins of the armie,980, a 30,40,&c. The borderers of England make a rode thereinto, 446, a 20 Inuaded, 445, b 10. ¶ See Duke of Lancaster. Inuaded by the earle of Warwike, 353, b 20. Countries subdued therein by the Englishmen, 376, a 50. Resigned into the hands of king Edward the third, 386, a 60. When it had great want of men, 323, a 20. Controuersie there, about the crowne thereof: note, 285, b 60, 286, all. The kings fealtie set downe in forme, 289, b 60 And his homage, 290, a 20 Edward the first appointed wardens for the same, 288, a 30, &c. That the right and title thereof belonged to Edward the first, note, 309, b 60, 310, a 10. The lord Segraue sent with an armie thither, 311, b 30. ¶ See Britaine, Church, Henrie the fourth.

Scots, their king inuadeth Northumberland, 87, b 60 His thought at the view of the English armie, the order of his host, French capteins among them, the Scots are put to the worst in the right wing, the left wing discomfited, 828, all. The kings magnanimitie, he fighteth himselfe verie valiantlie, the stoutnesse of his stomach, he is slaine, his bodie found hauing diuerse wounds, 829, a 10, &c. b 30 Serueth king Henrie the fift, 580, b 30. In Henrie the fift his armie, 577, a 10 His letter of defiance to king Henrie the eight, 820. Commeth to the English parlement, 97, b 30. He with other deliuered out of prison, 95, a 10. Doth homage to king Henrie the second, 73, b 60. Knighted by king Henrie the second, 76, a 30 Slaine by his owne subiects, 771, a 20. Inuadeth England with a great armie in Perkins behalfe, 781, a 20, b 10, &c. Desireth the ladie Margaret eldest daughter of Henrie the seuenth to wife, 785, b 60. Doth homage to Henrie the first, 587, a 20. Fled from his siege at Rockesburgh, 615, a 20 James is murthered: note, 616, a 10. Besiegeth Rockesburgh, and is slaine, 657, a 60. Taken prisoner, 91, b 60. Inuadeth Northumberland, 89, a 50. Inuadeth England, 91, a 60. Presented to the king of England, 92, b 10. Deliuereth by castels, 95, a 30. Doth homage to the king of England, 95, b 60. Knight of the garter, 939, a 60. Murthered, 1209. b 60. Proclameth open warre against England, 518, b 10. Inuadeth England, the lords assemble a power to fight against him, the queene present in person, 375, b 40, &c. He is taken prisoner, 376, a 10. Resigneth the realme of Scotland into the hands of Edward the third, 386, a 60 Ransomed and set at libertie, 391, a 60. Sueth for peace vnto king Edward the first, and submitteth himselfe, 300, b 10, &c. would serue two masters, 297, b 20. Concludeth a league with the K. of France, 296, a 10. Renounceth his homage vnto the king of England, 245, a 40. Doth homage vnto the king of England, 299, a 40. Kept Christmas with the king of England at Yorke, 211, b 30. Commeth vnto London, 263, a 10. warden of the English marches, 229, b 10. His allegiance to K. Henrie the third, testified by a charter, 233, b 60. Inuadeth England, 233, a 30. Commeth into England, 254, a 40. His oth of allegiance vnto Richard the first, 120, b 20, Commeth vnto king John at Lincolne, 162, a 60. Doth homage, 69, a 60. 193, a 60. Compounderh with king John for peace, 173, b 10. Honoured with the order of knighthood, 176, a 30. Commeth to see king Richard the first, 143, a 30. His allowance by the grant of king Richard: note, 143, a 50. He beareth the sword before the king, b 30. Maketh sute vnto king Richard the first for Northumberland, 144, a 30. Interteined honorable at Canturburie, 120, b 20. ¶ See Bishop of Durham.

Scots inuade the English marches, 47, b 10. 48, a 60. Inuade Northumberland, 49, a 40. They & the English dow bicker, the Scots put to flight, 49, b 50, 60. Pursued, retire, 48, b 40. Inuade the English borders, 782, b 40. 645, b 40, 50. Ouerthrowne by sir Robert Umfreuill, 548, a 30. Inuade the English borders, 560, a 30. They recule home for feare, 560, a 50. With the aid of Tiuidalemen did much hurt in England, 892, a 30. Inuade the bishoprike of Durham, 332, b 10. &c. Prisoners in the archbishop of Yorke his place, 811, a 40. Inuade the borders of England, assailed, discomfited, slaine and put to flight, 825, b 20, &c. They and the Englishmen haue a sharpe conflict, two battels, fought not, but gaue the looking on, they flie at the peale of guns, 829, a 10, 50, b 40. Enter into England and rob the market folkes going vnto Berwike, put to flight and slaine, 383, a 20, 40. Discomfited by the Englishmen, 929, b 10. Mone warre, and at last sue for peace, 936, a 50, 60. Inforce Henrie the eight to warre against them, their double dealing in a negotiation of an agreement, 957, b 30, 50. Inuaded by the Englishmen, put to flight, taken prisoners, before the councell in the starchamber, 958, all. They depart into their owne countrie, 959, a 50 Their king dieth for greefe, 958, b 30. A great power gouerned by noble men goeth against them, 961, b 40, 50, 60, They offer to impeach the English mens passage, flee vnto Edenburgh, 962, a 10, 20, 30. Spoile the English marches, they lose more than they win, assait the castell of Warke, 881, a 60, b 60. Chased and driuen awaie, 862, a 10. All in England apprehended and fined, 873, a 30. They and the Englishmen incounter, 969, b 50, 60. An ouerthrow on both sides, 970, a 10, &c. Their cruelrie against the Englishmen, 10, b 10. Inuade England, 19, b 10. Ouerthrowne and slaine, and put to flight, 21, a 10. Sue vnto queene Elisabeth for aid against the French, 1186, b 40. For respit of war, 1214, b 20. Their breach of couenant, 1214, a 50. And common fault, 1217, b 60 They muster foure thousand men, 1219, a 20. Their vaine doubt, they meete the English armie, 984, a 60, b 30, Slaine, the maner and the number, 988, a 10, 20, Why so few were taken, their bow, apparell, number of prisoners, spoile of their campe, the feature of their personages, 988, a 10, Such as came to king Henrie the eight, their obeisance: note, 991, a 50, Submit and yeeld them selues to the English power: note, 981, b 20, Their subtile practise, 982, a 20, 30, They flie and are sharplie pursued, 987, b 10. Cast awaie their munition and furniture, the lighter to be gone, 987, b 30, Charged with ill dealing in the contract of marriage betweene king Edward the first and the queene of Scotland, 999, a 20, &c. Reiect all the benefites proffered in the duke of Summersets exhortation: note, 1001, b 60, Aided by the French king, go to the worst, 993, a 60, &c. They are set at a staie vpon the sudden, their order both in respect of furniture and disposition, an hot encounter betweene the English and them: note, 985, b 10, &c. 40, &c. 986, a 10, &c. Persons wounded & slaine, b 10, &c. Hampered for their disloialtie in king Edward the sixts time, 980, 981, 982, Smothered in a caue, discomfited, and put to flight, slaine and taken prisoners, 982, a 10, 50, 60, Preparation for warre against them, 705, b 10, Enter into Ireland, hard hold betwixt them and the enimie, Berwike is betraied vnto them, they winne castels, spoile and burne, they come into Yorke, 324, all. Accursed by the pope, they inuade England and returne at their pleasure, 325, a 60, b 10, 20. Inuade Northumberland, 329, a 10. Inuade Ireland, 322, a 60. Great slaughter of them, they spoile the bishop of Durham, and raise their siege, b 20, &c. Take Warke castell, 514, a 60. Burne and spoile in Northumberland, 518, b 40. Ouerthrowne, vanquished at Hameldon, the number slaine, prisoners taken, 520, b 30, 40, 50, 60, Their cruelrie verie barbarous, 465, b 20. They gaue the English an ouerthrow, b 20. In the time of treatie they spoile Northumberland, hauing prouided an armie to inuade England be hardlie perswaded to accept a truce, 466, a 50, 60. Aided against the English by the French, they inuade the frontiers of England, they spoile Cumberland, assault Carleil, 447, a 20, 40. Burne Warke castell, 444, b 60. Spoile the north parts in the time of dearth, 422, b 60, 423, a 10, &c. Inuade the English borders, spoile whole countries, and carrie awaie great bootes, 428, a 10. Their nobilitie at dissention, their prince staid in Scotland, 531 b 50, 60. Inuade England, 346, b 60. Disloiall to king Edward the third, he assaileth them, they submit themselues, 351, all. Their stoutnes hindereth the conclusion of peace, a statute ordeined by them in fauor of king Edward the third, 352, a 30, &c b 40. Fight with axes, 376, a 10. Sore afflicted by king Edward the third, 386, b 20. Enter into England, and doo much hurt, compounded withall for monie, 323, a 10. Discomfit the lord Beaumont, 323, a 40. Accursed and interdicted, 323, b 10. Inuade the English borders, 299, a 40. Their crueltie, the castell of Dunbar rendered to them, put to flight and slaine, 299, b 10, 20, &c. 297, b 60. They raise their siege from Carleil, 298, a 10. Disloiall in dealing, 296, a 40. Chir nobles fealtie vnto king Edward the first set downe in expresse words, 287, b 60, 288, a 10. Their vnfaithfull dealing, 303, b 30. In armes, 303, b 40, 60. At discord, they sue for peace, discomfited, 304, a 10, &c. Promisbreakers, they assaile the English, discomfit them, enter into Berwike, inuade Northumberland, spoile the countrie, returne home, discomfited and slaine, 305, a 10, 50, 60, b 10, 50, 60. Besiege Rockesborough, 306, b 60. Summoned moned vnto the parlement at Yorke, 307, a 10. The order of their battels, their horsemen flie, their archers slaine, 307, b 30, 60. The slaughter of them, 308, a 10. Vexed by king Edward the first, forbidden so to doo by pope Boniface, 309, a 10. Flie from king Edward the firsts power, hide themselues, fall to submission, 312, a 40, &c. In armes vnder Bruse, discomfited, 314, a all.

Scripture abused: note, 1223, a 50
Scrope lord by king Richard the thirds commission kept a session against diuerse indicted of high treason, 746, a 20
Sea decreaseth, 38, a 40. Ouerflowne, and doing much hurt by breaking into the land, 526, b 60. 350, b 50. With huge tides that did much hurt, 220, a 60. Seemeth to burne: note, 243, a 20. Riseth higher than the naturall course gaue, 244, b 40. Ceased from ebbing and flowing three moneths, 236, b 20. Riseth with verie high tides, 252, a 50. Extraordinarie, 204, b 40.
Seafaring men, and of certeine orders to be obserued amongest them, 123, a 30
Sebastian Gabato his votage, 1083, a 50. His discouerie of an Iland of rich commodities, 785, a 30. Bringeth strange men from the new found Ilands, 789, b 50
Secrets disclosed, 511, b 40, 50. Not to be discouered: note, 299, b 60, 300, a 10. Of princes disclosed by a craftie knaue, 812, b 20
Sedition to what issue it commeth, 787, a 30, 40. Sowers thereof taken, conuented and executed, 1360, a 10. Condemned by ancient lawes made two hundred yeares ago, 20. Some condemned, and yet spared from execution, and why, 30. The mischiefe springing from the same, 1054, b 30. Punished by imprisonment and confiscation, 446, a 50. Sowen by a seditious preest, and by a counterfet earle of Warwike, 765, a 20, &c. How greeuous vnto a commonwealth, discoursed by sir John Cheeke knight, 1042, 1043, vnto 1055: note it well, it is worth the reading. ¶ See Bookes, Counsell, and Letters.
Segraue lord in armes against the Scots, taken, wounded, and rescued, 311, b 30 &c.
Sele common granted vnto the Londoners, 208, a 10. Roiall old made void, and a new confirmed, 208, b 60. Newlie made, 277, a 20. And the old, with all things sealed therewith annulled, 145, b 50
Selim prince of Turkes his ambition and tyrannie against his father and affines, he querthroweth the Sophie of Persis, 846, a 10, 20, 30. Deceaseth, and Soliman doth succeed, 847, b 20. ¶ See Saracens.
Selling and buieng of men like oxen and kine, 31, a 10
Semor knight sent vnto the Tower, attainted and beheaded, 996, a 60
Sempringham William deceaseth, 113, b 20
Senena. ¶ See Guenhera.
Sens besieged and taken, 576, a 50
Sentlow knight sent vnto the Tower, 1152, b 60
Sequestration of benefices: note, a shift to get monie, 193, a 20
Serle maior of London in a riot not esteemed or regarded, 204, a 40
Serle, one of king Richard the second his chamber, noteth abrode that king Richard is aliue, he is apprehended, examined for the duke of Glocesters death, drawne through euerie good towne, executed at London, 525
Sermon of George Cloose at Paules crosse offensiue, for the which he was inioined submission: note, 1558, b 10. Of Stephan Gardiner: note, 1126, a 60. Of frier Pateshull, 455, a 60, b 10. Of Ball a seditious preest vnto certeine rebels, 437, a 60. Of the bishop of Rochester at king Richard the second his coronation, 417, b 40. Full of slander against king Edward the fourth: note, 727, b 10, &c. That turned the preacher to shame and losse of life: note, 728, a 30, 40. Vndiscreet and seditious, 841, a 10, 20. Inuectiue against bishop Gardiner, and the preacher asketh forgiuenesse, 950, b 10, 20. In Paules church for victorie against the Turkes, 1226, b 40. The assemblie thereat, b 50. Made by John Knewstubs, at Vtricht in the low countries, in a stately assemblie, 1433, b 60. Of doctor Ridleie before king Edward the sixt, what effects it wrought touching charitie, &c: note, 1081, a 20, &c. That procured rigorous handling to the preacher: note, 1089, a 40. At Paules crosse wherein the people were perswaded vnto the title of queene Jane, 1087, a 40. At the Spittle without Bishopsgate, and the house of the maior and aldermen by whome built, 702, b 50. Full of papisticall adulation made at pope Gregorie the thirteenth his buriall, 1397, b 40, &c. 1398, &c. to 1400. ¶ See Oration, Preacher, Shaw, Submission.
Sermons perpetuallie founded at Norwich, 1261, a 60. At Paules crosse none for the space of a quarter of a yeare: note, 1182, a 10, 20. Made to and for the marriage of king Henrie the eight, with queene Katharine, 928, a 20. That brought the preacher vnto losse of credit, honestie and life: note, 725, b 30, 40
Servant constant and trustie: note, 500, b 60. Trustie and liberall vnto the ladie Elisabeth, 1159, b 40. Murthering his maister is hanged, 1213, a 10. Accuseth his maister, and commeth vnto an ill end himselfe: note, 628, b 20. Betraieth his maister for reward: note, 743, b 50, 60 60. 744, b 60. ¶ See Bansster.
Seruants wages rated by statute: note, 380, b 30, &c.
Seruice old remembred, 203, a 40. God in warre rewarded breedeth conspiracie: note, 21, b 30
Servingman reproued and reformed: note, 1315, a 20
Seruitude none in England before duke Williams coming in, 1, b 50. Spurned at verie sore, 1, b 50, 2, a 10 forsaking of native countrie preferred before it, 6, a 20. Vnder the Normans signified vnto the world by outward testimonie, 5, b 10 Sessions. ¶ See Sicknesse.
Sessment refused to be paid as it was leuied, and how punished, 968, a 40. ¶ See Subsidie.
Sforce duke of Millan by vsurpation, 761, a 60
Shandois lord his false report in the Starchamber against ladie Elisabeth, 1102, a 10. Deceaseth, 1258, a 20
Shane Oneale of Ireland discomfited by the English power, 1209, b 30. Mangled and hackt in peeces, 1210, a 30 50
Shaw maior of London a proud man and a fauourer of king Richard the third, 725, b 40
Shaw doctor his sermon that lost him his honestie and his life: note, 725, b 40. Commended by the duke of Buckingham, 729, b 40. He was taught his lesson yer he came into the pulpit, 727, b 10, &c. 40
Sheene the kings manour burnt, 788, a 10
Sharpe. ¶ See Cotesbold.
Shepherd called the holie shepherd, 606, b 40
Sheffeeld lord is lamentablie slaine in the Norfolke rebellion, 1034, b 30. Laid to the rebels charge, 1046, b 60 1047, a 10
Shellie how he was affectioned to Throckmortons treasons, 1372, b 20. An actor in the conspiracie of the earle of Northumberland, 1407, b 10
Shews of disport with Robin Hood, &c: before king Henrie the eight, 836, b 40, &c, 837, a 10. Of estate on the Twelfe night, 837, b 60. At iusts at Greenewich, 815, a 10. Of delight wherein great personages were actors, 805, a 10, &c. 806, a 10, &c. Triumphant of proper deuise at the receiuing of the earle of Leicester into the low countries, note well, 1424, b 10, &c. to 1430. ¶ See Pagents and Sights.
Shift. ¶ See Policie.
Ship roiall called Henrie grace de Dieu, 815, b 40
The Marie rose drowned through negligence: note, 969, a 30. The barke Agar recouered from the French, 972, a 60. The Regent burnt, 815, b 10
The Greyhound cast awaie, 1202, b 10. The great Harrie burnt, 1090, b 50
Ship scene in the aire, 249, a 60
Ships English spoiled by the French, 1195, a 60. Of queene Elisabeth sent forth into the narrow seas, 1211, a 10. Scowre the narrow seas, 1257, b 50, 60. Their seruice in Ireland, 1314, b 50. Three of name wone from the Scots, 989, b 60
Set on fire by the English, 995, b 30. Two of the French kings taken with a prise in them, 453, b 50. 524, a 50. Of Rie win a good prise, 440, a 60. Of a strange mold and forme driuen on the coasts of England, 250, a 10
Ships and castels seene in the aire, 1313, a 60, b 10 ¶ See French and Flemish, Thames.
Shipwracke, 562, b 10. 365, a 30. Wherein two hundred persons were drowned, 1202, b 10. 423, a 60, b 10. Lamentable, 41, b 10. ¶ See Noblemen.
Shiriffes of shires when instituted, 8, a 60. Of all shires sent for to the court, 457, b 40. Orders deuised for their appearance and bringing of accounts, 254, a 60. Of London put awaie their officers, 961, b 10. ¶ See London.
Shirewood forrest. ¶ See Forrest.
Shoes long piked forbidden, 668, b 30
Shoemaker called the cocke of Westminster, his gifts to the hospitals, 1083, a 20
Shooting in the long bow when first it came into England, 15 b 50
Shores wife king Edward the fourth his concubine: note, 722, b 60. Sore sued vnto than all the lords in England, 729, a 40. Spoiled of all that she had, put to open penance, described, 724, b 10, &c.
Shordich knight his words to the pope, and the popes to him, 365, b 40, 50
Shrewesburie towne partlie burnt, 218, a 30
Sickenesse extreame among people in all places, 14, a 60 Strange at Oxford assise, whereof iudges &c, died: note, 1270, a 40, b 10, &c. Strange in Excester, at a sessions there held, like that of Oxford: note, 1547, b 30, &c.
Sidneie sir Henrie knight sent ambassador into France, 1195, a 40. The historie of his life and death, 1548, b 10, &c.
Sidneie sir Philip knight dead of a wound, right honorablie reported of beyond and on this side the seas: note, 1554, a 60, &c.
Sidneie ladie, the said knights mother deceaseth, hir godlie end, 1553, b 30 Sights in the aire fearefull and and ſtrange, 1270, a 20. 1313, a 60. 484, b 10, &c. 395, a 60. 210. b 50. 249, a 60

Of fierie impreſſions in the aire, 1208, a 40. 1260, a 30 1261, b 60. Out of the earth, 220, a 10. ¶ Sée Mone, Pagents, Shews, & Wonders.
Siluer mines found in Deuonſhire: note, 316, b 30
Simon a fraudulent and ſeditious prieſt, 765, a 10
Simenell the counterfeit earle of Warwike, 763, a 20. He is honourablie receiued into Ireland, a 60. Proclamed king of England, 766, a 10 He with all his adherents landeth in England, b 10 He is taken, pardoned, and in place of homelie ſeruice vnder Henrie the ſeuenth, 767, a 10, 30
Simonie, wherein note Anſelmes opinion, 24, a 50. A practiſe in William Rufus his time, 24, a 30. A thouſand pounds for a biſhoprike, 26, a 50. Greatlie abhorred by an archbiſhop of Canturburie: note, 213, a 60. ¶ Sée Abbaſſies and Biſhoprikes.
Simplicitie abuſed, 1063, b 30
Siward duke of Northumberland, 5, a 10
Six articles ſued for to be renewed, 1003, b 10. ¶ Sée Statute.
Skinks valourous ſeruice againſt the Spaniards, 1431, a 10, &c. Taketh the towne of Warle, 1429, b 10. Whie he burned it, 30. Knighted, 1434, a 10. His good ſeruice againſt the enimie, 60, b 10, &c.
Skipwith Richard. ¶ Sée Juſts triumphant.
Slander that went of king Richard for the death of the marqueſſe of Montferrat, 135, b 30. Againſt king Edward the fourth confirmed: note, 729, b 50, 60. ¶ Sée Sermon.
Slanders deuiſed by malicious heads againſt quéene Eliſabeth. ¶ Sée Bookes ſeditious, Libell, and Quéene Eliſabeth.
Slaughter of fiue or ſix people by the fall of a wall, 1413, a 60
Of eight perſons by the fall of a ſcaffold at Paris garden, 1353, a 30. ¶ Sée Murther.
Sleepe of fourtéene daies and as manie nights, 972, b 20
Smith Thomas eſquire and cuſtomer, a good commonwealth man: note, 1539, a 20
Smith doctor his recantation. 980, a 10
Smith embrodered. ¶ Sée Charitie.
Smithfield ſometimes a common laiſtall and place of execution, 31, a 30. And to that vſe ſince oftentimes applied. ¶ Sée Arden and Horſleſtealers.
Snow great in April, 1272, a 20. In Maie, 290, a 50
Sodomitrie puniſhed in clergiemen and laiemen, 31, a 10
Soldan king of Suria and Egypt his ſtate, by whoſe election they were choſen, two of them ſlaine, and all Suria & Egypt ſubdued, 846, a 60, b 10, &c.
Soldiers forren arriue to aid king John againſt his barons, 187, b 60. Set altogither vpon the ſpoile, 192, b 40
Of certeine ordinances deuiſed by them to be obſerued, 125, a 50. Engliſh inriched, 770, b 60. Trained vp in turnies, 145, b 60. Make a fraie againſt the lord maior of London, 636, a 20. Commended with words, and rewarded with ſpoiles, 560, a 10 Engliſh haue new cotes beſtowed vpon them by the ducheſſe of Sauoie, 810, b 10 Their vnrulie and drunken behauior noted, 809, b 30 810, a 10. Their miſbehauior againſt the L. admerall, 814, a 50. Of Tornaie rewarded of K. Henrie the eight, 850, b 10. Euill vnder a good capteine, 942, b 30. Slaie their capteine 10, a 50. Their wages borne by the lords and péres of the realme, 14, a 60. How well affected William Rufus was to them, 27, a 10. Preſt and releaſed for ten ſhillings or twentie ſhillings a man: note, 21, a 60, b 10. Their outrage, a proclamation to reſtreine it, 1197, a 60. Good orders proclamed to be kept amongſt them, 1196, b 40. Hanged for reuolting, 1201, a 10. Executed for drawing vpon their capteins, &c, 1202, b 30. Tranſported into Ireland to vanquiſh Shane Oneale, 1209, b 30. Yong trained vp in the field at the citie of Londons charge, 1218, a 50, 60. Tranſported into Ireland, 1314, a a 30. Sent ouer ſea to aid the low countries, 1413, b 10. To what ſhifts they fall after diſcamping, 1050, a 60. Reteined on all ſides by king Richard the ſecond againſt the lords, 457, b 60. Hardie of preeſts and religious men, 443, a 60 A great abuſe in the cheiſe of them, 454, a 60. Called the croſſed ſouldiors, 441, a 60 442, a 20. Incouraged by hope of gaine, 443, b 40. Out of wages by meanes of peace do much hurt in France, 395, b 10. Defrauded of their wages and the partie executed as a traitor, 411, b 10. Of the French in a poore eſtate, 199, b 40. Do much hurt, they ſpoile weſtminſter, they are ſacked and are throwne into the Thames, 273, b 20 Their paie, a thing preferred before race of men: 1229, b 20 ¶ Sée Aduentures, Law marſhall, Mutine.
Soliman Ottoman beſiegeth and taketh Rhodes, 876, b 20. It is yeelded vp vnto him, his contempt of chriſtian religion, 877, a 10, 20. Succeſſour after Selims deceaſſe, 847, b 20.
Sophie of Perſia. ¶ Sée Selim.
Sorcerie and inchantment. ¶ Sée Coniuror, and Elenor Cobham.
Sound moſt ſtrange and wonderfull heard, 226, a 10
Southhampton burned, 355, b 50
Southwell knight his words in the parlement houſe touching quéene Maries child yet vnborne, 1124, a 50
Southwell the archbiſhop of Yorke his manor, 35, b 30
Southworke in the iuriſdiction of an alderman, 1062, a 60, b 10. Liberties purchaſed for it, 1062, a 40
Spaine a deadlie bane vnto the Engliſh ſoldiors, 450, a 60, b 10. The king thereof his armie vnder the conduct of the duke of Alua, & the kingdome of Nauarre ioined vnto his, 813, b 30, &c. His claime to the empire, 851, a 50, 60. He is choſen emperour, 852, a 30. Philip his proclamation againſt Engliſh merchants, 1206, a 10. His officers full of tyrannicall lordlineſſe and villanie, 1335, a 50. Chaſed and driuen out of his realme, 397, b 10, 60. His egernes to be reuenged, his diſſimulation, 399, a 50, 60. Sendeth an herald vnto prince Edward of wales, 398, a 60
Spaniards ioined with the Engliſh armie againſt the French, 879, b 60. Aſſait Rome, take it, ſacke it, kill and ſlaie without exception: note, 896, a 10, &c. 897, a 20. Enter into Antuerpe, ſpoiling, wounding and killing, 1263, a 10. They and others in Ireland ſlaine, 1314, b 50, 60. Diſcomfited, 1432, b 10, &c. They bite their fingers for anger, 1433, a 30. They and Engliſhmen togither by the eares about wheares, 1126, b 60. Their manhod againſt the French, 1138, a 60. More fauourable vnto ladie Eliſabeth than ſome Engliſhmen, 1157, b 20. Hanged for murther, 1121, b 30. Their gallies chaſed from the Engliſh coaſts, and vanquiſhed. 427, a 20. Their Fleet ouermatch the Engliſh, 420, a 30. Vanquiſhed by king Edward the third vpon the ſea, 379, b 60. Their order of battell, 398, b 60. Their number, 399, a 10, Put to flight, the number ſlaine, 399, a 60, b 10. ¶ Sée Frenchmen, Grenefield, Granado.
Spenſer the yonger ſhamefullie executed, 339, b 50
Spenſer ladie committed vnto ward: note, 527, b 20, 30
Spenſers notable inſtruments to bring king Edward the ſecond to the liking of all kind of miſrule, 321, b 10. Enuied of the nobilitie, 325, a 30. Variance betweene them and the lords, b 50. The lords in armes againſt them, their lands inuaded, 326, ali. Baniſhed by the decree of the barons, articles wherewith they were charged, 327, a 10, &c: Yeeld themſelues vnto the law, fauoured of king Edward, and reſtored to peace and quietneſſe, 328, a 20, b 10, Reſtored to all their inheritances and aduancements, 332, a 10.
Spirit in a wall without Alderſgate, doth penance at Paules croſſe for abuſing the people, 1117, b 60
Spirits in likeneſſe of birds ſeene in the aire, 166, a 60.
Spite of the French king at Richard the firſt, and whie, 133, b 50. Of Roger Lacie in hanging two men, 133, b 40. ¶ Sée Enuie, Malice, and Reuenge.
Spoile rich and honourable, 101 b 10. Diuided among ſoldiors: note, 560, a 10. ¶ Sée Soldiors,
Spring hindered, 258, a 10. Seemed to be changed into winter, 239, b 30
Stafford waſted, 30, a 40
Stafford knight taken out of ſanctuarie and executed, 764, b 40
Stafford lord ſlaine by ſir John Holland: note, 447, a 50. Beheaded, 673, a 40
Staffords ſlaine by Jack Cade 634, a 60
Stamford taken by duke Henrie, 60, b 30
Stanhope knight committed to the Towre, 1066, b 60. Hee and others beheaded, 1081, a 60
Stanelie knight, a fauourer of Perkine Warbecke, coniectures of his alienated mind from Henrie the ſeuenth, 778, b 40, 50, 60. He is beheaded, 779, a 10. He and his archers breake the Scots arraie, 828 b 50
Stanelie lord his deuiſe to auoid ſuſpicion of king Richard the third, and to ſaue his owne life, 754, a 10. He and others meet, embrace and conſult, 755, a 20. Setteth the crowne on the earle of Richmond his head, his bold anſwer to king Richard his purſeuants, 760, a 50, 60 His faithfulneſſe, 673, a 10 674, a 30
Staple of woolles remoued to Calis, 395, b 60. Out of Flanders into England, 381 a 20
Starre ſtrange apéered euerie morning for a time: note, 223, b 40. In the conſtellation of Caſſiopeia, 1257, a 20
Stars falling after a ſtrange maner, 231, b 40. Seene at the verie time of an eclipſe, 44, b 40. ¶ Sée Blaſing ſtarre.
Starch. ¶ Sée wheat.
States of the low countries, their deputies arriuall in London, their meſſage vnto quéene Eliſabeth, 1411, a 40. &c. 60, b 10, &c. 1412, a 10, &c. Their ſute granted, 1413, b 10 1414, a 50, to 1419, a 10: note. Sworne vnto the quéene of England, and what authoritie they gaue the earle of Leiceſter by placard, 1428, all. ¶ Sée Quéene Eliſabeth, Duke of Alanſon, and Earle of Leiceſter.
Statute of the ſix articles, with the extreame proceeding therein, 946, b 30, 50. Spoken againſt to the loſſe of life, 953, a 40. Repealed, 992, b 10. Deſcribed, 1005, b 10. Ex Officio reuiued, 1126, b 60. Of premunire begun, 409, a 60. For ſeruants wages and labourers, 380, b 30, 40. For making of clothes and other things, 380, b 40. Of Mortmaine, 280, a 10
Statutes of weſtminſter ordeined, 278, a 10. Eſtabliſhed, 285, a 50. Of Gloceſter, 279, b 10. Called Additamenta, 283, a 60. Of Quo warranto, 280, a 50. Of Eltham, 892, b 50. Of Oxford: note, 262, a 10 Proteſted againſt by king Henrie the third, 265, b 30. Repealed, 270, b 50. ¶ Sée Apparell.
Stephan when and by whome hee was crowned king, 46, a 40, 50,

40, 50. His valiantnesse: note, 53, a 60. Ordering of his armie redie to giue battell, 51, b 60. Besiegeth Wallingford, 51, b 30. winneth Lincolne, 51, b 50. His power put to flight, 53, a 60 Taken prisoner and led vnto Mawd the empresse, 53, b 20. He and the earle of Gloucester deliuered by exchange, 54, b 20. Entreth Lincolne with the crowne vpon his head, 56, b 60. With an armie commeth to Yorke, 58, a 60. Incampeth neere his enimies the Scots, 47, b 20. Agreeth with the erle of Anion, 48, a 50, Inuadeth Scotland, 50, a 60. Maketh hast to rescue the north parts, 48, b 40. Burnt the south parts of Scotland, 48, b 50. Hée and Henrie the fourth meet at Dunstable about a peace, they come to Canturburie, 64, a 10. His promise to purchase the peoples fauour, 8, b 40. Doubteth whome to trust, 51, a 10. Raiseth his siege 51, b 10. Beginneth to incline his mind vnto peace, 61, a 40. Falleth sicke, 47, b 50. Departeth this life, 64, b 40. A description of his person, qualities and actions, 64, b 40, 50

Stephan earle of Britaine, 7 b 20. ¶ Sée Erle.

Stephan Gardiner his oration to the councell touching queene Marie hir mariage, he commendeth the Spanish king, 1093, a 50, 60. ¶ Sée Bishop Gardiner.

Stigand archbishop of Canturburie hated, and why duke William refused to bée crowned at his hands, 1, b 20. His stout message vnto duke William, 2, b 10. Flieth into Scotland, 8, a 30. His martiall mind, and impatient of forren seruitude, 1, b 50, 2, a 10. Captaine of an armie of Kentishmen, 2, a 10. Deprived for three speciall causes, 8, b 60. Kept in perpetuall prison and there ended his life, 9, a 20

Stinke noisome after a thunder: note, 204, b 20. Filthie after a tempest, 211, b 40. Most horrible in Winchcombe church, 19, a 60. Of Henrie the first his dead bodie odious, 45, a 20

Stoke battell. ¶ Sée Battell.

Storie doctor impudent and sawcie, his words in the parlement house, 1180, b 20, 40. An enimie vnto ladie Elisabeth, 1159, b 60. 1160, a 10. Executed for treason, his education and birth, a persecutor and exquisite tormentor of Gods seruants, apprehended, conueied himselfe ouer seas, continuing there a persecutor, a commissioner to search for English bookes, intended the ouerthrow of England, searched the English ships, apprehended by a wile, conueied into England, indicted, arreigned, executed as a traitor: note, 1225, a 40, &c.

Stradiotes, 821, b 60. 822, a 10. Described and incountred of the English horsemen, 819 a 60

Strangers resort to serue king Stephan, 47, a 50. Courteousnesse prounded for by king Henrie the firsts intertenment, 34, a 60. Outface Englishmen against all honestie and conscience, 840, b 10. Iniuriousnesse abused of diuerse vonkers, 841, b 10, 20, &c. Appointed to depart the realme, 65, b 10. Greatlie grudged at for procuring licences to sell wood, 893, b 40. Ouer sawcie lewd and knauish in dealing with Englishmen, 841, a 60. b 10. Skirmish with the rebels of Norwich, 1033, b 10. Went against the Deuonshire rebels, 1003, b 30. Feasted by king Richard the second, and so doth the duke of Lancaster, 474, a 10. Sent for by king Henrie the third to serue him in his wars, 217, a 20. A great complaint exhibited for that they got the best benefices, 365, a 60. In fauour with king Henrie the third, alwaies odious vnto the homeborne, 216, b 50, 60 Valuation of their benefices taken, 236, b 40. The value of spirituall liuings in their hands, 247, b 20. Kéepe the castell of Windsor, 265, a 40. Merchants a new order for them, sent to the tower, 283, b 10. ¶ Sée Proclamation.

Stratagem of the lord Montiole, 965, b 50, 966, a 10. ¶ Sée Policie.

Stratford bridge vpon Auon builded, 776, b 50

Strife amongst the English subiects on the other side the sea, 157, a 60. It is emulation in sumptuous apparelling of seruants, 163, a 60. Betwixt the two archbishops, 142, b 20, Betwixt the lattie and spirituaItie, 526, a 20, Betwixt the Londoners and the abbat of Westminster, 242 b 60. Betwixt king Henrie the third and his barons, 216, b 40. Betweene the archbishop of Canturburie and the bishop of Winchester, 247, a 50. One ended, all ended: note, 591, b 30. ¶ Sée Quarell and Variance.

Stues suppressed, 972, b 10

Stukelie a defamed person and faithlesse beast: note, 1359, a 50

Sturton lord committeth a shamefull murther, hée is hanged, 1133, a 10, 20

Subsidie demanded and denied 215, a 10. 251, a 10. To king Henrie the third by his brother the earle of Cornewall, 251, b 30. Of the richer sort, 236, a 30. Causeth a commotion and insurrection in the realme: note, 429, a 60. Granted by the parlement, appointed to be kept of two citizens of London, 418, b 60. For the state of parlements, 424, a 60. Grieuous causing manie a bitter curse and much mischiefe, 428, b 40. To be paid by the great men and fat backes, but the poore to go free, 422, a 10, Granted and appointed to be spent according to the discretion of the nobilitie, 452, a 50. Of surcharge, 524, b 20, 30. Pardoned, 1090, b 60. Of the lattie 1130, a 30. Verie sore and intollerable laid vpon his subiects by William Rufus, 22, a 60. Called the great: note, 815, b 60. To be paid by anticipation, 882, a 50. Granted to be paid in three yeares: note, 960, a 40. Raised by K. Henrie the first to bestow with his daughter, 38, a 20. Granted of euerie knights fée and clergie, 167, a 30. The collectors thereof complaine to the earle of Northumberland that they cannot get it: note, 769, b 30, &c. Raised of wools, 292, b 20, Called chimnage, 401, b 20. Of kuage for the space of fiue yeares, 400, b 40, Disluaded, 401, b 10. Of wooll, 355, a 30. Of tunnage and poundage, 589, b 60. Of three shillings for euerie plowland, 161, a 50. Of the thirtith part of all moueable goods granted vpon condition, 220, b 10 Of the fortith part of euerie mans goods towards the discharge of the kings debt, 215, b 40. Of two shillings of euerie plowland, 202, b 10. Of the ninth part of the peoples goods granted to king Edward the first, 306, a 20. Of an eight part of the peoples goods granted, 301, b 30. Of the twentith part of euerie mans goods, 279, b 10. Of foure pense and fiue pense out of euerie marke, 332. Of the one halfe of wools through the realme, 354, a 60. Of fiftie thousand pounds demanded of the clergie, 406, b 20. Of fiftie shillings of euerie sacke of wooll transportable ouer sea, 383, a 60. Of foure pense of euerie person aboue fortie yeares of age, &c, 410, b 30 Of six and twentie shillings eight pense of euerie sacke of wooll, &c, 396, b 10. For euerie last of lether fortie shillings, 357, b 10. For euerie sacke of wooll fortie shillings, 357, b 10. Of a new kind granted by the clergie, 531, b 30. Of the moitie of a tenth and of a fiftéenth, 445, a 10, 20. Of twentie shillings of euerie knights fée, 524, b 10. Of six shillings in the pound, &c: 1225, a 20, 30. Of moueables and vnmoueables granted, 1184, a 60. Of six shillings in the pound, granted of the spirituaItie, 971, a 10 Of the sixt part of euerie mans goods demanded, and what cursing and rebellion followed, 891, a 40 50. Of two shillings of euerie plow land, 142, b 60. Of fiue shillings of euerie hide of land, 153, a 10. Called the great subsidie, about the grant whereof there was hard hold, 877, b 20, 30, &c.

Subsidies, an enimie to them was bishop Hugh of Lincolne, 162, b 50. Of sundrie sorts repeated, 229, a 50 ¶ Sée Contribution, Custome, Fiftéenth, and Rebellion.

Subdeacons admission not without profession of chastitie, 30, b 30

Subiection most vile and vnbeseeming a king: note, 83, b 50 84, a 10. For ren how abhorred of a valorous mind: note, 192, a 50. Of Yorke vnto the archbish. of Canturburie. ¶ Sée Archbishop.

Subiects brittle their king to his great impatience, 186, b 10

Submission of the Londoners to Henrie the third, 271, a 10 Of Dauid of Wales to Henrie the third conteined in articles, 227, b 60. Of the duke of Yorke to king Henrie the sixt vnder his oth, 639, b 60 Of king John to the pope testified in a charter, 177, b 20, &c. Purchaseth peace and pardon, 203, a 40, By constraint, 186, b 50, 167, b 50. Of George Cloue preacher for a sermon. ¶ Sée Sermon.

Succession to the crowne consulted vpon to be diuerted: note, 1083, b 40, 50, 60. ¶ Sée Crowne.

Sudburie hill, 686, b 40

Suffolke men the first that resorted to the ladie Marie against the duke of Northumberland. 1086, b 60

Summer drie, 780, b 60. Extreme: note, 336, b 10. For the space of foure moneths, 220, a 40. From March vntill Julie, 381, a 40. Met with manie floods, 216, b 10 Deare, 381, a 50

Summerset. ¶ Sée Herald.

Summerule. ¶ Sée Traitor.

Sunne appeareth like blood, 332, b 10. Counterfeit séene, 220, a 40

Sunnes two appeared, 157, a 10. Three séene at once, 793, b 40. Foure beside the accustomed, 316, b 20

Sundaie prophaned and how punished by God: note, 1353, a 30. Buieng & selling a law against it, 624, a 20

Superstition. ¶ Sée Religion.

Supremasie of king Henrie the eight denied and the parties executed, 952, b 50. 961, a 60 950, b 10. 938, a 10, &c. ¶ Sée Pope, Traitor.

Surgerie lecture founded in London, and how to be exercised: note, 1349, a 20, &c. An excellent institution and for common benefit: note, 1369, b 10, 20.

Suspension of the archbishop of Yorke by the archbishop of Canturburie, 35, b 60. 36. a 10 Of Manuke bishop of Chichester: note, 26, a 30. Pronounced by a legat in a synod holden at Paules, 271, a 60

Suspicion in a prince how mischeifous, 738, a 30. Sometimes good and aduantageable, 1087, a 50, Cause of apprehension and execution: note, 259, b 60. 260, a 10. Of Henrie the fourth grounded vpon a guiltie conscience: note, 520, b 10. That he had in his sonne prince Henrie, 539, a 10. ¶ Sée Ennie, and Mistrust.

Sutors what shifts they made to be heard, 799, b 30

Swanescombe in Kent where the Kentishmen met against duke William, 2, a 10

Sward. ¶ Sée Martine.

Sweine king of Denmarke married earle Godwins widow, 6, b 20. Reported to intend an inuasion of England, 14, a 40. Sendeth his sonnes into England for recouerie of his right, 6, b 50

Sweting sickenesse, 794, a 60 The maner thereof, 765, b 60 And the remedie therefore,

764.a 10. Speedie and deadlie, 844. a 50. Whereof died both mariners and others, 906, a 60. b 10. And remedie against it, 1066, a 60. b 20
Synod called by the archbishop of Canturburie, 256. a 30. Held by Anselme, present therat Henrie the fourth with earles and barons, 34, b 10. At Dunstable, 182. a 40. At Lambeth, 280. b 30. At London, 95. b 50, 58. b 40, 224. a 40, 11. b 60. At Northampton, 271. a 60. At Oxford, 203 b 40. At Reading, 280. a 10. Of bishops held at Westminster, 30. a 60. At Winchester and what was there decreed, 8. b 60. At Windsore about the archbishops primasie, 9. a 10, b 10. At Yorke by the archbishop of Canturburie. 148. a 10. ¶ See Assemblie and Councell.

T.

TAilors their malapertnesse at the election of an alderman. 623. a 40. They and the Goldsmiths of London togither by the eares, 274. a 50. They had six kings of England brethren of their companie, 790. b 60
Talbot William defendeth Hereford in Wales, 48. b 60
Talbot knight with his six score archers, 770, b 30.
Talbot lord saileth into France 608. b 60, 609. a 10. A valiant capteine. 597. b 10. Ransomed by exchange, 606. b 30. Created erle of Shrewesburie, 623. b 10 ¶ See Erle.
Tallage of an eight thousand marks levied upon the Jews, 252. a 10
Tame lord of Tame his gentle hart to the ladie Elisabeth, 1156, a 10. 20. 50
Tartas besieged, 619. b 60
Tax or tribute levied on the cõmons by duke William. 8. b 50 Levied throughout the reime, 144. a 20. Of five shillings of everie plough land, 155. a 60 Levied of the thirteenth part of everie mans goods, 170. b 40. Levied of an hundred thousand pounds, 174. b 60.
Taxes and subsidies raised in duke Williams time, 5. b 10. Grievous of D. William upon the English. 8. a 30. ¶ See Lone, Subsidie, and Toll.
Teemen toll, or Theyme toll. ¶ See Subsidie.
Teeth, men borne with fewer than in times past, 379. b 50.
Tempests that did much hurt, 473. a 20. 204. b 20. 480. b 50, 60. 793. a 60. b 10. Grislie and hideous, 166. a 60. The like never seene procuring peace, 393, b 60. That made great walke, 395. a 40. That stroke manie high buildings, 252. a a 50, Wonderfull, 164. a 40. Most terrible with a stinke, 19. a 60. Of wind and raine verie hideous, 60. a 10. That did exceeding much hurt: note, 254. a 30. Verie sore, & that lasted sixteene houres, 239. a 30. Boisterous upon the seas, 1136. b 30. 40. That scattered Richard the first his ships sailing into the holie land, 127. a 60. 423. a 60. &c. Generall, 424. a 20. By sea and land doing harme in most shires of England, 1222, b 10. &c. 1223. 1224. a 10, &c. Great on Easter daie in the morning, 282. b 30. Sore of lightening and thunder, &c. 82. a 60. b 10. 46. a 30. 231. a 10. Of raine and thunder with an eclipse: note, 372, a 30. Few the like: note, 244, b 20. Verie wonderfull: note, 1141. a 30. That did much hurt 1185 a 10. 20. In December, 260. b 30. At Chelmesford, 1208. b 30. Great in Leicester towne: note, 1198. b 40. Strange at London, 211. b 40. By lightening and thunder, with sore hurt done, 1205. b 10. In Northfolke strange, vehement and hurtfull: note, 1348. b 20. In Richmondshire 1270. a 20. In Suffolke that did much hurt: note, 1270, b 40. ¶ See wind.
Temple gatehouse newlie builded, 918. a 10.
Templers, lands belonging to them, 335. a 40. Three knights of this order in the French kings displeasure, 68 b 60. ¶ See Knights.
Temptation great with large offers, 747. b 10. Prevaileth euen to violent death: note, 1092. b 10. 30. 40. ¶ See Murther.
Tenants rebell against their landlord, the erle of Winchester: note, 240. b 10
Tenths levied for Henrie the seconds behoofe, 111, b 60. Three granted, 402. a 60. Of spirituall mens livings for the space of three yeares, 405. a 20. For three yeares space granted of the clergie vnto Henrie the third, 248, a 40. Granted vnto king Henrie by the clergie, 213. a 10. Of the spiritualtie granted to the pope, 211. a 10. Of all the moueables in England, Wales and Ireland, required by the pope, 210. b 60. Of ecclesiasticall livings granted to Edward the second by the pope, 325. a 50. Demanded of the clergie by Henrie the third, 246. b 40. To the pope withstood by the earle of Chester, 211. a 50. They and first frutes restored to the crowne, 1180. b 10. ¶ See Subsidie.
Terme kept at Hereford castell, 1206. a 40. 1348. b 40. Begun at Oxford and adiorned to Westminster, 844. b 60. Adiourned, 1260. a 10. Adiorned because of the plague, 1211. b 60
Termes foure yearlie kept by whome instituted. 8. a 50
Terrouan woone by force by the English, 374. b 60
Terwin besieged, 817, b 20. By the English, Henrie the eight being present, 821. all. Sore beaten with the English ordinance, 819. a 50. Yelded vp to Henrie the eight, the citizens sworne vnto him, it is burnt and spoiled, 822, b 10. 40. 50.
Testament new translated into English, 913. b 60. ¶ See Gospell.
Teukesburie field, 687. b 60.
Teuther with others taken and beheaded, 660. a 30. ¶ See Mariage.
Thames frosen ouer, 1208. a 60 Exceedinglie: note, 274. a 60, 263. b 60, 58. a 60. And not passable, 942. b 20. Ships and vessels could not come vp the riuer, 611, a 60. Rose with an high tide, 220. a 30. Swolne with high spring tides, &c: note, 26. b 10. So high that Westminster hall was on a flood. 1271. b 50 Ouerfloweth and doth much hurt, 274. b 10. Drowneth all the countrie for the space of six miles about Lambeth, 231. a 10. Passable from London bridge to the Tower, it was so shallow, 38. a 40. 50. The water thereof conuied ouer saint Magnus steeple, 1348, b 50. ¶ See Tides.
Thankfulnes for old seruice, 203 a 40. Of H. the eight to his good militarie seruitors. 829. b 50. Of quæne Elisabeth vnto hir subiects, &c: note, 1566. b 40 &c.
Theater erected for the duke of Alanson to stand vpon and shew himselfe to the people, 1334 a 50
Theefe that robbed pilgrims taken and hanged, 123. a 20. ¶ See Murtherer, Outlaw.
Theeues and robbers verie few or none in England in duke Williams time: note, 15. b 40. An ordinance against them, 248. a 20, Notable, and their whole nest broken, 241. b 20. Appointed to be hanged, 45. b 10. They and murtherers saued by their books and committed to the bishops custodie, 791. b 10. Sacrilegious seuerelie executed, 704, b 50
Theobald. ¶ See Erle.
Thermes. ¶ See Monsieur.
Thetford, a bishops see remooued to Norwich, 26. a 50.
Thomas archbishop of Yorke, white deprived, 9. a 60. A canon of Baueux the sine and twentith archbishop of Yorke, 9. a 20. Deprived of his crosier and ring, ibid.
Threshers masking: note, 214. b 20
Threatning procureth submission: note, 21. b 60
Throckmorton sir Nicholas knight arriueth at Newhauen, 1199. b 40. Arreigned of high treason, the whole manner thereof, with his purgations: note, 1104. b 10. &c, 1105. to 1117. Eight of his iurie appeare in the star chamber, hard iudgement against them, 1121. b 40. Extreamelie dealt withall, b 60. 1122. a 10. Fine of his iurie released, 1126. b 40
Throckmorton Francis esquire, some great secrets betweene the Scotish queene and him, 1373. a 10. What moued him to denie his confessions at his arreignement, 30. His letter of submission to queene Elisabeth 60. With a declaration of all his practises treasonable against hir, b 50. 60. 1374. a 10, &c. Surprised and put to a narrow shift, 1372. a 40. What mind he caried towards queene Elisabeth, b 60. His treasons communicable to the erle of Northumberland, 1406. all. Arreigned and condemned of high treason, the whole declaration thereof, with the manner of proceeding against him, 1370. a 40, 50. 60. &c. 1371. &c, to 1375
Throckmorton John of Norwich a conspirator, executed as a traitor, 1222. a 10. ¶ See Traitors.
Throng, certeine thrust to death on London bridge, 487, b 10. ¶ See Blackwell, Iusts, and Paris garden.
Thunder in winter, 249, a 40, 46. a 30. With lightening in December, 220. a 40, 1206. a 40. At Christmas, and on Christmas daie, 243. b 10. 220. a 60. Verie terrible and fearefull: note, 114. a 60. That made men amazed, 39. b 10. For the space of fifteene daies togither, 236. a 50. 216. b 10. With an earthquake, 217 b 50. Generall and hurtfull, 204. b 20. With wonder, 284. a 50. ¶ See Tempest and Wind.
Thurstan abbat of Glastenburie, and the monks of that house at strife, and why, a lewd man: note, 13. b 30. Deposed, returneth into Normandie, 13. b 40. Quitteth his place againe for five hundred pounds. 13. b 60. Refuseth to obeie king Henrie the seconds pleasure, 38. b 10
Tiberio an Italian, his valiantnesse, 965. b 20
Tiburne, called The elmes in Edward the thirds time, 349 a 60.
Tichborne and his fellow traitors. ¶ See Babington.
Tides two in one houre, 1260. a 20. ¶ See Floods, Raine, Sea, and Thames.
Tiler beginner of the rebellion in Dertford in Kent: note, 429. b 20. &c. His proceedings, 430. &c. A verie crafty fellow, his proud sawcinesse, he is thrust through and slaine, 432. a 30. b 10. 40.
Tilnete. ¶ See Tichborne.
Tilt roiall, with proper deuises thereat, 830. a 60. ¶ See Iusts.
Tindall burned, his painfulnes in writing and translating, 939. b 50. 60. ¶ See Testament new.
Tirrell sir Walter killeth William Rufus with an arrow in hunting, by chance: note, 26. b 30
Tirrell knight described, 734. b 60. He receiueth the keies of the Tower, purposeth to destroie the two princes, dispatcheth the action, sheweth the whole maner thereof to Richard the third, the murther confessed, he is beheaded for treason, 735. all.
Tithes none to be giuen but to the church, 30. b 40. ¶ See Tenths and Clergie.
Tokens foreshewing Wolseis ruine and fall, 915. a 50. b 10. Of victorie: note, 660, a 20. Of things falling out in euent, 793. b 10. Of imminent misfortune to the lord Hastings, 723. a 40. 50. 60. &c Prodigious: note, 655, b 20 ¶ See Signs and Wonders.
Toles of the Hound: note, 928. a 60. ¶ See Tax.
Tonque castell taken by the English, 559. a 50
Torments extreme, 445. a 60
Tornate furnished with a strong power of men, besieged, the great number of people at the siege thereof, 359. a 50. 60. b 10, Besieged by the emperor Charles his forces, deliuered to him 871. a 10. Summoned by Garter king at armes, the prouosts words to the distressed townesmen, it is besieged. 823. b 10. 20. 60. On all sides besieged, and the prouost with eleuen more submit themselues, and yeld vp the citie to Henrie the eight, 824. a 10, &c. Articles of agreement betwixt the kings of England and France for the deliuerie therof to the French &c: note, 848. b 10, &. The maner how it was deliuered to to the French king,849.b 50

A castell builded there by Henrie the eight, 838.b 40
Townes in England burnt by the Frenchmen,417.b 60. In old time how fortified, 443 b 30. In France taken by the earle of Derbie, 368.b 50
Tower on London bridge taken downe, 1270.a 30. Newlie builded, 1271.a 10
Towre of London new walled about by William Rufus, 23. a 60. Besieged, 54.a 10. Deliuered to the earle of March, 654.b 60. Yelded vp to Lewis the French kings sonne, 192.b 20. At the Londoners commandement, 338.b 60
Traile baston, 312.b 60. ¶ See Inquisition.
Traitor Summerville his miserable and desperat death, 1366.a 20. Carter executed at Tiborne, 1357.a 40. Elks for counterfeiting the quænes signet manuell, 1563. Paine executed for denieng the Q. supremasie, 1271.a 10. Nelson and Sherwood executed for denieng the quænes supremasie, 1271.a 50. Paine executed at Tiborne, 1344.a 40 Thomas Woodhouse præst executed, 1258.b 60
Traitors, Barnele, Mather, and Rolfe executed, 1227.b 60 Fen, Haddocke, Munden, Nutter, and Somerford executed at Tiborne, 1369.a 10. Arden & Sommerville executed for treason, 1356.a 50 Slade and Bodie executed, 1356.a 10. Babington, Ballard, to the number of fourteene, their wonderfull conspiracie and sharpe execution: note, 1563, &c.
Traitors to the crowne proclamed, 143.b 10. King Henries nobles, 217. a 10. Care not for their liues, so they may atchiue the end of their treasons: note, 223. a 40. 50. Scholasticall: note, 1367.a 40 &c. Six questions to trie them from scholers, 1368.a 10 &c. Manie though they haue no armor nor weapon: note, 1367.b 10, 30. Their, rebels, and fugitiues practises to execute pope Pius bulles against queene Elisabeth, 1559.b 10. Forren continue sending of persons to moue sedition in the realme, 1360.a 40. Fiue, all of one linage executed, 943. b 50. They & rebels what ignominious ends they come to 782.b 20. Put to flight and proclamed, 650.b 20. 50. Attainted, executed, 652.a 10, &c. Their heads removed from the tower on London bridge, & set on the gate at the bridge foot, 1270. a 30. For a time may escape, but at length come to the gallows, 223.b 60. 224. a 10. Executed, wherein note the ancient kind of punishment, 230.b 20. Executed for denieng the quænes supremasie, 1322.a 30. A declaration of queene Elisabeths commissioners their fauourable dealing for their examining, 1357.a 60. &c. 1358. to 1368 Executed in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire, 767. b 40. 50. ¶ See Præsts seminarie, Fugitiues, Babington, Felton, and Storie.
Trauelling commended and discommended as necessarie and vnnecessarie, 1568.b 50, &c.
Treport suburbs set on fire by the English, 879.a 30
Trenchuile lord William, a man of great power, 67.b 60
Trent riuer where duke William pitched his tents against the Danes, 7. a 40. Hoised out of the chanell with a tempest, 1142.a 40. Dried vp for the space of a mile, 37 a 40. ¶ See Chanell.
Tresham knight made lord of saint Johns of Jerusalem, 1134.b 60
Tresham William. ¶ See Iusts triumphant.
Tresilian, chiefe iustice descried by his owne man & executed at Tiborne, 463.b 50
Treson against king Henrie the fourth to haue destroied him in his bed: note, 519.b 20. Against Edward the second the traitor executed: note, 333. 334. Against Henrie the third by a clerke of Oxford, 223.a 40. Of Thomas Becket, 69.b 10 Of noble men iustlie punished, 515.b 10, &c. Of a Saracen against prince Edward, 275. a 20. Laid to the duke of Aumerle, and how he challenged triall, 513.a 60. Of sir Thomas Turberuile, & he executed, 295.b 40. Of a messenger disclosing the secrets of Edward the firsts letters, 299. b 60, 300.a 10. Of Foulks de Brent how punished, 208. a 20. Of certeine Iewes, and how reuenged, 167.a 60. Notable of Francis Throckmorton, set downe in full discourse with the maner of proceeding against him: note, 1370. a 50 60, &c. 1371. to 1375. Notorious of Parrie to haue murthered queene Elisabeth set downe at large: note, 1382.a 50, &c. to 1395. Of erle Persie of Northumberland summarilie set downe: note, and vnto what foule end he came, 1404.b 40. 1405. &c. to 1419, a 10. Of the duke of Buckingham, ¶ See Duke. Of nobles for the which they were apprehended, 548.b 10. And executed, b 40. Of erle John moued in the parlement, and iudgement denounced against him, 142. b 60. Laid vnto the archbishop of Canturburies charge by the speaker in parlement, 490. b 40. Laid to the duke of Northfolke by the duke of Hereford, 493 b 10. Laid to the duke of Lancaster, he cleared, and the accuser extremelie tormented, 445.b 40, &c. In great men, and they executed: note, 946.a 20. &c. 50. Practised against the erle of Richmond, but preuented, 747.a 60.b 10, &c. 60. Of the citizens that lost Mens, 598. a 60. Laid to the bishop of Winchester, with his answers, 591.a 60.b 60. Wherewith the dukes of Yorke and Summerset mutuallie charge each other, 639.a 50. 60. Against the duke of Clarence, 580, a 10. He is slaine, a 30. Laid to the nobles charge by king John, 169. a 30. Laid to ones charge, and pledges sent to and fro to follow the suite, 143. a 20. Of two sorts punished with death: note, 1227. b 60. Purposed at a maske against Henrie the fourth his person, 515. b 50. In letters written by sir Walke Ferrers to certeine French lords, arrested, released, 428.a 60.b 10. For misgouerning the king and realme, and the parties executed, 498. b 60. Tried by a combat: note, 424. b 10, &c. 425. a 10, &c. Suspected among the nobles, and inquisition for the same, 457.b 20. Intended and preuented, 295 a 30. Will euer come to light by one meane or other, 333.b 10. It and not religion the cause of the popes fauorers execution, proued: note, 1366.b 10, &c. 1368. a 40, &c. The fauorers thereof punished, 951 a 50.60. Punished in honorable personages of both sex, 703 b 10. To defraud souldiors of their wages, 411.b 10. Punished by death, though disclosed, 11.a 60. It and execution, 945.a 10.b 10. 952. b 30.60. Of two persons two waies: note, 928.a 10. 313.b 40. 598, a 60.b 40. Upon clergie men, 520. a 10, &c. Most seuerlie punished, 1575.b 60, &c. ¶ See Chartres, Conspiracie, Elenor Cobham, Eureux, Noble men, Paris, Parrie, Præsts seminarie, Rebellion, Rone castell, Scotish king James, Serlo, Traitors, and Wolsele.
Tresuror lord sitteth aboue the lord maior at the sargents feast, 967.b 20
Tresurors of England from the first to the last set downe in a collection, 1238. a 1239. vnto 1257.a 10. ¶ See Cicill.
Tresure great of Richard king of Almaine, 254.b 20. Of Richard the first where it lie, and deliuered to king John, 157. a 20. Of Henrie the second found at Salisburie, 118. a 20. ¶ See Officers.
Tribute of ox hides, 96. b 50 Of twelue pense for euerie horsse or pore of oxen, 98. b 10 Of three thousand marks by peare released, 32.a 50. Leuied throughout all England, and how: note, 13. a 60.b 10. Denied vnto the pope with oths and protestations, 236 a 60. To be paid vnto the pope moued for the maintenance of his estate, 208. a 40. Of the French king to king Edward for peace and amitie: note, 700 b 10, &c. For Thouse, 85.a 30. ¶ See Exactions, Subsidies, Taxes, Tenths, and Toll.
Triuet knight slaine with a fall from his horsse, 465.b 50
Triumphs of the Romans excelled all their other shews, 1333.a 20. ¶ See Pageants.
Triuulse a noble seruitor in the French affaires, 850.b 60
Trollop forsaketh the rebellious lords his estimation, 650.a 60
Truce for three yeares betwixt six kings, 466.a 40. Betwixt England and France, 445. a 50. 230.b 10. For fiue years, 231. Treated 466.a 10. For three yeares, 214.a 50. Generall, 198.b 10. For three years expired, 219.a 10. For fortie daies, 892. a 60. For a moneth, 304. b 60. For eightene moneths, 624. b 10. For six yeares, 607. a 60. For two yeares, 391.a 40. 381 a 60. 378. a 50. 183. b 20. For three yeares, 364.b 30, 40 With the conditions of the same, 50 60. 365.a 10. For a yeare at the mediation of a woman, 360.a 30. 409.b 10. 93. b 50. Conditionall for two yeares, 170.a 60. For foure yeares, 480.b 40. For fiftie daies, 160. a 40. 154.b 50. For fiue yeares, 155, a 10. For thirtie yeares, 486 &c. 50. Betwixt England and Scotland, 875.b 30. 439.a 10 At request of the French king 311, a 60. 352.a 10. 405.a 30. 89.a 60. With a treatie of aliance, 747. a 20. For seuen yeares, 767.b 60. 668.b 60. After much mischefe and trouble, 334. b 30. Betwixt the emperor Charles and the gouernors of France, 887 b 60. Betwixt Henrie the fift and the duke of Burgogne, 558. a 10. Betwixt Henrie the sixt and the dutchesse of Burgogne, 615. a 30. Betwixt Henrie the fift and the duke of Britaine, 561.a 50. 60 Betwixt Henrie the eight and sundrie forren princes, 843.a 20. Betwixt the English and the Britons for six daies, 814. b 60. Prolonged for a yeare, 477.b 10. Tripartite, 572.a 40 Taken for a moneth, 68. a 40. The benefits insuing from the same, 906. a 60. ¶ See Legue and Peace.
Trust in treson: note, 743 b 50. 744. a 52. ¶ See Treson.
Truth purchaseth hatred, 513.b 60
Tunstall, doctor, maister of the rolles, 849. a 10, Made bishop of Durham, 909. b 50. Made bishop of London, 872. a 10. His oration and sermon in the parlement house, 876. a 20. Described and commended, his armes, the offices he bare. 1185. b 30. 40, 50. 60. Buildings by him founded, 1186. a 10. Deprined of his bishoprike, 30. Restored, 40. His death, 50. He and Budeus compared, b 20
Turke is mortallie hated of the pope. 847 a 10, &c. His victories against the Soldane, his ambition hath no bounds 846. a 60. b 10, &c.
Turks warred against by the earle of Flanders and others, 164. a 20. At the siege of Vienna how manie slaine, 913. b 40. Ouerthrowne and vanquished by the christians, principall men slaine, 1226. b 40. 60. 1227. a 10, &c. ¶ See Ottoman, Rhodes, Saracens, Soliman.
Turketilus guider of the Danish armie against the Normans. 7. b 40
Turnaments. ¶ See Charter and Turnies.
Turnham Stephan committed to prison. 117. a 20
Turnies, wherein earle Marshall of Penbroke was hurt and died, 128. b 60. Exercised for the training vp of souldiors, 145. b 60, At Blie betwixt the southerne and northerne men, 221. b 60. ¶ See Iusts.
Twed a troublesome and dangerous streame, 992. a 10
Tyrannie of duke William against the English: note, 8. a 10. 40. 15. b 30. Of Richard the second, 489. a 10, &c. ¶ See Crueltie, and William duke of Normandie.
Tyrant. ¶ See Richard the third, or Duke of Glocester.
Tyrants estate vnquiet: note, 735. b 50

V.

Vagabonds and roges by proclamation to auoid the citie of London, 1121. b 10, 20. Increased by rebellions, 1050. a 40. ¶ See Roges.
Vaidois profession, their examination, nation, protestation, stoned to death, 68. 60.b 10. ¶ See Dutchmen.

Valiantnesse and manhood, 534 a 40, &c. Of king Stephan, 53.a 60
Vandement besieged. 606.b 50
Vanoosme taken by king Henrie, 90,b 10
Vannes besieged by king Edward the third, 364.a 40
Variance betweene the lord chamberleine and the ladie Elisabeths seruants, 1154.b 50. Betweene one John Courtnete and Philip Duffeld, 1021.a 10. Betwixt the lords and the Spensers, and whie, 325.b 50. 326. 327: note all. Betwixt the students of Oxford, 260. b 40. Betwixt the earle of Penbroke and others, 257. b 30. Betweene the duke of Lancaster and the earle of Arundell, 481. a 10. Betweene the lord Latimer, and two esquires, and to what a bloudie issue it grew, 420. b 10, &c. Betwixt the bishop of Durham and earle Patrike, 161. a 10. Betweene sir John Hollands seruants, and the lord Richard Stafford, 447. a 40. Verie roiallie debated: note, 459. b 30. 40. 50. Betwixt (the scholers of Oxford, 466. a 30. Betwixt the Londoners and the constable of the Towre, 263.b 60. Betwixt Henrie the third and the earle of Penbroke, 223. b 20. Betweene the two kings of England and France, 872. a 60. b 10. Betweene the Lord Paine Tiptoft and Rice ap Meredoc, 283. b 60. Betweene the bishop of Elie and the ladie Wake, 392. a 10. ¶ See Archbishop, Contention, Debate, Discord and Strife.
Veere Henrie constable of Gisors, 110.b 10
Veere brother to the earle of Oxford, slaine, 772. b 10. ¶ See erle Veere of Oxford.
Venlow besieged by the English, 810,b 40
Vernueill besieged and obteined by the French, 88. a 10. 60. Gotten from the English by crediting a lie, 588. a 60
Vernon sir Warren baron of Shipbroke, 20,a 30
Victorie of the English against the French at the battell of Agincourt, their reioising: note, 555. a 20, &c. Against the Turks by the Christians: note, 1226. b 40. 60. 1227, a 10, &c. Of king John against his rebels, 188. a 40. Of the English at the battell of Sluise, 358. b 10. Bloudie gotten by the Frenchmen, 294 b 10. Against the Irish and others in Ireland, 1314. b 40. Good of them of Calis against the French king, 448. a 30. 40, &c. Of the English naute against the Flemish fleet, 454. b 10. Of the English against Scots signified with a great shout, 988. b 50. Against rebels, and what is to be done after the same, 1023. b 60. 1024. a 10. Of the English against the French: note, 997. a 60. b 10, &c. What is to be done after the obteinment thereof, 760. Consisteth not in multitude but in manlinesse, 758. b 10. Rich and honourable against the French, 201. b 10. What is to be done after the getting thereof, 885. b 30. Obteined, and God praised: note, 153. b 10. Without bloudshed, 33. a 60. Used with rigor feared: note, 167. a 10. To whome the same is to be ascribed: note, 373. a 10. What is to be done after the obteinment thereof, 767. b 30. The Spanish manner of thanksgiuing after the getting thereof, 773. a 60. Generall processions after it, 589, b 50. Three within a short time falling to the English, 566. b 10. Of Edward the sixt against the Scots, 1161. b 10. ¶ See Battell, Cruelitie, and Warre.
Vinticsme (a kind of collection) gotten in Ireland for the pope, 226. a 40
Virginia an English colonie. ¶ See Raleigh.
Vision of Richard archbishop of Canturburie, 108. a 40. Of a Jew become a Christian, 27. a 50. Strange appearing to Henrie the second, 83. a 10. Of diuerse likenesses, 484. b 10. ¶ See Dreames.
Visions of admonition are to be esteemed, 83. b 10
Vittels plentie sold good cheape, 778. b 10. ¶ See Derth.
Vlster in Ireland a kingdome, 100. a 30.
Vmfreuill knight, his exploits in Scotland, 536. b 10. Surnamed Mendmarket, 536.
Vniuersitie college in Oxford, when founded, 13. a 50. ¶ See Cambridge & Oxford.
Vnthankefulnes a vice vnnaturall and abhorred. 1576. a 20. oted in earle Stephan, 43. a 10, 20. Of Gaston de Bierne, 240. a 20.
Voiage venturous of sir Hugh Willoughbie, to the losse of his owne and his peoples liues, 1083. a 60. Of sir Francis Drake atchiued with extraordinarie honor and successe: note, 1567. a 50. &c. ¶ See Frobisher, Gilbert, Greenfield, Raleigh, Sebastian.
Vow inuiolablie kept: note, 793 a 50. Professed of a nun broken, 29. a 10. Of chastitie broken: note, 222. b 30. Of king Henrie the first whereof the pope offereth to discharge him, 40. b 50. Of Parrie the traitor to murther queene Elisabeth, 1385. b 30. And of other traitors to the same end: note, 1583, a 60. Of the Scots noisome to themselues: note, 988. a 40.
Vowes absolued, 257. b 60. ¶ See Oth and Promise.
Vrswike, king Henrie the seauenths chapleine ambassadour into France, 768. a 30, &c.
Vsurie for the lone of monie forbidden: note, 1062. a 60. Of the Jewes the cause of hating & killing them: note, 122. all.
Vsurers goods seized, 145. b 10. Came from Rome into England vnder the name of merchants: note, 211. a 40. Called Caursini: note, 211. a 50. Excommunicated, but to no purpose, 219. b 10. Accused & committed to prison, 244. a 60
Vsurpation: note the whole storie of Richard the third, and Edward the fift: hath no good end. ¶ See Bzuse, 314, 315, 316. Commeth to an euill end, 323, a 60.

W.

Winsleet. ¶ See Paten.
Wales inuaded by king Wiliam Rufus, and wasted, 22. b 10. Subdued by duke William, 12. a 20. Diuided into shires, 282. a 40. The marches thereof sore impouerished, 257. a 40
Walden his variable fortune: note, 532. a 10
Walon lord came to serue Henrie the eight, 818. b 60
Wallop knight his martiall acts in Normandie, 831. b 40
Walkheline bishop of winchester 9. a 20
Walkeher bishop of Durham had the whole rule of Northumberland, 13. a 40. A furtherer of monasteries to be erected, 11. a 20. Slaine by the Northumbers, & whie: note, 12. b 20
Walteof sonne to Siward, 5. a 10 Valiant, reconciled into the kings fauor, 7. a 50. Earle of Northumberland, Northhampton and Huntington, 11 b 20. Married duke Williams neece, and his issue, 11. b 10. He and Gospatrike depriued, 10. b 50. Beheaded as a rebell though he disclosed the same: note, 11. a 60. Described, and where he was buried. 11. b 10
Walter bishop of Hereford submitteth himselfe to duke William, 1. a 50.
Walter, knight. ¶ See Wildmate, and Raleigh.
Warre betweene two brethren, kings sonnes, 106. a 50. In Normandie betwixt king Rufus and his brother Robert, 21. a 50, 60. Of barons against king John: note, 185. b 10, &c. Proclaimed against England by the king of Scots, 518. b 10. Prepared against France, 812. a 60. Betwixt England and France, 290. a 60. b 20. Proclaimed betwixt England and France, 353. a 10. Prosecuted with egernesse, 354, 355 Vpon a light occasion, 39. b 20. Renewed, 219. a 20. Betweene diuerse nations in one yeare ended, 1192. b 60. Ciuill and the miserie of England then, 60. b 60. Alsheth no difference of time: note. 1188. b 30. &c. Certeine ordinances deuised for that time, 125. a 40 The frutes thereof, 610. b 10. Forren better than sedition at home, 1054. b 50. Open not so ill as ciuill, the occasion of manie great inconueniences, 729. a 10. 20. Cannot be maintained without monie. ¶ See Armie, Battell, Benevolence, Frenchmen, France, Monie, Munition, Scots, & Subsidie.
Warbecke. ¶ See Perkin Warbecke.
Ward Richard ¶ See Iusts Triumphant.
Wards. ¶ See London.
Warham doctor of lawes, the sum of his speach to the archduke of Burgognie, 777. b 10
Warke castell burned by the Scots, 444. b 60
Warlwast William taketh from Anselme all that he had: note, 26. a 10
Warning of amendment of life, 44. b 10. Reiected both by wonders and dreames, and iested at, 26. b 10. 20. Neglected cause of inconuenience: note, 83. a 10. 20. 30. 40. Of a French preest giuen to Richard the first: note, 156. b 10 ¶ See Visions.
Warren. ¶ See Erle.
Warwike castell taken and rased, 167. a 50. 60
Waste. ¶ See Northcountrie.
Wat Tiler. ¶ See Tiler.
Watch appointed to be kept by night in cities and burrowes, 248. a 10. It and ward from foure till six, and from six till foure, 327. b 10. The mischiefe that groweth by the negligence of them, 597. b 60. In steepe what aduantage to the enimie, 380. a 60. Found sleeping iustlie serued, 819. b 20. At Midsummer discontinued, 1062. b 10, ¶ See Midsummer.
Water conueied from out the Thames by pipes into seuerall houses, 1348. b 50. ¶ See Tides and Thames.
Waters executed for Treason, 313. b 40. ¶ See Traitors.
Waterquake, 440. b 50. 1311. a 50. 439. b 40
Wednesdaie, 818. b 20. ¶ See Dzie.
Weights and measures, 152. b 10 Reformed after one standard. 209, b 60
Weiland lord cheefe iustice of the kings bench, his storie, 284. b 40
Well. ¶ See Founteine.
Welshmen vnder their kings, waste Herefordshire, 5. a 20. Cruelitie handled in their ouerthrow, 23. a 50. Inuaded by William Rufus, flie into the woods, 23. a 10. Vanquished at Brecknocke by William Rufus, 20. b 40. Inuade England. 21. b 20. They dare not fight in open field, but worke all vpon aduantage, 22. a 20. Preuaile greatlie against the English, 217. Besieged the castell of Montgomerie, 210. a 60. They are discomfited, b 10, &c. Put to flight, 214 a 10. Sent ouer to the aid of the earle of Britaine, 219. a 10 Warre against the lord Mortimers tenants, 263. b 50. Subiect to the English lawes, 244. a 50. Take castels, 329. 10. Wastfull without remorse, 351. b 20. Appointed to Jaques Arteueld for a gard against Gerard Denise, 368. a 20. Molest the English subiects, 524. a 20. Rebell by the setting on of Owen Glendouer, 518. a 60. Waste Cheshire 56. b 40. Vp in armes, they sue for peace to Henrie the first, 42. a 20, 30. Fickle and by what meanes allured to Henrie the firsts side, 30. a 60. Wone rebellion, discomfited, and punished, 176. a 30. Not well delt withall, 95. b 30. Their good seruice against the French, 113. a 10. Slaie the shirifie of Glocestershire, 106. a 20, Their good seruice, 93. b 20. Make war on the English marches, seuerelie punished, 73. b 10. Vanquished and slaine, 154. b 20. Win Cardigan, 73. b 40. Rebell, inuaded & subdued, 66. b 60. &c Their valiancie against the French, 874. b 20. Make a riot at Calis, 879. b 10. Discomfited by the Northerne men, 672. b 20. Inuade the English marches, 37. b 60. Slaine and discomfited by Henrie the first, on all hands: note, 38. a 10. Subdued. 203. a 60. Flie, 270. a 60. Submit themselues, 67. a 30. Slaine, 673. b 10. Drowned within an ambush: note, 236. a 60.
Welshwomens villanie against the English dead corpses, 520 a 60. Their beastlie and barbarous cruelitie vpon the dead carcases carcases of the Englishe, 528. a 30. See Frate, and Lewin.

Wentworth lord deputie of Calis sendeth to the French to demand parlee, 1135. b 50. Taken prisoner, 1136. a 50. Arreigned and acquited, 1184. a 50
Westminster spoiled by soldiors, 273. b 20. The palace of the king burned 815. b 60. The new church there begun, 202. b 10. Inlarged and repared, 237. a 40. Of a cruell murther there committed, 420. b 10. 60. The sanctuarie confirmed by parlement 421. b 60 The hall founded: note, 23. a 60. b 10. Ouerflowne with waters: note, 1129. b 50. Full of water and not to be gotten into but on horsebacke, 231. a 10. where botes might haue bene rowed vp and downe, 220. a 40. The new worke there begun, 282. b 60. A new house made within the palace for the arreignment of the lords, 490. b 20
Wesell in Cleueland a free towne note, 1144. a 40
Weston doctor the duke of Suffolks ghostlie father, 1100. b 50. Against the ladie Elisabeth, the lord maiors iudgement of him, 1101, b 40. 50. resigneth the deanrie of Westminster by compulsion, and is recompensed, 1134. b 40
Wether intemperat by coniuring as was thought, 520. b 20. ¶ See Tempest.
Wharton lord Thomas deceaseth, 1238. a 50
Wheat and other corne scarse, with politike orders to redresse it for the poore peoples releefe: note, 1588, &c.
Whitegift John. ¶ See Archbishop.
Whittington college erected, 540 a 50
White meates licenced to be eaten in Lent, and noblemen punished for breaking the law, 960. a 10
Whore the cause of a notorious and shamefull murther: note, 1062. b 40, &c. ¶ See Concubine, Shores wife, Spaniards, 1126, b 60
Whoredome repressed, and the repressor taken in the deed doing, 42. b 50. Strangelie punished by the iust iudgement of God, 1353, a 60. b 10
It and murther go together, 953, a 10, 937. b 30, &c.
Whoplepoles taken in the Thames, 928. a 20
Wiat knight his insurrection, his proclamation at Maidstone, he commeth to Rochester, meeteth with his adherents, causeth much trouble, 1093. b 10. 30. 40. 50. 60. Soliciteth certeine gentlemen to adhere vnto him, an herald of armes sent vnto him, the lord warden desirous to be tempering against him, 1094. a 10. 40, &c. A proclamation that none should keepe in his house anie of his faction, he is sent to the Tower, hardlie dealt withall at the lieutenants hands, the furniture of his bodie, 1099 a 60. b 10. Marcheth with his power and executeth feats of armes against the aduerse parts, preuaileth against the lord Cobham, 1095. b 40. 50. 60. His requests, 1096. a 20. Marcheth to Detford Strand, suffereth his prisoners to go abrode vpon their word, commeth to Southworke, his desperat attempt, he and his complices fall to consultation, at his wits end, 1097, all. He marcheth to Kingstone, commeth vnto the parke corner, and skirmisheth with the queenes power, marcheth alongst the wall of S. Iames toward London, submitteth himselfe to the queene, 1098, all. Arreigned, the effect of his indictment, he answereth not directlie to the question guiltie or vnguiltie, his exhortation to loialtie, altereth his mind touching the marriage, his answers to diuerse speaking at his arreignment, 1103, all. His confession, and execution, 1104. a 20. 60
Wicliffe a secular preest his conclusions, the cheefest articles that he preached, 411, b 40, &c. He and his fellowes maintained by certeine lords, 412. a 10 His doctrine, 428. b 50. 440. a 30. Fauoured of the Londoners, 440. b 20. Maintained by the learned, sentence pronounced against his books 535. b 50. 60. Euill spoken of, and his followers reproched, 419. a 20
Wiclifists increase, 467. a 40. 486. a 20. Popes letter to Richard the second against them, a 60. Bewraid by some of their owne sect, 521. a 10. Wrote against the clergie, 481 b 60. They are complained of, they increase, the lords seeke that they might be surprised, 482. a 10. 40. 60. Richard the seconds commission against them and their sectaries, 483. a 50, &c. Excommunicated: note, 484. a 10, &c. ¶ See Patshull.
Widow without Aldgate murthered, 605. b 40. ¶ See Iest and Beneuolence.
Widowes prouided for and releeued by the charitie of Dauid Smith: note, 1375. b 50 60. 1376
Wie riuer, 5. a 20
Wife put a vaie and taken againe, 44. a 40. Robbed by hir husband and he hanged: note, 1561
Wilford the counterfet earle of Warwike, he is executed, 787, a 30 40
Wilford knight taken prisoner, 996. b 30
Wilfulnesse in opinion of Thomas Becket, 77. b 20
William duke of Normandie, when he began his reigne, 1. a 10. Crowned king on Christmas daie, 1. b 20. Sworne at his coronation, with the sum of his oth, 1. b 30. Why he refused to be crowned at archbishop Stigands hands, 1. b 20. Tooke an oth and hostages of the nobles and lords of England, 1. b 10. His conditions and qualities, 15. a 20. His deuise to disburthen himselfe of souldiours wages, 14. a 60. What he beareth to his armes, 15. a 10. His descent, 1. a 10. Vanquisheth the Englishe power, 1. a 10. And wasteth certeine countries, a 20. 30. Seizeth vpon the Englishmens lands, and renteth them out by the yeare, 8. a 40. His couetous dealing and exactions: note, 8. b 50. Maketh a lamentable waste of the north countries, 7. b 40. 50. 60. Hateth the Englishmen more than euer he did before, 8. a 10. Subdueth certeine rebels that fled to Elie for defense, 10. a 40. 50. Glad to deale with the Danes by promises and faire proffers, 7. b 40. 50. Present at a synod, wherein note his malice against the English, 9. a 10. Saileth ouer sea, and besiegeth Doll castle in Britaine, 11. b 40. Pitcheth his tents and fighteth against the Danes, and putteth them to flight, 7. a 45. In a perplexitie and glad to creepe in fauour with the English: note, 10. a 10. His oth and promise, with his crueltie and abusing of peace, 10. a 20. Goeth with an huge armie against Malcolme king of Scots, and whie, 10. b 30. His iustice in restoring the right heire, 10. b 50. Taketh awaie from the Englishe their armor, 6. a 40. Subdueth the rebels of Excester, 6. b 10. And Wales, 12. a 20. Goeth ouer into Normandie, leauing guides ouer England, 5. a 10. Forced to yeeld to the Kentishmens request, 2. b 20. Hateth the Englishe nobilitie euen in the time of peace, 6. a 20. His three sonnes, their names and places of their birth, 6. a 60. His foure sons, and what he bequeathed to them, 15. a 60. And fiue daughters, b 10. Returneth into England and wareth rigorous against the English, 5. a 30. b 10. In possession of London and his promised courtesie, 1. b 10. What strangers came in with him at the conquest, their names, 1. b 40. His charter granted to the citie of London, 15. a 60. He is politike, painefull, and tyrannicall against the Englishe, 6. a 10. Ouerthrowne and wounded in battell by his son Robert, 12. a 40. 50. 60. Falleth sicke in Normandie: note, 14. b 20. In despaire of his life by the Kentishmen, 2. a 40. Departeth this life, in what yeare of his age, 14. b 40 His sepulchre opened, his stature and epitaph. 15. b 60.
William Rufus when he began his reigne, 16. a 10. Crowned king, and of his munificence, 16. a 40. What means he vsed for to purchase the noble mens fauour. 16. a 10. Giuen to sensuall lust and couetousnesse, 18. b 10. In armes against the Normans, 17. b 20 Inuadeth Wales but to little effect 23. a 10. Goeth ouer into Normandie, 23. b 20. A bitter enimie to the popes of Rome, 24. b 20, &c. Renounceth archbishop Anselme for his subiect, 25. a 60. Farmeth archbishoprikes, bishoprikes, and abbeies, 26. a 40. Passeth into Normandie, and whie, 19. a 10. Against his brother Robert, 21. a 50. Depriueth bishops, 21. a 40. His great courtesie to the English to win their fauours, 17. b 30. In armes against the Welshmen, but with little successe, 22. a 20. Suspected of infidelitie, 27. b 20. Falleth sicke at Glocester, 20. a 50. Where buried, his conditions, proportion and no issue, 26. b 60. 27. all.
William the sonne of Henrie the first, made duke of Normandie. 38. a 30. Drowned, and how he might haue escaped, 41. b 10. 30
William king of Scotland aided to the earles of Britaine, 7. b 30
William bishop of Durham the kings household chapleine in armes against the king, 17. a 60. Founder of vniuersitie colledge in Oxford, 13. a 60. Besieged at Durham, forced to yeeld and exiled, 18. a 20. Restored, and dieth for sorrow, and whie, 18. a 30
William earle of Ew renounceth Robert, and becommeth king William Rufus man, 22. a 10
Willoughbie lord ambassador into Denmarke, his oration in Latine to the king, inuesteth the king into the order of the garter, returneth and arriueth in England, 1348. a 20, &c.
Willoughbie knight found frozen to death in his ship: note, 1083. a 60.
Willoughbie capteine honourablie buried, 1428. a 60
Winchester, an erls sonne bishop there, 42. a 60. ¶ See Bishop.
Wind monstrous and big, and doing much harme, 170. b 50. Full of annoiance, 914. b 30. 245. a 60, 1310. b 30. 1579. a 20, &c. That troubled the skie 226. a 10. Extreme & terrible, 243. a 20. Big and boisterous that blew open Paules gates, 1209. a 20. Tempestuous out of the south, 1260. a 40. That ouerthrew houses, 348. b 40. 220. a 60. In diuerse places of England: note, 19. b 10. Continuing six or seuen daies, 395. b 40. For three moneths space hindering the spring. 250. a 50. Prognosticating trouble, 861. a 10. Vpon the seas, 1211. a 50
Windsore castell repared, 392. a 50. And of the chamber there built called the round table, 366. a 20
Windsore lord. ¶ See Iusts triumphant.
Wine prised at a rate, 161. a 20. Sold for thirteene shillings & foure pense the tun, 455. a 10
Winter sharpe following a drie summer, 1210. a 60. With great frost, 1257. b 30. An enimie to warlike enterprises, 7. a 30. Extreame: note, 38. a 50. More than ordinarie, 163. a 50. Neuer the like, 166. a 60 That killed all kind of small foules, 534. a 10. With a death, 892. b 30
Winter sir William knight, and viceadmerall, latieth towards Scotland, 1187. a 10.
Wisedome of Richard the first in making his answer, 138, b 40
Witch hanged at Feuersham: wherein note the indirect course of iustice, 1560. a 10. Of one that allured the Dolphin of France to take vpon him the title of K. of France, 602. a 20
Witchcraft punished with famine, 203, b 60. 204. a 10
Wood knighted. ¶ See Maior of Norwich.
Woodstocke manour by whome builded, 45. b 30
Wooduile lord aideth the duke of Britaine without Henrie the seauenths consent, 768. a 40. Slaine, 768. b 40
Woll sold dog cheape by the stone 476. b 50. Solde at a certeine price, and what for the transporting out of the realme, 365 a 40. Transporting ouer sea, an act against it, 353, a 60. What K. Edward the third might spend a daie there by that which was transported 383. b 10

Granted

Granted in subsidie by the merchants,440,a 20. ¶ Sée Subsidie, Staple.
Wollen cloth at two shillings the brode yard, 789,b40
Wolues wife a notable harlot, hir shamefull end,937,b30,&c.
Wolsele described,829, b 60.830, a 10. Made bishop of Durham, he demandeth a great subsidie, his obstinat answer to the motion of the commons, 877, a 50, 60, b 10. Taketh it in scorne to be called brother by the archbishop,848,a 10. Reprooued by Henrie the eight, dissolueth the archbishop of Canturburie his conuocation,878 a 20,40. His princelie port at a banket and other recreations:note,848,b 50,60. He will haue euerie man sworne what he is worth, 874, b 60 Deuiseth the destruction of the duke of Buckingham, 862,b 50. Imboldeneth Kneuet against him, b 60. Accuseth him to Henrie the eight, 863, b 10, 20. What korren chroniclers report of him,886 b 30. Altereth the state of Henrie the eight his household, 892,b 40. Erecteth two new colleges, he excuseth himselfe touching the streit commission for the tax, 891, a 10,40,60. His authoritie impugned, 884,a 10. Offended at a plaie, and punisheth the author and actors of the same, 894, a 50. Goeth ambassador into France, his pompe, the maner of his receiuing by the French king, 897, b 10,20,40 Suspected to be against Henrie the eight his mariage with queene Katharine his brothers wife,906,b 30. Articles exhibited against him, 911, b 20. At his manor of Cawood keepeth a good house, was to be arrested of treason, prognostications of his fall, arrested, taketh the action in good part,915,a 10,30,b 50,60 His commissions to take by monie by anticipation, 882,a 50. His ambitious humor, the ordering of the two kings of England and Spaine, their interuiew committed to him, 853,a 20,&c. b 10, 20,&c.854, all. 855,a 10,&c. His great pompe, put in great trust by the king of England and France, 858,a 20, 30. His liberalitie by vertue (forsooth) of his spirituall power, 872, b 50. He hateth the duke of Buckingham, causeth the earle of Kildare to be committed to ward, 855, b 20, 30,&c. His crueltie, 894,b 30. His excessiue pride, 845,a 60,b 10 847,b 50. A caueat giuen him by a libell set vp in London, he cannot abide the citizens, 895, a 30,40,50. His pompe when he receiued the emperor Charles at Douer, his pride at high masse, 873,a 50,b 40 Returneth out of France, 898,a 60. Is sent ouer to Calis, the emperor receiueth him, carrieth the great seale with him, and there sealeth writs and patents, 870,a 40 b 10,20,40. Maketh means to be elected pope,871,b 10. Singeth masse before the two kings of England & France, 861,a 20. Desireth to see the commission of the arrest, committed to the custodie of certeine gentlemen, sickneth sitting at the table,falleth into a flux that cost him his life, 916 a 20. In displesure with Henrie the eight, articles exhibited against him, sued in a premunire, loth to part from the great seale, but yet discharged, calleth all his officers to accounts, goeth to Asher and hath his plentie turned into penurie, condemned in a premunire,909,a 10,20,30,40,60 b 30,50. Archbishop of Yorke, cardinall, chancellor of England, his cardinals hat received by Kentish gentlemen with great solemnitie, iustice executed by him vpon offendors, he erecteth new courts by Henrie the eights commission, 838,b 50,60. He taketh vpon him to determin causes, diuerse peeres offended at him,he hindereth the duke of Suffolks hope, an enimie to peace,839,a 50,60,b 10. His aduise to the maior of London at Ill Maie dates riot, 841, b 30,40. Licenced to repaire into Yorkeshire,his colledge lands seized vpon to the behoofe of Henrie the eight, 913,b 10. Remoued to Richmond,prepareth for his iourneie into the North, 914,a 60 b 10. Auoucheth that he cannot line, ascribeth his fall to the iust iudgement of God, the complet historie of his behauiors, life, and death, 917, 918,919,920,921,922
Wolfan bishop of Worcester and others resist the erle of Hereford rebelling,11,a 50. Refuseth a place of safegard against the Normans, 17,a 60 b 10. Like to haue beene deposed for his insufficiencie of learning, 12, a 10. His miracle wherevp he kept his bishoprike 12, a 10. Submitteth himselfe to duke William, 1, a 50. Dieth, 17,b 60.
Woluerhampton, and how to be rightlie called:note, 796,a 40
Womans request preuaileth in a great matter with a great personage, 32,a 50. Pitifull: note,376,a 10. Their dissimulation, 336, b 30. Hanged, drawne and quartered, 944, a 60. Once request denied declareth of much bloud, 327,b 40 328,a 10. Doo treateth for peace, & preuaileth betweene two kings: note, 360, a 30 One brought to bed of a monster: note, 1314,a 40. One of fourescore yeers old brought a bed of a monster, 1313, b 60 1314,a 10. One brought to bed of foure children at one burthen, 1161,b 60.
Women will hardlie be of one mind, 158,a 60. Their boldnes in ecclesiasticall matters: note,484,a 50,60. That to be seuere against them is dishonorable: note,314,a 10. Causers of mischefe: note, 562,a 20. Counterfeiting themselues one our Ladie the other Marie Magdalen, 203, b 50. Their malice what mischefe it breedeth: note, 626,b 60,627,a all. Reuenge a murther done vpon one, 605, b 60. Hard to be reconciled,378, a 60. Their peace, 1151,a 60 Wonders,37, a 40,38,a 40. 39,b 10,44,b 40.82, a 60,b 10. 101,a 30.102,b 30.166,a 60.204,b 60 &c.210,b 50. 216, b 10,20,30. 225,b 60. 226,a 10. 239,b 20. 245,b 30.252,a 60, &c. 277,b 40 395,a 40.439,b 40.484,b 10 &c.493,b 60.645,b 10.793,b 10 &c.40. Of a Dutchman standing on Pauls wethercocke, note,1091,a 60,b 10. Of peason without tith growing vpon hard stone & pible,1129. a 60,b 10. Of a man preserued from drowning, 1223, b 10. Of a lad drowned in a kennell 1259,b 60,1260, a 10. Of a child speaking strange speeches,1315,a 10, &c. Of mice deuouring graile, 1315, a 60. Of the ground swallowed vp 1413,b 20,30 Strange esteemed to be warnings: note, 16,b 10. Strange in heauen and earth, 21,a 30. In the aire or element,1427,a 10. Great, and whereof they were tokens,204,b 50. What they betoken.156,b 60.157,a 10,b 10. Of hair trees,496,b 60. Of a fish like a man: note, 168, a 10. Of fighting fishes, 115,a 10. Of Rosamunds coler, 115 b 60. In the sunne,moone, and the earth,102,b 40,50,60. Of a dead carcase,1066,a 30. To be noted in a dead corps that late long in the ground, 779,a 40 ¶ Sée Fish, Miracle, and Monsters.
Worcester assaulted, 58,b 20. By the Normans,17,a 60. With the valiantnesse of the people, b 10. Besieged and taken,266, a 60. The citie burnt by casualtie, 37,b 50
Words malicious and foolish of a French lord: note, 771, a 20
Of Henrie the second that cost Becket his life, 78, b 30. Of displeasure vttered by the father to his sonne, 114, a 40 Stout of a prelat to a peere, 458,a 20. Of a graue gentleman spoken on his death bed, bewsed,197,b 40. What Henrie the third vnto Warre,209, a 10. Faire ouercome,32,a 50. Make fooles fame, 191, b 60. 144,a 20. Preuaile not, 111, a 30. With fraud: note, 111,a 30 Shewth how mightilie they preuaile euen in the extremitie, 673,a 60,b 10. Faire with ill meaning: note, 136, a 10. Procure wounds and death, 954,a 20. Procure wounds and bloudshed, 447, a 40. Wounds and slaughter noble, 13,b 40. Shamefull & slenderous against Edward the fourth,698,b 30. Obscure and doubtfull to be opened, 480, b 40. Vnaduisedlie spoken against the prince the price of life: note,703,a 10. Vndecent to the lord chancellor punished in the speaker, 1081, a a 50. Gentle appeased strife, 880,b 50. That kindled heat and indignation to reuenge, 172,b 10. Of wrath kindle displeasure and warre,32,b 10 Faire and gentle with like behauiour how forceable,518, a 10. Purchase displeasure, though truelie spoken, 513, b 40,50,60. Misconstrued by the Scots: note, 423, a 20. Multiplied kindle displeasure,487,b 50,60. Roiall and well beseeming a king to rebellious lords: note,460,a 10 Wiselie vttered, appease the wrath of a king:458,a 10,&c, 50. Oppressious procure ill will: note,421,a 20. Of reproch how mischeeuous in issue: note,412, a 20. Great with little manhood,23,b 60,24 a 10. Of disdaine breeding mischefe: note,645,a 30. Punished with standing on the pillorie, and losse of both the eares,1084,a 20. Mixed with breadfull allegation preuaile much: note,143,b 60. ¶ Sée Gifts, Oth, and Promises.
Words god of duke William before his death,14,b 50, Of king Henrie the first to win the peoples fauour, 28,b 20
Workemanship verie cunning, of comprising much matter in a little rome,1262,b 10. Of a locke and a kei weighing but one wheatcorne, 1299, b 50, &c. 60
Worship to creatures not permitted to be done without the bishops authoritie, 31,a Wotton embassador into Scotland, of an ancient familie: note,1402, b 30,&c. 1403,&c.
Wrecks by sea pardoned by K. Richard the first,through all his dominions, 126,a 60
Wrestling at the hospitall of S. Iames, betwixt the Londoners and all commers,204, a 10,20,&c. At Clerkenwell a great frate there, 641, a 60, Wrotheslele lord. ¶ Sée Erle of South hampton.
Writing of much matter within a penie compasse, 1262, b 10

Y.

Yard. ¶ Sée Measure.
Yeoman of the gard his shift to saue himselfe from hanging,844. One hanged, 812, b 10. Two hanged for robbing, 953, a 60, b 10. Their institution or first bringing in, 763,b 50. Dekend the preacher at Pauls crosse, 1089, b 30,1090,a 20
Yeare of Jubile,788,a 60. Of wonders, 1588: note,1356, b 60. More talked of than feared, 1357,a 10,20
Yorke besieged by duke William 7,a 60. Burned by the Normans and Brite,6,b 60,7,a 10 The shire subdued to Lewis the French kings son, 193, a 10. The people in a perplexitie by the means of two aduerse parties,6,b 60. The castell, 6,a 40
Yorke place infeoffed to Henrie the eight, 923,a 10
Yorkeshire. ¶ Sée Commotion.
Ypres William Warlike,43, b 30 52,a 10. A Fleming,earle of Kent,54,a 30. Departeth the realme, 65,b 20
Ypresse besieged,443,b 20. The siege broken vp, 444,a 10

These faults to be amended. *For sir Iohn Perot,read Pollard, pag.*1551,b 20. For sealed read seldome, 1555,b 50 *For Henrie the first,read the second,*1548,b 50.
The rest good reader, as iudgement shall lead thee, reforme.

FINIS propositi laus Christo nescia FINIS.

Finiſhed in Ianuarie 1587, and the 29 of the Queenes Maieſties reigne, with the full continuation of the former yeares, at the expenſes of Iohn Hariſon, George Biſhop, Rafe Newberie, Henrie Denham, and Thomas Woodcocke.

AT LONDON

Printed in Alderſgate ſtreet at the ſigne of the Starre.

Cum priuilegio.

MORS POTIOR MACVLAE